☞ EDITOR OF THE CALIFORNIAN—SIR—I have read over with attention your commentary of the 18th instant on the downward tendency of the stocks of half a dozen of our "crack" insurance company. You report that their shares have fallen eight to eleven per cent. within the last couple of weeks, and that in most cases the rates quoted are merely nominal: that in fact there are NO BUYERS. This is precisely what I foretold to those gentlemen several months ago when I observed the illiberal and and unbusiness methods they had adopted. Only think of it. Those great Insurance Companies, founded on so many hundreds of thousands of "capital," (paper) would cancel people's policies if they presumed to give a portion of their insurance to the Builders' Insurance Co. Yes, indeed! You might insure with Turk, Jew, or Gentile, with New England or Old England, with German, Gaul, or Dane; but if you insured with the BUILDERS your policies with the others were straightway cancelled! And why object to the Builders, gentlemen? You are not called upon to pay their losses: the Builders have to pay their own losses, and have so far paid them promptly. But the Builders are only mechanics—they are not "merchants," and of course unfit to insure anybody.

Ah, gentlemen, I may say, in the words of Oliver Cromwell to the long Parliament of England: "The Lord hath delivered you into my hands."

Observe, Mr. Editor, they decline to make dividends from "prudential motives;" rather prudent one should say, when they have no profits to divide! Bah! and so all their vaporing and dignity and pretension have come to this: That from gross mismanagement they are losing money and eating up the capital of their stockholders: while some of their labors consist in cancelling policies of their old customers, returning them the premiums paid, which, of course, are carried straight into the "Builders."

Those lights of Insurance Science are fain to be thought the models of Commercial Men—the encouragers of the young enterprise and budding industries of California. Yet the whole city can discern their meanness and incapacity.

I now prophecy and proclaim that half of those pompous Institutions will dissolve and retire from business long before they have their fortunes made; and their existence will be remembered only by the unfortunate Shareholders—an inevitable result of all mean and vicious dealing in the world.

THOMAS MOONEY.

San Francisco, October 19th, 1867.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S STEAMSHIPS FOR NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Brannan-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.
On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.
When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.
Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.
Departure of 18th or 19th is expected to connect with the French Transatlantic Co.'s steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.
Departure of 10th is expected to connect with English steamer for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America. Through tickets can be obtained.

STEAMERS FOR NOVEMBER.

Nov. 9—CONSTITUTION, Capt. J. M. Caverly, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.
Nov. 18—MONTANA, Capt. E. T. Farnsworth, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Connor.
Nov. 30—GOLDEN CITY, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with ARIZONA, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.
Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.
These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.
Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained of P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.
For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.
The steamship GREAT REPUBLIC, Capt. S. Doane, will be dispatched on December 4th, from wharf, corner of First and Brannan streets, for YOKOHAMA and HONGKONG; connecting at Yokohama with the steamer COSTA RICA, for SHANGHAI.
For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

J. CUTBERLET,

CUSTOM
BOOT AND SHOE STORE.
—ALSO—
FRENCH SCREWED BOOTS AND SHOES,
No. 546 Washington Street, near Montgomery Street.
The finest quality of CUSTOM WORK neatly executed. Always on hand other fine work ready made.

JOSEPH FREDERICKS

CARPET AND UPHOLSTERY STORE,
PAPER HANGINGS, ETC.,
123 Kearny St., between Sutter and Post, San Francisco
FAMILIES ARE INVITED TO EXAMINE
OUR VARIED ASSORTMENT
Of the Finest Carpeting in the State. The best of taste displayed in Decoration and the unique Upholstering of Rooms, Halls and Public Buildings, and at prices conforming to the times. Call and examine goods.

Turnbull & Smith,
PRINTERS,
522 CLAY ST.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Good Work!—One Price!—Punctuality!

D. BRUCE,

PRINTER,
COMMERCIAL STREET BELOW MONTGOMERY.

North American Steamship Company

THROUGH TO NEW YORK VIA NICARAGUA.
THROUGH AHEAD OF THE MAIL!
☞ Shortest and Only Healthy Route! ☜
THE NORTH AMERICAN S. S. CO.'S STEAMER
AMERICA,
(2500 Tons,)
EDGAR WAKEMAN.....Commander,
Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 12 o'clock, M., on FRIDAY, - - - - NOV. 15th, 1867.
The Company's new Steamer OREGONIAN, now nearly ready for sea, and the splendid new Steamer NEVADA, now on her way from New York to San Francisco, will soon be put on the Line.
No expense on the Isthmus—100 lbs. baggage free.
Surgeon on board; medicine and attendance free.
As there is no Yellow Fever nor other epidemic in Nicaragua, passengers by this route will not be detained by Quarantine in New York.
For further information, apply to
—I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
JOHN WIELAND,
Proprietor

C. F. HAYWARD,

—DEALER IN—
Harness, Saddles, etc.,
305 BATTERY STREET,
Near Sacramento,
San Francisco.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.
CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

George P. Kimball & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS

....OF....

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, STAGE AND THOROUGH BRACE WAGONS,
Market street, near corner of Fourth, San Francisco.

DICKEY'S

CREME DE LIS

DE CALIFORNIE.

FOR CLEANSING AND PRESERVING THE TEETH. Beautifying the Complexion, and removing Freckles, Eruptions, Sunburn, and Tan.
A New Combination, equal to the best French preparations, and free from their poisonous ingredients.
Invented by GEO. S. DICKEY, Chemist,
Corner of Market, Stockton, Ellis and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

The California

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VII., No. 25. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, NOVEMBER 9, 1867. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

The New Religion; The Case of Miss Lester vs. Trinity Church Sunday School; Stoddard's Poems. "Lion's Mouth:" The Pounded Poodle—a Ballad: An Episcopal Bishop; Answers to Correspondents; A Juvenile Spiritualist! Mrs. Waxcockle on the Ecclesiastical Condition of the Diocese, etc. Literary Gleanings; A Southern Poet; "Kathrina!" Dramatic Affairs; Went to Sea in a Bowl: About Nothing in Particular, by John Quill; Famous Racers; Old Stories Re-told; A gambler's Life in the Last Century; Somebody's Bag—A Police Sketch; a Tale with a Striking Moral; Poetry, Paragraphs, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

The Pounded Poodle—A Ballad.

The "Chieftain," of the city pownd,
Cries, "Greasers, do not tarry!
And I shall have a silver pound,
To make my heart right merry."

Out spoke the hardy, Greaser wight,
"I'll go, my chief, I'm ready;
And you shall have the silver bright,
And I a whisky toddy."

"Now watch how still I steal behind,
And reach yon poodle nearer!
The fatal noose is round his neck!
Your silver gingles clearer!"

"Oh, haste thee, haste," a lady cries—
Thus she addressed her lover—
"Go, rescue quick my precious pet,
Or he is gone forever!

"The petted darling, formed to please,
Would bite no living creature,
Not e'en his own tormenting fleas—
So gentle is his nature!

"Then haste, O, haste," she shrieks in grief,
"By all the vows between us,
And rescue from yon strangling thief,
Her darling, for your Venus!"

"Ruffian, avaunt, release your prey!"
The lover cries, advancing;
But lo! the "mounted escort" comes
Upon his charger prancing;

"Fork out a 'V,'" he thunders loud,
"Or we'll a lesson teach yer!
Nor dare, rash youth, to brave the law,
To save this dangerous creature.

"No 'legal muzzle' girds his nose;
The leathern throng astride it,
Still leaves him free to show his teeth,
'Not legal,' I decide it."

And swift into the hateful cart
He jerks the wretched poodle;
"Now, if you would the brute redeem,
Fork out a five, you noodle!"

"Come back, come back!" the lady cries,
"Restore my curly darling!"
But on, the canine prison moves,
Midst dismal howls and snarling.

'Twas vain! the "escort" rode behind,
Return or aid preventing,
Her prayers were but as empty wind,
And she was left lamenting.

A Juvenile Spiritualist.

The last issue of the Banner of Progress contains a "pome" written by "Felix Emanuel Shelling, aged nine years," entitled "A Dream of the Summer Land." Of course Master Shelling wrote his pome under inspiration: it is not possible that a nine year-older could write such verses. He dreamed of the spirit world and he saw the angels; he says:

"They were sporting on the green,
By a singing crystal stream,
Listening to the birds' sweet song,
Culling flowers as they passed along."

"Sporting on the green," we presume, means playing billiards. Master Felix Emanuel Shelling is certainly an inspired poet, but we are quite sure that his mamma or M. or T. touched up his verses for him.

Answers to Correspondents.

Profound and varied must be the wisdom of the man who assumes the responsibility of writing "answers to correspondents" for a Sunday paper. He must be able to decide all questions of etiquette, give recipes for the destruction of cockroaches, advice to persons about to marry, and settle bets about ages of horses, fighting dogs, and eminent actresses. Sometimes the editor who answers correspondents becomes reckless, and gives the most insane advice. The other day, "Stewart" wrote to the Philadelphia Sunday Transcript, asking for advice under the following circumstances. He says:

I live in a street that has been recently built. We are all proud of our new houses. But there is one thing that disturbs our complete satisfaction, viz.: all our new fronts are covered with a white mould, which cannot be rubbed off. Can you suggest a remedy, so we can remove this nuisance?

With the most refreshing coolness, the editor replies:

The difficulty results from the composition of the bricks. The only remedy is to obtain other bricks.

That is, pull down all the houses in the street, and build new ones with better bricks. We only wonder that this editor does not advise "A Reader," whose house is infested with centipedes, and asks how he can destroy them, to set fire to the house. We can pardon the oracle for confessing ignorance when asked by "J. E.:"

Can the eye of a person be taken out and replaced without destroying a patient's future sight?

He replies:

We have no knowledge on the subject. Perhaps some of our readers may be able to answer the question.

There are rather too many extracts from Lempriere's Classical Dictionary in this department of the Sunday Transcript. When real individuals fail to correspond, some mythical person is made to ask some question about mythology. For instance, in the issue before us at present, we find the following:

MYTHOLOGY.—The Fates was the infernal deities who presided over human life.

This evinces a most heathenish disregard of the laws of grammar. The task of answering the silly questions which people ask for the sake of seeing their letters in print, is no light one, and if the editor who undertakes to perform it does become a little insane in course of time, it is not to be wondered at.

Mrs. Waxcockle on the Ecclesiastical Condition of the Diocese.

MR. EDDYTER:—Owing to the talk caused by my last communycashun to your paper, wich it was on the subjeck of richyoualism in the Church, wich I refer to Saint James at the time of the trouble about Mr. Egnu, wich thank Heving is over, and Mr. E. come out triumfant, I have not taken pen in hand to write you for a long time, wich it seems to me an age. But things has now come to such a pass, that I cannot hold my pease, wich indeed I do not feel it to be my dooty to do so, but the revers, though the Rev. Mr. —— requestid me not, saying that it would giv occashun for scandal and plees the ennymis of the Church. But when I see everything goiog to rack and roin, I will speak out, without fear of the face of elay, reverend or not reverend, wich I hope and trust it is no hanging matter, the inkwisishun being abolished with other relicks of hethenism. And I do say, and will mayntayn, that to giv in that after all Grace is not a Caythedral but only a church, tho the congregashun is the most fasheruable and the pews dearer than in Trinity itself cannot be denyd, is a burning shame. And to thiuk the Bishop should giv in at last, and let his own offishal organ, the Pacific Churchman, call it a church, wich Mr. Waxcockle showed me only last week, and after we had paid four hundred dollars for a pew, and five hundred to help pay the debt, because it was a Caytherdral, and fashernable, wich is too bad. And now that Mr. Lathrop has come and is so popular with the ladis, and preeches so elokwent, wich his sermons are more butiful than the Bishop's himself. Advent will be the most ayristokratic church in the Dyoceese, and the best society, the Caythedral being giv up. As to Mr. Egan's "religious circus," as Mrs. Vanslamm calls it, a vulgar creecher, Waxcockle will not hear of it, saying, he wants his theayter, and his church separate, and not mixed like his braudy and water. All of wich has nearly drove me to distrackshun, so that I sometimes even think of turning dissenter, and going to hear Mr. Scudder, or Mr. Stebbings, altho' they are not ministers, not having the apostolikle procession, and no more right to preach than so many chimney sweeps. Yours trooly.

MARIA WOXCOCKLE.

An "Episcopal Bishop."

In our issue of last week we compared the term "Episcopal Bishop," made use of by the Call, to that of a "female woman." In consequence we this week received the following note:

NOVEMBER 5th, 1867.

TREM:—I've read the "Lion's Mouth" for a year or so with great pleasure. But now and then your jokes are to me, as well as others, incomprehensible. I may not be considered egotistical if I say that I have a reasonable amount of brains to comprehend jokes. I cannot, however, comprehend your "idea" of fun in last week's CALIFORNIAN concerning the "Episcopal Bishop." Why not say "Episcopal Bishop" in contradistinction to "Catholic (Roman) Bishop," or "Methodist Bishop," "Greek (Metropolitan) Bishop," and others? Pray explain to satisfaction of a reasonable reader. AJAX.

"Ajax's" letter is dated on the ever-to-be-remembered 5th of November, and we are inclined to think that he intends to "gay" us; however, we will suppose that "Ajax" makes the inquiry in good faith, and inform him that the word "episcopal" is derived from the Latin "episcopus," an overseer, and that the only application of the word at the present day is "appertaining to a Bishop." We say "the Episcopal Church" because it is a church under the management of bishops. The Catholic and Greek Churches are equally as much Episcopal Churches as is the Anglican Church. We repeat that the term "Episcopal Bishop" is as incorrect as female woman. TREM.

A TALE WITH A STRIKING MORAL.

I.

THE summer of 1865 was notable for such a perpetual blaze of sunshine, that the demand on all hands for umbrellas was nearly as great as if the season had been a rainy one.

On the evening of one of the fiercest of the fierce days of July, two young people were sauntering round the quays of Marseilles, enjoying some whiffs of air which found their way at rare intervals from the Mediterranean. Nearly the entire population was abroad that evening, gasping for those few whiffs.

Bearing in mind the heat and the degree of the langor engendered by it, it was curious to observe with how much of energy our young couple spoke. Monsieur Pierre Grandal and Mademoiselle Eugénie Beaucour were a well looking couple. As, in the course of their walk along the quay, they came under the light of the lamps, it was possible to see, to some extent, what they were like. Pierre Grandal was a promising young fellow enough to look at; tall and well grown, with energy and good humor conspicuous in his physiognomy. He belonged, as did the young girl by his side, to the bourgeoisie.

Among other things which the lamps revealed was the fact that Mademoiselle Beaucour was, considering that bourgeoise origin of hers, very smartly dressed. Too smartly, perhaps. She was habited according to the mode of that particular season. Metalic coruscations were observable in her bonnet, which was as small as possible, and of a frail and perishable fabric. Her silk jacket, too, was be-bugled and laced to a wicked extent, and, terrible to relate, there was something trailing behind her in the Marseilles dirt, which bore some sort of resemblance to a train. It was too bad. Old Beaucour was in the wine and spirit trade, and was said to have feathered his nest tolerably; but in spite of all that, Mademoiselle Eugénie was got up on a scale that caused neighboring matrons to shake their heads. This very "get up" was the subject of conversation between our two young people at the moment when we began listening.

"Now, look here, Eugénie," young Monsieur Grandal was saying at this particular juncture, "you do acknowledge—don't you?—that, considering all things, you are rather a fine lady?"

"I don't know what you mean," retorted mademoiselle.

"Well, I mean that your habits of life are ever so little extravagant, don't you think?—your style of dressing, for instance——"

"Yes: my style of dressing?" echoed the young lady in a tone which suggested that poor Monsieur Pierre was on hazardous ground.

"Your style of dressing," repeated Pierre. "Is it not rather expensive?"

"I cannot dress like a femme de chambre," replied the young lady, "to please anybody."

A pause; for Pierre Grandal had something to gulp down before continuing the conversation. It was rather an unpleasant one, and it seemed almost a pity to spend that evening in pursuing it. For this opportunity of talking to Eugénie, to some extent in private, was one such as seldom fell to the lot of our youngster. In France young ladies are more carefully watched than they are in our own country.

Pierre Grandal and Eugénie Beaucour had known each other from the time when they were children, their respective parents being old friends; but even under these circumstances it was an uncommon thing for them to be able to speak to each other alone. This very walk along the quays was not a solitary ramble; old Monsieur Beaucour and his wife being in attendance not far off, and a younger brother, the inevitable ami de college boy, in a semi-military dress, being also of the party.

"Eugénie," said Monsieur Pierre, and his voice was troubled, for he felt that a crisis of some sort was at hand, "no one wants you to dress like a femme de chambre, but it is possible to be a little economical in your dress, without doing anything of the sort. Does there not exist any one to please, for whom you would consent to be more moderate?"

"I know of no such person," answered Eugénie, haughtily.

"Eugénie," continued Monsieur Grandal, warming as he spoke, "have you heard of this new thing that has taken place at Marseilles? Have you heard that the men of the town have banded themselves together, to bring about such a change in the existing state of things as that marriage shall become possible to men of moderate means? Eugénie, this STRIKE, as it is called, is not a thing originating in pique or malice, but in sheer self defence. What can men do who are in the position which I have mentioned? They are not people of fortune—not even what society calls gentlemen. They cannot keep a host of servants to attend to their wants. They require that their wives should keep house for them economically; that while a fortune has still to be made, there shonld be no extravagance in dress. Is all this so very dreadful?" continued Monsieur Pierre, observing a gesture of disapproval on the part of his companion. "And is there no one to please whom you wonld undertake to live some such a life as I have hinted at?"

Mademoiselle Eugénie was fairly ont of paticnce. "No, I should think not," she cried, with a stamp of her foot. "And as to your Strike, I think you're all a set of conceited stingy wretches, fancying yourselves of mnch greater importance than you really are!"

"Don't include me, mademoiselle," urged Pierre, angrily. "I have not joined the Strike."

"Then I think," retorted the yonng lady, "that the best thing you can do is to repair that mistake, and join it as soon as possible."

"Your advice shall be taken, mademoiselle. Here are your papa and mamma; allow me to say 'bon soir.'"

And so they parted, Mademoiselle Engénie to repair to her apartment, and there to give way to floods of tears, Monsieur Pierre to rnsh off to the headqnarters of the Strike to enroll himself as one of its most enthnsiastic members.

II.

What a cnrious thing pride is! Mademoiselle Engénie Beauconr spent the night which succeeded that evening walk upon the quays in bitter tears, while, as to Pierre Grandal, when he awoke on the following morning, after a very brief and troubled sleep, and remembered that he had joined the Strike, I believe that he felt very much inclined to pay another visit to the port, and drop qnietly into deep water when nobody happened to be looking. What had he done? He had united himself to this band of young men, who had pledged themselves not to marry till a marked change had taken place in the habits of the young lady population of Marseilles. Extravagance in dress, general luxurionsness of life, crinoline, a certain nrrogance of tone, total ignorance of domestic matters, and an inordinate love of pleasnres of an undomestic sort—these were some of the subjects at issue between the yonng men and the yonng women of Marseilles, and till these should consent to reform their milliners' bills, to study honsekeeping, and generally to come down a peg or two, the Strike was to continue, and the registrar of marriages was to enjoy a sinecnre.

Pierre Grandal went abont his avocations on that day, and on many subsequent days, in a very disconsolate frame of mind. He was so nnhappy that he could not always hide his melancholy, and some of his friends, and especially such as were inclnded among the United Strikers, rallied him. It was an unfortnnate part of the thing, too, that he could not always avoid the company of Mademoiselle Eugénie as much as he could have wished. In the daytime, he had his business to attend to, and constant application kept him from thinking, but, in the evening, it was different. Meetings of the two families, from which Pierre could not always absent himself, were frequent. The ngonies endnred by onr young friend on these occasions were very great. Till now he had never known how much he admired Mademoiselle Eugénie; only now, when that little sort of understanding between them, which had once existed, was at an end. He began to curse his folly in having ever spoken to her on the subject of economy in dress. He accnsed himself of having been a meddling prig. He had been egged on to that step, if the truth must be told, by a certain married sister of his, who had represented to him that Mademoiselle Beaucour's style of dressing was altogether beyond her station, and would certainly prove the ruin of any man who shonld be rash enough to take her to wife. "Why could not my married sister keep her advice to herself?"

One evening he sat gnawing his moustache, watching Engénie. She was in the coolest way imaginable working at her embroidery, and listening to the conversation of Sub-Lieutenant Lemorier, with his thin waist—cnrse him!

This yonng officer and his attentions had been the snbject of many conversations; bnt, as the young lady had always laughed at the lieutenant in a very satisfactory manner, such discnssion had ever terminated peacefnlly, and had left onr friend Pierre feeling quite comfortable—a master of the situation. Bnt now everything was topsy-tnrvy, and the very position of the snb-lieutenant and of himself seemed to be reversed. Mademoiselle Beancour nctually treated his rival with a certain consideration. She listened when he talked, which she had never done before. She laughed when he was facetious, which was still more wonderfnl. She patronised him, on the contrary, to a very great extent. At length this gallant officer began to give himself little victorious airs, and to think that his waist and his gnmmed moustache had done their work.

Sub-Lieutenant Lemorier had never joined the celebrated Marseilles Strike. He was a free man to do what he liked. Pierre was angry with himself for what he had done, nnd angry—now more than ever—with Mademoiselle Eugénie because she showed no signs of giving in, nor any, even the faintest, indication of regret at the loss of her lover. The only solace which was within reach of Monsienr Pierre was found in the society of those other members of the Strike with whom it was his cnstom to associate—for it was the practice of those gentlemen to hold frequent meetings, with the view of mutually showing each other np, and sustaining each other in a firm adherance to the illustrious cause. Many great and remarkable sentiments found utterance when the members of the brotherhood met thus, in cafés or elsewhere.

"This movement of onrs," a striker would remark on some one of these occasions "cannot fail to attract universal attention. The eyes of Enrope will be upon us."

There was a little man among the members of this band, whom an ironical destiny had cursed with the name of Legrand, an authority in all matters with which "le sexe" was connected. This small gentleman was much addicted to holding forth on the subject of the Strike.

"I like it," he said one night, when some of the strikers, our unhappy Pierre among them, were assembled at a certain café in the Rue Cannebière." "The Strike suits me well. The women are ready to devonr one already. Long live the Strike!" said the little man, taking a sip of eau sncrée with a flourish.

A stiker with a red nose and a crimson neck-ribbon, worn, perhaps, with a view to the sub duction of the feature in qnestion, remarked that it was his experience also that the sex had become infinitely amiable of late; a bachelor was overwhelmed with civilities since the Strike had been started.

"I am free to confess," continned the little man, "that with regard to the sex, I have never much to complain of. I I don't know how it is, bnt I believe I have a way with me which they like. Always full of complaisance, they are now, however, ready to fall nt one's feet."

"Not all of them," thonght poor Pierre; but he did not say anything.

"What I like abont it is this," remarked a very young man indeed, who was possessed of two goggle eyes, a turned-up nose, and a fatuons mouth. "What pleases me is, that now we shall be able to RULE."

"I have always ruled," observed the little man, soto voce.

The young man with the goggle eyes had a tongne too large for his mouth, and as persons thus gifted always like to hear themselves talk, he proceeded frothily enough.

"The result of my experience has ever been that Woman, being the inferior animal——"

"Certainly," interposed the little man.

"—is never so happy," continned the goggle-eyed striker, "as when she is ruled by MAN, her natnral superior. This is a trnth which has been too much lost sight of. Women has become too much exalted in the social scale. This will be so no longer. Henceforth," said the young man, rolling his eyes in terrible cousciousness of power, "she is subjected, she is conquered."

"I observe, gentlemen," remarked Pierre, who had not spoken before, "that you all appear to have had snccess with the ladies, and that you seem to have fonnd them very easy to manage. Now, with me, I confess it has been different. I have always found this sex, which we call weak, and gentle, and soft, to have resonrces of their own of no contemptible sort, and especially a power of holding out when once their pride is assailed, which makes me sometimes doubt the ultimate success of the Strike itself."

These remarks met with much opposition. No one would hear a word in disparagement of this great movement.

"Bnt we can't strike for ever," urged Monsieur Pierre, still full of misgivings.

"We have no intention of giving in," cried several strikers, speaking at once.

"Well, then, suppose the other case," Grandal went on. "Snppose they give in, or at any rate profess to give in, and then when we, satisfied with our victory, come also to terms, what may not happen then? I confess that I view onr position with alarm."

The members of the fraternity rose up in arms in a moment. Monsienr was an alarmist. He overrated the power possessed by the opposite sex. He underrated the superior force of MEN. Monsieur Legrand stood on his toes.

"The fact is," broke in the little man, "that our friend is evidently unfortunate. It has not been his habit to triumph in these amiable contests with the ladies, in which we are all sometimes involved. With me it has been different. It is, I suspect, a question of eye entirely. There is a certain power of eye which some men possess, before which women qnail."

There was a big, powerful man, with a bnshy beard, seated at an adjoining table to that belonging to the strikers. He was playing at dominoes with his little boy, and seemed to be much amused by the conversation of the brotherhood, and especially by the remarks which came from the very yonng man with the goggle eyes. Indeed, he appeared to have the greatest difficulty in restraining his langhter.

"Come," said the powerful man, addressing his son. "Come Adolphe. It has struck ten. We mnst go home, or we shall get a scolding from mamma. Good evening, gentlemen," he continued, nddressing the brotherhood. "I've been married some years, and I don't think you'll fiud your Strike answer."

There was a great noise and chattering kept up among the strikers after this interruption, and it was some time before they returned to their nsnal dignified style of conversation.

When they did get back to it, it was perhaps on a bigger scale than ever. The little man said that their neighbor was a melancholy specimen of the hen-pecked tribe—most hen-pecked men, by-the-by, were big, or vice versa.

The gentleman with a red nose and redder cravat corrobo rated these sentiments, as, indeed, did all the other strikers who happened to be present. In fact, these powerfnl gentlemen ended in being qnite nproarious in their great consciousness of strength.

Yet, when our friend Pierre got to be alone again, it must be acknowledged that all his lowness of spirits returned in redoubled force.

III.

One morning Madame Beauconr was snrprised by an application from her daughter, so unexpected that it took her breath away.

"Mamma," the young lady begac, "is Lonise going to the market this morning?"

"Yes, dear child; she is going as usual."

"Mamma, I should like to go with her."

"Yon—why, Eugénie, what are you thinking about?" replied Madame Beauconr, with wide open eyes.

"I have taken it into my head," said Engène, smiling.

Of course she had her way, though madame, who was for keeping her daughter in cotton, did all she could to diesuade her.

"What can have come over the child?" said the worthy lady, in colloquy with her husband, after Eugénie had departed. "It is so nnlike her character to want to engage in an occupation of the sort. And now I think of it, Monsieur Beaucour, she was dressed in a manner altogether at variance with her usual style. She had on old things of last year, which I thonght she had given away long ago. What can it all mean?"

Monsienr Beancour shrugged his shoulders.

"Des caprices," he said, in a resigned tone; "des caprices!"

Meanwhile, the young lady and the old servant had started on their expedition; the latter being nearly as much astonished at this strange freak as Madame Beauconr herself had been. She was more suspicious, though. "There is something nnderneath it all," she said to herself.

"Louise," said mademoiselle, as they walked along side by side, "I have been thinking a little, nnd I have come to the conclusion that a young girl ought to learn something abont housekeeping, marketing, and that sort of thing."

"Ah, that's it, is it?" retorted Lonise, dryly.

"Yes," replied the young lady, "and so I shall want yon to tell me what is the proper price to give for things, and how one is to know when they are good of their kind, and, in short, all nbont it."

Louise was a difficult person to deal with. "Mademoiselle will find it a long business," she remarked.

"Still it can be done?"

"Oh, yes, no donbt it can be done," was the cantions reply; and then, after a pause, "Mademoiselle has put on her old things?"

"Yes; this is not an occasion when one should be too smart."

"There is something nnderneath it all," persisted Lonise.

The pair had by this time arrived at the scene of the morning's operations, and onr yonng lady did, indeed, find that Louise's occupation was by no means a simple one. Her lesson had begun, however, nnd she was attentive. The first thing to be done in these cases, as it appeared to Eugénie, was to assnme an air of extreme discontent, or even ferocity, to disparage every nrticle which was exposed for sale, and to appear as if not wanting any one of them. Bnt, after a while, she retnrned to the article wanted, as if in despair of finding nnything better, and would condescend to ask its price. This would, however, not be named till the proprietor of the article had uttered a panegyric on its merits; "It was the best in the market; she was not sure that by rights it was for sale; she believed that madame, the wife of the prefect, expected it." At last after many repetitions of the orignnl question, the price would be named.

The signal this for snch a distnrbance as commonly nttends continental bargaining:—screams, maledictions, vituberations, rnshings away, reluctant comings back again, redactions of five centimes, of ten centimes, appeals to Heaven, denunciations, five centimes more off; last appeals, resolutions fixed, resolutions unfixed again; and finally, amicable settlement, npon the bargain.

It was the same with everything; not a lettnce, not a radish without the same tests, the same screamings, the same denunciations, the same rnshings away, and the same reluctnnt comings back. Noise, confnsion, nncertainty, haggling all over and over again at every fresh pnrchase, and everybody fearfnlly in earnest. This veteran, Lonise, would come away from a turnip triumph as if she had won a queendom.

It mnst be acknowledged that Mademoiselle Beancour came back from her first experience of marketing a good deal daunted. "And this," she said to herself—"this is the sort of thing which these conceited bachelors of Marseilles expect us to do is it? I am to tuck up my shirts—of a cheap material, too, mind—and to put on a thick pair of shoes, and go out in all weathers, with an umbrella, and fight for centimes with old women for half a morning together; and I am to look down the throats of the fowls, and to sniff at bunches of turnips, and poke at the mutton, and pinch the pears, because these stingy bachelors don't choose to keep the proper number of servants to do all these things for one. 'Don't choose,'" she repeated to herself, meditatively. "Perhaps they can't help themselves. I never thought of that." And with that she fell to thinking.

Mademoiselle Eugénie had not found that expedition with Louise very agreeable, then. Still she let no one into her confidence on the subject. Next day and the next, for many subsequent days, she was ready at the proper time, and Louise would at last as soon have thought of starting without Mademoiselle as without her basket. The good woman's suspicions, however, were not allayed. She still said to herself, "There is something underneath it all;" just as the philosophical Monsieur Beaucour always had the same answer ready for madame whenever she began to speculate on the change of their daughter's habits: "Des caprices, Madame Beaucour, des caprices, toujours l"

And so at last it was brought about that Mademoiselle Eugenie became such a proficient in bargaining, by dint of much practice and severe study, that she took to doing the marketing on her own responsibility, and Louise's functions were finally reduced to carrying the basket, and offering occasional advice.

Now it came to pass, that one morning our friend, Monsieur Pierre Grandal, after passing a restless night, got up betimes, and took it into his head that before going to his labors he would refresh himself with a walk round the market-place. In France there are flowers, as well as vegetables and fruit, exposed for sale on these occasions, and the scene on market-day is a little picturesque. Monsieur wandered about the stalls, listlessly enough, till he came at last to one where a young person, as the French idiom expresses it, with a servant bearing a basket by her side, stood with her back towards him, cheapening some very nice-looking lettuces.

It is the custom, on the stage, for a gentleman dressed in all respects as usual, to borrow some friend's cloak for purposes of disguise, and wrapping it round about him, to become instantly unrecognisable by his most intimate friends. Yet, in real life, a disguise is a very difficult thing to achieve. Certain it is, that in spite of the humble garments in which this fair lettuce-cheapener was attired, young Monsieur Graudal had no sooner set eyes upon her back, than he could have sworn to her confidently; and this even if he had not heard her voice uttering such dulcet and harmonious sounds (though it was only being exercised about centimes cabbages,) that if Mademoiselle had known that Monsieur Pierre was listening to her, she could have spoken in a more fascinating tone, or shown a keener power of making a bargain. Perhaps she did know that our young friend was in the neighborhood; but she certainly evinced the great surprise when she turned round and saw him. Meeting under such circumstances, these two people forgot for a moment their sulks, and began to talk.

That conversation had important consequences. The Strike, as far as Monsieur Grandal was concerned, was entirely at an end. She had abdicated. She had seen the error of her ways. She had not thought seriously of life before, but now it was obvious to her that it really did behove the wife of a young man with his way to make in the world, to be economical to dress plainly.

"No, no," cried her companion, generously, ready now to concede on his side.

"Yes, yes," Mademoiselle Eugénie went on: "to dress plainly, or, at any rate, to keep such finery as she might possess for great occasions; while, as to amusements, they were very well now and then, at rare intervals; but the fact was, they lost their attractiveness by too frequent repetition. Domestic pleasures were, doubtless, the best after all, and as to the others, they should be reduced——"

"No, no," again remonstrated the happy Pierre.

"Well, at the most, the play three or four times a year, if circumstances were very propitious."

Pierre Grandal could hardly believe his ears. He was himself now exonerated from the bonds in which that dreadful Strike had held him; for had not Eugénie fairly capitulated? There was, in fact, now no longer any obstacle to the marriage. Our ex-striker sought the inevitable interview with the Père Beaucour, and that gentleman's consent having been obtained, the necessary preliminaries to the great ceremony were set about without delay. The ceremonies which belong to, and which precede, the solemnisation of matrimony in France are numerous and elaborate. With these, however, it is fortunately not needful to trouble the reader. Enough for us, that they were all duly observed, and that the sun soon shone upon Pierre Grandal's bride.

IV.

That honeymoon excursion which is so inevitable a part of the English and American wedding, is by no means considered equally indispensable in France. In bourgeoise society especially it is common enough for the bride and bridegroom to spend the honeymoon at home among their friends, receiving visits, repaying them in due time, and in every way leading quite a public life.

Our young couple then sat up in state, as became their position, and the bourgeoise, in Sunday clothes, rallied round them with compliments and set phrases adapted to the occasion, such as the reader will find, if he likes to look for them, in certain French publications on the etiquette to be observed in connection with weddings.

The Grandal couple were strictly in order in all these social matters, and young madame was pronounced on all sides to be quite a model bride, doing nothing—to use a familiar but not very correct expression—all day, and dressing up in a succession of toilettes, which the initiated pronounced to be "ravishing."

Well, for a time, this was all very satisfactory. It was not to be expected that madame, in the full glory of her new title, should trouble herself about household matters, or should ever make her appearance clad in any but the most distinguished garments. Silks, and lace, and the shawl of matronhood were indispensable. The newly married lady would have disappointed all her female friends if she had not given them living evidence that the fashion prints in the Gazette Rose were possibilities, not mere brilliant chimeras emanating from the brain of some art-genius.

But as time passed, and our young couple began to settle down into the ordinary routine of life, it began to strike Monsieur Pierre Grandal as a curious circumstance, that his young wife showed no symptoms of any intention of descending from the position of bride to that of housewife, which her recent studies under our old friend Louise had fitted her to fill. Not only did our newly made bourgeoise altogether abstain from marketing, but she seemed to think it beneath her to give even the necessary directions to the servant on whom this duty devolved, or to mix herself up in any way whatsoever with the sordid cares of economical housekeeping. Everything was left to the bonne, and results more curious than satisfactory ensued.

Nor was this all. Nothing could exceed the voracious appetite for amusements of all kinds exhibited by madame since her marriage. The friends of both husband and wife did, as the Hints on Etiquette demanded of them, provide a certain amount of evening recreation for our young people; rennions at which there was something done in the way of card-playiug, of games, of music, of conversation—the company separating at any early hour, after partaking of sundry cakes and innocent beverages. But this sort of dissipation was not enough for our young lady. There is a theatre of considerable pretensions at Marseilles, and madame demanded (attention is requested to the word) to be frequently escorted by her husband to that place of entertainment, the demand not to be refused, on pain of—alas! an amount of pouting which drove the unfortunate Pierre to the verge of distraction. And then madame's tantrums were of such a peculiar sort! In the midst of her sulks, or when her husband had got to be panic-stricken, she would burst out suddenly into a fit of laughing, at which the honest man was more frightened than ever.

One day Monsieur Pierre ventured on a mild remonstrance. He had been looking into his accounts, and had discovered that the goings out and the comings in were not harmonious There were discrepancies. Laxity in the housekeeping arrangements, continual visits to the theatre, carraige hire, which such visits rendered indispensable—these, and the ravishing toilets of madame, were running away with the limited income of our friend, after a fashion which terrified Monsieur Pierre not a little. In fact, he was lashed up at last to such desperation, that speech, ay, even though it should lead to unpleasantness, was a relief which must be had,

"Look here, cherished one," he began. "I have been looking into money matters, and I find that we are spending too much. We must become more economical."

"More economical!" echoed the lady. "Why, we spend nothing, as it is."

"There will soon be nothing to spend," replied Monsieur Grandal. "You never—never go to market now. Before you were married——"

"Before I was married, monsieur, it was different. A young girl is one person, and a married lady is altogether another. I am not going to compromise myself, by haggling in the market now, I can tell you."

"Why Eugénie," groaned her husband, in simple consternation, "is this you?"

"Silence, sir!" screamed the lady; and then she went off into hysterics, but whether of tears or laughter, poor Monsieur Pierre could not make out. So he gave it up, and went away out of the house; but his back was hardly turned before madame jumped up from her sofa, and running across to where a photograph of her husband hung against the wall, began to kiss the portrait with all her might. Then she went into the bedroom and kissed his robe-de-chambre, and even his slippers, and "Oh my darling, my darling," she cried, I can't indeed—I can't keep it up much longer, though I have promised all the young girls of our quarter to take this terrible vengeance."

Pierre wandered about for a time disconsolate and then he thought that he would go back. It must have been a fit of momentary irritability. He knew Eugénie better than to suppose that she was really what she appeared to be now.

"Eugénie," he said at last, "it is time that this ended, and it must end. What does your conduct mean? I no longer recognise you. Are you mad?"

"Mad," she laughed scornfully. "Not in the least."

"Then if you are sane," continued her husband, "give me a reasonable answer. What are you doing? What do you mean by your present conduct?"

Madame Grandal did not speak. There seemed to be a strange conflict going on within her.

"And this," added her husband, "after persuading me that you were an altered being."

"Deception—all deception," cried the girl at last, the words coming from her with a sort of fury in them. "Deception, and a cheat. What I did you, or any of that wretched band which you were got to join, suppose that you were to be a fit match for a woman if she chose to play the game against you? Oh!" there were tears in her eyes now, though there was contempt in her words. "How you gloried in your fancied strength and in our fancied weakness." Her sobs stopped her here for a moment, but quickly she spoke again.

"Was it good," she asked, speaking more quietly, "to loose your patience and forbearance, those real strength, and suffer yourselves to be drawn into this—this—brawl with women? Was it good to speak to me as you did at first? Dictating to me as to an enemy, not appealing to the reason of a friend?"

She stopped and seemed to wait for her husband's answer. He was pondering with downward glance, as if some thought had been presented to him, now, for the first time.

"It was not good," he said, slowly.

She was by his side in a moment. "Oh, Pierre," she cried "do you really mean those words?"

"And so you have been playing me a trick all this time?' he said, taking her hand; "was that good, Eugénie?"

Madame Grandal looked down, a little abashed.

"And your marketing expeditions, your saving up of your finery, your experiments in domestic economy—all was a sham, was it?"

"Yes," replied the girl; "but then," she added quickly, "so was the other."

"What other?"

"Why, all that has happened since our marriage! Yes, all to plague you, and to bring you to acknowledge——"

"To acknowledge what?"

"Why, what you have just owned, that the Strike was a failure from beginning to end. But, Pierre," she added, "there is one great difference between the two pieces of acting."

"And what is that?" asked her husband.

"Why, that the last—the hateful part—the part of the cruel, heartless woman, with objects of her own to attain, in perpetual opposition to her husband, separating her interests from his; that shameful role, the very acting of which in sport has made me hate myself, is discarded and abandoned henceforth, to be taken up no more for ever; while the other—the character of the faithful housewife, the friend, not the enemy of her life-partner; his ally, not his antagonist—this part shall be repeated every day till that great curtain descends which, sooner or later, brings all our performances to an end!"

The man who laughs heartily is a doctor without a diploma. His face does more good in a sick room than a bushel of powders or a gallon of bitter draughts. People are always glad to see him. Their hands instinctively go half way to meet his grasp, while they turn involuntarily from the clammy touch of the dyspeptic who speaks in the groaning key He laughs you out of your faults, while you never dream of being offended with him; and you never know what a pleasant world you are living in until he points out the sunny streaks on its pathway.

"Superior in Every Way."—Mrs. Eliza Graves, of Hudson City, New Jersey, testifies as follows:

Q.—From your knowledge of the various Sewing Machines, and the work performed by them, what superiority, if any, does the Grover & Baker Machine, using the circular under needle, have over any others, and give your reasons fully?

A.—I consider them superior in every way; I like the elasticity of the stich, the thread does not break, nor the stitch rip; all the time that I have used the machine I have broken but one needle; I like it because it is so simple a child could use it, and it is not liable to get out of order. There is no winding of cotton to do.

[From testimony taken before the U. S. Commissioner of Patents, on the application for the extension of the patent for the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine.]

Wanted: By a confectioner, a candid young woman.

LITERARY GLEANINGS.

A SOUTHERN POET.

PROFESSOR James Wood Davidson contributes to the Southern Home Journal, a highly effusive article on "James Ryder Randall," one of the poets who supplied the popular Confederate lyrics of the war. Though Mr. Randall's name is unknown to the literary world, this is evidently regarded by Professor Davidson, not so much in the light of a disparagement of the genuis of the bard who is the subject of his eulogy, as that of a misfortune to the lovers of poetry. Mr. Randall's most popular piece is the famous lyric "My Maryland," in regard to which the Professor remarks:

"The timeliest war song of the South during the war of Secession was Maryland. Not the Greek Tyrtæus, nor the German Korner, nor the Italian Berchet, nor the Irish Mangan, ever dashed off as opportune a lay; and only Rouget de l'Isle has been more fortunate in that regard.

"Maryland bears the date of April, 1861. The world does not need to be told why at that date this poem found an echo in the hearts of seven millions of people.

"The name of the author of Maryland, My Maryland, stands at the head of this paper.

"The song was set to music in Baltimore, the air being that of an old German Burschen song; and it was sung in every drawing room in the South.

"The song was opportune. Such words as these were stirring in those days:

Hark to the wandering son's appeal.
Maryland!
My mother State! to thee I kneel,
Maryland!
For life and death, for woe and weal,
Thy peerless chivalry reveal,
And gird thy beauteous limbs with steel.
Maryland! My Maryland!"

"And these words burn and blaze with the passion of aroused and indignant gems:

Better the fire upon the roll,
Better the blade, the shot, the bowl,
Than crucifixion of the soul.
Maryland! My Maryland!

"Maryland lived a year or two in the hearts of a struggling and hoping people; but passed out from those hearts when they ceased to feel the hope that found utterance in the song.

"Then it was parodied and burlesqued, and became the scoff and rally of a camp rabble. Yet all that while it thrilled many a heart at home, where the ribaldry of the camp could never come; and it thrills many a heart in those homes today."

Another poem of Mr. Randall's, the Battle Cry of the South, is praised by the critic as being "more definitely warlike." In fact, it is so "definitely warlike," that we are assured that it will compare to advantage with "Hayne's Black Flag." Among the more prominent characteristics of Mr. Randall's muse, his critic mentions, "Catholic interest," "classic grace," "happiness of allusion," and "pure and earnest humanity!" Not having read the "more definitely warlike lyric" that throws the Black Flag into the shade, nor the poem entitled Fort Pillow, "an indignant outburst of outraged feeling"—probably provoked by the atrocity of the North in employing negroes as soldiers (it will perhaps be remembered that a large part of the garrison of Fort Pillow consisted of negroes, and that after the surrender, there was quite an "outburst of indignant feeling" against them on the part of the captors,) having in fact enjoyed no oppotunity of perusing any of Mr. Randall's productions, except the few specimens quoted by his eulogist, we do not feel justified in setting ourselves up against high critical authority, and questioning either "the Catholic interest," or the "pure and earnest humanity" that are claimed as characteristics of the Southern Tyrtæus. So far, however, as "classic grace" is concerned, we are inclined to doubt whether Mr. Randall's fervid and impassioned lyrics would pass muster, if tried by the canons of criticism and the standards of taste that obtain in European and Northern literary circles. Professor Davidson probably admires such rhetorical gems as "the banner blush of shame," "lava globes," (for tears,) "penetential hair," "fragrant pleas," "the trick-tongued song," etc., "but they are much too gorgeous for the more sober taste that prevails in the cold and phlegmatic North. We cannot conclude this notice without giving one or two entire specimens of Mr. Randall's poems. The following entitled "The Cameo Bracelet," Professor Davidson informs us "was produced before the fall of New Orleans, where the poet was then residing, and is thought by many, to be his best general poem." The emphasis imparted to the two concluding lines, by small capitals, is a classic device of the poet, or the critical Professor, we do not know which:

Eva sits on the ottoman there,
Sits by a Psyche carved in stone,
With just such a face and just such an air
As Esther upon her throne.

She's sifting lint for the brave who bled.
And I watch her fingers float and flow
Over the linen, as thread by thread,
It flakes to her lap like snow.

A bracelet clinks on her delicate wrist.
Wrought as Cellini's were at Rome.
Out of the tears of the amethyst
And the wan Venuvian foam.

And full on the hanble.crest alway,
A cameo image, keen and fine.
Gleams thy impetuous knife, Corday,
And the lava-locks are thine.

I thought of the war-wolves on our trail,
Their gaunt fangs sluiced with gouts of blood,
Till the Past, in a dead, mesmeric veil,
Drooped with its wizard flood;

Till the surly blaze through the iron bars
Shot to the hearth with a pang and cry,
While a lank howl plunged from the Champ de Mars
To the Column of July;

Till Corday sprang from the gem, I swear,
And the dove eyed dameel I knew had flown;
For Eva was not on the ottoman there
By Psyche carved in the stone.

She grew like a Pythoness, flushed with fate,
'Mid the incantation in her gaze—
A lip of scorn—an arm of hate—
A dirge of the Marseillaise!

Eva, the vision was not wild
When wreaked on the tyrants of the land—
FOR YOU WERE TRANSFIGURATED TO NEMESIS, CHILD, WITH THE DAGGER IN YOUR HAND!

The following is in a different vein. It is entitled "Magdalen," and is, according to Professor Davidson, "brimful of charity, purity, and poetry:"

The Hebrew girl with flaming brow,
The banner-blush of shame,
Sinks at the Saviour's sinless feet,
And dares to breathe His name,
From the full fountains of her eyes
The lava globes are rolled—
They wash His feet, she spurns them off
With her ringlet scarf of gold.

The Meek One feels the eloqnence
Of desolating prayer,
The burning tears the suppliant face,
The penetential hair;
And when, to crown her brimming woe,
The ointment box is riven—
Rise daughter, rise, much hast thou lov'd,
Be all thy sins forgiven!

Dear God! the prayers of good and pure,
The canticles of light,
Enrobe thy throne with gorgeous skies,
As incense in thy sight.
May the shrivered vase of Magdalen
Soothe many an outcast's smart,
Teaching what fragrant pleas can spring
From ont a broken heart.

Probably, the critic would number such rhetorical anomolies as "banner-blushes," "ringlet-scarfs," "lava globes," etc., among the poetic beauties of the piece. "Desolating prayer" in the second stanza, "bewilders us a little," and also "penetential hair," with which it rhymes. A friend at our side suggests, however, that the printer may have divorced the two nouns from their appropriate adjectives, by a typographical blunder, and that it is the prayer that is "penetential," and the hair that is "desolating." This hypothesis, even were it otherwise free from objection, cannot for an instant be entertained by any mind acquainted experimentally with the proverbial accuracy of the disciples of "the art preservative," etc.

"KATHRINA."

To turn from such poor tinsel as this, to the pure gold of Dr. Holland's "Kathrina," is a change indeed. Twenty years ago this poem would have made a great reputation for its author; but now, the number of those who produce really good poetry is so great as to cheapen the gift, according to the inevitable law that even what is good of its kind, loses in esteem and distinction, as it becomes common.

"And now, again the people call it but a weed," says Tennyson, referring to the manner in which poetry of his school has been "cheapened" in the popular mind by the multitude of his imitators. We quote a few exqnisite stanzas from the introduction, or proem, of "Kathrina:"

More human, more divine than we,
In truth, half human, half divine,
Is woman, when good stars agree
To temper with their beams benign
The hour of her nativity.

The fairest flower the green earth bears,
Bright with the dew and light of heaven,
Is, of the double life she wears,
The type, in grace and glory given
By soil and sun, in eqnal shares.

True sister of the Son of Man;
True sister of the Son of God;
What marvel that she leads the van
Of those who in the path he trod,
Still bear the cross and wear the ban?

If God be in the sky and sea,
And live in light, and ride the storm,
Then God is God, although he be
Enshriued within a woman's form;
And claims glad revereuce from me.

So as I worship him in Christ,
And in the forms of Earth and Air,
I worship him imparadised,
And throned within her bosom fair
Whom vanity hath not enticed.

O! woman—mother! woman—wife!
The sweetest name that language knows!
Thy breast, with holy motives rife,
With holiest affection glows,
Thou queen, thou angel of my life!

Noble and fine in his degree
Is the best man my heart receives;
And this my hearts' supremest plea
For him: he feels, acts, lives, believes,
And seems, and is, the likest thee.

Yet man, who shivers like a straw
Before Temptations lightest breeze,
Assumes the master, gives the law
To her who, on her bended knees,
Resists the black-winged thunder flaw!

To him who deems her weak and vain,
And boasts his own exceeding might,
She clings through darkest fortune fain;
Still loyal, though the ruffian smite;
Still true, though crime his hands distain!

And is this weakness? Is it not
The strength of God, that loves and bears,
Though he be slighted or forgot,
In damning crimes, or driving cares,
Aud closest clings in darkest lot?

Not many friends my life has made;
Few have I loved, and few are they
Who in my hand their hearts have laid;
And these were women. I am gray,
But never have I been betrayed.

COMMONPLACES.

THE New York Evening Gazette, the new paper established by Mr. Sweetzer, the founder of the Round Table, thus discourses on the subject of "Commonplaces:"

"Commonplace writing has a large fund of expressions, which must originally have been used with quotation marks, but which now seem to be a constituent part of the language. We are all liable to use them, if not because we actually need them, because they drop into a sentence so conveniently. They may not in themselves, it is true, express any very definite idea, but custom seems to have given them a right to existence without much regard to their meaning. It is the use of these phrases which distinguishes the 'commonplace' writer from the few whose composition is clear, forcible, and original. Many men who are original and direct thinkers are so careless in composition that the frequency of these phrases destroys the force of what they write. As a rule, however, originality brings its own language, and its own phrases. Cheap literature abounds in hackeneyed phrases. The dime romancist begins with the 'auroral tints,' or more frequently with 'lengthening shadows,' he praises the 'pearly teeth' of his heroine, touches her 'arched brows,' and covers her head with a 'profusion of golden ringlets.' All these phrases, however, are merely common-place, and have a definite meaning. There are many other expressions which seem to be public property in journalism and literature which have ceased to convey any idea whatever—some, indeed, for which we can account to no rational origin. The phrase, for instance, which has suggested these remarks, is a curious combination of a participle and noun which puzzles us to account for—'howling wilderness.' There are very few exceptions to the rule that when a writer has occasion to refer to a wilderness at all, he speaks of it as 'howling.' Why a wilderness howls, or how it howls, has never been satisfactorily explained. The word 'wilderness' has a lonely appearance unless it is accompanied by its old friend 'howling.' We as soon think of meeting one of the Siamese twins without his brother as to see 'wilderness' and howling seperated. In fact it is a grave question in philology whether a separation would not result in the death of both. Such a result would be a melancholy one for tourists who insist on letting the world know where they are. Imagine, reader, a newspaper correspondent on the 'Western wilds of America, or on the edge of the Libyan Desert, with a paper in one hand and a pencil in the other. In what language can he express the utter silence of the wilderness which is almost oppressive? What other word will express it so well as—'howling?' It expresses the popular idea of silence exactly. The phrase 'howling silence' is not as common as the phrase 'howling wilderness,' but it is equally expressive. The lamented Artemus, we remember, exhibited a picture of a wilderness 'in the act of howling.'"

MISCELLANEA.

QUEEN VICTORIA is reported to be much pleased with the public reception of her book, "The Early Years of the Prince Consort." Messrs. Smith & Elder, the publishers, in accordance with her wishes, have collected the reviews which have appeared in the various journals, and have forwarded them for her Majesty's perusal. They make a volume quite as bulky as the original work.

The royal author, has, it is said, another book nearly ready for publication. It is written by herself, and contains an account of several journeys made to Scotland by herself and the Prince Consort, interspersed with pleasant mention of her traveling companions and servants.

A NEW paper is to be brought out in Paris, with the title of Carte de Jour. It will consist of bills of fare, for the day, of all the restaurants of Paris, with a list of prices, and will form a body of reading of the most entrancing description for the epicure. There was once a lady whose favorite literature was that of cookery books, which she said gave her an appetite. The new Paris paper will doubtless translate some people to the seventh heaven of gastronomic pleasure.

FROM the American Tract Society of Boston, we have received the October number of their religious magazine, Sabbath at Home. It contains an article by Professor Packard, of Yale, on "The Areophagus and the Apostle Paul," and other interesting matter. It has a department for the children as well as the grown folks, and is full of good illustrations.

FROM France we hear that an enterprising publisher of "sensational' works has announced a volume entitled "Lettres Inédites de la Femme Frigard." The letters of a murdress! What charming light literature for the lazy autumn days!

MR. JOHN STUART MILL has conferred upon him the highest honors at the disposal of the law faculty of the University of Halle. The same faculty refused a like honor to Count Bismarck, though when a student he matrieulated in law.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB is to be one of the contributors to the Harpers' much talked of new periodical, The Bazaar, the first number of which was to have appeared on the second of this month.

A NEW volume of poems by Owen Meredith is promised—to be called "Chronicles and Characters."

A DREAM WITH A DREAM.

I stand amid the roar
Of a surf tormented shore,
And I hold within my hand
Grains of the golden sand—
How few, yet how they creep,
Through my fingers to the deep,
While I weep—while I weep—
O God! can I not grasp
Them with a tighter clasp?
O God! can I not save
One from a pitiless wave?
Is all that we see or seem
But a dream within a dream? EDGAR A. POE.

ABOUT NOTHING IN PARTICULAR.

BY JOHN QUILL.

HAVING nothing in particular to write about this week, I concluded to do it. The earth was made from nothing, and the man was made from the earth, consequently we all sprang from nothing, and it is surprising how many human beings are true to their origin, in knowing nothing, doing nothing, and being good for nothing all their lives.

Authorities differ, however, in regard to the origin of man. Some think he is but a higher grade of the "What is it?" and others that he is only a fully developed clam. I inclined to the latter opinion in the case of certain men who fritter away their lives in folly and dissipation. But the whole subjet is a difficult one, and peculiarly so to the unmetaphysical mind. This is illustrated in the case of young Wilkins, who sought the author of his being with the following inquiry:

"Pop, weren't all men made by Heaven?"

"Yes, my child," benignly replied the paternal Wilkins, "but why do you ask?"

"Oh, nothing; only I see in the papers long accounts of 'self-made men,' and I thought maybe some of those fellows had been a gettin' of their own selves up."

This is the brother of that other Wilkins, baptized Holofernes Montgomery, who came home and complained that he didn't like the arithmetic they had at school, because he couldn't guess the conundrums in it.

"Conundrums!" exclaimed his paternal guardian, "why, Holofernes Montgomery Wilkins, what do you mean?"

"Why, you know that old arithmetic of ours is full of conundrums, and them things, and when Mr. Swishtail asked me 'if one hundred and twenty bushels of corn will serve fourteen horses fifty-six days, how many days will ninety-four bushels serve six horses?' I said 'I give it up,' and he got mad about it, and said I was as stupid as an owl. Then he wanted to know why forty rods made one rood? I couldn't guess it, I can't guess his darned old jokes, you know, and then he licked me."

"He was only trying to demonstrate, my child, that while forty rods make one rood, one rod sometimes makes one polite. Louisa remove this child to bed."

This was the same boy who afterwards got his teacher foul on the question: "If it takes four nails to make a quarter, how many carpet-tacks will it take to get up a ten dollar bill?"

A cousin of his, only nine years old, began crying piteously as if his heart would break, when his father stated that he was a Republican. His fond mother took him in her arms, and upon inquiry ascertained that he was impressed with the conviction that he had seen Re-publicans and sinners classed together in his Sunday school lessons and he was anxious for the old man's welfare.

Wilkins has a taste for these things. It was during his connection with the Utterly Hopeless Mutual Insurance Company, that he went over to Boston for a few days, and upon his return was asked by Smythe, you know him—son of old Smyth—coal oil man—was asked by Smythe, "Say, Wilkins, where have you been for a week back?" "I haven't been anywhere for it. I haven't got a weak back," and he shot around the corner.

Wilkins would sacrifice anything to a joke. When his father died, a venerable friend called to console him upon the loss of his parental protector. Wilkins sighed and said: "Yes, the old man was good at that, but now I'm the head of the family, and I suppose I'll have to pay rental in his place." His friend dropped a sympathetic tear, and drove to the funeral in a hack.

The elder Wilkins died of consumption, and his son remarked, as he saw the remains placed in the undertaker's carriage; that it was singular that the old man should first be carried off by a hackin' cough, and afterwards by a coffin hack. The undertaker didn't perceive that this was a joke until he got to the cemetery, and it made him so mad that he kicked a dog that lay in his way, and the dog bit a chop out of his leg.

"Is it a bull-dog?" said Mrs. Wilkins.

"No, my love," replied her husband, "it's a ceme-terrier."

But Wilkins had a brother-in-law named Gouge who run for judge up in Schuylkill county, and the very first case he tried was that of a man who owned a coal mine, but had been a major in the army. His tailor sued him for a uniform, but Gouge decided against the tailor, that he couldn't have made those clothes for him, because a miner couldn't be a major.

Gouge was an infidel. He was so skeptical that his own mother wouldn't believe him, and he gave up the law and turned spiritualist. He was the medium who received a message from the spirit of Daniel Webster, stating that there were a great many errors in his dictionary which he would like to have corrected.

It was before Judge Gouge that Ferguson, the soap-fat man, was sued by a woman for a breach of politeness—she thought it was; and Gouge charged the jury to give her a verdict of thirty thousand dollars, which they did while Ferguson was led out of the court headed by a brass band playing "the girl I left behind me." Ferguson said he was like Leander, it was-s-wimmin' that reduced him to such great straits. To which she said if he hadn't mortgaged herself to him it wouldn't have been so.

Judge Gouge sent them both to prison for contempt of court, for joking in his presence.

Gouge was a bosom friend of a man named Mahoney, who lived out in the jungles of Germantown, and Mahoney was in the navy, and attached to a mortar boat in the Mississippi. Mahoney used to tell how very large a shell was that they used. Is was several yards in diameter, and had to be brought on board in sections. The first time they fired her off, the boat was shot four miles away from the ball, which was so heavy that it never budged an inch, except to drop plumb into the water.

Mahoney was fond of stories, and it used to delight him to tell him how he went to Venice, and got leave to go on shore, but there was no shore there, and he spent the day sitting on a front doorstep, afraid to move for fear he should get drowned.

I often go around to see Wilkins when his wife is out of town. He can smoke then, and he don't care how late he sets up. Wilkins is fond of music, and he has a hand-organ in his back parlor.

"Wilkins, my boy," said I, "play us a tune, won't you?"

"Oh, I can't. Excuse me, I am out of practice."

"Do you play by note or ear?" I inquired.

"By note entirely," said he, "and I haven't got a note with me, except some bank notes, and I don't play anything but seven up with them."

Just then Mahoney came in, and related how when he was out on the Mississippi, the boats were so ex-t-r-e-mely slight, that the officers wouldn't let the men shift a quid of tobacco from one side of their mouths to the other for fear of upsetting her. When they ran out of quids they had to reverse the engines every time they wanted to back'er. Mahony is dead now. He mistook a lobster for a soft shell crab, and it stuck in his throat and killed him. The doctors said it was strangulation, but it is more likely he died of grief because he couldn't lie again.

WOMEN AND TEA.—Much of the very nervousness and over anxiety of the women of this generation is due to the excessive use of tea. "Our grandmothers" drank it and worked it off through the muscular system; but those of this age, with brain and nerves more sensitive, and engaged in pursuits which intensify this condition, are rendered more excitable by stimulants, which under other circumstances, might be used with less harm. Women who do much manual labor drink their tea, do their work, and sleep well; while those are very nervous and wakeful whose employments are sedentary or such as induce more mental than muscular activity. I have known many of the latter class who lived largely on tea, eating little food and growing thin, sensitive, and sleepless, sharp in face, sharp in feeling, and often sharp in words too.

DISEASE is simply obstruction. The man who can touch the bottom of his lung with a bit of fresh air, and the end of his toe with a little blood, may laugh at the doctor and break off acquaintance with the undertaker. He is sure of getting into the nineties.

RAILROADS.—The Call predicts that by next March or April, if nothing unfavorable happens, the Vallejo, Marysville and Sacramento railroad will be completed. This work, when finished, will bring the Central Pacific, the Folsom and Placerville, and the Northern, or Oroville and Marysville Railroad, in direct communication with tidewater. We hope the Call is a prophet for once.

STEAM BATHS—One dollar only, at Dr. Bourne's, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. "No Baths like Dr. Bourne's Baths," is the universal testimony. Rheumatism, neuralgia, fever and ague, etc., speedily cured; and is the only establishment which excludes loathsome diseases and improper persons. *

NOW IS THE TIME—the season of cold weather and storms—when you feel bad—to go to Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, and take one of his baths to make you feel good; to cure colds, (the only scientific mode,) coughs aches, pains, etc. *

ST. CHARLESTS RESTAURANT.—This new restaurant is presided over by Mme. Cazintre, being connected with the hotel of C. Gaillaud, Nos. 507 and 509 Pine street, just above Kearny. The result of several visits there, demonstrated the fact, that ladies predominate, and should some of our beaux and bachelors decide to make it a "stopping place," we guarentee a "feast of beauty"—to say nothing of the excellent meals served a la Francisco.

FAMOUS RACERS.

THE "Darley" Arabian, sire of "Childers," was brought to England in the reign of Queen Anne; and the "Godophin" Arabian in 1724. This latter animal was first imported into France from Barbary, a present (it is supposed) from the Emperor of Morocco to Louis XIV; but so little was he valued in Paris, that he was actually employed in draught. Every superior English racer partakes of his valuable blood. He died at Hog-Magog, in Cambridgeshire, in the twenty-ninth year of his age, and is buried there in a covered passage leading to his stable, with a flat stone without any inscription, since epitaph he did not need. In all the prints of the day he is represented with his faithful feline friend—the cat, that pined to death for the loss of him. These Arabians, however, are much less celebrated for what they did themselves than for the feats of the peogeny which they begat.

The illustrious "Flying Childers" (got by the "Darley" Arabian out of "Betty Leeds," a mare said to have produced no other off-spring,) a chestnut horse, white on his nose, and with four white legs, was foaled in 1715. He was the fleetest horse that ever ran at Newmarket, or probably anywhere else, and was never beaten.

"Eclipse" was also a chestnut (got by "Marske" out of "Spiletia,") foaled during the great eclipse of 1764, from which he took his name. He also was never beaten, and has the reputation of being second in speed to "Flying Childers" only. He was the first horse that ever traveled in a van, but this was as a stallion, and when his racing days were over; in his youth he was by no means a pampered animal. His temper was so terrible that it was thought impossible that he could ever be brought to the post. On this account, he was placed under a rough rider at Epsom, a poacher by profession, who frequently kept the horse out all night; but in spite of this discipline, his jockeys never attempted to hold him, contenting themselves with sitting quiet upon the saddle. In his first race—there were four-mile heats in those days—though the horses were altogether at the three mile post, he distanced the whole of them, though pulled with the whole strength his rider could exert; yet he had not been struck, but only alarmed by a flourish of the whip.

"Eclipse" is generally believed to have covered eighty-three feet of ground in a second when at the top of his pace, or about twenty-five feet at a single stride. "Flying Childers," it is said, covered the same ground, but performed still more wonderful feats of speed. Carrying nine stone two pounds, he ran over the round course at Newmarket (three miles, six furlongs, and ninety-three yards in length) in six minutes and forty seconds; and also over the Beacon Course (four miles, one furlong, and 138 yards) in seven minutes and a half. These instances seem to be well authenticated, and although published with every detail at the time, do not seem to have been denied. Race horses of the present day, even the famous "Lexington," have scarcely equaled this record.

CANTY & WAGNER, 113 Montgomery street, have for years back supplied a greater portion of the interior trade with every description of plain and fancy confectionery, and are now making extra exertions for the present holiday business, so as to be able to fill all orders. The public would scarcely credit the statement of the amount of sugar that this single firm have used within the last two months in their manufactory. It is not convenient to give a summary of the thousand pounds, but it is but little less than a ship load, though we won't be qualified as to the size of the ship. Canty & Wagner are our local "Stuart's."

OYSTERS AND CLAMS.—Wm. Roalfe, Nos. 40, 41, and 42, California Market, entrance on California street, keeps on hand, from 6 A. M. until 5 P. M., and Saturday nights until 10 P. M., oysters and clams. Families supplied at the shortest notice with fresh oysters and clams. The deviled-crabs are to be had here and nowhere else. And for business men, on California street, there is no place where a better lunch can be served. Mr. Roalfe is well known to the community as a first-class caterer. Call and leave your orders, wholesale or retail.

HAMBURG-BREMEN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.—Mr. Morris Speyer held the local agency for this old established company for many years, and has conducted its extensive business with marked ability and prudence. The Hamburg-Bremen is one of the stanchest companies represented on this coast, and possesses an available capital of $1,000,000. The office is at 520 Washington street, a few doors below Montgomery.

AT THE "COCOMUNGO," No. 536 Merchant street, the best wines, liquors and cigars, are dispensed. The lunch set out daily, from eleven o'clock till two, embraces a number of rare dishes, not to be found elsewhere, including genuine chowders, concocted upon old-fashioned orthodox principles, Cape Cod boned turkey, game, "potato bargain," etc., etc.

THE Indelible Pencil is superceding all indelible inks for marking family linens, etc. All the preparation necessary is to wet the cloth and write the name on it, and there it will remain unfadingly through a score of washings. Travers Brothers, 32 Merchants' Exchange, are agents for this coast.

THE PARKER HOUSE.—This favorite saloon, under the management of Mr. Stephen M. Smith, is dispensing as good beverages as any place in 'Frisco. The "appreciative public" is fast finding out this fact, and the Parker House is becoming noted about town for its various "good things."

COLDS, COUGHS, and all affections of the throat, chest, and lungs, scientifically cured by Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

SUMMER AND AUTUMN.

BY GEORGE ARNOLD.

Gorgeous leaves are whirling down,
Homeward comes the scented hay;
O'er the stubble, sear and brown,
Flaunt the Autumn flowers gay;
But, alas!
Summers pass—
Like our joys they pass away!

Fanned by many a balmy breeze,
In the Spring I love to lie
'Neath the newly budded trees,
Gazing upward to the sky;
But, alas!
Time will pass,
And the flowers of Spring must die!

Oft my maiden sat with me,
Listening to the thrush's tone,
Warbled forth from every tree
Ere the meadow hay was mown;
But, alas!
Summers pass—
Now, I wander all alone!

Love, like the Summer-time, is fair,
Decked with buds and blossoms gay;
But upon this Autumn air
Floats a voice which seems to say,
"Love, alas!
Also pass,
As the Summers pass away!"

OLD STORIES RE-TOLD.

A GAMBLER'S LIFE IN THE LAST CENTURY.

ON the 2nd of February, 1725, between nine and ten o'clock at night, three gentlemen, named Gower, Blunt, and Hawkins, left Will's coffee-house in Covent Garden, and went to the Castle Tavern in Drury-lane, with Major Oneby, a well known gamester and duelist. Here Mr. Rich, a friend of the three first named gentlemen, joined them over their Burgundy. The landlord was obsequious and the drawers civil, for the wine was flowing fast. Some of the party had been to the playhouse together to see the new tragedy of Hecuba.

The gambling scene in the Rake's Progress shows us the sort of places that Major Oneby, the professional gamester, haunted. Gamblers were the curses of those days, the horror of wives and mothers, the dread of fathers. They were prayed against as men used to pray against the Plague and the Fire. The green cloth these men played upon soon led to the green fields of Tyburn and the leafless tree. Their cards were never without pin-marks on the backs their dice never fell even. They were always in search of hearty country gentlemen, wild Templars, or reckless city men. They were the great lures to those wainscoated rooms strewn with cards, where men, crazed by their losses, raved unnoticed by the victorious players; while, beside the caged-in fire, moping wretches sat, heedless of the strong waters brought them by the boy of the house, and brooded over the night ride to Hounslow or Bagshot that should either reconp them forever, or undo them quite Their tricks were the old tricks of centuries, before, founded on a deep knowledge of the chief passions and follies of human nature, and seldom found to fail—tricks old even in Holbein's time. In their gangs there was always a combination of talent and of slang. The Guller was the old Jew miser who was ready to lend money to the defeated player when he became excited by the hope of recovering his losses; the Woodpecker was the parasite who hung round the novice and introduced him to the gang; the Eagle was the strong player who new all the modes of secreting or forcing cards. They had flat-faced rings which reflected the cards that they drew; or they put their gull before a mirror, which reflected his cards to an accomplice, Sometimes a bright-cut steel sword hilt, laid over their left wrist, answered the same purpose of a mirror. Not unfrequently the Eagle took the form of a Deluder—a careless Gil Blas, who would drop in by accident and join the game, or stand behind the gull's chair and signal to his accomplices. Button his glove—that meant ace; play with his wig—strong in trumps; touch his solitaire buckle;—weak in diamonds. Each finger implied a certain number, and was by turns a beacon or a false light. It was not unfreqnent either to purposely spill wine on the table; and even that served to reflect the color and value of otherwise hidden cards.

Major Oneby was neither the Eagle nor the Woodpecker. He had sunk into the lowest of all gamesters—the Bully. He was the blunt, frank old soldier who talked of Marlborough, by ——, sir, and Prince Eugéne. He had a gross humor of his own, and told infamous stories, when he was not quarrelsome nor dangerous. He roared and cursed for wine at Will's or the Mitre, struck the drawers, trod on people's hat or kicked their swords as he passed to his seat. He was the terror of all quiet and timidly respectable men. He used to clap his sword on the table, and glance round defiantly at the company. He would howl out blasphemies—addressed to no one specially, but still amounting to a challenge to the fiercest or bravest men in the room. It was necessary to his reputation as a terrorist that he should kill a man now and then. and woe to the young Templar, vain of his fencing. who that night came in his way. He volunteered to show the young country spendthrift the sights of the town. Some evening, after three or four flasks of wine, the Deluder pretends with his own jovial laugh, to be tired of Garrick and Quinn, of Vauxhall and Ranelagh, of the Mall and fencing-school, of the masquerade and the park. Some people they meet by chance at Will's turn out very lively acquaintances, with a turn for faro or chicken hazard. They adjourn to a gambling-house, and set to work with the dice and the red and black pips. Mr. Littlebrain, the rich young gentleman from Somersetshire, at first wins surprisingly. The gold tide sets in toward him. They call for more Burgundy. He insists on higher stakes, astonished to find how he is startling the old dice-shakers of Covent Garden. More Burgundy, the room seems to get lighter and larger, the dice fly out faster and faster. The tide at last turns, the gold floats from him in shoals. He has lost all he had won and five thousand guineas more, besides the large farm near Taunton. He has also signed some papers that a good-natured old lawyer present requires as securities for the loan of another thousand, already half gone. Gradually the fumes of the wine subside, and one suspicious glance discloses to him the old lawyer changing a pack of cards which he (novice) had placed ready at his elbow. He sees a friend make signs to the benevolent lawyer. Then he feels into what a pack of wolves he has fallen. In a moment Littlebrain dashes over his chair, leaps on a settee, gets down his hat and sword from the peg behind the door, and shouts "Thieves!" from the window to the watch, who have just passed, crying, sleepily:

"Past four, and a rainy morning."

The gang is furious, their eyes glare, they prepare for a stampede. The gallant captain, whose red face, barred with black plaster, looks like a red hot fire seen between the bars of a grate, sweeps two or three dozen guineas from the green cloth into his panniers of pockets. Then some one knocks out the lights, several swords clash with Littlebrain's, and one passes through his unlucky body. He staggers to the stairs, and falls headlong down them—dead. There is a dash at the watchmen, who threaten the gamblers with their staves. The old men, however, fall before the tempestuous charge, and the next moment there is no one in the gambling house but two frightened women, an old watchman, who is holding the dim lantern to the dead man's face with one hand, and removing his watch and purse with the other; the only sound is the wind whistling through the key-hole. In such affairs, subtle, cruel, and deadly, Major Oneby has been no subordinate actor.

To return to our story. All went on at first merrily and friendly. The flask went round, and the wit went with it. At last a wager is laid between Mr. Rich and Mr. Blunt as to whether Mr. Mills did not act the other day the part of "Julius Cæsar" in Shakespeare's play. Both gentlemen are opinionated and heated, but one of the two is of course wrong, and Mr. Blunt loses. The flask-bottle being empty, Mr. Rich and the major call for a box and for dice. The drawer says they have dice but no box. Not much gambling evidently goes on at the Castle Tavern. It is only the blunt hearty major who seems to care much about the matter, but he is persistent, and his energy forces on the company to play.

"No dice-box?" he says. "Well, then, drawer, bring the pepper-box."

Mr. Hawkins, knowing how gambling spoils good talk and a friendly evening, looks rather averse to the turn things are taking, and says:

"Let us play low."

And, after a trifling loss, refuses to play any more. The major turns his gross burly body at this, and glowers at him with his blood-shot eyes, affecting himself to be the promoter of all the amusements of the evening.

"Why do you come into company," he says angrily to Mr. Hawkins, "when you won't do as others do?"

Mr. Hawkins answers coldly, "Don't trouble yourself, sir, about me. I'll do as I please."

Mr. Rich, more sanguine and careless, called out:

"Who will set me three half-crowns?"

Mr. Gower jocularly drew some money from his pocket, and holding it in his closed hand upon the table, said:

"I'll set ye three pieces."

He then lifted his hand, and they proved to be only three halfpence. The major, who was in earnest, and had very serious views of play, grew more vexed at the game being simply derided, fired up, and swore that Gower was an impertinent puppy to set three halfpence.

Then Mr. Gower effervesced also, and cried:

"Sir, I am not afraid of ye, and he that calls me a puppy is a scoundrel."

Quick as the serpent light that rose in his eyes the major snatched up a bottle by the neck and swung it fiercely and swiftly at the head of Mr. Gower. The flask bottle, heavy with Burgundy, brushed Mr. Gower's wig and struck a cloud of white powder from it, but it did no hurt. Mr. Gower, in return, tossed more coolly a wine-glass at the major. Both at the same moment then pushed back their chairs and ran to their swords. Gower, nimbler and younger, jumped on the table and reached his from the peg first. Then stepping down he drew and stood on defence, but made no offer to lunge. In the mean time, Major Oneby also took down his sword and cane, which hung together, and there being a table and chair in his way, came fiercely round the table to do battle with Mr. Gower, but Mr. Rich stepped between them, and told the major, as he was drawing his sword:

"If you make a lunge, major, it must be through my body, and as I am unarmed, that will be a wilful murder."

The duelists of those days knew all the legal boundaries between murder and homicide.

Mr. Gower then threw his sword by on a table, and they all sat down again.

"Come, major," said Mr. Gower, offering his hand frankly, "let us be reconciled. Words spoken in heat may be forgotten and forgiven."

But the major driven from his booty, was inexorable. He growled:

"By ——, you lie. I'll have your blood, by ——." Then turning to Mr. Hawkins furiously, he said, "This is all along of you."

"Why, then," replied Mr. Hawkins, "if you have done with him and have anything to say to me, I am your man, and will see you out."

"No!" said the soured major, "I have another fellow to deal with first."

Mr. Blunt good-naturedly invited the whole company to dinner on the next day, hoping to prevent future mischief.

"No! I'll dine with none of ye," exclaimed Oneby.

"Are you angry, sir?" said Mr. Blunt. "Have you anything to say to me?"

"Or me?" said Mr. Hawkins.

"Or me?" said Mr. Rich.

No, he had nothing to say to any of them. This was between two and three in the morning.

At last some one rose and proposed to go. The major, who had continued a sort of sullen talk, threw his big rough coat over his broad shoulder, and fastened one or two of the buttons. These coats were useful to bullies in sword encounters, for they baffled thrusts and entangled blades. Mr. Hawkins came out first; Mr. Blunt and Rich followed; Mr. Gower was last. Mr. Hawkins asked John Barnes, the drawer, if his chair was ready, as it was raining. Being told it was, he went out, the drawer unbarring the front door into Drury-lane for them. Just as Mr. Gower was following, Major Oneby, all the time in a smoulder, now broke out once more into full flame, and said to Gower:

"Hark ye, young gentleman a word wi' ye."

Gower turned back; he and the major both re-entered the room, and Mr. Rich heard the door slammed savagely, and the bolt shot with the violence of rage. Then there was heard a loud rasping and clashing of swords, and heavy stamps on the floor. Death was locked in with them. Rich and Blunt, hearing open war broke out, called to the drawer to open the door. The door would not yield at first either at bolt or hinge, but by their united efforts the three at last forced it open and got in.

Too late, too late. Poor Gower had been disarmed and was already struck; Major Oneby, intent on death, guarded the door. He wanted to taste his revenge, and was delaying the coup de grace as cats delay the death of the mouse they torture. His sword was pointing at his enemy. Gower then, in the intensity of despair, closed with the gambler, rather as if he were falling forward against him through weakness, but still feebly intent on a mortal grapple, for he new well he was in the hands of a professional assassin. The major clutched his shoulder with his left hand, but quitted him when the three men broke in, and Barnes, the drawer, cried:

"For God's sake what are you doing?"

As Mr. Rich held up his hand to part the two men, he felt the sting of a sword pricking through his coat. It was Major Oneby's sword, but there seemed to be no intention in him to wound Mr. Rich. Almost at the same moment Mr. Blunt cried out that he was stabbed in the stomach, but in the excitement no one could decide whether it was done in mistake by Mr. Gower or in a rage by Major Oneby. The wound was supposed to be mortal.

At this moment Mr. Hawkins returned—he who had at first scented out the major's real character, and persuaded his friends not to play. He had been waiting out under a penthouse as it rained, and there was no chair near, nor any watchman to call one. Seeing none of the company come out, he concluded that there was either some mischief brewing, or another bottle of wine to be had, so he stepped back into the tavern. There he found a cluster of pale and horrified faces, sobered now. watching poor Gower, who was bleeding, and leaning half fainting over a chair. There was not twelve hours' life in him. In another chair sat Mr. Blunt, moaning, and also apparently dying.

Mr. Shaw, a surgeon then in the house, came and dressed the wounds of both men. Mr. Blunt proved to be dangerously hurt. Mr. Gower was languishing; his intestines appeared at the wound. A second rupture was also suspected

The major with the bloodshot eyes and the evil month stood by in his frouzy campaigning wig, his cruel hand on the tarnished hilt of his sword, swearing that the first glass had been flung by Mr. Gower, and that he (the major) had not only received the first affront, but had also been first drawn upon.

When the two wounded men had been sent home in sedan chairs, Mr, Rich and Mr. Hawkins came out of the tavern with Major Oneby, slow pacing and melancholy. It had been an evil night, and the moon was rising over the roofs of a dull blood color. Mr. Rich said to the major as they walked together:

"I am afraid you have killed Mr. Gower."

To which the major replied confidentially :

"No, I might have done it if I would, but I have only frightened him. Suppose I had killed him? I know what to do in these affairs; for if I had killed him to-night in the heat of passion I should have had the law on my side; but if I had done it at any other time it would have looked like a set meeting, and not rencontre."

The major was learned in duels but he had forgotten the law for once. The presumption of law was, that if a considerable interval elapsed between a provocatiou and a fight the renewal of the quarrel proved malice, and made the aggressor a murderer.

Mr. Rich knew this, and remembered that the major first began the quarrel in his vexation at the friends refusing to play at hazard, after the second main : so he simply said :

"I advise you to make off, for fear of the worst."

The frightened waiter, when the dangerous company had left the Castle Tavern, went peering about the room with a light. There were several small pools of blood, especially close to the wainscot behind the flap of the great oval table where Rich had found Gower's sword stained with blood for five inches from the point.

The next evening, a mysterious letter was brought to Mr. Burdet, a surgeon near Red Liou-square, by a man in a coach desiring him to come and see Major Oneby at the house of a Mr. Gardiner in Dean street, where he was concealing himself, having been wounded in a recontre. The major had one wound an inch and a half long below his knee and one on his flank ; two of his fingers were cut in the first joints ; there were several holes and cuts in his clothes ; but there was an unreal air about the wounds which made the surgeon feel suspicious, for they were none of them a quarter of an inch deep, and the thrust below the knee was only a graze.

That same day Mr. Gower slowly sank and died. Mr. Rich, bending over him, asked him, just before the change for death came on, "if he had received his wound fairly?" He answered faintly, with great effort :

"I think I did—but—I don't know—what might have happened—if you—had not—come in." It is probable that Major Oneby, having disarmed the young fellow, would have stabbed him mercilessly till he had killed him on the spot."

The major was tried at the Old Bailey in March of the same year. He pleaded that he had not first called for the box and dice, and that Mr. Gower threw the glass and drew first; but the court decided that it was clear the prisoner gave the first provocation, and it was not denied that he killed the deceased. If there had been no reconciliation from the time the bottle was thrown to the time the last thrust was made, it was murder.

The jury agreed upon a special verdict. The counsel on both sides then drew up their points of the evidence for the consideration of the judges. The major, who had entertained great hopes of getting off for "manslaughter," rather struck silent by this delay, was remanded to Newgate, where he spent a whole year comfortably, without irons, and in the best room of the prison. Finding that no steps had been taken by the prosecutor to bring on the case, he now considered that the enemy had no hopes, and moved to have the case tried in the King's Bench. The case was tried in February, 1726. Lord Chief Justice Raymond, however, adjourned the case.

On his way back to Newgate the gallant officer was boisterous, jovial, hopeful and exulting. He stopped and dined at the King's Arms Tavern in the Strand. He was sure, he boasted, that the special verdict would be in his favor, and he should have nothing to do but to return to the army and repair the loss of the trial by plundering the enemy. Men of this kind always trade on their former positions in their days of innocence.

On the 6th of May, 1727, the judges met at Serjeants Inn, if possible to end the case. Meanwhile, his not very honorable antecedents had been found out and considered. John Oneby, aged fifty-three, was the son of a respectable and successful lawyer at Barwell, in Leicestershire. The boy had been well educated, and served his clerkship with a man eminent in the profession ; but young Oneby was proud and ambitious ; he aimed at higher things than clerkships, and chafed at the restrictions of the office. Sir Nathan Wright, the lord-keeper, being a near relation of his mother, application was made to him to push the fortunes of his young kinsman ; but all he could or would give him was the humble place of a train-bearer. Oneby brooked this for some time, hoping for a better prize ; but finding none come, he threw down the keeper's train with disgust, and resolved to join the army abroad. His friends soon procured him a commission, and he served under Marlborough in Flanders. The career suited his turbulent spirit, and he acquired the reputatiou of a useful and bravo officer, having fought in several battles and sieges, and received several wounds. The dark side of his nature soon began to show itself. He became quarrelsome and revengeful. He had a duel at Bruges, outside the camp, with an officer of horse. Oneby's wounded antagonist died the next day. A court-martial was held, but the duel having been considered fair, Oneby was honorably acquitted, and was now known among "people of honor" as a duelist that had felled his man. He afterwards fought a Lieutenant Tooley at Port Royal, in Jamaica. Both combatants were desperately wounded, but Tooley lingered for eight months before he died. Oneby was never brought to trial. By seniority Oneby had risen, after twenty-two years' hard service, to the rank of major in Honeywood's regiment of dragoons ; but the peace of Utrecht coming, the major had to seek other roads to fortune, and Mercury soon found him one covered with green cloth.

The major had still one virtue left. He had courage. While the judges at Serjeants Inn were deciding on his fate, he made extremely merry, and kept high revel in Newgate over smoking punch, drinking the healths of his judges, who he boasted knew him to be a man of honor, and resolved not to hurt him. In the midst of his tipsy songs a good-natured friend, whom he had known over the green cloth, entered with a grisly oath, and swore that eleven of the twelve judges had decided to bring it in WILFUL MURDER. This struck down the hopes of the roystering major as with a poleaxe. To use his own confession, "it frightened him cursedly." To lower him still more, and to hang, as it were, his whole mind with black, two or three men he had sent to watch round Serjeants Inn did not return that night to the Ark, and this made his fears rise up like a swelling sea. The fact was, that the judges, having heard counsel on both sides, had broken up about ten at night without declaring their final opinion. No one, therefore, could speak with certainty ; but from small things, that leaked out through the lawyers' clerks and porters, it was generally thought that the majority would be shortly cast for murder.

Oneby, shaking off his drunkenness, felt the ground sinking under him ; he called over the roll of his few respectable friends before the last desperate step of throwing himself on the king's mercy, clinging, however, still to the smallest hopes ; as a man, finding a bush on the cliff-side fail him as he climbs, snatches at even a flower or at blades of grass. The wretched man still flattered himself that the judges might determine in his favor, till one day the cell door opened, and the keeper of Newgate entered, followed by a beetle-browed jailor carrying a pile of heavy chains. The order had come that the major was to be double ironed. He was to have a man placed in his room every night. The sense of having once been a gentleman returned vividly to his mind ; he appeared much shocked, and was eager to know whether any secret order of the judges had arrived, or wheter it arose from some false information of his desire to escape. He hoped the latter ; but the keeper refused to satisfy him, and ordered the jailer to at once put on the irons. The rascal's heart gave way at this degradation, and he burst into tears.

The person appointed to watch in the major's room was a man named John Hooper, afterwards the public executioner, an honest and faithful fellow, who obtained his promotion by "pure merit and without bribes," as a contemporaneous paper says applaudingly. The major at first expressed great horror at his hard malign face.

"What the d——," he said, in his old blustering way, "do you bring this fellow here for? Whenever I look at him I shall think of hanging." But he soon grew reconciled when he found Hooper was a mimic, a teller of ribald stories, who could imitate the itinerant Methodists, and joke and describe all the humors of the prison and half the wild beasts that inhabited it.

Three weeks more of this cruel suspense and wavering justice, and the gamester was brought up to the Kings' Bench bar to receive the judgment of the Court. Lord Chief Justice Raymond told him that the judges had unanimously found him guilty of wilful murder, and recapitulated to him their reasons. The prisoner prayed to be recommended to his Majesty's clemency for his long and faithful services in the army. The judges turned stony faces upon the miserable man. As to mercy, he must, they said, apply for that elsewhere ; where he stood now, was only a court of justice. Formal sentence of death was at last passed upon him, and his execution ordered for the 4th of July.

He had exhausted his London friends ; he must now go himself like the prodigal son returning from a far country, and sue to his Leicestershire friends. He wrote abjectly to them begging their pardons for past follies, and entreating them to come up and help him. Some did relent ; but the major's old haughtiness resisted all rebukes, and one relation left Newgate and instantly posted home. A cousin only continued with him, faithfully from real pity, till his death. That one lingering friend, perhaps, proved that there was still some redeeming point left in a bad man. The major had boasted largely of the nobleman he had known in Flanders and met at gambling-tables ; but his friends, on inquiring, found no one who would speak for him, or even deliver his petition.

Flesh flies live on corruption. Grub-street had unanimously resolved to turn a penny by the major. About a week before his death, a street pamphlet was published, entitled The Weight of Blood : being the Case of Major John Oneby. It was a catch-penny, containing merely the trial from the Sessions paper, part of a sermon upon duels by a Mr. Hales of Eton, and Sir Richard Steel's Theatre, No. 26, on the same subject. By the phamphleteer himself there were only three or four short paragraphs. The remarks that especially affronted the major were these :

"* * * But as to Oneby, 'tis greatly to be feared that as he lived a profligate he will die a reprobate, having declared since his conviction that neither his confinement nor his crime ever gave him so much uneasiness as his cursed garters (as he is pleased to call his fetters.) After sentence was pronounced, this bravo showed outward marks of a very great internal shock."

The ragged garretteer who wrote this street chap-book had actually the boundless impudence to visit the major in Newgate, to inform him, as a friend, that such a work was in the press, and suggesting that, as it might retard or prevent a reprieve, the author had better be bought off. In case the major could not be squeezed, and refused to become a milch cow, the eminent author probably thought he might, in that case, at least collect from the turnkeys or his own observation some facts to heighten the seasoning of his work. No money was, however, to be drawn, and the worthy descendant of Curll left. When the major read the book, and discovered that the author and his visitor were one and the same, he flew into a stormy rage, and cursed and swore even in the presence of the ordinary. He then tried several strategems to decoy the poor author into Newgate, but the eminent author was shy, and Oneby's efforts proved ineffectual. It preyed upon him, however ; and only three days before his death he said he desired but one thing in the world, and that was to have the satisfaction of taking leave of that rascally fellow with a sound whip : so sensitive can a scoundrel be to a form of sconndrelism to which he is unaccustomed!

Soon after this, the doomed man's violent and inflammable temper had another trial from a selfish and ungrateful world. An obsequious undertaker came one morning into the press-yard at Newgate, and sent in the following letter :

"Honored Sir. This is to inform you that I follow the business of an undertaker in Dury-lane, where I have lived for many years, and am well known to several of your friends As you are to die on Mouday, and have not, as I suppose, spoke to anybody else about your funeral, if your honor shall think fit to give me orders, I will perform it as cheap and in as decent a manner as any man alive.

"Your honor's unknown humble servant, "G. H."

The burst of rage into which the major broke reached the undertaker in the press-yard, and he fled in dismay. He still continued to write letters to persons of distinction he had seen or spoken to when in the army, to intercede for him ; but all in vain. On Saturday he learut that his petition had been presented and refused. He was gloomy, but obdurate ; he showed no fear, and expressed no sorrow. The noise of the Saturday night's market rose round Newgate, the flare of the huxters' lanterns and grease-pans gleamed into the condemned cells. The major went to bed about ten, as usnal. At four on the Sunday morning, about daybreak, when all was still, the condemned man woke up the turnkey, Hooper, who was in his room, and called for a glass of brandy-and water. The old drunkard's thirst was on him, and he seemed low and depressed. He then raised himself in his heavy-curtained bed, and, getting pen and ink, wrote out his last will and testament ; for the noose, ready knotted, was lying already in steep for him in the press-room, and the hangman was perhaps at that very moment dreaming of his fees and of the coming job. He wrote his will ; it was brief enough ; he had nothing to leave but his frayed, wine-splashed, cut coat, his tarnished sword, some false dice, and a pack of prepared cards :

"Cousin Turvill, give Mr. Ackerman, the turnkey below stairs, half a guinea ; and Jack, who waits in my room, five shillings. The poor devils have had a great deal of trouble with me since I have been here."

The major only requested Jack and his watchers to go outside and be silent, as he wanted to compose himself against the coming of his friends. He drew his curtains carefully, and the men fell asleep again. The silence was unbroken till about seven, when his footman entered the room to call him. The major called out faintly, as if half asleep :

"Who is that? Philip?"

Soon after, a friend (probably Cousin Turvill, almost his only friend) came in, and, going to his bedside, called several times "Major! Major!" but getting no answer, he at last drew back the dingy curtains. The bed was streaming with blood ; it lay everywhere in coagulated pools on the counterpane. The wretched man was dying. He had balked the hangman of his fees. A surgeon was sent for ; Hooper ran like a madman for him. Philip stanched a deep gash in the wrist, which the desperate man had cut with the penknife he had mended the pen with that had made his will.—All the Year Round.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO,.....SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1867.

THE NEW RELIGION.

FOR some time past, paragraphs announcing the formal inauguration of a new religion, on the basis of Comptism, have been traveling the rounds of the daily and periodical press. The first movement in the direction of making the principles of the Positive Philosophy the basis of a religious organization, is said to have taken place in England, under the auspices of a number of individuals distinguished in the world of letters, among whom the author of "Adam Bede," "Romola," and "Felix Holt," is the most widely known. Practical steps have already been taken, it is stated, for the building of a church in which "regular services" are to be held. What the nature of these services is to be, has not yet transpired; but inasmuch as the new religion recognizes the existence of nothing above Nature, and of no valid knowledge or worthy belief except such as can be obtained through science by observation and experiment, its ritual must, in the absence of any object of worship, necessarily be unlike any that the world has yet seen, unless indeed it shall resemble more or less closely that of the French revolutionists, when they made a diety of an abstraction, and with a hollow ceremonial borrowed in part from the rites of heathen temples, and in part from the shows of the theatre, offered a tinsel mockery of worship to the Goddess Reason.

How a religion that is to consist of scientific truths alone, can be expected to awaken moral enthusiasm, or to feed and strengthen the moral nature, it seems difficult to those who have been accustomed to look to supernatural sanctions for these purposes, to understand. Yet such an expectation is undoubtedly entertained by Mr. Congreve, and his associate apostles of the "Religion of the Future." They proclaim their conviction, (and we have no proof or reason for questioning their sincerity) that it is by the promotion and spread of the new creed, and the supercedure of all existing forms of religious belief, that "humanity is to be regenerated." Whether John Stuart Mill has enrolled himself as one of Mr. Congreve's congregation, we are not informed; but there are passages in his writings which go far to show that this cool-headed philosopher, who by temperament and intellectual constitution, might be supposed to be against enthusiasm on behalf of anything pretending to be a "religion,") reposes an almost fanatical faith in the dynamic power of positivism for influencing the moral nature. It is with a feeling of amazement that we read the declaration of such a man, of his belief that Compte's system has "superabundantly shown the possibility of giving to the service of humanity even without the aid of a belief in Providence, both the psychological power and the social efficacy of a religion; making it take hold of human life, and color all thought, feeling, and action, in a manner of which the greatest ascendancy ever exercised by any religion, may be but a type and foretaste."

If the "new religion" can indeed do the marvels expected of it by its apostles; if it can supply a motive force stronger than any heretofore known, for overcoming the selfishness and the infirmities of human nature, it will bring with it its own divine authentication, and no matter what, or how suspicious may be its merely secondary and human source, it should be hailed as indeed the "latest revelation," worthy of superseding all that have gone before. But, it will be time enough for those who still hold fondly to the faith of Christendom seriously to consider its pretentions when it shall have done something to demonstrate its power; when some of the goodly fruits it is to bear shall have ripened. For eighteen centuries, the only faith that has been able to inspire an active "enthusiasm of humanity," and to impel its devotees to self-sacrifice in the service of their fellow men, the only faith that has been able to elevate man above himself, and make him subordinate pleasure, interest, happiness, and life itself to the idea of duty, has been one that appealed to supernatural sanctions and that took hold on the invisible world. For eighteen centuries, the motives supplied by such a faith have proved the only ones capable of inspiring the highest and most active forms of philanthrophy, forms which actually had no existence on earth before the influence of Christianity was felt. If Positivism, by abolishing Providence, and removing from the minds of men all thought of an eternal destiny, can make them more unselfish, more wide and more zealous in their devotion to the good of their kind, let its reign be speedily inaugurated throughout the earth. But until at least the first fruits of the promised harvest shall be garnered, it will be difficult indeed to persuade that class of minds in which the religious sentiment is strongly developed, that pure philanthrophy and active zeal in the "service of humanity," can be most effectively promoted by overthrowing the religion to which they seem to have owed their very existence.

THE CASE OF MISS LESTER vs. TRINITY CHURCH SUNDAY SCHOOL.

WHETHER we regard the dislike and antipathy inspired by the negro in a large portion of the white race, as a narrow and inhuman prejudice, or as a natural instinct, conservative in its operation and designed to subserve wise purposes, it is equally impossible to deny its existence, its prevalence, and its rooted strength. However much we may be disposed to quarrel with it, we are constrained to recognize it as a practical fact, and from time to time circumstances arise which imperatively require that we should turn for the moment from general disquisitions and abstract theories, and deal with in a purely practical spirit. Such a case has recently occurred in this city, and as in all that has been said in regard to it, we have never seen it treated in the spirit indicated, we propose to devote some little space to its consideration.

We have heretofore refrained from making any allusion to the matter, because we thought it possible that all the facts had not yet been placed before the public, and supposed that some explanation or denial of the case as stated in the Daily Times, week before last, would appear, either in one of the daily papers, or in the Pacific Churchman, the organ of the Episcopal Church in this diocese. No such denial or explanation having appeared, it is fair to presume that the statement referred to is substantially correct. According to the accounts of the matter in the Times and the Dispatch, Miss Lester, daughter of Peter Lester of Victoria, and a member of the Episcopal Church, arrived in this city a little over a year ago, bringing letters of introduction from Arch Deacon Gilson, of the former place, to Dr. Wyatt, Rector of Trinity Church, San Francisco. The introduction of the Arch Deacon was duly honored, and Miss Lester became a regular attendant and communicant at Trinity. Not long afterwards, "she was invited," according to the statements referred to, "to teach in the Sunday School, where she continued, giving perfect satisfaction," until the 17th of October last, when the Superintendent told her that her services as teacher were no longer needed, giving no reasons for the dismissal. Calling upon the Rector of Trinity, and laying the case before him, Miss Lester was informed that he entirely approved of the Superintendent's action in the premises; that her presence in the school as a teacher caused dissatisfaction in the congregation, and that it was best for the sake of harmony and good feeling that she should withdraw. In answer to the young woman's inquiry, she was also assured that the reason of her dismissal was not any lack of the proper qualifications for the duties of her position, but that it was solely the prejudice which existed against her, as a person "having negro blood in her veins." The published statements moreover declare that the Rector of Trinity in explaining the necessity of the step that had been taken referred "to the changed aspect of political affairs," as having some bearing upon the matter. That a clergyman should wish the withdrawal of a teacher against whom the kind of prejudice in question existed, we can readily conceive; nor are we prepared to say that an attempt to induce Miss Gordon to withdraw voluntarily, by making a candid representation to her, of the ill-feeling and possible dissension that would arise from her persisting in the face of such a prejudice, in retaining her class, would have involved anything either unchristian, or improper. But that the necessity for dismissal should have been rested in any degree upon "the changed condition of political affairs"—that a minister of the religion of Christ should have adopted such a line of argument seems to us prima facie, an utterly incredible statement. As the interview between the Rector of Trinity and Miss Lester appears to have been a private one, the account of it that appeared in the papers must have been furnished by her; and without impugning her veracity, which we have no right or intention to do, we may suppose that the reference to the result of the elections was merely a general allusion, designed to illustrate the power and wide diffusion of the prejudice of caste, and not an argument to justify the dismissal upon abstract grounds. This supposition is rendered the more probable by the fact, that Miss Lester, according to her own account, lost her temper during the conversation and so far forgot herself, as to respond to some observation of her pastor's with the (under the circumstances) rather unladylike expletive, "nonsense," whereupon the reverend gentleman, not unnaturally, felt that it was time to close the interview. A correspondent of the Morning Call, in commenting upon the case, insists that Miss Lester "in seeking white society to the exclusion of her own (sic) was guilty of the very thing which she charges upon others, viz: a discrimination in favor of white against colored people." But, if, as has been stated, the young woman has so slight an infusion of "negro blood in her veins" as not to be readily recognizable as other than a white person, this view of the matter is not even plausible, for in that case, she belongs more to the Caucasian than to the negro race, and in seeking association with the former, she cannot be justly charged with "seeking white society to the exclusion" of that to which she naturally belonged.

Summing up the whole matter, upon the facts before the public, we arrive at the following practical conclusions: First, if the antipathy to "persons having negro blood in their veins" was so strong among the congregation of Trinity Church, as to make Miss Lester's presence in the Sunday School, in the capacity of a teacher, as a cause of general and serious dissatisfaction, the Superintendent would have been justified in declining her services at the outset. Second, if after having accepted such services, the prejudice referred to developed itself in such strength as to render her continuance as a teacher a source of trouble and dissention, it would have been perfectly proper to request her to withdraw voluntarily. Third, if, after having been offered the position of a teacher in the school, and after having satisfactorily discharged the duties of that position, she was dismissed, in consequence of any political change, such dismissal was unjustifiable upon any ground, and a time-serving, unmanly, and unchristian act, in the highest degree discreditable to all who are in any way responsible for it.

MR. STODDARD'S POEMS.

A LITERARY gentlemen of New York, who holds a high position in the republic of letters, writes us, that Mr. Stoddard's volume of poems is highly spoken of in literary circles. In the New York Weekly Review of September 28th, a critical journal of considerable authority, over half a column is devoted to a notice of the volume. The following is an extract, showing in what esteem our young poet is held by metropolitan critics, who are capable of taking a somewhat wider and more Catholic view of his productions, than the sage brush literateurs, and who recognize that there are many kinds, as well as degrees, of poetic excellence:

"Seldom has the first venture of a young poet started forth in gayer attire, or with more cheerful auguries of success, than attend this volume of Mr. Stoddard's poems. It has been cordially received in California, and we do not doubt that it will be kindly welcomed among readers of poetry here. Many of the poems contained in it have been made familiar to such readers, by previous circulation in the newspapers. Garnered up in this handsome volume, they bear eloquent testimony to the delicately sensitive poetic organization of their writer, and inspires a well-founded belief that he will do good service to the literature of his country. A good heart, a lively and impressible fancy, a passionate love of beauty, a quick sympathy with high ideals, a keen moral sense, a distinct perception of the teachings of nature, a religious temperament, and a well-trained faculty for verse writing—these are the elements of Mr. Stoddard's mind, as shown in these poems. * * * * Mr. Stoddard is, apparently, one of those clear temperaments that feel a bliss in sunshine, and flowers, and the song of birds, and the splendor of sunset, and the grace and laughter of woman, and the whispers of the sea, and all the countless sweet and tender influences that surround a gentle mind. These influences permeate his poetry. Its character is thus sufficiently indicated—and, putting the Tennysonian element aside, its character is strongly individual. Upon this fact, and upon the fact that these poems are pervaded by a very fine and delicate and thoughtful poetic spirit, we base our conviction that Mr. Stoddard is destined to take and to hold a permanent place among American poets. Such poems as 'The Awakening,' 'Fame,' 'Decrees,' and 'The Southern Cross,' are not written in vain."

Such appreciation as this, on the part of a recognized critical authority, may well console Mr. Stoddard for the ungracious and unintelligent criticism of the Territorial Enterprise, and other provincial reviewers.

THE Pall Mall Gazette says, in the truest and most detestable spirit of aristocratic superciliousness, that there is hardly anything more tragi-comic in the vast tragi-comedy of life" than "the efforts of the working classes to elevate their condition," than "this strange yearning of men after a better life, and the grotesque forms which it assumes." The Gazette then proceeds to compare such aspirations on the part of the mudsills, to the desire of a hippopotamus to enjoy the benefits of a polite education. "It is," says the organ of British culture and refinement, "as if the hippopotamus at the Zoological Gardens somehow got it into his head that he ought to learn to read the newspapers." It is not often the spirit of caste speaks out with such frank and solid arrogance.

THE first number of Harpers' new periodical, The Bazaar, was expected to have appeared on the second inst. It will in all probability prove an immense success, greater even than the Weekly, which now nets for its proprietors about $150,000 per annm. Miss Mary L. Booth is to be the editress, and the fashion plates are to be published simultaneously with those in Germany and France, from duplicates procured at immense expense.

MR. CHARLES HENRY WEBB, is one of the most industrious and prolific of the writers for the Eastern press. During the last year he has been a contributor to Hours at Home, Harpers' Magazine, the Round Table, the Citizen, and the Tribune, besides a New York correspondence with the Springfield Republican, and publishing his well known travesties of "Griffith Gaunt," and Miss Evan's "St. Elmo."

THE New York Evening Mail says: "Ralph Keeler, the young Californian who made the tour of Europe for $181 in "greenbacks," is to be one of the popular lecturers this coming winter. His subject is "Views Barefooted." He traveled farther on less money than any living American."

AT LAST.

AFTER years of vaia endeavor, aad fruitlesss experiment, we have at last a "Californian Champagne" that is worthy of the aame, and that is fit to challenge comparisoa with the choice vintages of the country around Rheims, which supply the civilized world with the sparkling wines that have won the highest reputation, and are ia the greatest demand. Isidor Landsberger, of 429 Jackson street, San Francisco, has succeeded in producing a champagne wine of a really superior quality. He has gone into the busiaess oa aa extensive scale, aided by the skill and experience of Mr. Hazarthy, who has spent several years ia the Champagne couatries, making himself master of all the processes there employed in the preparation of sparkling wiaes. Mr. Landsberger has now ia his exteasive wine cellars oa Jackson street, from twenty to twenty five thousand hottles of champagae ia various stages of preparation. No sparkling wine, heretofore produced ia this State, can compare with that in Mr. Laadsberger's wine vaults. While devoting his chief attentioa to the manufacture of a champagae that shall he able to sustain a comparison with the imported article, he has also introduced a sti l white wine, which he calls "Soaoma Hock," that is far superior to the famous "Gerke" hrand, and is pronounced by coaaoisseurs, the fiaest white wine ever produced ia California. This "Hock" is quite a differeat article from the poor thia, accidulous wiaes that have been long kaown ia this market by that aame. It has the geauine Rhenish flavor, and is maaufactured from the Riessling grape—the same used in the production of the world reaowned "Johaanisburger."

Charles Dickens' new Christmas Story is annouaced in All the Year Round to appear on the 12th of December in au extra double aumber of that magazine, and to he "written entirely hy Charles Dickens and Wilkie Collins." From this statemeat, aad the fact that Wilkie Collins is announced as heiag engaged to write the new serial story for All the Year Ronnd, we iafer that Mr. Collins will be placed in the editorial chiar of that magaziae during Mr. Dickens' absence to this couatry. Wilkie Collias has evidently heca a regular coatributor to All the Year Round for many moaths back. Most of those interesting historical stories, published under the compreheasive title of "Old Stories Re-told," which have enriched the pages of that magazine for the last six months, bear evidence of that gentlemaa's peculiar analytical mind, historical research, and grophic powers of descriptioa: though a few have heen written by Charles Dickens himself. The story of "A Gamb'er's Life ia the Last Century," which we publish ia to-days' Californian, is one of the stories of "Old Stories Re told," and is an average sample of what Wilkie Collins can do with actual incidents, facts and figures, when he groups them up in a narrative form.

The Pacific Musical Gazette.—Tho November number of the Pacific Musical Gazette coatalas four pages of music. The majority of the compositions are sacred music. E. Robert's "Comfort Ye My People," appears among others of a similar character. Te editor haa not devoted as much space to local musical eveats as night fairly he expected of hiai as editor of The Pacific Musical Gazette. Everyone knows that the Misses Emma aad Clelia Howsoa sing the duet "Sainted Mother" in Maritana extremely well, the puhlic are geaerally aware that Henri Herherte's henefit was well attended, hut arc not iaterested ia kaowiag that other eagagements prevented the editor of The Pacific Musical Gazette from attending the concert givea by colored artistes at Zion Church. The editor of a musical gazette should do his work thoroughly, should watch and criticise all musical entertainments, and it is only with a view to spur him oa to eaergetic efforts to encourage music in San Francisco, by intelligeatly criticising every concert given in this city, that we make these remarks.

The Sea-Wall.—Work ou the Northern and first-sectioa of the sea-wall is progressing rapidly. This scctioa is to extead from Vallejo to Uaion streets, and tho stone foundation which is to support granite croppiags, has already heea laid for more than half that distance, and the whole of the stone bed work, it is expected, will be completed before the first of Jaauary aext. After the completion of this bulkhead, the space intervening betweca it and the shore, will he filled up. aad the granite copping will be laid. The stone, of which an abuadant quantity was furnished by the recent hlast made in Telegraph Hill, is well adapted for the purpose. A. H. Houston & Son are the contractors, and are pushing the work aloag with comaieadable enterprise.

The Loadon Times says: Tuo Parisiaa public may soon look forward to a new but harmless excitement. The remains of Napoleoa II. are, it is stated, to he removed from their resting place at Vieana, aad laid ia the newly-restored vaults of the Abhey of St. Deais. The deputation on whom will devolve the duty of conveying them has already been appointed, and consists of Marshal Regoault de St. Jeaa d'Aagely, the Duke of Bassaao, M. de Cambaceres, and Geaeral Fluery. Marshal Vailleat is busy with the programme of the fuaeral ceremony.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

AT Maguire's Opera House the capital comedy of Caste was played to good houses on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. Dan Bryant has woa golden opinioas in consequence of the admirably artistic manner in which he impersonated "Eccles." I cannot imagine that this character could he better played. Miss Sallie Hinckley made a great hit ia the part of "Esther Eccles," or as priated in the Call's advertisement "Mother Eccles," why I canaot imagiae, as "Miss Esther Eccles" is a charming young hallet dancer who hecomes Mrs. D'Alroy. On Thursday Inshavogue was presented. Last night, the romantic Irish drama of Kathleen Mavourneen was played for the farewell benefit of Dan Bryant; the performance concluded with the farce eatitled Barney the Baron. To-day the last Bryaat matinee will he given, when Kathleen Mavourneen will be played, and to-aight last night's hill will be repeated. Mr. Bryant's engagemeat at Maguire's Opera Hoase has proved an emiaently successful one, aad I have ao douht he will, when once more iu New York, look back with pleasure ou the days he spent in San Francisco.

On Tuesday, Miss Helea Tracy will make her first appearance in San Francisco, as "Virginia" in the tragedy of Virginius. San Fraacisco has been fortunatc in rearing up maay good actresses, and I hope that Miss Helcu Tracy's debut in this city may prove as successful as have those of many other ladies who have made their appearance oa the San Francisco boards.

At the Metropolitaa Theatre, the seasatioa drama of Ernest Maltravers was played on Monday and Tuesday evenings. Mr. Bates has received many notices from the daily news, in coasequence of the "good old Bowery style" ia which he played the part of "Richard Darville." The manner in which he r-r-r-rolled his rs, aad the terrihle style ia which he glared at the audience, delighted the gallery. Mrs. Bates played the part of "Alice Darville" capitally and Miss Emma Howson gained much applause for her singing. The play is utter trash, one of the most thrilling situations is that where there are three or four dead hodies on the stage at the same time. I must aot forget to say that Mr. Bates played "Sir Edward Mortimer" in The Iron Chest, which was presented on Saturday aight, extremely well, aad Mrs. Bates made a capital "Wilford." Mr. Bates has aot yet learaed that the San Fraacisco public prefer a quiet, intense style of acting, to aoisy declamation. On Wedncsday, the very clever burlesque of Aladdin, or The Wonderful Scamp, was presented, with Miss Clelia Howson ia the title role. There never was a more woaderfully bewitchiag young scamp on the hoards of any theatre than is Miss Clelia Howson in this character, and John Howson's "Widow Twankey" is oae of the most perfect pieces of burlesque acting ever seen. On Thursday the performanco consisted of Ill Treated Trovatore and Betsey Baker. On Friday the performaace commeaced with the comedietta of The Kiss in the Dark, and concluded with the Irish drama of Kate Kearney. There is very little douht but that the theatre will be crowded from pit to dome to night if the people in San Francisco mean what they say. They all say that Miss Clelia Howson is one of the most charming and talented actresses who have visited this city. To-night she takes a benefit. The capital hurlesque of Kenilworth which has been localized expressly for this occasion by the author of the hurlesque of Maximiliano, Emperor Norton I, the drama of Enoch Arden or Under the Palm, aad some dozen or more dramatic productions, will be presented. Many of our Saa Fraacisco puhlic mea are introduced iato the compaay of "Good Queea Bess," Sir Walter Raleigh, the Earl of Leicester and other monarchical swells, and are as much made fua of as are the "poor dead and goae" nohlemen. Local topics are freely treated in this productioa, and many who, doubtless, would not go to the Metropolitan Theatre to night for the sake of eacouraging an industrious and taleuted youug actress, will go because they will hear the actors poke fun at people whom they know. The performance will commeace with the comedietta of I Can't Help It. Mlle. Zoe De Lave will appear in the most tnrilling of her wonderful feats, that of hanging by tho hack of her neck from a trapeze suspeaded from the ceiling of the theatre, and heating a drum while in this position.

Oa Monday, Mrs. Charles Poole, from the chief theatres of the Australasian Colonies, will make her first appearaace in San Francisco. Mrs. Poole is said to be extremely happy in the impersonation of male characters, and the Melbourae press have spoken ia high terms of praise of her "Hamlet" and "Iago." She has chosen for her debut ia Saa Francisco, the character of "Massaaiello," in the historical drama of that name.

Oa and after Monday week, there will be a change ia the managemeat of the Metropolitan Theatre. James Vinson, Harry Edwards and F. M. Bates have leased this theatre for one year. The Howson's have givea good entertainments, hut have had hut little prospect of retrieving their losses. Under these circumstances the change in the maaagemeat will probably prove a benefit to them. Miss Clelia Howson, John Howsoa and Fraak Howsoa, the leader of the orcchestra, will probably accept engagemcnts under the new managemeat, and Miss Emma Howson, whose excellence in lyric parts is undisputed, will he ready whea an occasion offers. Mr. Vinson is the oldest and most experienced manager on the Pacific coast, having heea intimately connected with the birth of the drama ia San Francisco. In 1850 and 1851 he, in partnership with Mr. Evrard, (now a captain of police) managed the Olympic Theatre, on Montgomery street, between Clay aad Sacrameato. Since that period he has been engaged in the theatres of Australia. Harry Edwards is a universal favorite with the San Fraacisco public, plays all parts which he uadertakes in a scholarly and artistic manner, aad has had much experieace on the stage. Mr. Bates' long connectioa with the New York stage will be turned to good account, and the leading stars of the East will appear in rapid succession on the stage of the Metropolitan Theatre.

The New Temple of Music at Congress Hall under the managemeat of Messrs Leslie, Raynor, and Smith, is prospering immensely. It is prononnced to be quite the thing, and the elite of Saa Francisco nightly assemble in this beautiful hall to listen to the sweet singing of Henri Herberte, enjoy the eccentric performances of the two Harries—Leslie and Raynor—and be delighted by the fine choruses sung nightly. The other evening I noticed among the audience the Governor of the State, the Secretary of State, two judges, and two clergymea. This is I presnme a sufficient proof that the entainment is "high toned," the fact that the house is crowded nightly prove coaclusively that it is meritorious.

Touchstone.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

ELSIE'S MARRIED LIFE. A Tale of Domestic Life. By Mrs. MacKenzie Daniel. Author of "My Sister Mianie," "The Poor Cousin," "Kate Walsenghaur," "Reaping The Whirlwind," "After Long Years," "The Old Maid of the Family," "Our Brother Paul," otc, etc. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Brothers, 306 Chestaut street. San Fraacisco: A Roman & Co.

Kathrina: Her Life and Mine, in a Poem. By J. G. Holland. Author of "Bitter Sweet." New York: Published hy Charles Scribner & Co. San Francisco: A. Roman & Compaay.

"The Confessions of Gerald Escourt." By Florence Marryatt. (Mrs. Ross Church.) Author of "Love's Conflict," "Woman against Woman," "Too Good For him," "For Ever and Ever," etc. Loring, Publisher, 319 Washingtoa street, Boston. A. Romam & Co., Saa Francisco, 1867.

"Leah's Confessions." An Autobiography. A. Roman & Co., Booksellers, Publishers and Importers, 417 and 419 Moatgomery street, Saa Francisco; 17 Mercer street, New York, 1867.

Anatomical Museum.—Amoag the many wonderful things to be seen in this establishmeat are the Egyptian mummies the first ever hrought to California. The information aad amnsemeat to be derived from an inspectioa of the works of art comprised iu this costly collectiou caanot he too highly valued.

A New Novel by Wilkie Collins.—Charles Dickens anaounces in the last numheu of his magazine, All the Year Round, that Wilkie Collins will contribute the new serial story for it at the conclusioa of "Mabel's Progress." The latter story is writtea hy a daughter of Charles Dickeas' and is aow evideatly nearly completed.

The statue to he erected in the city of London, to Mr. Peabody, will be the work of Mr. Story. The selectioa of an American as tho sculptor was as neat a compliment to American art, as the recognition of Mr. Peahody's claims to the honor of a statue, was to the benevolence and liberality of an American.

The number of superfluous letters used by followers of Worcester is illustrated by showing how much may be said with fewer than the authorized allowaace—"Dic gav Jac a kic, wea Jac gav Dic a noc on the hac with a thic stic."

Napa City is thriviag. All the masons and carpenters are husy putting up new buildings. The amount of building doae this year in Napa is unprecedented.

There are now ou the way to California one hundred and fifteen vessels, four of which are over due.

The Proper Man to own a Newspaper.—Jay Cooke, the banker and millionare whose income is over a thousaad dollars a day, owas the Philadelphia Inquirer and Telegraph.

A new magaziae, entitled The Woman's World, is announced to appear in a short time in London.

Charles Warren Stoddard, the poet, has goae to Yosmite with the purpose of spending the winter there.

The Capitol at Sacramento is being overhauled for the reception of the congregated wisdom of the State.

SOMEBODY'S BAG.

MY neighhor B and myself, one November afternoon, finding ourselves late for our respective dinners, hailed a hansom, and got into it; it being arranged that I should drop B within a street's length of his own house.

"Hnllo!" cried my companion, directly we had started off; "why, here's a carpet-hag which somehody has left hehind him."

"Halves!" exclaimed I, with a sudden and uncontrollable impnlse, the springs of which lay far enongh away in those days of hoyhood when the rights of property are so imperfectly understood.

"No, no," replied B, severely; "it is not yonrs, my friend. Yon know it was I that found it."

"Really, my dear B," returned I, "you quite snrprise me. You mnst be aware that it helongs to neither of us, bnt to the unfortnnate person who had engaged this hansom."

"Very true," assented B, bnt a little regretfnlly, as I thonght, at the view I hnd deemed it right to take; for however Divines may preach, nnd (which is worse) the Law may dictate, when one has found a thing, one does seem to have some sort of a claim to it. If I were asked to point out what is par excellence THE law of nature, I shonld answer, It is that which is called on lnnd "the Right of Trover," and on the seashore that of "Flotsam nnd Jetsam." Here was a carpet-hag left hy the tide of humanity—or at least hy one careless wave of it—and here were We its finders—for it is ridicnlous that B shonld have a priority of claim, jnst hecause he happened to plump down (without hurting himself) upon the property in question, which might just as well have been on my side of the hansom as his. The question arose then, How were we to deal with it?

"It will never do to give it np to the cabman, eh?" observed B, tentatively: "he'll keep it for himself to a certainty."

"Quite ont of the qnestion," assented I. "The poor fellow who lost it wonld never have a chance of recovering it."

"I think I had hetter take it home, and advertise it in the Times, suggested my friend.

"No, my dear fellow," said I, firmly: "yon shall never be troubled to walk with that great black leather-bag" (it was an nncommonly large one) "throngh the streets. The cab takes me, yon know, to my own door, so I'll take it to my house."

"Very well," said B, slowly handing over the property to my charge, with the air of a co-trustee, who, while executing some nndonbtedly lawfnl deed, yet cannot help regretting that the person who acts with him should happen to he an attorney. "You'll take great care of it, won't you?"

"Of conrse I will," returned I, indignantly. "I shall either advertise it in the Times, or take it to the police-office the first thing in the morning."

"Jnst so," said B, who had now arrived at his journeys end. "I shonldn't at all wonder if we saw a reward offered for it to-morrow in the second column. If we were poor people, this might he qnite a god-send, might it not?"

"This made us hoth langh.

"You shall have halves," said I, "whatever it is."

And so we parted with another shout of merriment. But when I glanced through the little window, I saw B looking after me with an intensity of expression, which, although we are always sorry to wish each other good by, I never noticed in his friendly conntenance before.

It may he asked, perhaps, how it was that the cahman, seeing me enter his vehicle without lnggage, and emerge from it with the property in qnestion, did not at once question my right to the same; for it is scnrcely to be supposed that he was metaphysician enough to allow that I could have evolved, not only the idea of a carpet-hag itself, out of my inner conscionsness.

The reply to this apparent difficulty is, that it was dark. Moreover, I won't swear that I did not hold the carpet-hag rather behind me, so as to shield it from observation, while I paid the man his full fare and sixpence over, for which, as usual, he did not stay to thank me, hut drove swiftly away.

My wife was exceedingly interested in this carpet-hag—a hlack one, evidently divided within into compartments—and pnnched it vigorously, with the object of discovering from the nature of the resistance offered, what was the charncter of its contents. "If we could open it," argued she, "we should surely learn from internal evidence the name and nddress of the owner, and he able to forward it to him imnediately."

Bnt when all the little keys in onr possession had been tried without effect npon its patent lock, we decided that it could not possihly contain anything heyond a change of clothes—probahly some poor gentleman's evening suit—and a couple of hair brnshes. There was no douht ahout them, for I could feel their bristles through the leather. Under these circnmstauces, the expenditure of seven-and-sixpence in an advertisement in the Times was not to he dreamed of, and I made up my mind to "communicnte with the police." There was also something authoritive, and which seemed to confer importance upon one, in such an act. People who are described as "taking that very proper course," in the newspaper, always strike one in the light of public benefactors. Moreover, although nothing was really ever further from my thoughts (and I think I may add even from B's) than to appropriate that carpet-bag or its contents to my own nses, yet there was a certain sense of self-sacrifice in the action, or, at all events, of the most heroic honesty. Astrides himself could not have behaved more justly: it was a proceeding that even Darco would have spoken of from the hench, I thought, in terms of the highest praise. At all events, I should be looked upon by the police authorities—accustomed to deal with persons actnated by such very different sentiments—with something more than cold respect. In a word, I don't remember to have ever felt more self-complacent than when I took my way, after luncheon, the next day (a Saturday,) to the nearest police-station, with the intention of supplying the officer in charge with that mysterious mental aliment called "information received."

Having reached the office, nnd being told hy the policeman on duty in the antechamher to "pass on"—as though I were an apple-woman obstructing the pavement—I soon fonnd myself in the presence of his snperior, and nndergoing the minutest inspection from that sngacious person. His eye mensured me as though he hnd been my tailor, from my head to my knees, and donbtless would have gone further, and literally "taken the length of my foot, but for a great counter which intervened between him and cnrtailed his investigations, although by no means his curiosity. I never was so looked nt before in all my life.

"I have found a carpet-bag," said I, in a hesitating tone.

"Umph!" returned the officer, turning over the leaves of a great ledger, nnd looking as though he was about to mention that it was his duty to warn me that any admissions that I might make would be used ngainst me. "Umph!" repeated he, still more severely; "that is a very odd thing to find, sir, indeed."

Now, really, I put it to any one, was this fair? Why should he have said that? We were in London, a populous city, where almost everybody who possesses a change of raiment also owns a carpet-hag, and is liable to lose it. Such an inuendo seemed to me quite insulting.

"Sir," said I, (turning, I have no doubt, very red,) "I fonnd it in a hansom."

"Ah!" returned the officer with the fierce exultation of a wild animal who fancies he scents blood, "you found it in a hansom."

"Yes," observed I, with irritation; "I've got it now. You may send for it if you like."

"Be good enough to——" No, thnt's just what he did not say. Gratitude I hnd ceased to expect from this person, but I did expect common civility, and I was disappointed.

"State the circumstences," was all he said, and he took up his pen and wrote them down with malignant deliberation. At this point I hegan in my miud's eye to see the court of the Old Bailey, not from the grand-jury box, wherefrom I had beheld it in the flesh, but from the point of view enjoyed by the prisoner in the dock. Snspicion, arrest, conviction, (for all I knew) penal servitude for life, was what I now expected, instead of that autograph letter from the head of the department complimenting me upon my sagacity nnd rectitude, with the receipt of which my imagination had flattered me as I came along.

"Now, sir," said he, gloomlly, when I had quite finished. "you have done very wroug, and something entirely nnjustifiable."

Dear me, denr me! how I wished I had let B carry home that caapet-bag, as he hnd so pressingly offered to do, instead of me. How I wished I had put it hehind the fire. How I wished I wns going to snil for California that evening, per clipper ship Swiftsure, whose departure I had seen advertised on the wall of the police-station as I came in. Every detail of what I had remarked coming nlong the streets crowded before my eyes, just as the novelists describe them to do in the cases of condemned or moribuud persons. The Inspector's accents smote upon my ear like the strokes of a passing bell.

"Your manifest dnty, sir, was to inform the cahmnn that the property in question—very likely docnments of priceless worth—"

"No," interrupted I, hastily; "hnir hrushes." The next moment, hy the expression of his face, I felt that I had made a great mistake.

"Hair-hrnshes!" said he slowly, sniting the action to the word by slowly stroking one of his mutton-chop whiskers; "then you've opened it have you?"

"No, no," said I imploringly. "None of our keys wonld fit the lock." Here I saw I had made another most unfortunate mistake.

"O, indeed," was all the Inspector snid, bnt he looked volumes—the whole four volumes of the Newgate Calendar.

Your obvious duty, in the first instance," returned he, with meaning, "wns to have given up the property to the cabman in order that it might have been at once conveyed to the Lost Parcel's Office—"

Ah, you knew of it then, but yon forgot it," returned the Inspector in a tone sarcasm that I have heard my hrother-in-law, who is a county magistrate, use to poachers found with partridge-nets in their accidental possession. "You will he good enongh to favor me with your address."

I gave it to him of course. I wonld hnve made him a present of the lense of my house, if it would have mollified him at that moment.

More than twenty-four hours will have elapsed before this carpet-bag can be sent to its proper destination," pursued he, "therefore the owner will probably have called at the Lost Parcel's Office, and not finding it there, will conclude—and indeed the authorities will tell him so—that all further search is in vain. Cabmen are bound to return articles so discovered within twelve honrs; and if they do not do so, it is because they are theives."

"Exactly so," urged I, despairingly; "that is why I deemed it safer to take this home with me; I thonght the cahman might not he trustworthy."

"Yon could have taken his number, I suppose," remarked the Inspector, cynically. "It is too late to forward the article to Scotland yard to night; yon had hetter bring it hither yourself on Monday. Good morning."

He did not say "Good morning" like a parting salutation at all. It seemed to express: "You may go now, but on your personal recognizance to reappear here within eight-and-forty hours. I have not done with you, nor anything like it. I have got my eye upon you; myrmidons shall have their orders. A man that can see hair brushes through the leather of a carpet-bag, and yet forgets the existence of a Lost-Parcel's Office, is not likely to come to good; I shall see you again. Good morning."

The intermediate Sahhath was by no menns a day of rest to me. Black Care, that sits hehiud the horsemnn, seemed always to he sitting in front of me in the form a leathern carpet-bag. If an incnbus ever took thnt form, I pity those of my ancestresses who were witches. My wife partook of my apprehensions. We were about to retire to rest upon that Sunday night at ten-thirty, as usual, when the parlor maid came up to the drnwing-room with a very pale face to say that there were a couple of policemen in the hnll who wanted to speak with me.

"They shall never part ns!" exclaimed my wife, with a shriek of agony. "O Walter, Walter dear, what will become of you?"

I unbarred the shutters, nnd looked into onr crescent. Yes, as I had suspected, there were two other policemen watching the house from outside.

In onr little hall there stood the largest policeman I ever saw out of a pantomine, and one almost as big was standing behind him. Each had a dark-lantern stuck in his helt, which gave them an awful appearance; and the cook and the kitchen maid were regarding them, as though they were a couple of Guy Fawkeses, with unfeigned amazement. It was not the "amazement" spoken of in the marriage-service; however, hetween them and those policemen there wns, for once, no tender bond of sympathy, I feel certain; they were almost as frightened as their master.

"Here I am," said I, holding my hand before me, as I had seen all heroic criminals do upon the stage, when "the game is up," and "the darbies" must be pnt on, and why not with a good grace?

"Yes, sir," returned the giant, respectfully; "I'm sorry to trouble you, but the fact is we snspect there's somebody in that empty house" (he was Irish, of course) "next door: we have been directed to watch it, and a certain mark which we set upon it has been removed, whereby we know that some person has entered who has no right to he there. The owner is out of town, so if you will kindly let us get out of your garret-window, nnd on to the roof—"

"Gentlemen," cried I, in a raptnre, "the whole house is at your service. I respect the Law above all things. What would yon take to drink?"

The revulsion of feeling was almost too much for me. It is unnecessary to describe how enthusiastically I seconded the efforts of "the force," accompanying them to the very rooftop, and only leaving them when they made their burglarious entry into the next door, and the possihility arose of a contest with robbers. They almost frightened my eldest child into a fit as they trnmped by her apartment, but I assured them that she wns used to fits, and that it wns of no conseqnence.

In short, if ever a man showed himself a good citizen, and deserving of the approbation of "the authorities," it was I. I even ventured, while pushing the big man through the garret window (where he stuck fast, and had to have his lantern taken off,) to give him the heads of the carpet-bag story, in order that he might retail them in the proper quarter. But he gave me to understand thnt "misdemeanors" were not in his line, which lay rather in the suppression of "burglaries with violence." I don't know whether they found anybody in that uninhabited house or not; and I don't care.

The next moruing, I once more hetook myself, carpet-hag in hand, to the police-station. There was another officer sitting at the receipt of rascaldom, nnd I had to tell all my story over.

"When did yon furnish this information?" asked this terrible officinl, who was twice as ferocious as the other.

"Yesterday," said I.

"Yesterday?" returned he in an awful voice; "why, I wns here all day yesterday. What time was it when, according to your own account, you came here to give up this property?"

"About three o'clock," said I.

"I was here at three. Number forty-two, wasn't I here at three o'clock yesterday?"

"Stop!" cried I; "I forgot; it was Saturday. Of conrse I couldn't come here on Sunday."

You should have heard then Ispector's "Umph!" When I said that. If thnt man ever goes to church of his own free-will I'll forfeit my character for the second time—and I don't intend to do that in a hurry.

"Well, wo've got your address," snid he. "We know where to find you, if nuything should arise further ont of this matter."

"Further?" cried I. "Why you've got the carpet-hag and all thnt's in it. What can nrise out of it further?"

"It's all impossible to say," returned the officer, dryly. "But suppose—I only say suppose—the whole story should be a device for getting rid of a—here he pointed to the dreadful carpet-bag—"something hinconvenient."

"Good heavens!" cried I, turniug pale with horror, "not a dead body?"

"Jnst so," nodded the officer; "who knows?"

I found myself houe somehow; but the shock had a serious effect upon my system. When I found myself well enough to revisit the club, B's cheery langh grated upon my ears very unpleasnntly. He wonld have laughed, if I may use the vulgarism, on the other side of his mouth, if he had taken home that carpet-bag.

"Well, exclaimed he, "how did thnt little venture of ours turn out?" (Fancy either of those Inspectors hearing him say "venture!") "Remember, I am entitled to halves you know."

"Yes, you are," returned I, gravely; "nnd if anything comes of it, yon shall certainly have halves. The reward that is most likely to be offered is six months' imprisonment with hard labor; nud you shall serve three of them, and welcome."

I do not know whether I am not under "the surveillance of the police" even now.—Tinsley's Magazine.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

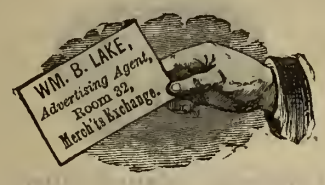
Bradley & Rulofson's

MAGNIFICENT ESTABLISHMENT.

Has more room, larger lights, greater facilities, and

PRODUCES FINER PHOTOGRAPHS

Than any other in the City.



F. DIXEY,
Merchant Tailor,

625 WASHINGTON STREET

Cloths, Cassimeres for Vestings, always on hand and made to order in the most Fashionable Styles.

Satisfaction Guaranteed

Joseph Catania & Co.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FRESH AND SALT

STALL NO. 48 FISH MARKET, Clay Commercial and Leidesdorff Streets.

A large supply of fresh fish always on hand. Shipping, Restaurants, Hotels and Families supplied at short notice, and on the most reasonable terms.
N. B.—Fish sent to any part of the city free.

GEO. A. PARKER. SAM. B. WATTSON. DAVID CONKLING.

PARKER, WATTSON & CO.,

Importers and Jobbers of

Havana & Domestic Cigars, Tobacco,

ETC.....ETC.....ETC.;

Nos. 306 and 308 Clay street, one door above Front,
SAN FRANCISCO.

N. GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

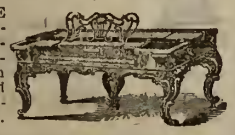
Chickering & Sons' Pianos

RECEIVED THE

FIRST PREMIUM,

(Gold Medal,)

At the Paris Exposition.



FURTHERMORE, THE Improvements, Workmanship, and General Superiority of those instruments over all others on exhibition, was so marked an important, the Emperor created Mr. T. E. CHICKERING

KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOR.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

D. GHIRARDELLI & CO.'S
Italian Manufactury,

415 and 417 JACKSON ST., SAN FRANCISCO,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PLAIN, SWEET, CINNAMON AND VANILLA CHOCOLATES;
PREPARED COCOA, COCOA PASTE,
CRACKED COCOA, COCOA SHELLS, etc., etc.
PURE GROUND OLD JAVA COFFEE AND COSTA RICA COFFEE;
CHARTRES AND RIO COFFEE;
GREEN COFFEE OF EVERY QUALITY.
CHOICE WINES AND LIQUORS.

N. B.—Ghirardelli's Chocolate is manufactured by steam from Cocoa of the finest quality, imported direct. In excellence and delicacy of flavor, it is superior to any imported Chocolate.

PARIS EXPOSITION,
1867.
GLORIOUS NEWS
FOR
THE FLORENCE!

OFFICIAL CATALOGUE JUST RECEIVED, (September 8th) the only copy on this coast—29 days from London. FREE FOR INSPECTION.

THE FLORENCE

RECEIVED THE ONLY PREMIUM awarded to any Sewing Machine (except Button Hole Machine) for sale on the Pacific Coast.

SAMUEL HILL, Agent,
No. 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

T. B. RODGERS,
CUTLER,
108 Leidesdorff street.

Corner California, adjoining the Pacific Insurance Office, San Francisco.

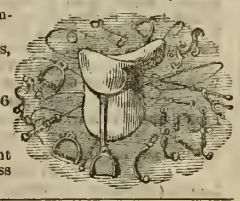
SAVE YOUR TEETH.—Do not have them extracted without first consulting a good Dentist. The loss is irreparable, and, in many instances, unnecessary. DR. BEERS, corner of Pine and Kearney streets, makes a specialty of filling the fangs of dead Teeth, and building up broken crowns with Pure Gold—thus restoring them to their original usefulness and beauty.
☞ Call and examine the work. Finest quality of artificial work also manufactured.

C. MAIN. E. H. WINCHESTER. T. R. HAYES.

Main & Winchester,

Manufacturers and Importers of Harness, Saddlee, Bridles, Whips, Collars, Saddlery Ware, etc.

Nos. 214 and 216 Battery Street,
San Francisco.



N. B.—Good assortment Concord Stage Harness constantly on hand.

BLASTING POWDER.

Price, - - - - $3 00 Per Keg.

ALSO, SPORTING, CANNON, AND MUSKET POWDER, of superior quality.

FUSE AND SHOT always on hand and for sale at the

OFFICE OF THE

CALIFORNIA POWDER WORKS,

No. 318 CALIFORNIA STREET.

JOHN F. LOHSE, Secretary.

FREE HOMESTEADS FOR ALL
ON FILING A PETITION.

UNDER THE LAWS OF MEXICO, which are now in force in this city, all the inhabitants are entitled to a HOMESTEAD LOT OF LAND, simply on petition. Justice Field has decided, and the Supreme Court of the United States has confirmed that decision, that the city of San Francisco is a Pueblo of four square leagues of land, and that the citizens thereof are the owners, which vests the right in each citizen to a lot of land for a homestead; and the undersigned have opened an office at 37 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, to enforce those rights, by petition to the Mayor, etc.; and each and every citizen can procure a Free Homestead by calling at their office and signing a petition, which will forthwith vest the right to the lot in question in them, and thereby secure to the petitioner property worth a large sum of money under the existing laws now in force.

BROOKS & MERRITT,
No. 37 New Merchants' Exchange.

N. B.—The Supreme Court of the United States have settled this question in another case, as to the ownership of the Outside Lands. In the case of J. B. Townsed vs. Geo. G. Greeley, December Term, 1866, No. 124, the Court say: "It is, therefore, now the settled law that the municipal lands held by the city of San Francisco, as successors to the former Pueblo existing there, are not held in absolute property, but IN TRUST for its inhabitants."

Therefore, all the inhabitants have to do, under this decision, is to ask the city, by petition, for their vested rights, as this is the only way, under the law, that they can proceed to get their property.

E. L. B. BROOKS,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.
All legal business transacted in the French and Spanish languages, if desired.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT,
Wholesale Candy Manufacturers,

No. 408 CLAY STREET,

Between Sansome and Battery Sts., San Francisco.

FANCY AND COMMON CANDIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Sugar Toys, Figures, Animals, Birds, etc.

Are prepared to receive orders to any extent and in any desired style.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT.

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices

536 In this City,
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

TO PATRONS OF THE PRINTERS ART.

CUBERY & CO., No. 536 Market street, Opposite Second, San Francisco, are now prepared to execute all kinds of BOOK and JOB PRINTING. Having superior facilities for printing every description of work, we respectfully solicit the patronage of friends and the public generally.
BRIEFS and TRANSCRIPTS correctly printed according to legal requirements.

WM. M. CUBERY,
F. W. VAN REYNEGOM.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,
AND
Show Work of All Kinds,
GO TO THE
COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE
OF
FRANCIS & VALENTINE,
517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &C., &C.,
735 Market Street.
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco

C. ROBERTS,
CARRIAGE AND WAGON MAKER,

HORSE SHOEING AND JOBBING

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

Fourth Street, between Howard and Folsom, San Francisco.
All styles of Carriages, Wagons and Carts made to order and Repaired.

G. E. T. GLOVE COMPANY,

FACTORY, 526 MERCHANT STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome,

Manufacture all kinds of Oil DRESSED AND INDIAN TANNED GLOVES for Gentlemen, Drivers, Teamsters, Miners and Lumbermen. Also, BUCKSKIN MITTENS, GOLD BAGS, PURSES, etc., in endless variety, and all sewed by hand. All work warranted. The Trade supplied. We warrant one pair of our manufacture to outlast two pairs of Eastern manufacture.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist

No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.

Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

☞ Use Ellery's Patent India Rubber Cement AND PAINT.—It is for all outside surfaces, TIN, IRON, OR METAL ROOFS; Iron however manufactured, Brick and Wooden Buildings, Ship and steamboat Painting; will not rot, peel, blister, or crack. Water proof coating for cloth roofing on tops of houses, decks of steamboats, tops of stages and cars. Cloth roofs cemented and painted for $9 per 100 square feet. New or old Tin Roofs, in good or bad condition, cemented and painted, guaranted, at $1 to $2 50 per 100 square feet.

EPES & E. H. R. ELLERY,
No. 236 Jackson street.

No Charge for Consultation.

ADOLPH CAMAN, M. D.
HOMŒOPATHIC PHYSICIAN,
ACCOUCHEUR AND SURGEON,

Devotes special attention to the diseases of Women and Children. He takes a professional pride in curing those cases which have baffled the skill of other eminent physicians.

DR. CAMAN would call attention to the beneficial effects of the Homœopathic treatment in all cases of Chronic Diseases, Insanity, Paralysis, all kinds of Spasms, Delirium Tremens, and persons suffering from an unnatural thirst for spirituous liquors.
No. 26 Montgomery Street, opposite the Lick House.

SOLOMON GUMP,

(Successor to D. HAUSMANN & Co.,)
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER OF MIRRORS, LOOKING GLASSES,
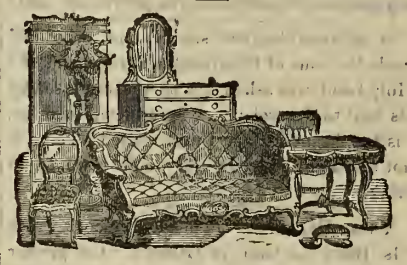
LOOKING GLASS PLATES, PLATES,
Picture Frames, Photograph Ovals, Mouldings, Etc., Etc.
119 Sansome street, between Bush and Pine,
San Francisco.

NOTICE.

WE TAKE OCCASION TO INFORM OUR FRIENDS and customers that we have sold our entire stock in warehouse also invoices to arrive to Messrs. N. COLE & CO., 312 and 314 Pine steeet. The whole forms a most complete and desirable assortment of FURNITURE, and well merits attention before purchasing elsewhere.

J. PIERCE & CO.



FURNITURE.

WE beg leave to call the attention of the public to our warerooms,

Nos. 312 and 314 Pine Street.

Having purchased the entire stock of Messrs. J. Pierce & Co., and in addition to our large invoice from our factory at the East, we are prepared to fill all orders promptly, both wholesale and retail, and call the attention of the public to our salesroom, as containing the most complete assortment of desirable goods on this coast.

N. P. COLE & CO.

ZEITSKA & SHEPPARD,
Merchant Taylors,
NO. 610 CLAY STREET,
Near Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.

TEUTONIA SALOON,

Corner of Montgomery and Summer streets.

HEIMBURG, SCHRODER & CO.,
PROPRIETORS.

The best kinds of WINES, LIQUORS AND CIGARS constantly on hand.
☞ Give us a call.

THE "GROTTO,"

JOHN DUNCAN. Proprietor.

530 Sacramento street, opposite What Cheer House,
FINE WINES, LIQUORS, ALES AND PORTER,
Wholesale and Retail.
Importer of Wise's Celebrated Irish Whisky.

"OUR OPERA."

CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,

621 WASHINGTON STREET, 621,
SAN FRANCISCO,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

H. T. GRAVES,

Manufacturer of

WIRE CLOTH, COAL SCREENS, FLOUR SEIVES, QUARTZ SCREENS, for Batteries, Door and Window Screens, for excluding Flies and Mosquitos.
CLOAK, SHAWL, CLOTHING AND BONNET STANDS
Fancy Work for Gardens, and a great variety of
WIRE WORK OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.
Sole Agent for the sale and application of
BROWN'S PATENT AND METALIC WEATHER STRIPS,
For the perfect exclusion of wind, dust, and rain;
☞ And for CRAMER'S PATENT WINDOW LIFTING PLATES AND RODS.
Call and examine them at the
CALIFORNIA WIRE WORKS,
412 Clay street, San Francisco.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,

DENTIST,

No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens.
North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.
N. T. WHITCOMB.

"Familiar as Household Words."—Pshaw. Stop your noise. Hold your tongne. Let me be. Go away. Get away. Get out. Behave yonrself. I won't. You shall. Never mind. You must. You'll kill yourself. Never mind. I don't care. They're mine. Mind your own business. I'll tell ma. You mean thing. There, I told you so. You didn't. I did. I will have it. Oh, look what have you done. 'Twas you. Won't you catch it, though? It's my own house. Who's afraid of you? Mah, ah-ah! Boo, boo; boo, boo. What's the matter? Get ont of this room directly. Do you hear me. Dear me. It's enongh to set one crazy. Would you put a tuck in it? Three flounces. Gored. Worked crosswise. Trimmed with velvet. Ten yards. Cnt bias. Real sweet. You bet. That's nice. Stunning.

A certain judge, pronouncing sentence of death upon an Irishman, said: "You shall be taken to the place of execntion and there be hanged by the neck until you are dead; and may God have mercy on your soul!" At this the prisoner exclaimed: "Hold there, Judge; I want none of your prayers, for I never knew any one to live long after you prayed for him!

A retired English sea captain, who had made the tour of Continental Europe and the Holy Land, was asked how he was impressed by his visit to Jerusalem. "Jerusalem," said he, "is the meanest place I ever visited! There is not a drop of liquor in the whole town fit to drink."

Those Printers.—James F. Babcock wrote "Is there no balm in Gilead?" the printer made him say "Is there no barn in Guilford?" Mrs. E. Oakes Smith wrote, "Be still—and all was calm!" the printers made her to say "Be still—and all was clam!"

The Boston Post gives a new reason for suicide. It says: "A respectable man in Buffalo, tired of his respectability, hung himself."

"Pray, madam, why do you name your old hen Macduff?" "Because, sir, I want her to lay on; lay on."

A Wisconsin candidate takes the field on a broad platform which demands a repeal of the dog-law.

Victoria still uses a black seal, but her son's partiality is for "green seal."

A vocalist says he could sing "Way Down Old Tar River," if he could only get the pitch.

Taylor's Saloon.—This quiet retreat on Third street, a few doors from Market, has long heen the most popular resort for gentlemen of taste in liquid luxuries of any saloon south of Montgomery street. Taylor has achieved more than mere local fame for the purity of bis beverages and the superiority of his brands of ale. His lunches, also, are the very embodiment of good lunches. If you want good cheer, go to "Taylor's," No. 16 Third street, southwest side.

A. PARDINI,

No. 729 WASHINGTON STREET, above the Plaza, San Francisco.

Boots and Shoes Made to Order,
IN THE BEST FRENCH STYLE.
☞ The same, ready made, always on hand.

Dr. John T. Crook,

Late of the Pacific Mail service, has established himself in the practice of his profession in this city.

—OFFICE:—

S. W. corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets.

Office Hours—9 to 10 A. M.; 2 P. M.; 4 to 6 P. M.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,

SANSOME STREET, San Francisco.

FIRE PROOF.

Two Hundred Rooms well Ventilated and Richly Furnished.

Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.

The Exchange Coach, with Ren Lights, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel Free of Harge.

The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully nform the traveling public tbat the

AMERICAN EXCHANGE

is now and will continue as it ever has heen, the most omfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the tate. TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

REESE W. GLUYAS. S. E. DUTTON.

GLUYAS & DUTTON,

COUNTING HOUSE STATIONERS,

Fireman's Fund Insurance Company's Building,

No. 227 Sansome Street.....San Francisco.

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,

JEWELRY AND ATERIALS.

☞ We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

Removal! Removal!

A. J. PLATE,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

—ALSO—

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS,

Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, etc., etc.

—HAS REMOVED TO—

NO. 510 SACRAMENTO STREET,

Between Sansome and Leidesdorff Streets, San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed n the neatest manner.

Tyler Brothers,

691 Market st., cor. Third,
SAN FRANCISCO,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

SCHOOL BOOKS,
STATIONERY,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PORTFOLIOS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS,
FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

ESPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we Stamp with Initials

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS

Engraved, Written or Printed.

JOHN DANIEL,

Marble Works,

421 PINE STREET,

(Between Kearny and Montgomery.)

MANTELS, MONUMENTS, TOMBS, PLUMBERS' SLABS, ETC.,

On hand and manufactured to order.

Orders respectfully solicited.

BOWEN BROS.

GROCERS,

Tea and Wine Merchants,

S. E. cor. Montgo'ry and California,

San Francisco.

Wholesale Store,
204 Front Street.

BUCKMAN BROS.,

(Successors to John Myers,)

CAPITOL SALOON,

226 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Opposite the Russ House

Removal.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

Machinist,

Has removed from No. 416 Market street, to No. 10 Stevenson street, next to the corner of First.

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

F. D. RING,

MANUFACTURER OF

JEWELRY AND SILVER WARE,

No. 540 Market Street, adjoining the Hibernia Bank,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of precious Stones set in the latest style and most approved manner. Watches and Jewelry carefully repaired by experienced workmen.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

APOTHECARIES AND CHEMISTS.
Geo S Dickey, Pioneer Apothecary, cor Ellis & Stockton
Wm. Simpson, 609 Davis st., opposite Oakland Ferry.

ARCHITECTS.
Hoagland & Newsom, s.w. cor Kearny and Sacramento.
McDougall & Marquis, 328 Montgomery street.

BAKERIES.
Dempsey's Bakery, 127 Fourth street,

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

BUTCHERS.
I. Gans, "New York Market," Fourth st, near Market.

CIGARS AND TOBACCO.
G. H. Behrens & Co., 4 Kearny street, near Market.
Chas. C. Lindsey, Excelsior Store, 156 Stewart street.
M. Rosenshine, dealer in Leaf Tobacco. 214 Pacific st.
Chas, Schwenke & T. Meuser, 16 Stewart street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sausome, corner Commercial.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.
Dell, Crauna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.
W. J. Lowry & Co., S.W. corner Washington and Davis.
Thos. Newell, 62 Clay st. set between Drumm and East.
J. W. Nye & Co., 219 Washington street, corner Cedar.
Chas. C. Wilson & Co., S. E. corner Clay and Davis sts.

CONFECTIONERS.
Alex. L. Ross, 121 Third street.
Baldwin & Lawlers, South Park Store 418 Third st.
N. B. Booth & Co., 20 Kearny, near Market.

COAL DEALERS.
S. Klein, formerly Greenhood & Co., 209 Sansome street.
H. W. Newhauer, all kinds of coal, 121 Sansome street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 645 Clay street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DRY GOODS.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton,
H. Rothschild (Variety Store), 112 Third street.
Irving, Landers & Co., No. 4 Third street.
M. Watermau, 22 Second street, corner of Stevenson.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Fred. Lange, Family Grocer, cor. Powell and Lombard.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts., below the Market.
McKee's Family store, 31 Kearny, near Post
Seneca Jones, Family Grocer, 105 Third street.
T. Williams, corner Third and Tehama streets.
Wellman, Peck & Co., wholesale grocers, 404 Front st.

GUN-SMITHS.
W. Rudolph, Union Gun Store, 216 Pacific street.

HAIR DRESSING SALOONS.
Prof. Smith, 114 Market street, opposite Third.

HARDWARE AND CUTLERY.
J. S. Sesser, 138 Fourth st, bet. Mission and Howard.

HATTERS.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
Grant & Smith, 26 Market and 19 Sacramento sts.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.
George Morrow & Co., 21 Clay and 28 Commercial sts.
Wm. H. Nichols, 18 Sacramento, and 17 Commercial.

HOTELS.
Atlantic House, John McManus, 210 and 212 Pacific st.
"Brauch," M. O'Neil, 12 Sutter street.
Broadway, Burns & Fitzsimmons, 212 Broadway.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, Droste & Pfefferle, 220 Pacific street.
Empire House, Peter Thompson, 106 Jackson street.
Franklin Hotel, Hugh Curran, cor Sansome & Pacific.
Franklin House, C. Maloney, cor. Br'dway & Sansome.
Golden Gate Hotel, J. Blackmen, 728 Market street.
Mariner's Home, Brown & Chandler, 504 and 506 Davis.
"Oriental," H. Saxterph & Co., Washington & Drumm.
Sanders' Hotel, J. P. Sanders, 24 Sacramento st.
William Tell House, 317 Bush street, above Montg'y.

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER.
Michael English, 414 Pine street.

HARNESS AND SADDLE MANUFACTURERS.
D. Fennel, 622 Battery street, opposite the Post Office.

INSURANCE.
Firemen's Fund Ins. cor. California and Sansome.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agets, 206 Front, cor. Cal.
North British Mercantile, S. E. cor Sansome & Califor'
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street

LADIES' FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.
S. Summerfield, 20 Second street, and 116 Kearny.
Thomas Collinson, 160 Third, near Howard street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Davis, cor. Mission & Spear sts.

MARBLE WORKERS.
P. Kelly, 12 Fourth street.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd-Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st

MILLINERS.
Miss A. A. Craddock, 4 Virginia Block, Stockton street.

MUSIC TEACHERS.
Prof. J. R. Boullet, Pianist and Vocalist, 1320 Stockton.

MINING MACHINIST.
Thomas Varney, Office 127 First street.

NOTARY PUBLIC.
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
H. Bush, corner Post, Market and Montgomery streets.
Hicks & Staring, 143 Fourth street.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.
Kohler, Chase & Co., 421 Montgomery street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

PLUMBERS AND GAS FITTERS.
Chas. Barman, 121 Fourth street, near Mission.

PRINT SELLER AND PUBLISHER.
Thomas H. Lawlor, Second street, near Howard.

PAINT MANUFACTURERS.
Epes & Ellery, dealers in paints, etc, 226 Jackson st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Market, by Hanzo & Besson, 520 Merchant street
The Opera, J. Weiss, 336 Pine street.

SALOONS.
Beck's Saloon, 504 Drumm street, near Pacific.
Blancy & Carroll, "Sample Rooms," 107 Third street.
"Bourbon Saloon," A. Farr, Long Bridge.
Charley Smith's Saloon, 539 Washington street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Coates & Henderson, 87 Sutter street.
Cleveland's Sample Rooms, 318 Bush, above Montg'y.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY, CONTINUED.

"Excelsior," Haase & Co., cor. Drum and Commercial.
Fourth Street Exchange, Chas. F. Sitter, 245 Fourth st.
J. P. Lavin's Saloon, northwest cor. Battery & Br'dwy
J. Dillon, "Fourth St. Exchange," cor. Fifth and Mkt.
King & McCormick, "Rotunda," Market & O'Farrell.
"Manahock," A. Heretkemper, Drumm & Oregon sts.
P. Johnson & J. B. Holje, 26 Clay street.
Peter Ring's Saloon, California street, below Drumm.
Regatta House, Burns & McLean, foot of Third street.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Ring's Saloon, Peter Ring, cor California, below Drumm.
"Sample Rooms," corner Third and Stevenson streets.
Uncle Billy & George, Saloon 707 Davis st.
"Young American," Geo. C. W. Heuer, Stewart & Howard

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.

STATIONERS AND BOOKBINDERS.
Althof, Rose & Bahls, 423 Clay, and 512 Commercial sts.
Jas. E. Damon & Co., 521 and 423 Sansome street.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TRUNK MANUFACTORY.
James Longshore, 428 Kearny street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

WAX FLORIST.
Mrs. M. E. Gerrish, 11 Post street.

WHOLESALE WINE AND LIQUOR DEALERS.
Campbell & Co., 629 Front st., bet Jackson and Pacific.
Henry M. Cutter, Importer, 520 Front street.

A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 California street,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

W. E. BRIDGE,

St. Lawrence Stables,

212 Sutter street, between Kearny and Dupont,
San Francisco.

THE BEIDEMAN ESTATE.

JOHN W. BRUMAGIM, ADMINISTRATOR, WITH the will annexed, of the Estate of JACOB C. BEIDEMAN, deceased, is NOW READY TO EXECUTE DEEDS to the purchasers at said sale, as the sale has been confirmed by the Probate Court, and an Order of Confirmation has been recorded in the Recorder's office of the city and county of San Francisco.

Please call at the Administrator's office, Nos. 36 and 37 Montgomery Block.

JOHN W. BRUMAGIM,

Administrator, with the Will annexed, of the Estate of Jacob C. Beideman, deceased.

San Francisco, August 19, 1867.

M. H. QUINN,

HAT MANUFACTURER,

127 Fourth street, bet. Howard and Mission, San Francisco.

Dress Silk Hats for Ladies or Gentlemen Manufactured to order, Cleaned or Renovated, at reasonable prices.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

624 Clay street, San Francisco.

JOHN H. TODMAN & CO.,

Successors to JAMES MEARS.

ALE, PORTER AND CIDER

BOTTLING ESTABLISHMENT,

511 Front Street.

A large stock of Champagne Cider on hand, in glass and bulk.

FEMALE CLERKS.—The editor of the Albany Knickerbocker is in Europe, and sends the following account of the general employment of females: The women, by the way, do nearly all the trading in Ireland. At our hotel a woman shows you to your room, you pay your bill to a woman, and you are politely bowed out of the hotel by the housekeeper. It is rare to find a retail store in Cork where a female is not seen behind the counter. We are told the same thing prevails throughout all the British Provinces. The reason given for employing them is that their follies are not only less numerous, but much lower priced. Females may sport fifty dollar mantles, but they never go on fifty dollar "busts." Females never spend a whole week's wages on billiard tables. Girls never "put the party through," kick up a row and get dragged to the station-house. Fast horses they also avoid, and roulette tables and game cocks. Who ever saw a female hanging round a gambling table, or betting her last five dollars that she can tell where the "little joker" is? Who ever saw a female clerk, after the store was shut, rambling up Broadway, "raising thunder" and breaking things? Who ever saw a respectable girl knocking over dry goods boxes and standing "M. P.'s" on their heads? No one; and yet respectable young men do these things nightly. When was a female clerk ever arrested for having a "suspicious character" locked up in the store with her after midnight? In view of all these facts, is it any wonder that the merchants on this side run to female clerks?

AN editor wrote a leading article on the fair sex, in the course of which he said: "Girls of seventeen or eighteen are fond of beaus." When the paper was issued, he was rather shocked to discover that an unfortunate typographical error had made him say, "Girls of seventeen or eighteen are fond of beans."

ONE of the Jenkenses, writing of a recent hop at Saratoga, says: "A very pretty girl passed us, leaning on the arm of a gentleman who dressed simply in Swiss muslin and a pink sash." That gentleman must have been "the cool of the evening."

ONE of the saloons in Nashville, Tenn., employs a hack to carry off its customers as fast as they become intoxicated. No fare required and the happy beings are insured against the police and the station-house.

THE SNUG.—"The Snug" has been located one door below Maguire's Opera House, for ten years past. It was established for the convenience of the habituates of the Opera House, and has the reputation of dispensing the best wines and liquors in the city, under the charge of its present proprietor, Mr. Timothy McCarty. Entrances from various parts of the Opera House to the bar have been cut, for the convenience of the public. Mr. McCarty gives his entire attention to his guests, and renders his establishment a "Snug" place by day or night.

BUILDER'S INSURANCE CO.

OFFICE IN THE BUILDING OF THE CALIFORNIA SAVINGS BANK, CALIFORNIA ST., one door from Sansome.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

Builders' Insurance Company,

OFFICE, CALIFORNIA STREET, NOV. 1, 1867.

EDITOR OF THE CALIFORNIAN:—Sir—Permit me to report two months' progress of the BUILDERS' INSURANCE COMPANY.

Total amount received.....$44,009 11
Total amount of Losses..... 22,778 65

Balance in favor of the Company on two months' business.....$16,230 56

All which I trust will be satisfactory to my friends, enemies, and the public. Respectfully,

THOMAS MOONEY, PRESIDENT.

The Ladies are of one mind in pronouncing BOWMAN'S AMERICAN WASHING COMPOUND the best preparation for washing and cleaning in use. It is acknowledged to be a saving both in money and labor. The Compound softens the dirt, consequently the clothes require not more than one-half the rubbing necessary in washing by the old method; besides all who give it a trial acknowledge that their clothes are made whiter in washing with this Compound, than they were ever known to be by using any other preparation. For washing Woolen Goods and Flannels it cannot be equaled. Calicoes that can be washed with soap, without fading, are washed in the water used for boiling the white clothes. This Compound has been used in the eastern States for the past three years with perfect success. Warranted not to injure the clothes. For sale by all Grocers.

LYNCH & PARSONS, Agents,
222 Jackson street, near Battery.

Notice to Families.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN are invited to call and try my new GAME SEASON BILL OF FARE.

QUAIL ON TOAST,
SPRING CHICKENS,
OYSTERS IN EVERY STYLE,
AND ALL THE LUXURIES OF THE SEASON
Every Day and Evening.

PRICES TO SUIT EVERYBODY.

French Dinner with half bottle Claret.....75 cts.
French Breakfast with half bottle Claret.....75 cts.

Always on hand, BEST FRENCH CANDIES AND BONBONS.
Orders for Parties promptly attended to.

PETER JOB,
Corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets, San Francisco.

☞ Open till half-past twelve at night.

ST. CHARLES RESTAURANT,

At the Hotel of C. Galliand, Nos. 507 and 509 Pine Street, between Kearny and Dupont streets.

BY MME. CAZINTRE.

☞ All who will call at this Restaurant will find an excellent table and prompt attention.

California Coffee and Dining Saloon,

Nos. 612 and 614 MONTGOMERY STREET, Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.
J. R. REAGAN, Proprietor.

A Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot on chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.
French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

ITALIAN RESTAURANT,

No. 515 Merchant Street,

Between Montgomery and Sansome, San Francisco.

Taglierini, Maccaroni, Risotto and Ravioli, In the Italian Style.

MEALS FIFTY CENTS, OR TO ORDER.

Rooms for private parties up stairs.
MR. GUISEPPE CADENASSO.

LEON DINGEON. F. W. HAUBRICK.

DINGEON & HAUBRICK,

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,
623 COMMERCIAL STREET.

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties.

NEW RESTAURANT.

MR. SORBIER takes pleasure in informing his friends and customers that he has opened a FIRST-CLASS RESTAURANT under the name of

SORBIER'S RESTAURANT,

at No. 607 SACRAMENTO STREET, above Montgomery, where he will be pleased to see his old friends and the public in general, and where all can be assured that they will be served with the very best the market affords, at most reasonable rates. JOHN E. SORBIER,
Late of the Occidental Restaurant.

F. C. BELDEN,

Of the well-known Family Depot, 612 Sacramento street, has opened the

SUMMER STREET RESTAURANT

at the northeast corner of Spring and Summer Sts.

☞ Meals to order, and by the plate. Wines and Liquors of the best quality.

OCCIDENTAL RESTAURANT,

536 Washington Street, below Montgomery.

GEORGE WITTMAN would inform the public and the former patrons of this POPULAR RESTAURANT

That he has assumed full charge, and will continue to keep all the delicacies of the season and one of the best lists of WINES, etc., and solicits the continuance of their patronage.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

Hay, Grain, and Feed of all kinds.

Hucks & Lambert's Patent AXLE GREASE.
21 Clay street and 28 Commercial street, between Drumm and East, San Francisco.

BOWMAN & CO., Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware, Main street, Petaluma.

MRS. C. COOK,

FIRST PREMIUM HAIR JEWELRY,

519 Montgomery street,
Between Clay and Commercial.....SAN FRANCISCO.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

Wholesale & Retail Confectioners,

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the state. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prises. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

Belden's Family Depot for Domestic Luxuries.

At this depot are, all should know,
For him who strong or faint is,
Superior grub—for home or club—
And every kind of dainties.
Westphalia hams, fresh oysters, clams,
Constituents of chowder,
Fine breakfast tea, and hominy,
And genuine curry powder.
Oil, mustard, wine, both French and Rhine,
Lard, coffee, ketchup, capers.
Crushed sugar, peas, and Switzer cheese,
And sperm and waxen tapers.
The giblets, pluck, of goose and duck,
Of woodcock, snipe and plovers,
Of partridge, too, and cockatoo—
The last express for lovers!
It seems absurb there scarce a bird—
My rhyme this somewhat ruffles—
But Belden's got in tin or pot,
The LIVER of with TRUFFLES.
Prunes, raisins, rice, preserves and spice,
Gin, whisky, rum and brandy,
Drinks made of malt, and table salt,
Tongues, sausages, and candy.
Above's not all to which I'd call
Particular attention.
Le vin d'elite, Chateau Lafitte,
And others, I would mention.
Surpassing fine Madeira wine,
St. Julien, port and sherry,
Chateaux Margaux and Veuve Clicqnot,
Old apple jack and cherry.
La Rose, Chablis, and Burgundy
Both white, and red and sightly,
Prime Hermitage of ripe old age,
Still, sparkling too and sprightly.
Sauterne, medoc, still sparkling hock,
Johannesberg, Hockheimer,
Then sirs and dames (these German names
Would craze an English rhymer!)
Just come and buy, and cease to sigh
For Egypt and its fleshpots;
Ne'er better fare did Pharoh share,
Or any other despots.

ET CETERA
No. 652 Sacramento Street.

First Premium

AWARDED BY THE STATE FAIR TO

SILAS SELLECK,

FOR THE BEST PLAIN PHOTOGRAPH.

—ALSO—

SPECIAL PREMIUM

For the Best Cabinet Portraits.

MR. SELLECK is now prepared to execute the very best PHOTOGRAPHS, in all the different styles, at No. 415 Montgomery Street.
N. B.—The best Water Color and India Ink Artist in this city is attached to this Gallery.

STEPHEN M. SMITH,

(Formerly of Grass Valley,)

Having purchased the interest of Messrs. Parker & Vandewater, in the

PARKER HOUSE,

On Montgomery Street, invites the patronage of the public. He will keep on hand the finest qualities of Wines, Liquors, etc. October 12th, 1867.

JOHN TAYLOR,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN

WINES AND LIQUORS.

NO. 16 THIRD STREET,
Between Market and Stevenson Streets, San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S STEAMSHIPS FOR NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Brannan-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.
On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.
When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.
Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.
Departure of 18th or 19th is expected to connect with the French Transatlantic Co.'s steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.
Departure of 10th is expected to connect with English steamer for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America. Through tickets can be obtained.

STEAMERS FOR NOVEMBER.

Nov. 9—CONSTITUTION, Capt. J. M. Caverly, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.
Nov. 18—MONTANA, Capt. E. T. Farnsworth, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Connor.
Nov. 30—GOLDEN CITY, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with ARIZONA, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.
Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.
These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.
Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained of P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.
For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.
The steamship GREAT REPUBLIC, Capt. S. Doane, will be dispatched on December 4th, from wharf, corner of First and Brannan streets, for YOKOHAMA and HONGKONG; connecting at Yokohama with the steamer COSTA RICA, for SHANGHAI.
For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

Peter Short,

FASHIONABLE AND PRACTICAL TAILOR,
613 WASHINGTON STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny, San Francisco.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company,

OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

—OFFICE—

S. W. cor. California and Sansome streets.

CAPITAL, $500,000, FULLY PAID IN GOLD COIN.

INSURE MARINE RISKS

Under Open Policies, on Cargoes, Treasure, Freights, Profits, and Commissions.

—ALSO—

ISSUE POLICIES ON TIME,
VOYAGE AND HARBOR RISKS ON HULLS.

INSURE AGAINST LOSS BY FIRE

On Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Wares, and other Personal Property.

FIRE, MARINE, HARBOR, AND INLAND TRANSIT RISKS,

On terms as favorable as any other reliable First-Class Company.

Greatest amount taken on any one risk, $50,000. Portions of Risks considered too large, will be re-insured in responsible Companies.

LOSSES PROMPTLY PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!

D. J. STAPLES, President,
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

HAMBURG, BREMEN,

Fire Insurance Company.

CAPITAL, - - - - - $1,000,000

MORRIS SPEYER, Agent.

OFFICE—526 Washington Street, a few doors below Montgomery.....San Francisco.

Being no longer governed by the Tariff of the Board of Underwriters, this Company will effect Insurances at as LOW RATES as those of any other responsible Company.

OCCIDENTAL

Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTESCHILD, Secretary.—

FIRE INSURANCE.

Manhattan Fire & Marine Insurance

OF NEW YORK.

Incorporated.....1821.
Cash capital.....$500,000
Surplus..... 650,000

Total Assets, over.....$1,190,000

The above named responsible and well known Company has complied with the law of the State of California, and has deposited $75,000 as additional security for policy holders,
Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, and other property insured against loss or damage by Fire, on the most favorable terms. Also, Insurance on Merchandise, Specie and Freight to or from all parts of the world. Losses promptly adjusted and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., General Agents,
206 Front street, corner of California.

J. CUTBERLET,

CUSTOM

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

—ALSO—

FRENCH SCREWED BOOTS AND SHOES,

No. 546 Washington Street, near Montgomery Street.

The finest quality of CUSTOM WORK neatly executed. Always on hand other fine work ready made.

JOSEPH FREDERICKS

CARPET AND UPHOLSTERY STORE,
PAPER HANGINGS, ETC.,

123 Kearny St., between Sutter and Post, San Francisco

FAMILIES ARE INVITED TO EXAMINE
OUR VARIED ASSORTMENT

Of the Finest Carpeting in the State. The best of taste displayed in Decoration and the unique Upholstering of Rooms, Halls and Public Buildings, and at prices conforming to the times. Call and examine goods.

— The Marysville Tilegraph tells the following capital story about a conscientious Dutchman: "Quite an amusing colloquy took place yesterday between a hero from the Rhine and his Honor Judge Belcher. It seems a Dutchman who had lived here the requisite length of time, desired to robe himself in the habiliments of citizenship. Accompanied by his witness he appeared before the District Court for that purpose. After reading his declaration of intention, his Honor turned to one of the witnesses and asked him the question : "How long have you known the applicant ?" "Vell, I knows him six year." "Is he a man of good moral character ?" "Yaw, he ish no thief ?" "True, but is his general character good in a moral point of view ?" "Yaw, he vill not steal notting." "But what do the people generally say about his character ?" "Vell, I never hear anydody say dat Shon steals nothing." "But what do you know about him yourself, as a good or bad man ?" "Vell, so far as I knows' he never takes anything vat does not belong to him." The Court weakened. The applicant was admitted, and the witness was heard to mutter as he left the Court room, "Vell, I makes Shon vote. Yaw, his moral character, dat ish good. Shon vill not steal, but he does vip his frau and cheet peeple, and lie like de very tyvil."

A Boy's Letter.—Several letters from boys at watering places have been published this year. Here is another, which gives good arguments for a paternal visit : Dear Pa—Things are bully here. I chase ground squirrels every day in what they call the glen. Yesterday I saw one coming out of an old stump which he didn't think safe for him, and making for the rocks. I put straight after him, you bet. While I was running close bv the creek Bill put out his foot and tripped me up. I went plumb into the water, and got my breeches soaking wet. The squirrel went into the rock. When we got back to the hotel, ma licked us both. I think she is getting too tight on us. I wish you'd come and help us out.

Your affectionate son, R. F. S.

O, the bonnets of my girlhood—the kind I wore to school. I really thought them pretty —I must have been a fool. And yet I used to think myself on hats a jaunty miss ; perhaps I was, as fashion went—but what was that to this ? O, the lovely little buckwheat cake—the charming little mat ! it makes my head so level, and so very, very flat. O, a sister's love is charming, as everybody knows, and a handsome cousin's love is nice (that is, I should suppose ;) and the love of a true lover is a love that cannot pall—but the love of a new bonnet is the dearest love of all.

JOHN H. TODMAN & CO.,

Successors to JAMES MEARS.

ALE, PORTER AND CIDER

BOTTLING ESTABLISHMENT,

511 Front Street.

A large stock of Champagne Cider on hand, in glass and bulk.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,

SANSOME STREET, San Francisco.

FIRE PROOF.

Two Huadred Rooms well Veatilated and Richly Furnished.

Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.

The Exchange Coach, with Rea Lights, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel Free of harge.

The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully nform the traveling public that the

AMERICAN EXCHANGE

Is now and will continue as it ever has been, the moat omfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the tate.

TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

THE BEIDEMAN ESTATE.

JOHN W. BRUMAGIM, ADMINISTRATOR, WITH the will annexed, of the Estate of JACOB C. BEIDEMAN, deceased, is NOW READY TO EXECUTE DEEDS to the purchasers at said sale, as the sale has been confirmed by the Probate Court, and an Order of Confirmation has been recorded in the Recorder's office of the city aad county of San Fraacisco.

Please call at the Administrator's office, Nos. 36 and 37 Montgomery Block.

JOHN W. BRUMAGIM,

Admiaistrator, with the Will annexed, of the Estate of Jacob C. Beideman, deceased.

San Fraaciaco, August 19, 1867.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ANN LEEDOM, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, awarding the care and custody of her daughter Julia to plaintiff, and allowing her to resume her maiden name.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 7th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

[SEAL.] WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By Octavius Bell, Deputy Clerk.

Geo. W. Tyler, Plaintiff's Attorney. s14-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JOHN L. TAGGARD, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of E. W. Taggard, the administrator of the estate of John L. Taggard, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed ; that all the debts and expenses of dministration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residuo of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of the said John L. Taggard, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on TUESDAY, the 19th day of November, A. D. 1867, at two o'clock P. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distributiou should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said John L. Taggard, deceased, according to law:

Aud it is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said nineteenth day of November, A. D. 1867, in The Californian, a newspaper printed aud published in the said City and County.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated October 18th, 1867.

Messrs. Winans & Belknap, Att'ys for Petitioner.
oct19-26 nov2 9 16

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of HENRY BENTZ, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate left unadministered of Henry Bentz, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell some portion of the real estate, to pay the debts, expenses and charges of the administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 26th day of November, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

Dated October 24th, 1867.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court, in and for said city and county, do nereby certify the foregoing to be a true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Court, this 24th day of October, A. D. 1867.

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. Jeghers, Deputy Clerk.

J. F. Finn, Esq., Att'y for Petitioner. oct26-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JEAN VICTOR SUBERVEILLE, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Lucas Pouton de Arce, Administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the Administrator to pay the debts, charges and expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts, charges and expenses, and because after the sale of so much of said estate as shall be necessary to pay such debts, charges and expenses, the residue thereof would be of such a character with reference to its future disposition among the heirs of said deceased as clearly to render it for the best interest of all concerned that the same should be sold, and for other reasons set forth in said petition:

It is ordered that all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court, at the Court room thereof, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 25th day of November, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., of that day, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And it is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the city and county aforesaid.

Done in open Court this 25th day of October, A. D. 1867.

oct26-5w M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

W. C. Burnett, Attorney for Administrator.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS. — ESTATE OF J. KING ROBINSON, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of J. King Robiason, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator, at southeast corner of Stockton and Geary streets, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated San Francisco, September 30th, 1867.

THOS. A. ROBINSON.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of HENRY MONTGOMERY, deceased.

Order to show cause why Order of Sale of Real Estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by James Duffey, the Administrator of the estate left unadministered of HENRY MONTGOMERY, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate, to pay the allowance to the family, the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on MONDAY, the 11th day of November, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator of the estate left unadministered, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in The Californian, a weekly newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated October 11th. 1867.

Drake, Hent & Landesman, Attorneys for Administrator. oct12-19-26 nov2-9

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of HENRIETTE NAHL, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of H. W. Arthur Nahl, the administrator of the estate of HENRIETTE NAHL, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed ; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid ; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled :

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said Henriette Nahl, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 11th day of November, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said eleventh day of November, A. D. 1867, in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated October 10th, 1867.

Messrs. Sharp & Lloyd, Attorneys for Petitioner.
oct12-19-26 nov2.9

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of JOSEPHINE M. RICHARDSON, a Minor.

It appearing to the said Court by the petition this day presented and filed by William Harney, the guardian of aud for Josephine M. Richardson, a Minor, praying for an order of sale of the real estate, that it is necessary to sell a portion of the real estate of said Minor, to pay the claims now outstanding against it, and that such sale is also necessary to provide for the maintenance aad education of the said Minor.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said Minor, appear before the said Probate Court, on MONDAY, the 18th day of November, A. D., 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenon, of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, in the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the aforesaid William Harney, guardian, to sell so much of the real estate of the said Minor as shall be necessary.

And it is further ordered, that a copy of the foregoing order be published at least four successive weeks in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county of San Francisco.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated October 14th, 1867.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of AMELIA MOSS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, Administrator, with the will annexed, of Amelia Moss, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed ; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the devisees and legatees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on MONDAY, the twenty-fifth dey of November, A. D. 1867, at two o'clock, P. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residno of said estate among the devisees and legatees of the said deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said twenty-fifth day of November, A. D. 1867, in The Californian, a newspaper priated and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated October 25th, A. D. 1867.

Messrs. Winans & Belknap, Attorneys for Petitioner.
oct26-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MARY GAFFNEY, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, the Executor of the Estate of Mary Gaffney, deceased, some times known as Grace Wellington, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor, at his place of business, at the office of Winans & Belknap, northwest corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated San Fraucisco, October 19th, 1867.

HENRY RAYMOND,
Executor of the Estate of Mary Gaffney

Winans & Belknap, Attorneys for Executor.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOHN W. CROSLEY, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Executor of the last will of the estate of John W. Crosley, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executor, at his place of business, southwest corner of Market and Fremont streets, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated October 18th, 1867.

L. L. TREADWELL,
Executor of the last will of John W. Crosley, deceased.

J. W. Brumagim, Esq., Attorney for Executor.
oct19-2d nov2 9-16

SOTOYOME HOTEL,

B. C. WRIGHT, Proprietor, Healdsbur Cal.

Administrator's Sale of Real Estate.

OLNEY & CO., Auctioneers.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, in the State of California, made on the twenty-third day of October, A. D. 1867, in the matter of the estate of CLAUDE JACQUIN, deceased, the undersigned, Administrator of said estate, will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, in one parcel, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on MONDAY, the 18th day of November, A. D. 1867, at 12 o'clock, noon, at the auction rooms of MESSRS. OLNEY & CO., No. 418 Montgomery street, in said City and County of San Francisco, all the right, title, interest and estate of the said intestate at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has by operation of law or otherwise acquired other than, or in addition to that of the said intestate at the time of his death, in and to all that lot or parcel of land, situate, lying and being in the said City and County, and described as follows, to wit :

Commencing on the northwesterly line of King street, at a point distant on said northwesterly line of King street, forty five feet and ten inches southwesterly from the southwesterly line of Fourth street; thence running northeasterly along said northwesterly line of King street, forty five feet and ten inches; thence at right angles northwesterly, one hundred and twenty feet; thence at right angles southwesterly, forty-five feet and ten inches; and thence at right angles southeasterly one hundred and twenty feet to the point of commencement.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE, CASH—Ten per cent. of the purchase money to be paid to the Auctioneer on the day of sale, balance on confirmation of sale by said Probate Court. Deed at expense of purchaser.

WILLIAM ROWAN,
Administrator of the Estate of Claude Jacquin, deceased.

San Francisco, October 26th, 1867.

OLNEY & CO., Auctioneers,
418 Montgomery street.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF EDWARD A MAGRATH, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of EDWARD A. MAGRATH, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his office and place of transaction of business, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated October 24th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Administrator of the estate of Edward A. Magrath, deceased. oct26-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS. — ESTATE OF MARIA MACK, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of Maria Mack, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his office and place of transaction of business, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated October 24th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Administrator of the Estate of Maria Mack, deceased.
oct26 5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of WILLIAM LOBB, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator of the Estate of William Lobb, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed ; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid ; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled.

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said William Lobb, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on WEDNESDAY, the eleventh day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said William Lobb, deceased, according to law :

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said eleventh day of December, A. D. 1867, in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 1st, 1867.

J. T. Finn, Attorney for Petitioner. nov2 5w

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

624 Clay street, San Francisco

NOTICE.

IN CONSEQUENCE OF THE VERY GREAT DEMAND FOR

CASSIN'S

Grape Brandy Bitters ! !

we have been obliged to rent a LARGER BUILDING, and are now removing to Sullivan & Cashman's Block, No 523 FRONT STREET, opposite our old establishment.

F. & P. J. CASSIN, 520 Front street.

M. H. QUINN,

HAT MANUFACTURER,

127 Fourth street, bet. Howard and Mission, San Francisco.

Dress Silk Hats for Ladies or Gentlemen Manufactured to order, Cleaned or Renovated, at reasonable prices.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street. Petaluma.

EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

ANOTHER HORSE STORY.

Winter used to keep a banking office at Donega. Well, one afternoon, as Winter was sitting in front of his office, a chap came cavorting up on the outside of a showy sorrel horse, head and tail up, and promptly opened, as he drew rein, with :

"Winter, do you want a horse?"

"No," was his response.

"The chap put spurs to the sorrel, of course, on the off side where Winter sat, and caracoled and cavorted about the street. Finally, drawing up a second time in front of the office, he reopened with :

"Winter, I want to sell you this horse badly."

"What'll you take for him?" quoth Winter, jokingly.

"One hundred and fifty dollars," retorted the chap, putting his off spur into the horse's side, and kiting about in a circle.

"I won't give no such price," continued Winter, "I don't want the horse no how."

"What'll you give for him?" queried the chap, giving him another circus turn.

"Twenty-five dollars?" said Winter, "and not a cent more."

"The fellow raised himself on his left foot in the stirrup, threw his right leg slowly and gracefully over the saddle and to the ground, handed the reins to Winter, and quietly said :

"The animal is your'n ; a little difference of one hundred and twenty-five dollars don't stop me in a horse trade just now! and Winter was the owner of the horse.

He sent him to a livery stable, and in about an hour the keeper came to Winter's office with :

"What in the name of common sense did you send such an animal to me for? He'll poison the whole stable."

"What's the matter with him?" quoth Winter. "He cavorted about lively enough when I saw him."

"Matter! Why, he's ring-boned, spavined, hip-shot, has the poll evil, and may be glandered for what I know."

Winter went to a bookstore, laid out $2 50 for Youatt & Martin on the horse, hied to the livery stable, sat himself down, had the animal led out of the stall, and on looking over found he had every disease set down in the catalogue. Twenty-five dollars for the horse, and $2 50 for a book to study his ailments—a clear loss of $27 50.

M. S. WHITING. F. G. BERRY.

Whiting & Berry,

609 Sacramento Street, two doors above Montgomery,

Tea, Wine and Spirit Merchants,

Importers and Wholesale Dealers in fine Brandies, Whiskies, Gins, Port, Sherry and Champagne Wines, Ale, Porter, Cider, Bitters, Cordials, Syrup, etc., for medicinal and family use, and suppliers to Families, Apothecaries, Physicians, City and Country Dealers, Hotels, Clubs, etc., in large or small quantities.

Observe Firm Name on each cork and fac simile signature on label.

[Trade Mark Registered.] WHITING & BERRY.

This is the only exclusive TEA, WINE AND SPIRIT STORE on the Pacific Coast.

It is neither a saloon or sample room, (as no wine or spirits are permitted to be drank on the premises,) but a depot where selected Teas and Pure Wines and Spirits may be procured at wholesale or retail for medicinal and family use. In this respect it is our aim to vie with Bininger & Co., New York, Bigelow & Dawes, London, and Cozzen & Co., of Washington, where every facility is offered to ladies as well as gentlemen in making their own selections and purchases in quantities to suit.

N. B.—Our Treatise on Wines, Spirits and Teas, may be had at our depot gratis, and will be mailed to consumers and dealers in the interior when requested.

WHITING & BERRY,
609 Sacramento Street, second door above Montgomery.

BESSE W. GLUYAS. S. E. DUTTON.

GLUYAS & DUTTON,

COUNTING HOUSE STATIONERS,

Fireman's Fund Insurance Company's Building,

No. 227 Sansome Street.....San Francisco.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.

The Hat wearing community are invited to examine the Stock at the above store, and in quality, style and price,

THEY DEFY COMPETITION!

Their Stock embraces all of the latest "novelties" and Standard Styles to be found elsewhere.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 ngton Street.

Peter Short,

FASHIONABLE AND PRACTICAL TAILOR,
613 WASHINGTON STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny, San Francisco.

AYER'S PILLS

ARE PARTICULARLY ADAPTED to derangements of the Digestive Apparatus, and diseases arising from impurity of the Blood. A large part of all the complaints that afflict mankind originate in one of these, and consequently these PILLS are found to cure many varieties of Disease. They are sugar-coated, and hence may be taken readily by the most sensitive and delicate persons.

Subjoined are the statements from some eminent physicians, of their effects in their practice :

AS A FAMILY PHYSIC.

From Dr. E. W. Cartwright, of New Orleans—Your Pills are the prince of purges. Their excellent qualities surpass any cathartic we possess. They are mild, but very certain and effectual in their action on the bowels, which makes them invaluable to us in the daily treatment of disease.

FOR JAUNDICE AND ALL LIVER COMPLAINTS.

From Dr. Theodore Bell, of New York City—Not only are your Pills admirably adapted to their purpose as an aperient, but I find their beneficial effects upon the Liver very marked indeed. They have in my practice proved more effectual for the cure of Bilious Complaints than any one remedy I can mention. I sincerely rejoice that we have at length a purgative which is worthy the confidence of the profession and the people.

DYSPEPSIA—INDIGESTION.

From Dr. Henry J. Knox, of St. Louis—The Pills you were kind enough to send me have been all used in my practice, and have satisfied me that they are truly an extraordinary medicine. So peculiarly are they adapted to the diseases of the human system, that they seem to work upon them alone. I have cured some cases of Dyspepsia and Indigestion with them, which had resisted the other remedies we commonly use. Indeed I have experimentally found them to be effectual in almost all the complaints for which you recommend them.

FOR HEADACHE—SICK HEADACHE—FOUL STOMACH—PILES—DROPSY—PLETHORA—PARALYSIS—FITS—DYSENTERY—DIARRHŒA—RELAX—Etc., Etc.

From Dr. Edward Boyd, Baltimore—Dear Dr. Ayer: I cannot answer you what complaints I have cured with your Pills better than to say all that we ever treat with a purgative medicine. I place great dependence on an effectual cathartic in my daily contest with disease, and believe as I do that your Pills afford us the best we have, I of course value them highly.

☞ Most of the Pills in market contain mercury, which although a valuable remedy in skillful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substances whatever.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine everywhere.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
Wholesale Agents.

PRO BONO PUBLICO.

LACOUR'S

SARSAPARIPHERE

BITTERS

POSSESS INVALUABLE PROPERTIES.

They give Health to the Sick,

Strength to the Weak,

Joy to the Afflicted.

☞SOLD EVERYWHERE.☜

$100 00

SAVED in a very Short Time by using

STANDARD SOAP CO.'S
WASHING POWDER.

TRY IT!

Does Not Injure the Clothes.
Sold Everywhere.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE, 533
CLAY STREET.

Cards, Billheads, Circulars, Books, Briefs, Transcripts, osters, Bills of Fare Envelopes, Letter and Note Headings, Tickets, Pamphlets, and all Legal Papers printed at short notice, and upon reasonable terms.

Asphaltum for Sale

IN ANY QUANTITY TO SUIT, BY THE

PACIFIC ASPHALTUM COMPANY,

No. 533 Kearny street, corner of Sacramento,
SAN FRANCISCO.

This Asphaltum is the purest to be found in the market, being free from rock and clay, or other impurities.

Sidewalks Laid and Roofing Done at Shortest Notice.

NEUVAL & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO

Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,

Manufacturers of

MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,

Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.

ALSO,

Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand ; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight, with out excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,
Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

IRON SHUTTER WORKS,

Established 1849.

John Upstone,

MANUFACTURER OF FIRE-PROOF

Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Balconies, Gratings, Prison Cells, Awnings, Stairs, Iron Fence, etc.,

Corner of California and Drumm Streets,
San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

Pioneer Iron Shutter Works,

ESTABLISHED 1849.

CALVIN NUTTING,

Manufacturer of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS & SHUTTERS,

STEEL LINED BANK VAULTS,

Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc.

123 Bush street, between Sansome and Battery,
San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

Pioneer Iron Works,

CORNER OF MARKET AND FREMONT STREETS,
San Francisco.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT

Manufacturers of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS, SHUTTERS, BANK VAULTS,
PRISON CELLS, BALCONIES, GRATINGS,
IRON FENCE, STAIRS, Etc.
BURGLAR PROOF BANK VAULT LOCKS

Constantly on had, a large assortment of Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

BAURHYTE & McAFEE,

Steam Boiler and Sheet Iron

WORKS.

Owned and conducted by Practical Boiler Makers.

HIGH AND LOW-PRESSURE BOILERS, STATIONARY AND MARINE.

Howard street, bet. Fremont and Beale, San Francisco.

Having had twenty-two years experience in this business, we feel confident of being able to compete—as to quality of work—with any establishment on the Pacific Coast.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work o all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

THE DEW OF EDEN.

LADIES OF CALIFORNIA?—If you will keep your complexions in the freshness, delicacy and beauty of youth, you must use the DEW OF EDEN, for it is the only article extant that will do for those using it all that it purports without injury, as it contains no mineral or poisonous substances whatever. It preserves the skin from the effects of climate and atmospheric changes; prevents the formation of Freckles, Tan, Morphew, Sunburn and Wrinkles. It keeps the skin soft, tender and beautiful; because it is congenial and natural to it, and composed of ingredients that supply to it what time and exposure take too rapidly away. It preserves and restores. It is valuable to the young, but more so to those from whom the stern hand of Time is stealing the treasures of youth ; to such, it will actually arrest its depredations and avert its ravages upon the human face divine. It will surely smooth out those lines of care to a great extent, and restore the skin to comparative youth. Used on the hands daily, it preserves them in all fineness of texture and delicacy of early years. It gives a beautiful tint to the nails of the fingers, and keeps them tender and soft. It is not a cosmetic, and must not be used with any kind of paint. A simple powder, however, of harmless nature, may be used without detriment with this protective.

No lady once using the DEW OF EDEN will ever afterward dispense with it from her toilet.

Depot, 311 Kearney Street ; and for sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Importers and Dealers in Drugs, Medicines, Chemicals, etc., corner of Pine and Sansome Streets, San Francisco.

PRIVATE MEDICAL AID.

QUICK CURES AND MODERATE CHARGES.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY,

PRIVATE MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE,
Sacramento Street, below Montgomery, Opposite Pacific Mail Steamship Co's Office, Private Entrance on Leidesdorff Street,
San Francisco.

Established expressly to afford the afflicted sound and scientific Medical Aid, in the treatment and cure of all Private and Chronic Diseases, cases of Secrecy, and all Sexual Disorders.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY returns his sincere thanks to his numerous patients for their patronage and would take this opportunity to remind them that he continues to consult at his Institute for the cure of chronic diseases of the Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Digestive and Genito-Urinary Organs, and all Private Diseases, viz : Syphilis in all its forms and stages, Seminal Weakness, and all the horrid consequences of Self-Abuse, Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Nocturnal and Diurnal Emissions, Sexual Debility, Diseases of the Back and Loins, Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, etc.; and he hopes that his long experience and successful practice will continue to insure him a share of public patronage. By his practice of many years in Europe and the United States, he is enabled to apply the most efficient and successful remedies against diseases of all kinds. He uses no mercury, charges moderate, treats his patients in a correct and honorable way, and has references of unquestionable veracity from men of known respectability and high standing in society. All parties consulting him, by letter or otherwise, will receive the best and gentlest treatment, and implicit secresy.

TO FEMALES.

When a female is in trouble, or afflicted with disease, as weakness of the back and limbs, pain in the head, dimness of sight, loss of muscular power, palpitation of the heart, irritability, nervousness, extreme urinary difficulties, derangement of digestive function, general debility, vaginitis, all disease of the womb, hysteria, sterility, and all other diseases peculiar to females, she should go or write at once to the celebrated female doctor, W. K. DOHERTY, at his Medical Institute, and consult him about her troubles and disease. Irregularities, suppressions, etc., will receive the Doctor's most particular attention. Let no false delicacy prevent, but apply immediately and save yourself from painful suffering and premature death. Ladies whose delicate health or other circumstances prevent an increase in their families, should write or call at DR. DOHERTY'S MEDICAL INSTITUTE, and they will receive every possible relief and help. The Doctor's offices, consisting of a suite of six rooms, are so arranged that he can be consulted without fear of observation.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Patients (male or female) residing in any part of the State, however distant, who may desire the opinion and advice of DR. W. K. DOHERTY on their respective cases, and who think proper to submit a written statement of such, in preference to holding a personal interview, are respectfully assured that their communications will be held most sacred. Dr. Doherty takes this opportunity of observing that all letters are only opened and replied to by himself, and the latter as promptly as possible.

If the case be fully and candidly described, personal communication will be unnecessary, as instructions for diet, regimen, and the general treatment of the case itself, (including the remedies) will be forwarded without delay, and in such a manner as to convey no idea of the purport of the letter or parcel so transmitted.

Consultation, by letter or otherwise, FREE. Permanent cure guaranteed, or no pay. Address,
W. K. DOHERTY, M. D.
San Francisco, Cal

SPERMATORRHŒA.

DR. DOHERTY has just published an important pamphlet embodying his own views and experiences in relation to Impotence or Virility, being a short treatise on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, Nervous and Physical Debility consequent on this affection, and other diseases of the Sexual Organs.

This little work contains information of the utmost value to all whether married or single, and will be sent FREE by mail on receipt of Six Cents in Postage stamps for return postage. Address,
W. K. DOHERTY, M. D., San Francisco, Cal.

CALIFORNIA

Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

BUCKMAN BROS.,

(Successors to John Myers,)

CAPITOL SALOON,

226 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Opposite the Russ House

Removal.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

Machinist,

Has removed from No. 416 Market street, to No. 10 Stevenson street, next to the corner of First.

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

F. D. RING,

MANUFACTURER OF

JEWELRY AND SILVER WARE,

No. 540 Market Street, adjoining the Hibernia Bank,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of precious Stones set in the latest style and most approved manner. Watches and Jewelry carefully repaired by experienced workmen.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor.
CHAS. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

Last Night of the CELEBRATED IRISH COMEDIAN,
DAN BRYANT,

Bryant Matinee to-day,
KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN!
Torrence O'Moore.....Dan Bryant

This Evening,.....Novemher 9th,
KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN,
And the comic drama of HANDY ANDY.

Handy Andy.....Dan Bryant,
With song of "The Flaming O'Flanigans," and dance "The Rocky Road to Dublin."

☞ Tuesday Evening—First appearance in San Francisco of MISS HELEN TRACY, as "Virginia," in the tragic play of VIRGINIUS.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:
Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra.....$1 00
Parquette..... 50 | Upper Circle..... 25

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

F. A. HOWSON.....Lessee
FRANK HOWSON.....Manager
J. H. VINSON.....Stage Manager

BENEFIT OF
MISS CLELIA HOWSON.

Saturday Evening.....November 9th,
Messrs. Haliday and Lawrence's great burlesque of KENILWORTH;
OR, THE DAYS OF GOOD QUEEN BESSS!

Which has been localized expressly for this occasion by TREM, author of the burlesques of "Emperor Norton I," "Maximiliano," local versions of "Pocahontas" and "Cupid," "Enoch Arden, or Under the Palm," "Assessments, or Look After My Josephine," "Do You Know Jones?" etc., etc.

SYNNPSIS:

The Cathedral Service at St. James' Church; Something about the Reformation; The Pueblo Lands; Poor Dr. Rowell; The Persecuted Pound Master; The New Style of Pants; Postmaster Perkins; Tucker's New Clock; The City Gardens; Siguor and Signora Bianchi; The Japanese; The Presidio Soldiers; Judge Rix; Police Court Celebrities; Counsellor Murphy; Citizen Sam Platt; Colonel James, etc.; Mrs. Lincoln's Shawls; Stockton Lunatic Asylum; Leicester's Closing Speech; Finale and Grand Chorus.

Earl of Leicester.....MISS CLELIA HOWSON.

The performance will commence with the comedy of
I COULDN'T HELP IT!
Kitty.....MISS CLELIA HOWSON.

This Afternoon, the grand burlesque of ALAADDIN!

☞ Monday Evening—First appearance in San Francisco of MRS. CHALES POOLE.
The historical drama of MASSANIELLO.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.
Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats.....One Dollar
Parquet..... 50 cts | Gallery..... 25 cts
No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.
Doors open at 7 o'clock; to commence at 8.
Box Office open from 10 to 3 o'clock.

Leslie, Raynor & Smith's Minstrels.

NEW TEMPLE OF MUSIC,
Congress Hall, No. 320 Bush Street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.

Immense Success of the Grand Combination
NEW MINSTREL TROUPE!
Endorsed by the presence of thousands of our First Families.

Saturday Afternoon.....November 2d, at 2 o'clock,
A GRAND MINSTREL MATINEE.
The entire Company will appear in one of the BEST PROGRAMMES OF THE SEASON.

STILL THE RUSH CONTINUES!
HUNDREDS TURNED AWAY NIGHTLY!
TO-NIGHT, ENTIRE CHANGE OF PROGRAMME!
HENRY HERBERTE EVERY EVENING!
SEATS SECURED FOUR DAYS IN ADVANCE!

A Cloak Room, with Competent Attendants, for Ladies and Children. No Fees or Gratuities to be given to Attendants.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:
Orchestra Chairs and Dress Circle.....75 Cents
Parquet.....50 cents | Upper Circle.....25 cents
Box Office open from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M., where Seats can be secured without extra charge.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine.

A CARD.

TO THE PRESS OF SAN FRANCISCO I TENDER MY sincere thanks for the uniform kindness and courtesy they have shown me during my engagement.

DAN BRYANT.

San Francisco, November 7th, 1867.

MADISON & BURKE'S

REGULAR WEEKLY LIST
OF REAL ESTATE FOR SALE,
SINCE LAST REGULAR ADVERTISEMENT.

We have better opportunities to sell Real Estate than any other office in the city; dealing with so many tenants and landlords, and being so well known throughout the country, we frequently make sales where they would not otherwise have been made. Parties purchasing will find it to their advantage to call, and examine our list, for we have property of all descriptions, and all prices, in various parts of the city. We only desire to make a fair commission, and DEAL ON THE SQUARE with both Seller and Buyer.

HOUSES TO LET.

In all parts of the city, and at all prices, from five dollars a month upwards. Especial attention paid to this branch of our business. Ladies will receive every information. Landlords cannot but see the advantage of placing houses in our charge, as so many persons visit our office for the purpose of getting houses. Besides we have a very large number of tenants, who visit our office to pay rent and then see our list of houses.

RENTS COLLECTED. Large and small. Bad paying and destructive tenants made to move in short time, which is well known to this class of tenants.

MADISON & BURKE,
316 Montgomery street,
Between Pine and California.
J. H. MADISON, Late Hoags & Madison. MARTIN J. BURKE, Late Chief of Police.
OFFICE OF CITY LETTER DELIVERY COMPANY.

Carrington's Yeast Powders

ARE THE BEST IN THE MARKET.

Try them if you do not believe it.

J. LANDSBERGER, Sole Agent,
429 Jackson Street.

R. T. HOUSTON,
Merchant Tailor,

No. 414 BUSH STREET,
Between Kearny and Dupont, San Francisco.

Steam Scouring, Cleansing and Repairing neatly executed.
Also—Ladies' Cloth Dresses and Cloaks neatly Cleaned and Pressed, or Mis-Fits altered.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of WM. D. PALMER, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Samuel L. Palmer, the administrator of the estate of William D. Palmer, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and those persons entitled, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said William D. Palmer, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the ninth day of December, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said William D. Palmer, deceased, and the persons entitled, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said ninth day of December, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 7th, 1867.
A. J. GUNNISON, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
nov9 16 23 30 dec7

NOTICE!

Not Out of Business—Only Removed.

Pioneer Steam Marble Works Com'y
HAVE REMOVED
Their Marble Mantel Warerooms from No. 546 California street to their extensive Steam Factory,
422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Where they keep constantly on hand the best and most select stock of
MARBLE MANTELS AND GRATES, HEADSTONES AND MONUMENTS.
Our Steam facilities enable us to sell better work at reduced prices than that manufactured by hand.
422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Between Montgomery and Sansome.

COCOMUNGO SALOON.—The famous Cocomungo Wine, together with the choicest liquors and cigars, are offered to the public at this Saloon, No. 536 Merchant street, Montgomery Block. A Hot Lunch, equal to any set forth in San Francisco, every day from 11 to 2 o'clock. A Reading Room, abundantly supplied with the daily, weekly, and leading Eastern journals, is one of the attractions of the Cocomungo. J. M. WASHBURN, Agent.

INSURANCE.

☞ EDITOR OF THE CALIFORNIAN—SIR—I have read over with attention your commentary of the 18th instant on the downward tendency of the stocks of half a dozen of our "crack" insurance company. You report that their shares have fallen eight to eleven per cent. within the last couple of weeks, and that in most cases the rates quoted are merely nominal: that in fact there are NO BUYERS. This is precisely what I foretold to those gentlemen several months ago when I observed the illiberal and and unbusiness methods they had adopted. Only think of it. Those great Insurance Companies, founded on so many hundreds of thousands of "capital," (paper) would cancel people's policies if they presumed to give a portion of their insurance to the Builders' Insurance Co. Yes, indeed! You might insure with Turk, Jew, or Gentile, with New England or Old England, with German, Gaul, or Dane; but if you insured with the BUILDERS your policies with the others were straightway cancelled! And why object to the Builders, gentlemen? You are not called upon to pay their losses: the Builders have to pay their own losses, and have so far paid them promptly. But the Builders are only mechanics—they are not "merchants," and of course unfit to insure anybody.

Ah, gentlemen, I may say, in the words of Oliver Cromwell to the long Parliament of England: "The Lord hath delivered you into my hands."

Observe, Mr. Editor, they decline to make dividends from "prudential motives;" rather prudent, one should say, when they have no profits to divide! Bah! and so all their vaporing and dignity and pretension have come to this: That from gross mismanagement they are losing money and eating up the capital of their stockholders: while some of their labors consist in cancelling policies of their old customers, returning them the premiums paid, which, of course, are carried straight into the "Builders."

Those lights of Insurance Science are fain to be thought the models of Commercial Men—the encouragers of the young enterprise and budding industries of California. Yet the whole city can discern their meanness and incapacity.

I now propheey and proclaim that half of those pompous Institutions will dissolve and retire from business long before they have their fortunes made; and their existence will be remembered only by the unfortunate Shareholders—an inevitable result of all mean and vicious dealing in the world.

THOMAS MOONEY.

San Francisco, October 19th, 1867.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

—OF—

MACCARONI,
VERMICELLI,
PASTE, and
FARINA.

First Premium in 1857—1859—1864—1865.

Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co,
706 SANSOME STREET,
San Francisco.

Great Reduction

IN PRICES OF

BOOTS AND SHOES.

ON ACCOUNT OF THE WIDENING OF Kearny Street, we are compelled to remove. Before doing so, we will sell at retail our entire stock of boots and shoes at the lowest

WHOLESALE PRICES.

HOLCOMBE & KAST,
Corner Washington and Kearney streets.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

Turnbull & Smith,
PRINTERS,
522 CLAY ST.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Good Work!—One Price!—Punctuality!

D. BRUCE,

PRINTER,
COMMERCIAL STREET BELOW MONTGOMERY.

North American Steamship Company

THROUGH TO NEW YORK VIA NICARAGUA.
THROUGH AHEAD OF THE MAIL!
☞ Shortest and Only Healthy Route! ☜
THE NORTH AMERICAN S. S. CO.'S STEAMER
AMERICA,
(2500 Tons,)
EDGAR WAKEMAN.....Commander,
Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 12 o'clock, M., on FRIDAY, - - - - NOV. 15th, 1867.

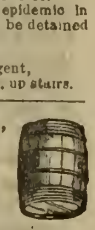
The Company's new Steamer OREGONIAN, now nearly ready for sea, and the splendid new steamer NEVADA, now on her way from New York to San Francisco, will soon be put on the Line.

No expense on the Isthmus—100 lbs. baggage free.
Surgeon on board; medicine and attendance free.
As there is no Yellow Fever nor other epidemic in Nicaragua, passengers by this route will not be detained by Quarantine in New York.
For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

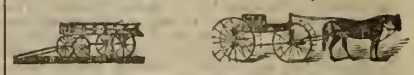
PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,


Corner Second and Folsom streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
JOHN WIELAND,
Proprietor

O.....O
C. F. HAYWARD,
—DEALER IN—
Harness, Saddles, etc.,
305 BATTERY STREET,
Near Sacramento,
San Francisco.
O.....O

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,

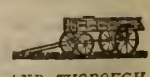


Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

George P. Kimball & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS

....OF....


CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, STAGE AND THOROUGH BRACE WAGONS,
Market street, near corner of Fourth, San Francisco.

DICKEY'S

CREME DE LIS

DE CALIFORNIE.

FOR CLEANSING AND PRESERVING THE TEETH. Beautifying the Complexion, and removing Freckles, Eruptions, Sunburn, and Tan.
A New Combination, equal to the best French preparations, and free from their poisonous ingredients.
Invented by GEO. S. DICKEY, Chemist,
Corner of Market, Stockton, Ellis and Fourth streets,
San Francisco.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUMEVII., No. 26. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, NOVEMBER 16, 1867. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

Mr. Harte's New Book; Wine Adulterations; "Dead," A Poem by W. A. Kendall; "Lion's Mouth:" Lessons for Locals, or How to be Witty and Humorous; The Architects of San Francisco; Barbarous England; "Civilized Lightning;" Literary Gleanings: A Word for Hugo's Jean Valjean; The Scientific Church; Dicken's Second Visit to the United States; Literary Intelligence, etc. Dramatic Affairs, by Touchstone; The Loves of the Keysers, by John Quill; Sheridan's Ride; A Parisian Crime and its Treatment Two Hundred Years Ago; Chased by Tartar Cavalry; Dennis Thompson's Escape; The Human Body; Poetry, Paragraph's, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish s an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

Lessons for Locals, or How Dull Persons can be Witty and Humorous.

It is a remnrkable fact, tbat as a class, the "witty reporters," whose brilliant flashes illuminate the local columns of the daily papers, and set thousands of breakfast tables in a roar every morning, are not, naturally, among the gifted of their race. On the contrary, many of those wbose "items" are the funniest, are rather dull, thick-headed fellows, with nothing bright or genial about them. How, then, it may be asked, do they keep up such a perennial flow of humor? The secret is easy, and we will impart it for the benefit of the younger and more obscure class of "locals," who are laboriously treading in the footsteps of such veteran celebrities as Fitz Smythe, of the Alta, nnd Fitz Snarl, of the Call, in the fond hope of one day becoming wealtby and famous themselves. Nothing can be more simple. Procure an "unabridged," and a book of synonyms, and keep them at hand, when you are engaged in writing up your funny items. These are your tools, young man, nnd this is the way to use them. First, write out your item in the plainest and most direct manner. Use the first words that come to hand, and take no pains or trouble whatever. Second, take each of the principal verbs, nouns, adjectives, nnd adverbs, that occur in your item, look it up in your book of synonyms, or dictionary, and find the oddist, most outlandish and least-used word that represents any of the meanings of said verb, noun, adjective, or adverb. Next substitute the synonym for the original word. Fnally, re write your item, nsing as many words as possible, and all the slang phrases, and circuitous modes of expression possible, and your work is done. By this simple (though at first tedious) process, the baldest and most common place phrases become sprightly or humorous. The transformation is amazing. "He smelled a very big rat," a bomely and hackneyed expression. becomes, "He nosed a peculiarly magnificent rodent"—not a bad Fitzsmythism. Again, let us suppose you have written in regard to a lot of "drunks" brought into the station-house, "their boots were dirty, and they had no money." This unpretending statement, after being properly manipulated blooms into the stately periphrasis: "An examination of their boots showed that they had more real estate than blacking on their outer surface, and an examination of their pockets demonstrated with logical conclusiveness that the entire party, individually and collectively, were teetotally impecunious!" It is by the diligent practice of the principle and theory here indicated, that Fitz Smythe has attained his proud pre-eminence as the funniest "local" on this coast. Next week, we shall give the second lesson of the series.

"Civilized Lightning."

The pursuits of trade and commerce have not ordinarily been supposed to be peculiarly favorable to the cultivation of the higher kinds of eloquence, though examples have not been wanting of eloquent auctioneers. San Francisco, however, can boast of a distinguished merchant who is capable of the loftiest oratorical flights. None of her lawyers, divines, or political speakers have ever surpassed the efforts of the President of the Chamber of Commerce, R. G. Sneath, Esq., on the occasion of the formal "opening" of the new rooms of that body, on Tuesdny evening last. We have room for but a single specimen, which will, however, suffice for our purpose; ex pede Herculem:

The civilized lightning, baulked in its wild career by the broad Pacific, darted its forked flame toward the Russians in search of its affinity—the iceberg realm in frigid tone repelled the bold intruder—it now frightfully halts on the Occidental shore, ready to leave its master in some frantic moment, and make the frightful leap of the Pacific to join its Oriental comrades.

When that "frantic moment" shall have arrived, and the "civilized lightning" is quite ready for that amazing saltatory feat in search of "Oriental comrades," may we be there to witness the performance, with Fitz Smythe to report it.

Barbarous England.

Fifty years ago we were rather proud of our English descent, and our old fogy diplomatists thought it a nice thing to say in their dinner-table speeches on festive occasions when Englishmen were present, that we had "derived our language, our literature, and our laws from England," etc., etc. But we have got over all those infantile notions now, and are as much ashamed of the "mother country" as Mr. Samuel Williams, of the Bulletin, is of bis nncestors and the ancients generally. We are too conscious of our superior civilization, to dream of boasting that we have "derived" anything from an effete aristocracy"—except some of our vices. As to the superiority of our laws to those of the old country, take the following, which we clip from an exchange, by way of illustration:

A DOG STORY.—A surgeon at Netley, England, recently took a long walk in the neighborhood of Southampton, nccompanied by his dog, a fine Newfonndland. In the evening he missed some letters from his coat-pocket and his dog. The latter did not surprise him as his dog often wandered from bim in his walks. The next day annoyed and puzzled at the loss of his letters, he thought it possible he might have drawn them out of his pocket-handkerchief during his previous day's walk. He resolved, therefore, to repeat the walk. for he might bave dropped the letters in an unfrequented path. About four miles from the hospital, he came suddenly npon his dog lying on the ground with the letters close by. The dog had laid by the side of the letters for sixteen hours. He has been re-christened, very properly. "Post master-General."

Without pausing to remark npon the superiority of American dogs, as shown by this paragraph (for the most stupid Yankee dog wouldn't have made a donkey of himself by "lying on the ground with the letters close by," but would have picked them up and ran to his master with them.) Without dwelling on this point, we call attention to the fact that England is far behind us in the matter of legislation. It is quite evident that the enlightened dog-laws of San Francisco are still unknown in that country, or that "fine Newfoundland" couldn't by any possibility have been abroad "for sixteen hours," without getting lassooed. Our own enterprising Pound-keeper would have "snatched" him, in less than sixteen seconds, after his owner was ont of sight. We believe that we have a correspondent of the London Times in this city, and we trust that be will communicate to that influential paper—a journal scarcely inferior to our own Morning Call—a full account of the nature and workings of our municipal legislation in regard to dogs. The nations of Europe ought not to be suffered to remain in heathen ignorance on this subject, even if it should become necessary to send out the Pound-keeper and his "mounted escort" in the capacity of missionaries, to enlighten them.

The Architects of San Francisco.

Some disgusted architect, who is not in the good graces of the Board of Education, and cannot get orders for "plans and specifications" for new school-houses, sends us a communication embodying a particularly ferocious onslaught upon the architects of this metropolis, which we feel somewhat delicate about publishing until we have consulted our attorney as to the nature and extent of the liability we may incur by doing so, under the provisions of the law of libel. The following is the least violent portion of the epistle:

MR. EDITOR:—I am by profession an architect, a profession which I have practised for over thirty years in several of the principal cities of this great and glorious Republic, which the Bard of Avon prophetically designated "the land of the free, and the home of the brave." But sir, if I remain in San Francisco, and continue in the practice of my ancient and honorable profession, I fear I shall be obliged to forfeit all claim to my own self-respect. The men who dub themselves "architects" here, are for the most part charlatans and empirics of the most vulgar description. Many of them are ignorant and illiterate scrubs, destitute of the very rudiments of a professional education. The frosty effrontery of some of these quacks in daring to hang out a shingle in which they describe themselves as "architects" is positively stunning. It is scarcely credible—it is simply monstrous—and yet it is the congelated truth, that men who were boss carpenters at home, and who couldn't tell a Corinthian from a Doric column, or furnish an intelligent answer to the query, whether the Pantheon was a Gothic edifice, have the ineffable effrontery to set up here for "arcbitects." This class of pretenders and impostors are of course utterly destitute of any respect for the etiquette and usages of the profession. They underbid one another, and practice the most despicable arts in order to obtain employment. There are even instances where they have been known to work for nothing, in order to bring themselves into notice. Nearly all are willing to "go into competition," on the quack principle of "no cure no pay," in order to obtain a job. In short, sir, I am disgusted. They are meaner and more groveling than the pettifoggers of the Justices' Courts; more degraded than the quack doctors who practice "specialties," more jealous than rival singers, or rival poets. They remind me forcibly of a nest of wriggling and hissing snakes, in which each reptile is struggling to rear his head above the heads of his fellows. There are some exceptions, but they are so disgustingly few that it makes me sick to think of it.

Yours, in sorrow,
FABER BRICK,

[For the Californian.]

"DEAD."

COME into the casket room,
Come with softly muffled feet,
Groping through the utter gloom,
Searching for the jewel sweet:
"Dead—dead—dead!"

Wrapped in this grim coffin shroud,
Stolen as by horrid stealth;
Here in this wan satin cloud,
Look you for your rifled wealth:
"Dead—dead—dead!"

Folded down in hapless rest,
In their grave-bands tight and fast,
Lead upon the frozen breast,
Both the heavy hands are cast:
"Dead—dead—dead!"

Lids that never more will rise,
Lips so blue and cold and numb;
Over both the sunken eyes
Broods an awful mystery, dumb:
"Dead—dead—dead!"

Blotches of the inky night,
Glimpses of expiring spheres,
Drift across your swimming sight,
Then there bursts a storm of tears:
"Dead—dead—dead!"

This may be your father, here,
This may be your truest friend;
This, alas! your mother dear;
For of these this is the end:
"Dead—dead—dead!"

Cry you for one parting word?
Beg you for one loving glance?
Not a prayer of yours is heard
In that stolid earthen trance:
"Dead—dead—dead!"

Curse the robber if you will,
Curse the harshly clanging bell;
There it lieth, calm and still,
Under the remorseless knell:
"Dead—dead—dead!"

Well—screw down the casket lid,
With its sickening varnish smell;
It is time it should be hid
Where the unreturning dwell:
"Dead—dead—dead!"

* * * * * *

Through the thickest sable veil
Rays of subtle glory reach,
And the lips of halo Hope
Of our vanished darlings teach:

"Dust to dust is fate's decree,
But the Fate of fate denies,
To the love on bended knee,
That the spirit ever dies!"

Bitter is the cup, but drink—
At the bottom lurks a sweet,
Which to taste of is to think
The beloved yet will meet;

And the self-same hands shall press,
That have clasped their last below,
Where there cometh no distress,
And the lights of Heaven glow.

"DEAD."—Its meaning we mistake;
Dead to care and pain, 'tis true;
Dead to toil and tempest quake,
But alive to God and you!

Oh, the robber's hand is staid,
By a mightier Power to save;
And his stealthy clutch is laid
Only on the body's grave.

No! not dead! but gone before,
Leaving all their burdens here;
Swimmers who have reached the shore
Of the Soul's Eternal Year!

W. A. KENDALL.

A PARISIAN CRIME AND ITS TREATMENT TWO HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

THE Dame Mazel was a haughty lady, who lived alone (excepting her retainers) in a large hotel in the rue Maçons-Sorbonne, Paris. In the latter half of the seventeenth century, women of quality thought they could do much as they liked, and Madame Mazel, rich and a widow, did not suffer greatly from the rest of her class. She gave grand receptions on stated days, with sharp card-playing and splendid suppers. At other times, her sole, though not her constant companion, was the Abbé Poulard.

At the epoch when these events occurred, almost every wealthy house reckoned among its guests—we might say among its parasites—one or more ecclesiastics of greater or less respectability. The Dame Mazel harbored an unfrocked monk. Did the Abbé Poulard act as the lady's confessor? Or was he bound to her by dearer ties? All that was known for certain was, that he took up his quarters in the house as if it belonged to him, finding fault with the servants, hard to please in respect to bed and board, irregular in his habits, and not concealing his contempt for the rules of the Church on abstinence days and during Lent. At table he spoke with authority, discussing the merits of dishes and their sauces, and worrying the old cook-maid almost to death. His bedroom was like a ladies' boudoir, full of trinkets, ornaments, and luxurious furniture. So completely was this self-indulgent cell to his taste, that in 1673, he submitted to excommunication by the Prior of Clury rather than quit it.

In spite, however, of his fondness for his bower, he was not satisfied with that alone. In order to be thoroughly at liberty, he hired a room in the neighborhood, where he frequently slept. On these occasions he returned to the hotel noiselessly, early in the morning, by means of a master-key with which he could open the street door at pleasure.

The personage of next importance in the household was Jacques Lebrun, who, at the age of sixteen, had entered Madame Mazel's service as valet de chambre. He had now lived with her nine-and-twenty years, serving her faithfully, and enjoying her full confidence. Although at forty-five he was still called the valet de chambre, he had in reality become the maître d'hôtel, steward. It was he who bought everything, paid the tradesmen, who gave orders for repairs and renovations. The cash and the plate were under his charge, and he locked them up in a strong box kept in a sacred biding place. His long-tried integrity was above all suspicion; and in those days an old servant became almost a member of the family. He was at once a domestic and a friend. He was set down in Madame Mazel's will for a legacy of six thousand francs, with the half of the clothes and the household linen.

Lebrun was married, and lived happily with his wife; he brought up his children religiously. His duties, which were strict and numerous, did not allow him to have his family in the house. The Dame Mazel had indeed offered him apartments in the upper story, where there was more than accommodation enough for two such families as his; but on her reception days—twice a week—when her mansion was frequented by fashionable people, it was also thronged by lackeys waiting for their masters and mistresses, whose loose style of conduct and conversation seemed to Lebrun to be anything but a proper example for his own young folk. He therefore installed them in a lodging close by. The establishment consisted, besides Lebrun, of two housemaids, a cook, a coachman, and two little lackeyes.

Madame Mazel's hotel was four stories high. You reached the first floor by the grand stair-case, passing through a room which served as a pantry, and containing a closet in which the table service was locked up. One of the housemaids kept the key. In this room, on the side next the street, a portion had been partitioned off, where Lebrun slept when he did not pass the night at home. The rest of this story consisted of a suite of state apartments in which madame received company when she gave her card and supper parties. Her bed-room was on the second floor, looking into the court. It was reached by two ante-chambers, one of which, opening on the grand stair-case, was always left open; the other was fastened when the lady had retired to rest. She was the only person who slept on this story of the house. Two doors led out of her bedroom; one opened on a little back stair-case, the other led to a wardrobe, which also had an outlet on the stair-case. The first of these doors was at the side of the bed next the wall, and Madame Mazel could open it without raising. At the head of the bed hung a couple of bell-pulls, corresponding to the chambers of the two housemaids. In the wardrobe was a closet, the key of which was laid on Madame Mazel's bolster; and in this closet was the key of the strong box.

The third story of the hotel was completely untenanted, excepting the chamber occupied by the Abbé Poulard, which was situated over the wardrobe. It was entered by the back stair-case, which led to the door of Madame Mazel's bedside. On the fourth story, the two femmes de chambre and the two little lackeys slept. The cook slept down-stairs in a wood-house; the coachman, in a nook under the stair-case. The latter had charge of the great coach door leading into the street, the key of which hung on a nail in the kitchen ready for use by any of the inmates of the house. The roof of the hotel formed a vast attic, always open, and in which there was a garret window allowing access to a broad rain-gutter running along the bottom of two sloping roofs, which was prolonged for a considerable distance along the row of houses. The door of this attic was never closed.

Some time before our story opens, Madame Mazel had asked Lebrun for a master-key which he made use of to go in and out as he wanted. She gave it to the Abbé Poulard. Lebrun, however, had a second master-key, and continued to employ it for the same purpose as before.

On the first Sunday in Advent, the 27th of November, 1689, Lebrun's daughters came to pay their respects to the Dame Mazel after her dinner. She received them as usual, kindly, requested them to come and see her again, and left them to go to vespers. Lebrun gave his arm to his mistress, the two little lackeys following them. When he saw her comfortably seated on her bench in the chapel of the Convent of the Prémontré Nuns, rue Hautefeuille, he was at liberty until the conclusion of the service. He went and gossiped with the cook's husband, one Lagiée, a locksmith. They agreed that their two families should picnic together that evening, so they went to a cook-shop to buy something for supper. Lebrun ran for a moment to his wife's lodgings, and then at eight o'clock he went to the house of one Dame Duvau, where he was to find his mistress, the coachman, and the two little lackeys. After conducting his mistress to her hotel, he returned to his friend Lagiée.

The Dame Mazel supped tete-à-tête with the Abbé Poulard as usual. During the repast, the abbé announced that he intended sleeping out, in his other chamber. The Dame Mazel went to bed at about eleven o'clock. Lebrun had stayed late at his picnic supper. Just as the two waiting-women, after undressing their mistress, were preparing to retire, they heard him scratching* at the back stair-case door.

"Who is there?" asked the Dame Mazel.

"'Tis M. Lebrun," said the femme de chambre.

"A pretty time of night!" exclaimed the irritable lady.

Finding that they did not let him in by that way, Lebrun retired, went round, and returned to the chamber by the grand stir-case. His mistress gave her orders for next day's supper, which was a reception-day. He then finished his service for the night in the customary way. He closed the door of the chamber by pulling it after him, after laying the key on a chair inside; then, as was his practice every evening, he locked the door of the second ante-chamber, and laid the key on the chimney-piece of the first—i. e., of that first entered from the grand staircase.

That done, Lebrun went down into the kitchen, laid his hat upon the table, took the key of the great door with the intention of locking it, but first warmed himself before the logs which still blazed on the hearth. Insensibly he fell asleep; his sociable supper had made him drowsy. When he awoke, he went and locked the door, which he found wide open, and took the key with him to his sleeping-place.

Early next morning he started on his errands. He had to go to the butcher's, and make preparations for the evening's supper. He met a bookseller, with whom he had a friendly gossip. His remarks were cheerful, even jocose. At the butcher's, he hurried the sending of the soup-meat; his mistress would want a basin of broth before it was late. Returned to the hotel, he met three of his friends near the door; he insisted on their stepping into the kitchen for a moment. He was in such a merry mood, that, taking off his cloak and putting it on the shoulders of one of the party, he pretended to thrash him with a leg of mutton, saying, "I have the right to beat my own cloak as much as I please." He then cast an eye on the preparations for supper, and gave one of the little lackeys some wood to carry up to madame's chamber. Meanwhile, the clock struck eight, and his mistress had not yet rung for her waiting-maids. Lebrun noticed it, and appeared uneasy. The Dame Mazel usually awoke at seven.

He fidgeted about a few minutes longer, continually expecting the bell to ring. He stepped out of doors for an instant and went to his wife's, to give her seven louis-d'ors and a few crowns, which he did not wish to keep loose in his pocket. On leaving her, he said, "Madame is not yet awake; I don't know what can be the meaning of it."

He found the servants seriously alarmed at their mistress's silence. They resolved to go up stairs and knock at the several doors of her room, shouting, "Madame Mazel! Madame Mazel!"

No reply was made.

"Can she have had a fit?" said one of the servants.

"It must be something worse than that," replied Lebrun. "I don't at all like finding the coach door wide open last night."

They sent for Madame Mazel's eldest son. He knocked at the door with no better result, and then sent to fetch a locksmith. "What can it be?" he asked Lebrun. "It must be apoplexy."

"If we sent for a surgeon in any case?" suggested one of the waiting-women.

"It is not that," said Lebrun; "it is much worse; there must have been foul play. I am very uneasy about the coach doors being open last night."

The locksmith opened the bedchamber door. Lebrun, the first to enter, ran to the bed, drew aside the curtains, and exclaimed, "Madame has been murdered!" He then went to the wardrobe, and took out one of the bars of the window, to give more light. The Dame Mazel was stretched on her bed in a pool of blood. He face, neck, and hands were covered with wounds.

At this sad spectacle, Lebrun's first thought seems to have been that robbery could have been the only motive for his mistress's murder. He ran to the strong box and raised it; the lock was uninjured. "She has not been robbed," he said, "What can that mean?"

On examination, fifty wounds, apparently made with a knife, were found on the body. Not one of them in itself was mortal. Loss of blood was the sole cause of death. The victim might, therefore, have called for help. In the bed was found a piece of a cravat with embroidered ends stained with blood, and a napkin, much blood stained, bore the mark of the house. It was presumed that the victim, struggling in self-defence, had snatched from her assassin this bit of cravat and this improvised cap. Between the slashed fingers of the defunct were a few hairs, quite unlike Madame Mazel's hair, and which she had evidentally torn from the murderer in her moment of despair. A knife was found in the ashes of the hearth. The two bell-pulls were tied in two knots to the curtain-rod, so that pulling them had no effect on the bells. The key of the chamber was not on the chair where it was usually placed every night; there was no trace of violence on the doors, two doors opening on the back stair-case were fastened inside with hooks. The key of the closet was in its customary place on the bolster. When the closet was opened they found there the purse in which Madame Mazel kept her card-money; it contained nearly three hundred francs. The key of the strong box was still in the closet; they opened it, and it contained several bags full of silver, an open purse, at the bottom of which was a half-louis d'or, and all the victim's jewels, valued at fifteen thousand francs. Lastly, Madame Mazel's pockets contained eighteen pistoles in gold. At first sight, it was easy to suppose that theft had not been the motive of the murder.

On searching Lebrun, they found upon him the key of the pantry, and a master-key which would open the first turn of the bedroom lock. This fixed suspicion on him, and he was not allowed to go out of sight. They tried on his head the napkin twisted into a cap; it was much too small for him. They examined his hands, which he had not yet washed. He was made to wash them: they bore no trace of blood—not a sign of a scratch. His box was inspected; nothing suspicious was found. Nevertheless, the master-key seemed to witness against him. He and his wife were immediately arrested.

Next day, the 29th of November, the lieutenant-criminel made a fresh inquiry. The idea struck him, a little late, to examine the back stair-case. He found on one of the lowest steps, a new rope, very long, ending in a triple iron hook, and tied into knots at intervals so as to serve as a sort of ladder. The same day, they found in a corner of the attic a shirt whose front and sleeves were bloody, and a cravat collar stained with blood at both ends. If this linen belonged to Lebrun, it was surprising that no marks of recent washing were to be found on his hands or on his neck.

An expert wig-maker affirmed that there was no resemblance, either in color or stoutness, between the hairs found in the victim's fingers and Lebrun's hair. Cutlers interested in the task, declared that there was no relation between the knives in Lebrun's possession and the knife which the murderer had thrown into the fire. None of the ropes in the pantry, in the house, in Lebrun's lodging, had anything to do with the knotted rope on the back stair-case. These negative proofs of innocence had no weight. The prosecution closed their eyes to them. All they would see was, that, although Madame Mazel had taken back her master-key, Lebrun still possessed another; that when they talked of apoplexy, he expressed his belief that "something worse" had occurred. His motive was impatience to touch the legacy of six thousand francs, and the rest. The rope on the back stairs (which had not been used, as the knots were not drawn tight,) and the bloody shirt hidden in the garret, was merely tricks to direct suspicion to some one else; while every circumstance implied a complete knowledge of the ways of the house.

Nevertheless, seamstresses called in to express an opinion on the linen found, declared that there was no resemblance between the bloody shirt and Lebrun's linen. Moreover, there was a femme-de-chambre who believed she remembered washing a singular shirt for a lackey of the name of Berry who had been turned out of the house for dishonesty. Another said she had seen Berry wear an embroidered cravat resembling the bit torn from the murderer's neck. This significant clue was not followed up.

Moreover, the Dame Mazel had three sons, in high positions. The eldest, René de Savonniéres, was a counsellor of parlement; the second, Georges de Savonniéres, lord of Ligneres, was a treasurer of France for the generality of Paris; the youngest, Michel de Savonniéres, was a major in the regiment de Piemont. Now, fifteen years before, René, the eldest, had married a young person whose scandalous conduct provoked Madame Mazel's high displeasure. The angry dame obtained against her daughter-in-law a lettre de cachet, with which she had kept her imprisoned more than twelve years in a provincial convent. But the counsellor was very fond of his wife, and consented to the separation only from a sense of filial duty, perhaps also through fear of the effect which resistance might have on his mother's will. Young Madame de Savonniéres had several times escaped from her cloister prison; but the mother-in-law, watchful and implacable, soon had her taken back again.

* When you call to pay a visit, knock or ring very gently, just enough to make yourself heard. Formerly it was considered bon ton to do no more than scratch at a great man's door.—La Politesse Francais, par E. Muller.

There was a rumor, and its truth was ascertained, that in the month of March, 1685, at the same time that Berry robbed the Dame Mazel of a sum of fifteen hundred francs, Madame de Savonniéres was concealed in Paris. Towards the close of August she again broke loose, and again remained hidden for a certain time in a house in the Faubourg Saint-Germain. She said to one of her friends, "This will not last long. In three months I shall have no need to hide myself, but shall return publicly to my husband's house."

No conclusion or inference was drawn from these curious coincidences. Such was the state of society then, that Lebrun's advocate dared not insist on their significance. Neither the lieutenant-criminel nor the judges of the Chatelet hesitated to sacrifice Lebrun's innocent head to the influential people who were interested in concealing the real source of the crime. Lebrun was only a poor unprotected wretch, who could be found guilty without any great distortion of facts. All they had to do was to keep silence respecting certain double edged circumstances. Thus, Madame de Savonniéres was shut up in a convent at Bourges; Berry was a Bourges man; yet no one asked where Madame de Savonnieres was, nor what incautious expressions she had let fall. Witnesses declared that the bloody shirt and cravat belonged to Berry; notwithstanding which, Berry was not even named by the prosecution. Nor was the Abbé Poulard examined.

And yet there were no other reasons besides his suspicious relations with the deceased, which ought to have caused his examination. It was not of very important purport that he should be named in Madame Mazel's will, not for any special legacy, but for the continuation of the same advantages which he had enjoyed during her lifetime. M. de Savonnieres the elder was bound to board and lodge the excommunicated monk. But the ex-Dominican had a sister, a widow, Madame Chapelain by name. This person, penniless like her brother, and with an attractive countenance, was publicly sought by M. de Savonnieres de Ligneres, Madame Mazel's second son. In spite of her poverty, she hoped to get the young treasurer to marry her. By clever coquetry and artful resistance she managed to shut his eyes to the ill-assortment of their union. The Dame Mazel, absolute in her will, opposed the marriage; the Abbé Poulard ardently desired it. Only six months before the crime, Madame Chapelain, all the while persisting in her rigor, had accepted from her suitor costly presents, such as a complete dress, comprising even the shoes, made of gold and silver brocade. Here was an interest in Madame Mazel's death quite as powerful as poor Lebrun's.

The Abbé Poulard had lately obtained the master-key which Lebrun had been made to give up. During his last meal with the murdered lady he repeatedly mentioned that he was going to sleep out that night. He had well known, at Madame Mazel's, the lackey Berry, afterwards discharged for theft. Still he was not interrogated.

Another thing told much against him. Ever since the commission of the dead, he industriously spread strange and inconsistent reports respecting Lebrun. Sometimes he accused him of being the sole agent in the murder, mixing up calumnious insinuations on the memory of his benefactress: sometimes he charged him with complicity with Berry, whom the prosecution persisted in leaving in the shade. "The Dame Mazel," the ex-monk stated, "had a child in her youth by a grand seigneur, who left a considerable sum to bring it up. This child was no other than Berry, afterwards lackey to his own mother. Lebrun, aware of his mistress's errors, had revealed to Berry the secret of his birth, in the hope of making him his son-in-law. When driven from the maternal residence, Lebrun had tried to reinstate him, introducing him by night into his mother's bedroom. Berry had tried to soften her, in vain. Yielding to her violent temper, she had seized him by the throat; on which he drew his knife in self-defence, and killed her without premeditation."

This absurd romance, combined with Poulard's interest in Madame Mazel's death, awakened the suspicions of the defence; but the prosecution would listen to nothing. The master-key was poor Lebrun's ruin. Of twelve judges, three voted for further inquiry, three for the preparatory "question" or torture, six for a sentence to death.

The sentence actually pronounced on the 18th of January, declared Lebrun "attained and convicted of having taken part in the murder of the Dame Mazel; in reparation of which he is condemned to make honorable amends, to be broken alive and to die on the wheel, after the previous application of the ordinary and the extraordinary question to obtain the revelation of his accomplices; all his goods confiscated to the king, or to whom appertains the right, first mulcting them with the sum of five hundred francs of fine, in case the confiscation is not to the king's profit; eight hundred francs of civil reparation and damages to the Messieurs de Savonniéres; one hundred francs to pray God for the soul of Dame Mazel; the said Lebrun declared unworthy of the dispositions and legacies made in his favor in the will of the said Dame Mazel, and condemned to all the costs; suspension of further inquiry against Madeleine Tissercl, wife of Lebrun, until after the execution.

Lebrun appealed against this sentence before the Touruelle. On the 22d of February, the affair was brought on for consideration. Twenty-two judges voted; two only for the confirmation of the sentence, four for further investigation, the remaining sixteen for the ordinary and extraordinary question. On the 23d, M. le Nain, reported, proceeded to the application of the torture. The fearful sufferings of the rack were unable to extort from the unhappy man the confession of a crime which he had not committed.

On the 26th, a definitive sentence was pronounced, quashing the sentence of death delivered by the Chatelet, and ordering further inquiries against Lebrun and his wife during the space of a year; Lebrun, meanwhile, to be detained in prison, and his wife to remain at liberty. The question of the nullity of the legacy, and of damages, was reserved. In consequence of this sentence, Lebrun, who had hitherto been kept in strict seclusion, had at last the consolation of seeing his wife and friends. But he did not enjoy the favor long. His body had been crushed by the rack, his spirit was broken down by grief. A week after the sentence, he expired, protesting his innocence and pardoning his judges. It is to be remarked that public opinion, ready as it is to believe any accusation, never once admitted his culpability. His body was buried in front of the altar to the Virgin, in St. Barthélemy's Church. His funeral was attended by crowds of sorrowing relations and friends.

Scarcely was poor Lebrun lain in his grave, when proofs of his innocence appeared in all directions. What a few persons had suspected, and what still fewer had clearly perceived, became evident to the eyes of the public at large. They found Berry. A lieutenant of the horse patrol arrested him at Sens, where he lived by horse-dealing, on the 27th of March, a month after the sentence delivered at La Tournelle. When they laid hands upon him, he offered the leader of the brigade a purse full of louis-d'ors if he would let him go. They found upon him a watch which Madame Mazel had worn the day before her death.

Berry (whose real name was Gerlat) was, as we have said, born at Bourges, where his father and mother still resided. His first situation had been with a canon in his native town; he then lived as domestic with a M. Benard de Rose; and from thence he passed into Madame Mazel's service.

Transferred to Paris, several witnesses deposed that they had seen him there at the time of the murder. This he stoutly denied.

The facts imputed by public rumor to the Abbe Poulard, were too grave and glaring to make it possible to refrain from arresting him. He was taken to the Conciegeric and confronted with Berry. From that moment, all trace of him is lost. He disappeared, and was never mentioned afterwards. Doubtless, to avoid the scandal of an ecclesiastic's being mixed up with an affair of murder, perhaps also to avert a disgraceful exposure from the powerful family of the De Savonniéres, they handed over the ex-communicated monk to the tender mercies of the church authorities.

As to Berry, he was left to his fate. His guilt became manifest as soon as people chose to see it. The shirt and the cravat had really belonged to him. The napkin twisted into a cap fitted his head exactly. The knife had been seen in his hands, and the victim's watch was found on his person. It was impossible to entertain a doubt. But had Lebrun been Berry's accomplice? The latter unable to deny participating in the murder, endeavored, nevertheless, to accuse the valet de chambre of having suggested it; but on the day of his execution he acknowledged the truth, and relieved his conscience of that calumny. In the presence of Reporter Le Nain and Counsellor Gilbert he made a circumstantial statement, from which it appears that he, Gerlat, alias Berry, was the sole perpetrator of the murder and the theft.

"I arrived in Paris," he said, "on Wednesday, the 23d of November 1689, and put up at the sign of the Golden Waggon. My plans were laid. I was perfectly acquainted with the disposition and the habits of the Mazel establishment. The following Friday was the day I selected for the execution of my design. At dusk, I quickly slipped in the great door, which was left open; there was nobody in the court. I then mounted noiselessly into the little attic which you reach by passing through the corn-loft. I remained there until Sunday, watching my opportunity, and living on some potatoes and a little bread which I had brought with me.

"On Sunday morning, I was on the alert. At the first stroke of eleven I began my preparations; I well knew that at that hour Madame Mazel usually went to mass. I came down slowly from the attic, using every precaution. Madame's chamber was wide open, and nobody in it. From the dust, I judged that the maids had only just finished putting it to rights. Without loss of time, I tried to creep under the bed, but found it impossible to do so with my coat on. Fearing a supprise, I rapidly returned to the attic, where I took off my coat and under-waistboat, and came down again to the chamber in my shirt-sleeves. It was still unoccupied.

"I slipped under the bed, and soon heard my former mistress come back from church. She fidgeted about grumbling, scolded, and made a fuss. I kept quiet and snug, holding my breath.

"She went to vespers. When I heard the carriage roll out at the great gate, I came from under the bed, where I was ill at ease. My hat incommoded me, so I left it there and took a napkin from behind the looking-glass, and tied it up so as to form a cap. I also took advantage of the opportunity to tie up the bell ropes to the curtain-rods.

"Evening was coming on; all was ready. I warmed myself and enjoyed a short dose in Madame's arm-chair, until I heard the carriage roll into the court. I then got under the bed again, and remained there until midnight.

"Madame Mazel had been in bed an hour; I expected to find her fast asleep, but her eyes were wide open. She stared at me. 'I want money!' I said. She tried to sit up in the bed. 'Don't call out Madame,' I said to her softly. 'If you call out, I will kill you!' She put out her arm, but could not reach the bell ropes. She began screaming 'Help! Help!' At that, seeing that her fright prevented her listening to reason, I drew my knife and gave her several stabs. She made a slight attempt to defend herself; but soon, her strength failing, she sank down in the bed with her face on the counterpane. I then gave her a great many cuts, until she ceased to stir. If she had not screamed, I should not have killed her.

"That done, I lighted a candle and took from the bedside the key of the closet. In the closet I found the keys of the strong box, which I opened without any difficulty. I took all the gold there was in a purse; it might amount to five or six thousands francs. I put that sum into a linen bag which I took out of the strong box, and in which there was a little gold. I then closed the strong box, and put the keys in their place in the closet, where I found a watch which tempted me.

"I put the key of the closet close to the bed in its usual place; I threw my knife into the fire. As to my cravat, and the napkin which I made into a cap, I cannot tell how I lost them. I took my hat from under the bed and left the chamber, the key of which I found on a seat close to the door. I made use of it to shut the door, fearing if I pulled the door without the key, to make too much noise. The door of the ante-chamber was shut; I opened it and left it open.

"I then returned to the little attic; it was bright moonlight. I saw that my hands were all red, and I washed them. I took off my shirt, and left it under the straw. I do not know whether I also left my cravat or collar there. I put on my under-waistcoat and coat without any shirt, and went down stairs. It might then be an hour after midnight. I went to the street door and felt if it was bolted; finding it unbolted, I opened the wicket door and went out, leaving the door open.

"In case of the bolts being closed, I had brought a rope ladder, by which I meant to descend from one of the first floor windows. If I could not do that, I should have followed the rain-gutter of the great attic until I found an entrance into some neighboring house. Once out of doors, I threw the key of the chamber into a cellar in the rue de Macon, and returned to the Golden Waggon. A half asleep maid-servant let me in, and I then went to bed."

On concluding this general confession, Berry added: "What I have just stated is as true as God is in Heaven and that I hold this crucifix in my hands." He said nothing about family complicities or promptings, which were supposed to be at the bottom of the affair; at the torture. The fearful sufferings of the rack were unable to extort from the unhappy man the confession of a crime which he had not committed.

Lebrun's innocence being completely proved, the rehabilitation of his memory, the restitution of the widow's property, and the payment of his legacy, ought not to have met with the slightest difficulty; nevertheless, by a monstrous abuse of power, seven whole months passed away without the widow's being able to attain redress. By tormenting and intimidating the unhappy woman, they tried to frighten her into stopping the action for damages which she brought against M. de Savonnieres. The civil court had condemned Lebrun to the cruel torture which was the cause of his death; it was at least bound to make the widow the only possible reparation—an indemnity. M. de Savonniéres was mean enough not to understand that obligation. He resisted the claim for damages.

On the 30th of March, 1694, a decree of the parliament reinstated Lebrun's memory, and, in spite of Counsellor de Savonnieres' resistance, confirmed the legacy of six thousand francs. But the De Savonnieres carried every other point. They were simply sentenced to pay the costs and the interest on the sum bequeathed from the 27th of November, 1689. The torture and death of his honest servant, the ruin of his family, counted for nothing. M. de Savonnieres was a magistrate, influential, rich, held in high consideration; the valet's might deem herself fortunate in being able to obtain even partial justice. This is one of the cases which, constantly accumulating in number and never decreasing in iniquity, tended to bring about the terrible social revolt known as the First French Revolution.

LITERARY GLEANINGS.

A WORD FOR HUGO'S JEAN VALJEAN.

A LIVELY writer in the London Review makes a spirited defence of a certain section of those novelists who are ordinarily classed as "sensational," declaring that there seems at present to be a tendency among the critics to apply this term to all authors who choose subjects more sublime on which to expatiate, than "a company of spinters drinking tea round a table." The essayist then takes the ground that writers of great original genius prefer vitalizing their canvas with scenes that are "sublime, or grotesque, or monstrous, or amazing," though not in reality improbable; that they love to exhibit the extremes of life, as they exist, though as they do not commonly exist, and as few have force or imagination enough to portray them. Taking the character of Jean Valjean, in "Les Miserables," as an example, the writer says:

Let us take the character of Jean Valjean, in "Les Misérables," as an example. Here is a being whose disposition is revealed to us by a hundred striking circumstances, ninety-nine of which your hater of "sensationalism" would strike out. This Jean Valjean enters the palace of the Bishop Bienvenu, and robs the man who protects him; he steals a two-franc piece from the little Savoyard Gervais; he suffers himself to be buried alive; he bears the fainting form of Marius through the horrible sewers of Paris; he escapes by a miracle from the conspiracy of Thenaudier; he baffles the pursuit of Javert by the most extraordinary means; in short, he does nothing that could not be called "sensational." But is all this "sensational?" Is it not rather the description of a reformed convict beset by innumerable difficulties, each one of which serves to develope his character infinitely better than the most elaborate description of his "hidden soul" could do. Victor Hugo assumes or invents a province in art which, however much it may be despised, demands a genius to work it, fully equal, if not superior, to that which we are more habitually given to admire. Nor is the effect produced by mere graphic force; with it is combined a power of analysis which, employed alone, would likewise produce a masterpiece—but a masterpiece less noble, less striking, less impressive, from the absence of that accumulative power which is exacted by the other. It would be a sunbeam dissected in a prison; it would not be the glow of a summer sun.

THE SCIENTIFIC CHURCH.

The New York Independent speaks of the inauguration of the "new religion" as follows:

It is generally known that Auguste Compte, the founder of the so-called "Positively Philosophy"—the peculiarity of which is that it discards all knowledge except that which is derived from observation and can be verified by experience—made his system culminate in a form or religion as systematic and elaborate as the church of Rome. The reputed atheist devised an order of worship. The believer in science drew up a rule of faith. His "Catechism of Positive Religion," in its English dress, is a volume of over four hundred pages. It gives a full exposition of the author's theory of religion; the principles and modes of public and private worship; the doctrine of the universe, organic and inorganic; of man as a personal, social, and moral being; of the regime, or mode of life, individual, domestic, human. The new religion had its hierarchies, its priests and ministers, its pomps and ceremonies, its feast days and fast-days, its litanies and forms of prayer. Its calendar rivaled that of the Catholics. Each month of the year was consecrated to some great heroic name: the first to Moses, the last to Richat; Homer, Aristotle, Archimedes, Cæsar, St. Paul, Charlemagne, Dante, Gutemberg, Shakspeare, Descartes, Frederick II. coming in between; and each day of the week, all through the year, was associated with some person eminent in one or another of the several departments glorified. Among these names we find nearly every name of mark, except that of Jesus. Moses represents Theocracy; St. Paul, Catholicism. Under Moses come Norma, Boodha, Confucius, Mohammed; under St. Paul come Augustine, Hildebrand, St. Bernard, Bossuet—all leaders of prominent religious movements. The Christ is omitted, probably because he personally organized neither church nor state. The new system imitated Catholicsm in the good habit of providing a place and mission for different orders of people, and especially for women. It classified various classes of talent and temperament. It was in a word, an exhaustive scheme of work and worship. It has been the fashion among the disciples of M. Compte to speak slightly of this portion of his speculations. Some have described it as a chimera, born of an over-taxed brain or over-excited sensibilities; some have suspected it of being a remnant of superstition; some have ascribed its origin to motives of social prudence or civil policy; some have declared that it owed its existence to the author's adoration for Madame Clotilde de Vaux, "whose angelic influence he felt for one year only." But, however the conception might have been accounted for, and whatever importance it was presumed to have had in the originator's mind, the great body of his followers agreed in letting it alone and suffering it to pass into oblivion. Recently some of M. Compte's English disciples have taken up the idea, vindicating it as a legitimate feature of the Positive Philosophy, and even contending that it is the consummate flower of the system. Mr. J. H. Bridges, one of their foremost men, speaks of the "religion" as "the constructive effort for which Compte's whole previous life had been the conscious and consistent preparation." John Stuart Mill—not an avowed adherent of the school, but an appreciative and well-wishing thinker—has sustained the religious pretensions of Positivism, has admitted that the inauguration of the religion of humanity was its direct aim, and has written eloquent words about the beauty and grandeur of the conception. But it has been reserved for our day to see this new religion instituted and established. Late advices from London assure us that it has been done at last. Mr. Richard Congreve the translator of the "Catechism," an earnest adherent and brilliant writer, is the apostle and inaugurator of the enterprise. He has commenced preaching, collected a congregation, and now proposes, in due course of time to found a church, erect an edifice, and conduct regular services in the belief and spirit of the Gospel of Science. George Serves, author of the Biographical History of Philosophy and of many other works, Marian Evans, authoress of the celebrated "George Eliot" novels, Lord Amberley, Lord Houghton, with other men and women of social or literary consequence, are more or less distinctly committed to the experiment. The society will not probably be large, but it will be select and remarkable.

The writer then proceeds, with greater liberality of sentiment than could have been reasonably expected from an "evangelical" quarter, to urge that the movement ought not to be regarded with contempt or derision; that it has an earnest and even a hopeful side, inasmuch as it bears witness to the undying vigor of the religious sentiment, and to the need of association, and of some kind of worship for the sustenance of the religious nature. He concludes thus:

These hard-headed, doubting, "unbelieving" scientists confess to feeling the impulse to worship, even if they have no God; and unite in confessing the power of spiritual ideas, while experiences is their only accredited teacher. The facts they must include in their range of thought are facts of the moral order, and the laws that co-ordinate them must belong to the sentimental world. They are beginning to look up from the ground, to come out of the graveyard, to experience resurrection from the flesh. This is something. It is a good deal for people of their intellectual mould. They have got up into the region of the human; they have discovered that humanity is endowed with something more than five senses. The world of sympathy and imagination is revealed to them; they bow down before great souls, and feel their kindred with little ones. We ought to be glad if people have, or wish to have, any religion at all. If people who have been regarded as the mortal foes of all religion are moved to inaugurate one in the interest of their rational human nature, we ought to be particularly thankful. If these scientific churchmen will not cultivate the evangelical style of piety, they may cultivate their moral sentiments. If they will do little for the conversion of souls, they may do a good deal for the improvement of man's social condition. The Christian Church will, of course, do all it can to convince them of their errors and bring them into its fold. We hope it will not do all it can to bring them into scorn and crush them. They will do what they can to extend the influence of their organization. If by so doing they will rescue some from materialism and sensualism, we wish them well. May the Church of Science be better than the Scientific World.

DICKENS' SECOND VISIT TO THE UNITED STATES.

At the time of Mr. Dickens' first visit to this country he was a comparatively young man, though already a famous one. "He could not," says the London Daily Telegraph, "do a wiser and a more graceful thing than to revisit the most remarkable country in the world, while his celebrity is shining with noonday radiance, but when in age he has come, not to the sere and yellow leaf, but to a ruddy and mellow autumn. At any rate, it is a good thing; it is due both to the Great Republic and to the illustrious man of letters, who, a quarter of a century since, visited her shores and criticised her manners, that his piercing eyes should look twice on the most curious panorama the world can show. Non bis in idem is a motto susceptible of a variety of interpretations. He would be a fool indeed to do a foolish thing twice. But second thoughts are sometimes best; we often gain a great deal by re-examination; and every author must rejoice at the opportunity afforded him of revising his proofs when a second edition of an important work is to be published after a lapse of five-and-twenty years. We are aware that there exists a chronic prejudice against retracing our footsteps, nor is the process always devoid of difficulty. The descent of Avernus is facile: it is in the revocation of its degrees that the hitch lies. Scotchmen are said—quite unjustly we believe—to be mortally averse from 'going back again.' Even the hospitable landlord of the hotel who insisted that Martin Chuzzlewit should hold a levee before he proceeded to his swamp farm out West, was highly indignant when the emigrant came back alive from the flourishing city of Eden. Second visits often fail to excite the enthusiasm which the first has awakened. The best friends of Garibaldi might persuade him not to undertake another trip to London. Cortes went back in old age to Mexico, to find himself no longer hailed as 'El Conquistador,' but denounced as the oppressive and exacting Marquis del Valle; and it is not beyond the bounds of probability to assume that many Philadelphians resented the repeated visits of William Penn, and grew at last to regard the kind old gentleman as a bore. This rule applies most strictly to tourists, and to no country in the world is it so suitable as to North America."

Nevertheless, the London paper anticipates a cordial welcome for Mr. Dickens on the occasion of his second visit, as the "most famous living writer of the English tongue," and the "brightest and most genial humorist extant." The anticipation does not seem to us unreasonable. His literary popularity is quite as great among us, as in his own country, and he has probably had more readers and admirers in the United States than in England.

The Daily Telegraph thus states some of the reasons for believing that the Americans of our day are not so boorish or uncivilized a race as to withhold from the great novelist a cordial welcome because he was not bribed by our dinners and our champagne into "cracking us up:"

A whole generation has passed away since he wrote "American Notes," and to younger Americans satire in Martin Chuzzlewit must have lost half its force and direction, for a great proportion of the oddities and evils at which he laughed have passed away. Eden is now, indeed, a flourishing city, with a real theatre, a tangible bank, a palpable athenæum. Obscure tourists like Martin are no longer asked to hold levees, and when Mr. Thackeray went to America, although he was sufficiently lionized, no irrepressible Yankee youths rushed up into his bedroom, and thrusting their heads out of the window, cried, "He's here: bring all your brothers." Mr. Dickens need not be under the slightest apprehension of undergoing anything like discourtesy among the people he purposes to visit. In some isolated localities a few roughs, ere he commences his readings may cry out "Chuzzlewit," or "Pogram oration," or "Hominy," or "Jefferson Brick;" and in New York a few American Irishmen may accuse him in some of the lowest newspapers published, of libeling the country to which they do not belong, the people to whom they are aliens, and the institutions of which they are unworthy. But by the great mass of the American people Charles Dickens will, we venture to predict, receive a welcome worthy both of himself and his entertainers. There is no community in the world more placable, more forgiving; and, in the long run, what is it that they have to forgive Charles Dickens? He laughed good-humoredly at some of their eccentricities. He drew attention to some holes in their manners, which they have subsequently mended. The New Yorkers have no reason to be angry with him; for did he not admit that the ladies of New York were "exceedingly beautiful," and declare a sherry cobbler to be the most refreshing stimulant in creation? He did not lampoon the prairies, or take away the character of Niagara. He paid the very highest compliments—compliments not higher than were deserved—to the excellence of the charitable institutions, the prisons and the penetentiaries. And, finally, in Boston—Boston, the most refined and the most intolerant of all American cities—Charles Dickens should be warmly welcomed; for he dared to be an abolitionist in the days when slavery seemed an unconquerable and an ineradicable power.

INSURANCE.

There is a smart fight raging just now between the insurance companies—that is, between some twelve or fourteen companies on the one side, and the Builders' Insurance company on the other.. The quarrel is a very pretty one, as it stands, and we don't care to meddle much with it. Yet we confess to a human sympathy which always leans to the weaker side, and in this instance we feel somewhat as if a dozen great big dogs were trying to eat up one little one.

It seems, from all the facts put before the public, that up to about twelve months ago the dozen companies that then existed in our city went on lovingly together—had everything pretty much their own way. The goose hung high, and so hung insurance rates; big dividends were realized, and big insurance castles were built, and the directors and officers swelled out into larger than usual proportions. This was the happy condition of things when Mr. Mooney began his Builders' Insurance Company, based, as he tells us, on the association and capital of a bundle of mechanics. This capital at first was small, but it grew with its growth, and strengthened with its strength. There was nothing remarkable in this, and it appeared that the Builders' became very popular, the people insured with them, their name became a household word, and the insignia of their association was to be seen over near every second or third house in the city. Then it became apparent to the twelve in combination that the "Builders'" was an "illegitimate," "dangerous" concern, and must be put down. It was charged against the Builders' that it brought down the prices; that it insured poor mens' houses; that it paid its losses promptly; and it did more business than its capital justified: and, to clap the climax, that the many incendiary fires which of late have happened in this city, were caused by the "prompt payment," "no lawsuit" policy of the Builders'.

Now, this was not to be endured, and as champions for the "poor, deluded public," the war began. Writers were employed, inuendoes thrown out, and for a while our daily papers teemed with awful things against the "little dog," now growing quite respectable in size, and even the city authorities were called upon to prosecute him for his reckless doings.

We confess we do not see the justness of these conclusions. Incendiary fires would have happened if the Builders' Insurance Company had never gone into existence, and to pay losses promptly to incendiaries would hurt none more than the Builders', who would have to pay their losses. In short, it needs a greater faith than ours to believe Mr. Mooney, who has thus far proved himself an able and successful manager of the Builders', to be guilty of such suicidal conduct. But, while we reject this specification in total, we believe that some of the charges are true.

It is true that the Builders' Insurance Company is very popular. It is true that it pays its losses very promptly, and without vexatious lawsuits. It is true that it has some eight thousand houses already insured in this city. It is true that Mr. Mooney, its President, has made a name for business ability and energy only equaled by his public spirit and benevolence; and it is true that he has the confidence of the public and the blessings of the poor. We wish well to all our Insurance companies, and we feel sure that in a contest the Builders' will not come out "second best."—Spectator.

The London Review says in respect to Mark Twain's "Jumping Frog:" "We have been so heartily amused by Mr. Twain and his frog that we sincerely wish his book may be purchased by the typical gentlemen to whom he dedicates it and by others. It is not often that we meet a genuine collection of harmless drollery and mirth, unforced, natural, and exhilarating like 'The Jumping Frog.'"

WENT TO SEA IN A BOWL.

THE mania for crossing the Atlantic in little boats has received a sharp and sad rebuke in an incident such as might with certainty have been predicted if the foolish precedent of the "Red, White, and Blue" found followers. A vessel from Antigna recently entered the Thames, bearing to the port of London a seaman, one Armstrong, who had hoped to reach it in his own little ship, under circumstances as jovial as those in which he actually arrived were mournful. He hailed from Baltimore, and had sought to cross the ocean to this country in a boat of only 2½ tons burden. The "John T. Ford," as the boat was named, was built on the whale-boat model, not like the "Red, White, and Blue," on the principle of a life-boat. She was only nineteen feet long, and had only 2½ feet depth of hold. Well might the people of Baltimore take a lively interest in the adventures of such a baby craft. But it would have been kinder to restrain her owners from the foolhardy adventure upon which they were bent. No Infant Hercules was ever devised by boat builder that could safely buffet with Neptune as this little boat was pledged to do, when with a little suit of friendly cockboats, she put out from Halifax on the voyage she was never to accomplish. The adventurers were duly warned, They had to put back to escape contrary winds. Their craft could not even rest at anchor at Devil's Island, and but for the desperate resolution of the men who were committed to her fortunes it must have been evident to them that a little cockle-shell, that had to get better shelter than her anchorage afforded her in the Eastern passage of Halifax, was not made to weather the violence of the storm riven Atlantic. At last the temporary difficulties were removed, and the "John T. Ford" started on her way with four hands aboard.

They had hardly got clear of the land when rough weather began to try their mettle and the strength of their boat. It labored heavily in the sea. It shipped water freely, the men could keep nothing dry. Two of them had always to be on deck, for only two could go below, and they could only lie in a very cramped position. But they were destined to more startling discomforts. On the 29th June, when they had been seven days at sea, the boat actually capsized. She must have been a trim one, for she righted herself immediately. But the stores and clothes were wetted. Two or three days after the crew sighted a ship bound for Cork, and already were so hard pressed they begged a little bread. But bread could not be spared, and with a bottle of rum and some tobacco these poor rash roysterers of the ocean had to be content. Three days latert here was another capsize. Again the boat righted herself, but this time all their oil and nearly all their water was lost. Already too, the men began to suffer with cramp and pains in the legs. They appear to have been fortunate in falling in with vessels, and three days after the last-named calamity they obtained a little bread, oil and tobacco, from a ship bound for Qubec. But soon afterwards their oil was exhausted; their compass was lightless; warm food could not be had. To alleviate this inconvenient condition of things, they cut up for firewood the boards by which the ballast was secured, and so rubbed along till another stroke of good fortune brought them within hail of a ship which could furnish them with bread and candles. One would have supposed these reckless wanderers would have made shift to seek shelter on board some of the friendly ships they spoke with; but it must be presumed that determination or pride, or both, made them refrain. At all events, on they went upon their course.

And now the weather became more threatening. The boat was in a cross sea. It was the 19th of August. They had been at sea ever since the 22d of June. They were soon to be exposed to its most merciless violence without even the poor protection they had hitherto enjoyed. They reckoned they were about thirty miles from Cape Clear when the final catastrophe happened. How marvelous to have accomplished so much. How awfuf to be foiled so near the end of their wild and venturesome quest of the Old World. At half past ten o'clock at night the boat was again capsized by a heavy sea. The ballast boards had been burnt, and she could not right herself. All hands were plunged in the rough and angry sea. Over and over went the boat, until at last she was accidentally ballasted, by the boy of the party getting entangled between the rigging and the mast. Then the three others of the crew got upon her. Two were now on the mast and two were on the side of the keel. And this horrible situation was comparative safety. The best the poor wretches could hope for was to continue thus. The worst that could befall them happened often, though not irretrievably, for they were frequently washed off into the sea by the heavy waves. At length, when they had clung to their prostrated bark for more than twelve honrs, the bright light of noon brought with it a sight as joyful as its own radiance, but, unhappily, not less delnsive. A brig bore down upon them, but for some unexplained reason hoisted Dutch colors, and stood away Was it with imprecations or with prayers that this last agonizing reverse was received? That we know not, but the fierceness of despair passed presently away, and an hour after the brig had vanished the mate asked the man Armstrong, who reached London on Sunday, to pray for him. What a scene! Two men, apparently doomed, one of whom was soon to be engulfed, praying together on the slippery keel of a miserable boat, and dashed almost every moment into the yawning sea, which He they prayed to holds mysteriously in the hollow of His hand.

The sad episode was soon to terminate. The poor praying man's ears began to swell, his eyes started madly forward. He shook hands with his companions. He kissed a likeness of his wife. Then he seemed to lose all self-control. His reason was doubtless departing; he made a bite at the captain's thigh. "For God's sake, John" cried the man, "don't bite me," and then the poor mate fell back into the sea and sank forever. The day wore on, and in the evening at seven o'clock the boy asked Armstrong to secure him to the boat. But securing was impossible in such circumstances. The sea made light of the ligature—his belt— which was the boy's only hope. He was washed away, and the survivors saw him no more. Their turn was soon to come. The captain and Armstrong were carried off together. The captain cried out "God help my poor wife and family!" and Armstrong was left alone. He must have been a strong and resolute man, for again and again was he swept off the boat, and the difficulty of regaining it went on increasing. He appears to have stayed on the boat altogether four days. But at last the Aerolite, of Liverpool, hove in sight, and Armstrong says he made a signal with a piece of ragged canvass attached to an oar. The Aerolite bore down and rescued him from his frightful position. He was, of course, exhausted, and became nearly insensible. He was much bruised by frequent collisions with the boat. He had no means of retaining moisture in his throat except to chew an old tobacco-pouch. Such was the extremest pass of this most terrible adventure to him who suffered least by it. Armstrong will go back to America a graver and wiser, as well as a grateful man, to bear to the poor creatures whom this foolish prank has robbed of their natural protectors the sad reminiscences of last hours, such as it is to he hoped will never be passed again for so light a cause.—London Morning Star.

SHERIDAN'S RIDE.

SHERIDAN'S conduct at the battle of Winchester is thus described in Mr. Whitelaw Reed's forthcoming biography of the General, to be published by Messrs. Moore, Willstach & Baldwin:

General Sheridan had arrived at Winchester the night before, on his way back from the consultation at Washington, to which he had been ordered. In the morning artillery firing was heard, but it was attributed to an intended reconnoissance, and nothing was thought of it. After an early breakfast, Sheridan mounted and trotted quietly through Winchester, southward. A mile from the town the first fugitive from the lost field was encountered. He instantly gave orders to park the retreating train; directed the greater part of his escort to follow as best they could; then, with only twenty cavalrymen accompanying him, he struck ont in a swinging gallop for the scene of danger. As he dashed up the pike the crowds of stragglers grew thicker. He reproached none; only swinging his cap with a cheery smile for all, he shouted: "Face the other way, boys; face the other way. We are to lick them out of their boots." Less classic, doubtless, than Napoleon's "My children, we will camp on the battle-field, as usnal;" but the wounded raised their hoarse voices to cheer as he passed, and the masses of the fugitives turned and followed him to the front. As he rode into the forming lines, the men quickened their pace back to the ranks, and everywhere glad cheers went up. "Boys, this never should have happened if I had been here," he exclaimed to one and another regiment, "I tell you it never should have happened. And now we are going to get a twist on them; we'll get the tightest twist on them yet that ever you saw. We'll have all those camps and cannon back again!" Thus he rode along the lines, rectified the formation, cheered and animated the soldiers. Presently there grew np across that pike as compact a body of infantry and cavalry as that which a month before had sent the enemy "whirling through Winchester." His men had full faith in "the twist" he was "going to get" on tho victorious foe. His presence was inspiriation; his commands were victory.

While the line was thus re-established, he was in momentary expectation of attack. Wright's Sixth Corps was some distance in the rear. One staff officer after another was sent after it. Finally Sheridan himself dashed down to hurry it up; then back to watch it going into position. As he thns stood, looking off from the left, he saw the enemy's columns once more moving up. Hurried warning was sent to the Nineteenth Corps, on which it was evident the attack would fall. By this time it was after three o'clock.

The Nineteenth Corps, no longer taken by surprise, repulsed the enemy's onset. "Thank God for that," said Sheridan gaily. "Now tell Gen. Emery if they attack him again, to go after them, and to follow them up. We'll get the tightest twist on them pretty soon they ever saw." The men heard and believed him; the demoralization of the defeat was gone. But he still waited. Word had been sent in from the cavalry, of danger from a heavy body moving on his flank. He doubted it, and at last determined to run the risk. At four o'clock the orders went out: "The whole line will advance. The Nineteenth Corps will move in connection with the Sixth. The right of the Nineteenth will swing towards the left."

The enemy lay behind stone fences, and where these failed, breastworks of rails eked out his line. For a little he held his position firmly. His left overlapped Sheridan's right, and seeing his advantage, he bent it down to renew the attack in flank. At this moment Sheridan ordered a charge of Gen. McWilliams' brigade against the angle thus caused in the rebel line. It forced its way through, and the rebel flanking party was cut off. Custer's cavalry was sent swooping down upon it—it broke, and fled or surrendered, according to the agility of the individuals. Simultaneously the whole line charged along the front; the rebel line was crowded back to the creek; the difficulties of the crossing embarrassed it, and as the victorious ranks swept up it broke in utter confusion.

Custer charged down in the fast gathering darkness on the west of the pike; Deven to the east of it; and on either flank of the fleeing rout they flung themselves. Nearly all the rebel transportation was captured, the camps and artillery were regained; up to Fisher's Hill the road was jammed with artillery, caissons and ambulances; prisoners came streaming back faster than the Provost Marshal could provide for them. It was the end of Early's army; the end of campaigning in the beautiful Valley of the Shenandoah.

The effect upon the Government and tho country was electric. The first rumors of disaster were painful and widespread. On the heels of these came Sheridan's dispatch, announcing the reverse and its retrieval, and giving a faint hint of the splendid prizes—artillery for an army, transportation, ammunition, small arms in a profusion that could scarcely be estimated. General Grant telegraphed from his position before Richmond: "I had a salute of a hundred guns from each of the armies here fired in honor of Sheridan's last victory. Turning what bids fair to he disaster into a glorious victory, stamps Sheridan, what I always thought him, ono of the ablest of generals." The Secretary of War endorsed and published this to the world. The resignation of General McClellan soon made a vacant major-generalship in the regular army, and to the highest prize in his profession Sheridan was promoted.

It was a giddy height to which our modest little, red-faced captain, who thought he might yet be a major, has risen; but his head was not turned. He did not even give vent to his exultation in congratulations to his army. "Every one realized our success"—so he wrote soon after in his official report—"congratulatory orders were unnecessary, and every officer and man was made to understand that when a victory was gained it was not more their duty nor less than their country expected of her gallant sons." But the country could at least make its own congratulations. The name of Cavalry Sheridan was in all mouths. His exploits became the favorite theme of speakers, the inspiration of poets, the arguments against all who held to the Chicago declaration that the war was a failure. Sherman had not yet fastened the gaze of the nation by his grander operations; Grant had still to give Richmond as proof of his title to the power with which he was vested; and for the time Sheridan was the most popular of our generals."

NEW STYLES OF BRIDAL SILKS.—We must give a little advice to those about to marry, and we have certain information that ere the Christmas and New Year's holidays have come and passed away, over two score of the fashionable young ladies of this city will enter the holy estate of matrimony, and the same number of fashionable wedding dresses will, of course, be required. We feel bound to tell these that Meagher, Taaffe & Co., No. 9 Montgomery street, have received the new style of bridal silks, embroidered with gold and silver. The fact that a young lady was married in any other than the very latest style of wedding dress might, perchance, embitter the whole period of her wedded life with painful remembrances. Therefore, we state this fact The festive season is approaching, and we must remind those who intend to participate in balls and parties, that the stock of evening silks on view at Meagher, Taaffe & Co. is immense, and its gorgeousness and variety dazzle and bewilder the beholder.

NEW CRACKER BAKERY.—Brignardello, Macchiavello & Company, the manufacturers of the famous California maccaroni, vermicelli, etc., have leased the store adjoining their premises, number 706 Sansome street, with the intention of converting the same into a manufactory of ship bread and various descriptions of family crackers. The building has been supplied with a new floor and is undergoing the necessary changes for that purpose, and two immense cracker ovens are being constructed in the rear of it.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Friends, old patients, and those who are suffering from illness, will find Dr. Bourne at his old location. As science, fixed principles, and knowledge give permanency, while being always on the square with the sick, insures him their confidence and approbation. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

IDAHO.—Old patients and friends of Idaho, will find Dr. Bourne, as usual, at No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. Science, knowledge, and fixed principles enable Dr. Bourne to be permanent in location, and on the square in his intercourse with the sick. *

H. M. LOCKWOOD AND COMPANY.—The old pioneer of Boys Clothing, will withdraw from San Francisco trade entirely after January, 1868. All of those in want of clothing we advise to read the list of prices on the last page of to-day's paper, before purchasing. They mean business.

AUTUMN.

I.—MORNING.

The wasp feeds in the hollow peach;
The thistle-down is blowing, blowing;
The fern is dead; and the morning red
In the eastern cloud is glowing.
The holly oak-staff is broken in two,
And the weed-fires are all flaring;
Time is shaking the sluggish rands,
And the year, the year is wearing.

II.—EVENING.

The clouds bank up in sullen heaps,
And the mist is drifting, drifting;
In slanting lines, through the waving pines,
The peevish rain is sifting.
In the West, upon a golden shore,
Night's blackest waves are breaking;
And in the rain and wind, the leaves
With palsied fear are shaking.

DENNIS THOMPSON'S ESCAPE.

BY JAMES FRANKLIN FITTS.

THE hero of the remarkable udventures which I am about to detail is a native of Chenango County, New York, by name Dennis Thompson. In August, 1862, he entered the army as First Sergeant of Company I, One Hundred and Fourteenth New York Volunteers, In October, 1864, with which time we have now to deal, he hnd been made lieutenant, after two years of good service in and out of his regiment. On the memorable day of Cedar Creek we find him in command of a subdivision of the ambulance traiu of the Nineteenth Army Corps, apparently protected, by virtue of his duty, from all the hazards of action; but, as the event proved, destined to glean his full share of stern experience from the disasters and triumphs of that bloody field. He disappeared in the first shock of the morning, swept mysteriously away in the raging tempest of surprise and slaughter that broke upon our camps before the dawn. He returned iu one week from that day, with as strange and exciting a tale of captivity and escape as I have ever chanced to hear. I will relate it as he told it to me the night after his return, sitting by a camp fire which burned upon the spot where the battle had raged the hottest, and within a stone's throw of hundreds of graves of our dead comrades, sleeping where they fell. That the narrative is truthful in every word, I, knowing the man, can fearlessly avow.

The stone mansion just over the slope there was Sheridan's headquarters before the fight. I suppose you know, also, that those stumps by the turnpike, less than a mile north of us, and just south of Middleton, mark the place where Belle Grove stood before the axes of our men made fuel of it.

On the morning of the 19th our ambnlance train was parked there, well to the rear, as you see, and perfectly safe, for all that could be conjectured as likely to happen to an army. I was sound asleep, like everybody around me, when the firing of Kershaw's advance broke out on the left, beyond Middleton, and was instantly awakened by it. I was up and dressed in a minnte, and as the firing grew nearer nnd heavier, and several of the fugitives from Cook's Corps had already rushed by us, telling us the astounding story that Early's whole army was crushing our left, I was prepared for the captain's order to hitch up and move to the rear with all rapidity.

Our retreat was hurried—we were hardly pressed for time—and many of our teams aud vehicles were left in the ditches which crossed the fields, overturned and wrecked, with the horses kicking and struggling in the harness. We could only leave them to their fate; so we pressed on for about a mile, and at last halted beyond Middleton with only a fragment of our long train safe, to await the movements of the armies.

The fighting was at this time all west of the pike; the sun was up, and we could see the broken lines of our friends giving way incessantly from the hills back to the woods, and the Rebel artillery, planted very near where we are sitting now, throwing round shot after them, while great clouds of musket and cannon smoke drifted from the fields upwards, and hid much of the struggle from us. But it was easy to see that a terrible disaster threatened our army; the enemy was pressing it steadily back, and sorely harassing its left, so that we seemed to be cut off entirely from our corps.

The captain was uncertain as to which line of retreat offered the best chauce of safety; and as he proposed to wait a a few minutes, until the light had assumed such a definite aspect as to leave him no doubt, I obtained leave to reconnoitre our old camp, thinking that, without assuming any great hazard, I might possibly aid some of our men left wounded upon the ground. I rode slowly back over the fields, past the village, and went almost as far as our late camping ground, without seeing a soldier of either army. The Rebels had passed this place half an hour before, sweeping everything before them. I well knew that over here on these ridges there must have been scores of our boys lying wounded and helpless, but confident that the efforts to succor them would bring them no assistance, and would hurry me into captivity, I turned my horse and rode sadly back. There was a huddle of disabled teams near the road, their drivers standing helplessly by them, and, with the impulse to bring them away, if possible, I turned my horses head towards them. Just then a shrill voice shouted near by:

"Halt, there, Yank! halt! surrender!"

I halted, of course, and looked about me; and was not long in discovering the muzzle of a rifle projecting from a stone wall, and covering me with a deliberate aim. A shiver ran over me; I was entrapped by one of the Rebel rear-guard. The fellow must have seen me riding past, and so lay in ambush for my return.

He ordered me to dismount, which I did, and after standing some moments, holding my horse by the reins, three more of the Rebels discovered me as they crossed the fields from the village, and came to the assistance of their comrade. I was ordered to remount, and conducted by my captors, together with three or four of our stragglers picked up on the way, to the general rendezvous of prisoners, near the bridge which crosses Cedar Creek. Here were collected some fifteen hundred of our officers and soldiers—the captures of the morning—several of our regiment among them, and all looking doleful enough at the prospect. It was now about ten o'clock; and from that time until near sunset we remained here, surrounded by a strong guard.

For a time, after I was brought in, the smoke and noise of the battle continued, and the sound of the musketry grew fainter in the distance, as our army was driven further from the field. Then there was a lull, and for some hours we heard nothing more, exceptig the reports brought by the guards coming back from time to time with their prisoners. They all told the same story—the Union army was driven in panic through Winchester: Sheridan would never be heard of again in the Shenandoah; and we listened with heavy hearts to the exultation which prevailed around us.

But towards sunset there came a change—far north, beyond Middletown, the firing broke out again, fast and furious, and in half an hour the Rebel stragglers had reached us with the report of the turning of the tide of the morning's success. The noise of the fight drew nearer and nearer, and when there could no longer be any doubt that Early's whole army was in full retreat, the commander of the guard ordered the prisoners to fall into column, and started us to the rear.

"Shoot every man who attempts to escape!" was his order, repeated again and again to the guards on both flanks of that throng of disconsolate captives.

We were glad indeed to know that our friends had prevailed at last in the battle; but the shadows of the Libbey and Andersonville chilled all rejoicing in our hearts, and we hurried along wearily towards the south, continually urged and menaced by the guards.

It was about dusk when we passed through Strasburg, and by the time we reached Fisher's Hill, three miles further, it was almost dark. There's a little stream here called Tom's Brook, and here we were turned out of the road to allow the retreating trains to pass. We were given some fragments of hard bread, and allowed to drink from the brook. The flying cavalry of the Rebls passed us continually, and the trains went rapidly by, the drivers whipping the horses into a gallop. There was much confusion, angry talk, and profanity, and the cavalry were soundly cursing the Yankees.

Here a little incident happened which I noticed and remembered, thinking it might help me by-and-by.

One of the cavalrymen sung out to another, "What command do you belong to?"

"Smith's Brigade, Harden's Division, Stonewall Jackson's Corps."

After a time the trains all passed, and we were ordered to follow. We went on again, almost at the double quick, for the commander of the guard seemed to be in constant dread of the appearance of the Union cavalry.

The obscurity was such now that a face could hardly be distinguished a yard off; but the guard were vigilant, and I knew they would obey to the letter the orders they had received. Nevertheless, I had determined to escape within the hour, however great the risk, for I knew that every step we took southward lessened the chances.

Chance favored me in an unexpected manner. We were following the train closely as the drivers continued to whip and urge their beasts, and at the rear of the last wagon was a group of unarmed Rebel stragglers who followed on, apparently intent only on their own safety. There was a mounted officer who had ordered these men to move faster, several times, as they delayed the prisoners, and thinking to profit by the circumstance, I worked my way up to the front of the moving mass. The attention of the guard in front was just then directed to a prisoner whom he thought was trying to slip away; and before he had stepped back to his place I had got very near the stragglers. When he looked round again he mistook me for one of them, and with an angry oath ordered me to get out of the way, and not hinder the prisoners. I obeyed at once, and mingling with these men, found myself free from the surveillance of the guard. In less than one minute I had cautiously worked over to the west side of the pike, and thence the way was easy into the woods to liberty.

I stood fast in the shadows until the throng had passed, and to assure myself that my escape had not been detected, and then I plunged deep into the woods, and, exulting in my freedom, ran back towards Fisher's Hill.

I was walking along very rapidly, not dreaming of danger, when I suddenly caught sight of several men moving about, gathering up sticks for a fire, as I judged from what fragments of their conversation I could hear. They were a Rebel picket. I stood motionless and heart-sick. To my great relief they did not discover me. At the same time I saw picket fires blazing up along the top of Fisher's Hill, and heard the sound of voices from the same direction. I knew then that there could be no safety in pursuing a northerly course; and, withdrawing with the utmost silence, I struck off westerly.

The night was now far advanced, and, completely worn out with fatigue and excitement, I resolved to go no further till morning. I found myself in a desolate, rocky place, seeming at that hour as though no human being had ever been there before. Scraping a few leaves between two huge stones, I lay down and slept soundly until long after daylight.

Before sleeping I had placed a stick on one of the stones, with the notched end pointing towards the north; but it was needless precaution, for upon rising in the morning I could plainly see the spires and buildings of Strasburg through the fog, lying at the foot of the hills to the northeast.

Supposing my perils to be all over now, and that nothing remained for me but to make a wide circuit and reach the Union lines again, I walked briskly along towards the west, and for an hour saw no sign or trace of a human being. Then I stumbled upon three men dressed in gray, who were sleeping upon some blankets spread over the ground. It was too late to avoid them, for they had sprung to their feet as soon as I discovered them, and were gazing at me without uttering a word. My hopes almost died again at the thought of my blue clothing, and the straps which were still upon my shoulders; but I kept up a bold front and showed no sign of surprise or confusion. The conversation that followed I remember almost word for word.

"Good morning, boys," I said.

"Who the devil are you?" one of them asked.

"A Confederate, of course; I belong to the Stonewall Jackson Corps. I'm looking for my command now, and came to look off the mountain."

"Where did you get your Yankee clothes?" one of them asked.

"I took them from one of their officers, yesterday. We did whip them well, though, eh?"

They grunted out an indifferent kind of assent, and after exchanging a word together, seemed to be satisfied about me, and fell to rolling up their blankets. I said carelessly:

"Well, I suppose you are satisfied, so I'll go on," and moved away. They did not try to detain me; in fact they took no further notice of me at all, and I am half inclined to think them deserters from some of Early's decimated battalions.

Gratified as I was at this escape, the encounter showed me that the whole country was filled with stray detatchments of Rebels, and that my path was beset with dangers. I went on with the utmost care until near noon, the mountains becoming more desolate at every step—when without the slightest note of warning two Rebels sprang from behind trees directly in front of me, each with a cocked revolver, and shouted, "Halt."

I had taken the straps from my shoulders, and now bore the appearance of a Federal private; and, as I faced these men, their bearing showed me that it would be no easy matter to satisfy them that I was a Confederate.

"Who are you?" one of them demanded. "Where are you bound?" asked the other; and both the pistols covered me at the questions.

"I am a Confederate soldier," was my answer. I belong to Smith's brigade, of Harden's Division, Stonewall Jackson's Corps."

"Where are you from?"

"Jefferson Parish, Louisiana," I replied boldly, as I knew there was such a place.

They looked at me curiously, whispered together an instant, and then told me to go with them. We went over to the picket-post, several rods off, where there was a squad of mounted men, and where my captors had left their horses. They were rough-looking fellows, and had much the air of Mosby's men. They plied me with questions, which I answered promptly; but I could see that they understood my true character from the first, and my hopes of escape were quickly dashed with bitter disappointment.

After a little time, two of these men conducted me about three miles over to the west side of the mountain, and delivered me to another picket, five in number, under a sergeant who had just received orders to rejoin the army at once, as Sheridan had whipped the Confederates.

"In fact," said the sergeant, "the Yankees are south of us now on the pike, and we shall have to get past them through the woods."

They were all mounted, while I was afoot, and as they went on a fast walk and sometimes on a trot, I soon became completely exhausted in trying to keep up with them, and so lagged behind. They noticed it immediately, as they seemed to be in constant apprehension of being overtaken by Sheridan's cavalry.

"Look here," the sergeant exclaimed, pulling up his horse, "this won't do at all. If we are as slow as this for an hour longer, Sheridan's cavalry will catch us sure as—. Let's shoot this d—d Yank, and then we can get on as we ought to."

"Agreed," the others said; and then the five sat on their horses looking at me. It is more than probable that I trembled and turned pale,

"Well, but who'll shoot him?" the sergeant inquired. No one answered. "Will you, Bradley?"

"No, d—m me if I will!" the fellow answered, so promptly and heartily that I began to take courage. "Nor I," said another; "nor I," echoed the other two.

"It would be a cowardly trick to shoot a prisoner after he has surrendered," one of them remarked.

"Yes, that's so," answered another. "I wish we had never seen him; we shall certainly be taken if we don't do something soon with him."

"I propose to let him go," said another.

"No—we can't do that," the sergeant interposed.

"It would be found out, and we should be court-martialled and punished. We must take him along."

For a mile further I dragged along my weary limbs after the horses, the horror of my situation filling me with an agony of mind, when there was another halt, and another heated discussion.

"It won't do to keep on this way, unless we want to see the inside of a Yankee prison," one of the growled. "I say kill him!" And he slapped his pistol-butt savagely.

"Yes—kill him," every man exclaimed; and then for fully five minutes they quarreled and bandied epithets back and forth, endeavoring to fix the deed on some one of them, but every man shrinking from it, and declaring that he would not do it himself.

"A pretty fuss over one miserable Yankee!" the sergeant said. "Do none of you dare to put him out of the way to save us all?"

"I'll do it," the man whom they called Bradley suddenly cried. "Let me have him to myself sergeant, and he shan't trouble us any more."

The sergeant nodded and rode off with the others. Bradley dismounted, passed his arm through the rein, and drew his pistol.

"Come this way, Yank," he said, and moved off into the wood. I cast a despairing glance at the sergeant and his squad, and saw them looking back to see what became of me; and then I followed him—my appointed murderer—with such a feeling at my heart as I hope may never come again.

"In the name of God, do you mean to kill me here in this brutal way?" I screamed out the words in a tone that almost startled me. He fingered the lock of his revolver, looked from it to me, and replied:

"I promised to, didn't I? Yes, I did; and I ought to. But, after all, I reckon I don't like the job, and will try to leave you a whole skin. Take off that blouse—take of your vest, and pass them over to me, with any small things you may have about you. Be quick!"

It was a cheap price to pay for my life, and I gladly took off the garments and gave them up, though the night air pierced me chillingly.

The man mounted his horse, discharged his revolver three times into the ground, and rode rapidly alter his comrades.

Bewildered by this startling episode, and hardly realizing whether I was at liberty or not, I ran from the spot, back towards the Little North Mountain, and when the darkness came on I sank down exhausted in the woods, somewhere near the place of my last capture.

With the first gleam of daylight, I went on my way, still pursuing a westerly course. When about seven miles from Strasburg, as I calculated, I came into a clearing where there was a house. There was a man standing in the field quite near me, as I came from the woods; and knowing that he saw me, I dropped all concealment, and walked straight towards him.

"Who are you?" he asked, as I approached.

I told him the exact truth about myself, mentioning all the particulars of my adventures for the past two days. Fortunately, I did the very best thing, under the circumstances, that could be done. His face softened as he listened, and when I finished, he said:

"Come, now, that's pretty hard. I've been in the Confederate service myself; but blame me if I'll help you into any more trouble. Come with me, and you shall have some breakfast, and then I'll show you your best road."

With my heart too full for utterance at this unexpected sympathy, I followed him to his house, and ate of the substantial meal that was set before me. When I had done, he led me some distance from the house, and directed me to the dwelling of a man named Brill—"a good Union man," he said, "who will help you on." I shook the hand of this excellent friend, and traveled on with a somewhat lighter heart. Brill was found with little difficulty, and he directed me to the house of Simon Truesnider. "Come back, if you can't find him," he said; and I went on. After traveling some distance I knocked at the door of a house which I thought must be the right one; but I was informed by the old lady who came to the door, that it was not Truesnider's.

"Where do you want to go?" she asked, eyeing me sharply.

"To Winchester."

"What for, I'd like to know?" she squeaked in a shrill voice,

"Don't you know the Yankees are in Winchester?"

"Well, I'm a Yankee," I said. The avowal did not seem to surprise her at all.

"Aha! deserting, be you? That's right. I've helped lots of the Yanks to desert, and will help you. Take the first road, the left-hand one, mind, and you will go directly over the mountains to Wardensville. From there you can get to Harper's Ferry, easily; but remember and don't take the right-hand road—it leads straight to Winchester."

I thanked her and pushed forward briskly, taking the right-hand road; but I had not pursued it far, when I discovered a Rebel picket ahead. The discovery was made soon enough for me to avoid them without being seen, and making a wide detour through the woods, I struck the road again, and kept on. About sunset I overtook a small boy from whom I learned that the house where I had obtained my information was twelve miles back. The boy stopped at a house by the way, and a man coming out of the same house fell into conversation and walked some distance with me. The boy had said something about "Hayfield Church," and when the man inquired whither I was bound, I told him to the church. He remarked that it was eleven miles off, and that the first left hand road led to it. He stopped before a house at the forks of the road, and said:

"Won't you come in, I live here."

It was now dark, and I was glad of a refuge anywhere. Once in the house he made me sit down to supper with him; and when the meal was over we sat down together in the front room, and began sounding each other. I had told him the old story about my being a stray Confederate, but it was not hard to see that he distrusted it. He led the conversation gradually to himself; spoke of the hardships of the war, and the sufferings of the people of the Valley; and said in conclusion:

"The Unionists especially, have suffered severely."

"Do you sympathize with them?" I asked.

"I cannot help it. I have borne a great deal myself."

"But you are not a Unionist!"

"I don't know who or what you are," he said slowly; "but I have stood by the old flag since the first shot, and will stand by it to the last. Yes, I am a Union man; I can show you protection papers signed by General Banks as long ago as 1852.

I started up and wrung his hand, "God bless you for the words," I said fervently, and then I told him my story. He listened attentively, and took my hand cordially when I had finished.

"I hope your tribulations are over now," he said, "Winchester is only fifteen miles away; our pickets are still nearer, and to morrow you shall be safe within the lines. You shall stay here to-night, and we'll make you right in the morning."

I thanked him with tears in my eyes; and that night I enjoyed the first refreshing sleep that had visited me since the battle. In the morning he informed me that the pickets of the Eighth and Twenty-second New York cavalry were only four miles off. I was about to bid my kind host and his family good by, when a negro came running up to us as we stood on the steps, crying out as he came:

"De Rebels is coming, Mars' Russell—get out ob sight quick!"

I darted into the house, and Russell followed me. "Go up to the chamber where you slept," he said. "I promise you they shall not find you."

I heard the guerillas swagger into the house with loud oaths and inquiries after the Yankees; but Russell met them so pleasantly, and invited them so cordially to sit down and take some of his apple-jack, that they consented; and after drinking two or three times began capering round the room, clapped Russell on the shoulder, declaring him a glorious good fellow; and after half an hour, left without searching the house. I breathed freer as the sound of their horses galloping away reached me; and presently Russell came up to tell me that the coast was clear again.

It was about three o'clock one morning, which must have been the third day of my stay at Russell's that I was roused from my sleep by the galloping of a large squad of horsemen into the yard. I heard them knocking loudly at the door, and lay trembling with fear.

Presently I heard heavy footfalls on the stairs, and Russell and another man entered my room. The latter was a tall, fine looking man, as I could see by the light of the candle, and dressed in Rebel uniform throughout. My heart sank still lower at the sight of his hateful dress. I did not blame Russell now for I knew of course that he was faithful to me, but all hope abandoned me, and I looked at them in silence.

"What are you about here, young man?" the officer asked holding the light down to my face.

"Trying to sleep, sir," I answered.

"A soldier, I suppose?"

"I am, sir."

"How long have you been here?"

"About three days,"

Then after an instant's pause he asked, "And what command do you belong to?"

Something prompted me to tell him the truth, and I answered without hesitation:

"To the Nineteenth Army Corps."

"Ah! Sheridan's army! A Yankee are you?"

"Yes," I replied desperately, "I am. I might as well own it first as last, let what may come of it."

With that he laughed a little and said:

"Well, my lad, I'm glad to hear it. I'll introduce myself as one of the 6th corps. I am Captain Young, of the Massachusetts Cavalry, and Provost Marshal of Winchester."

I believe I never heard sweeter music than his voice as he uttered these words.

When I became calm enough to talk and comprehend, the captain informed me that a negro had succeeded in getting to Winchester that night with a message from Russell that a Union officer was at his home, unable to return to the lines, and that he had come to my deliverance immediately.

We reached Winchester without further adventure, and in due time I was forwarded to the front, rejoining the ambulance train at the exact spot where it was parked on the morning of the battle and once more under the shelter of the flag.—Galaxy.

THE HUMAN BODY.

WHILE the gastric juice has a mild, bland, sweetish taste, it possesses the power of digesting the hardest food that can be swallowed. It has no influence whatever on the fibres of the living animal, but the moment of death it begins to eat them away with the power of the strongest acid.

There is dust on sea and land—in the valley and on the mountain top—there is dust always and everywhere. The atmosphere is full of it. It penetrates the noisome dungeon, and visits the deepest and darkest caves of the earth. No palace door can shut it out; no drawer is so secret as to escape its presence. Every breath of wind dashes it upon the open eye; which yet is not blinded, because there is a foundation of the blandest fluid in nature incessantly emptying itself under the eyelid, which spreads itself over the surface of the eyeball, at every winking, and washes every atom of dust away. This liquid, so well adapted to the eye itself, has some acidity, which, under certain circumstances, becomes so decided as to be scalding to the skin, and would rot away the eyelids, were it not along the edges of them there are little oil manufactories, which spread over the surface a coating as impervious to the liquids necessary for keeping the eyeballs clean, as the best varnish is impervious to water.

The breath which leaves the lungs has been so perfectly divested of its life-giving properties, that to re-breathe it, unmixed with other air, the moment it escapes the mouth, would cause immediate death by suffocation; while if it hovered about us, a more or less destructive influence over health would be occasioned. But it is made of a nature so much lighter than the common air, that the moment it escapes the lips and nostrils it ascends to higher regions, above the breathing point, there to be rectified, renovated and sent back again, replete with purity and life. How rapidly it ascends is beautifully exhibited any frosty morning.

But foul and deadly as the expiring air is, nature—wisely economical in her works and ways—turns it to good account in the outward passage through the organs of voice, and makes of it the whisper of love, the soft words of affection, the tender tones of human sympathy, the sweet strains of ravishing music, and the persuasive eloquence of the flushed orator.

Of the sixty-two primary elements known in nature, only eighteen are found in the human body, and of these, seven are metalic. Iron is found in the blood; phosphorus in the brain; limestone in the bile; lime in the bones; dust and ashes in all. Not only these eighteen human elements, but the whole sixty-two of which the universe is made, have their essential basis in the four substances—oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen and carbon—representing the more familiar names of fire, water, saltpetre, and charcoal. And such is man the lord of the earth—a spark of fire—a drop of water—a grain of gunpowder—an atom of charcoal!

But looking at him in another direction these elements shadow forth the higher qualities of a diviner nature, of an immortal existence. In that spark is the caloric which speaks of irreptessible activity: in that drop is the water which speaks of purity; in that grain is the force by which he subdues all things to himself—makes the wide creation the supplier of his wants, and the servitor of his pleasures; while in that atom of charcoal there is a diamond, which speaks at once of light and purity—of indestructible and resistless progress. There is nothing which outshines it; it is purer than the dewdrop. "Moth and rust" corrupt it not; nor can any ordinary fires destroy it; while it cuts its way alike through brass and adamant, and hardest steel. In that light we see an eternal progressinn towards omniscience; in that purity the good of divine nature; in that indestructibility an immortal existence; in that progress a steady ascension towards the home and bosom of God.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO,.....SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1867.

CAUTION.

ALL PERSONS advertising in THE CALIFORNIAN are hereby cautioned against paying any bills to W. M. WALLACE, a former solicitor for this paper. No persons are authorized to collect for advertisements in THE CALIFORNIAN except the undersigned proprietors.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN.

San Francisco, November 13, 1867.

MR. HARTE'S NEW BOOK.*

THE Sacramento Union, which enjoys a higher reputation for the accuracy of its reports of "Supreme Court decisions," the fullness and general excellence of its news department, and even for its editorial ability, than for the taste and discrimination of its literary criticism, speaks of these fine and exquisitely finished sketches as "of a coarse texture," the very last comment, one would imagine, that any judicious or appreciative critic would make upon anything, either in prose or verse, from the pen of Mr. Harte. It is charitable to assume that the "general utility editor" of the Union, upon whom the comparatively unimportant work of pronouncing judgment on literary performances, devolved in the brief intervals of leisure snatched from the weightier duties of clipping exchanges, and devising sensational headings for the despatches, was unable to devote any portion of his valuable time to the perusal of the book, and so derived his idea of the quality of its humor, from the quality of the wretched illustrations by which it is disfigured. The Union's largeness and liberality of spirit toward Californian writers, is no less strikingly exemplified in its notice of this book, than its rare literary discrimination. It disposes in eleven slovenly lines, of this first serious essay at authorship, of perhaps the most distinguished, and certainly the most graceful and finished writer on the coast, while in contrast to this boorish and niggard treatment, a New York daily paper, the Evening Mail, devotes over a column to it. The New York critic, differing toto cœlo with the "reviewer" of the Union, declares that the humor of Mr. Harte is characterized by "a delicacy and good taste which makes a pleasant contrast with the usual broad and coarse character of burlesque imitations," adding that the author is evidently "a gentleman, as well as a humorist, and never drops one role for the other." Without attempting at present any formal criticism of Mr. Harte's book, we will content ourselves with a few extracts, from which our readers may form their own estimate of its merits. In the following, few will have any difficulty in recognizing the salient characteristics of Charles Lever:

In an instant I was engaged with an entire squadron of cavalry, who endeavored to surround me. Cutting my way through them, I advanced boldly upon a battery, and sabred the gunners before they could bring their pieces to bear. Looking around, I saw that I had in fact penetrated the French center. Before I was well aware of the locality, I was hailed by a sharp voice in French:

"Come here, sir!"

I obeyed, and advanced to the side of a little man in a cocked hat.

"Has Grouchy come?"

"Not yet, sire," I replied—for it was the Emperor.

"Ha!" he said suddenly, bending his piercing eyes on my uniform—"a prisoner?"

"No, sire," I said, proudly.

"A spy?"

I placed my hand upon my sword, but a gesture from the Emperor made me forbear.

"You are a brave man," he said.

I took my snuff box from my pocket, and taking a pinch, replied by handing it, with a bow, to the Emperor.

His quick eye caught the cypher on the lid.

"What! a D'Euville? Ha! this accounts for the purity of your accent. Any relation to Roderick D'Euville."

"My father, sire."

"He was my schoolfellow at the Ecole Politechnique. Embrace me!" and the Emperor fell upon my neck in the presence of his entire staff. Then recovering himself, he gently placed in my hand his own magnificent snuffbox in exchange for mine, and hanging upon my breast the cross of the Legion of Honor which he took from his own, he bade one of his Marshals conduct me back to my regiment.

I was so intoxicated with the honor of which I had been the recipient, that on reaching our lines I uttered a shout of joy and put spurs to my horse. The intelligent animal seemed to sympathize with my feelings, and fairly flew over the ground. On a rising eminence a few yards before me stood a gray-haired officer, surrounded by his staff. I don't know what possessed me, but putting spurs to my horse, I rode at him boldly, and with one bound cleared him, horse and all. A shout of indignation arose from the assembled staff. I wheeled suddenly, with the intention of apologizing, but my mare misunderstood me, and again dashing forward, once more vaulted over the head of the officer, this time unfortunately uncovering him by a vicious kick of her hoof. "Seize him!" roared the entire army. I was seized. As the soldiers led me away, I asked the name of the gray-haired officer. "That—, why, that's the Duke of Wellington!"

I fainted.

Some of the minor traits and mannerisms of the author of "Jane Eyrie" are thus happily hit off:

The wind howled dismally without, and the rain beat furiously against the windows. I crept toward him and seated myself on a low stool beside his chair.

Presently he turned without seeing me and placed his foot absently in my lap. I affected not to notice it. But he started and looked down.

"You here yet—Carrothead? Ah, I forgot. Do you speak French!"

"Oui, Monsieur."

"Taisez-vous!" he said sharply, with singular purity of accent. I complied. The wind moaned fearfully in the chimney, and the light burned dim. I shuddered in spite of myself. "Ah, you tremble girl!"

"It is a fearful night."

* "Condensed Novels and Other Papers." By F. Bret Harte. New York: G. W. Carleton & Co. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

"Fearful!" Call you this fearful, ha! ha! ha? Look! you wretched little atom, look!" and he dashed forward, and leaping out of the window, stood like a statue in the pelting storm. He did not stay long, but in a few minutes returned by the way of the hall chimney. I saw from the way that he wiped his feet on my dress that he had again forgotten my presence.

"You are a governess. What can you teach?" he asked suddenly and fiercely thrusting his face in mine.

"Manners!" I replied calmly.

"Ha! teach me!"

"You mistake yourself," I said adjusting my mittens. "Your manners require not the artificial restraint of society. You are radically polite; this impetuosity and ferociousness is simply the sincerity which is the basis of a proper deportment. Your instincts are moral; your better nature, I see, is religious. As St. Paul justly remarks—see chap. 6, 8, 9 and 10—

He seized a heavy candlestick, and threw it at me. I dodged it submissively, but firmly.

"Excuse me," he remarked, as the under jaw relaxed. "Excuse me, Miss Mix; but I can't stand St. Paul! Enough—you are engaged."

The treatment of the "Sword and Gown" style is excellent. Here is a piece of it:

Suddenly came a dull, crashing sound from the school-room. At the ominious interruption I shuddered involuntarily, and called to Smithsye:

"What's up, Smithums?"

"Guy's cleaning out the fourth form," he replied.

At the same moment George de Coverly passed me, holding his nose, from whence the bright Norman blood streamed redly. To him the plebian Smithsye laughingly cried:

"Cully! how's his nibs?"

I pushed the door of the school-room open. There are some spectacles which a man never forgets. The burning of Troy probably seemed a large seized conflagration to the pious Æneas, and made an impression on him which he carried away with the feeble Anchises.

In the center of the room, lightly brandishing the pistol-rod of a steam engine, stood Guy Heavystone alone. I say alone, for the pile of small boys on the floor could hardly be called company.

I will try and sketch him for the reader. Guy Heavystone was then only fifteen. His broad, deep chest, his sinewy and quivering flank, his straight bastern showed him to be a thorough bred. Perhaps he was a trifle heavy in the fetlock but he held his head haughtily erect. His eyes were glittering but pitiless. There was a sternness about the lower part of his face—the old Heavystone look—a sternness, heightened, perhaps, by the snaffle-bit which, in one of his strange freaks, he wore in his mouth to curb his occasional ferocity.

Perhaps, however, the best burlesques, are those of Victor Hugo, and the author of Guy Livingstone. Cooper's high idealization of the Indian character, too, offered a capital opening for Mr. Harte's peculiar vein of humor, which he has not failed to take advantage of. In addition to the "Condensed Novels," the volume contains a number of papers and sketches contributed to various periodicals, among others, the Atlantic Monthly. From one of these, entitled "Sidewalkings," we quote the following:

Speaking of eyes, you can generally settle the average gentility and good breeding of the people you meet in the street by the manner in which they return or evade your glance. "A gentleman," as the Autocrat has wisely said, is always "calm-eyed." There is just enough abstraction in his book to denote his individual power and the capacity for self-contemplation, while he is, nevertheless, quietly and unobtrusively observant. He does not seek, neither does he evade, your observation. Snobs and prigs do the first; bashful and mean people do the second. There are some men who, on meeting your eye, immediately assume an expression quite different from the one which they previously wore, which, whether an improvement or not, suggests a disagreeable self-consciousness. Perhaps they fancy they are betraying something. There are others who return your look with unnecessary defiance, which suggests a like concealment. The symptoms of the eye are generally borne out in the figure. A man is very apt to betray his character by the manner in which he appropriates his part of the sidewalk. The man who resolutely keeps the middle of the pavement, and deliberately brushes against you, you may be certain would take the last piece of pie at the hotel table, and empty the cream jug on its way to your cup. The man who slides by you, keeping close to the horses, and selecting the easiest planks, manages to slip through life in some such way, and to evade its sternest duties. The awkward man, who gets in your way, and throws you back upon the man behind you, and so manages to derange the harmonious procession of a whole block, is very apt to do the same thing in political and social economy.

This volume fully establishes Mr. Harte's title to an honorable rank among the best class of American humorists; not among those whose humor smacks largely of buffoonery, and relies chiefly for its effect upon verbal extravagancies and tricks of phraseology, but with such writers as Holmes, Donald G. Mitchell, and William Henry Curtis, of the last of whom he frequently reminds us. His points are delicately made, in the spirit of a true artist, and his satire often has the fine edge of Thackeray's, not without something of its semi-cynical quality. The critic of the Bulletin does the author no more than simple justice, when he says of these sketches: "So fine is the fancy, so subtle the wit, that they almost escape us before we have fully tasted and enjoyed them. And it is because of the fineness of the quality, and not from poverty of idea, that he sometimes fails to satisfy the average popular want. Were his standard less high and his taste less severe, he would doubtless prove a greater favorite with the million; but a writer of such sterling merit can afford to bide his time, and work rather for permanent fame than ephemeral applause."

To speak of the humor manifested in the book as "of a somewhat coarse texture," is simply to prove that the critic who employs such language is as incompetent to pass upon literary performances of the character of these papers, as a confirmed drunkard whose palate has been demoralized by bad whisky, would be to judge of the quality of a fine wine.

WINE ADULTERATIONS.

THE San Francisco Pacific recently published an article entitled "California Wine," in which some very singular and startling assertions were made. Among other things it declared that more wine is made in this city, on the basis of raw spirits illicitly distilled from molasses and other materials, than is made in all the vineyards of the State. The Pacific adds: "Financially, wine making is a failure. The proprietors of some vineyards are forced to go into bankruptcy. Nearly all have found it a losing business. Thousands of gallons of wine are in cellars to-day that cannot be sold for twenty-five cents per gallon, nor enough to pay for the cost of making the wine, when the cost of producing the grapes is not included. Wine vineyards do not pay. The city is too juicy for the country. Sugars and dyeing materials are cheaper here than in Sonoma. The trial is over. It is settled that California cannot, as yet produce such wines as the world wants at prices to suit."

These appear to us, with such slight knowledge of the subject as we possess, to be reckless assertions and hasty conclusions. The Pacific ought before declaring that more wine is manufactured in this city by adulterating processes, than is yielded by all the vineyards of the State, to have been well fortified with reliable statistics. Such assertions should not be made without ample proofs, and we very much doubt whether our cotemporary is prepared to furnish such proofs. As to the curt declartion that "the trial is over," and that "it is settled that California cannot, as yet, produce such wines as the world wants, at prices to suit," the patent facts do not at all warrant them. The large number of men engaged in the business, the existence of Eastern agencies for the sale of the wines, and the quantities exported, would seem to go far to prove that the "trial is not over," and that it is, to say the least, premature to pronounce it a failure.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK ON THE PANAMA ROUTE.—The North American Steamship Company advertise that they will despatch the new steamship Oregonian, 3,000 tons, Captain Joseph Sutton, for Panama, on Monday the twenty-fifth of November, connecting, via Panama Railroad, with the new and splendid steamship Nebraska, also a 3,000 ton steamer, at Aspinwall. The Oregonian and Nebraska are both new and fast steamships, and cheap fare and quick trips may be hereafter expected on the Panama route. The Company will continue their Nicaragua line of steamers as usual.

THE New York Herald has constituted itself the champion of that much-abused lady, Mrs Lincoln, a most chivalrous and magnanimous undertaking under the circumstances, for surely, never was lady in sorer need of a Knight to defend her cause. The Herald, which never does things by halves, has published quite a series of articles, setting forth in strong terms Mrs. L's wrongs and grievances, and soundly berating the Government and the Republican party for their shameful conduct in the premises.

A. ROMAN & Co., of this city, have just published, as a holiday book for the juveniles, "Fairy Tales From Gold Lands," by May Wentworth. It is an unusually neat volume of some two hundred and thirty pages, with a frontispiece, and contains ten stories, among which are "Ching Chong Chinaman," "The Strong Man of Santa Barbara," "Jung-Frou Malcen," and "Emperor Norton." The scene of most of the stories is laid in California. They are told in a natural and graceful style and evince considerable inventive power.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

ON Tuesday evening Miss Helen Tracy made her debut on the San Francisco stage in the character of "Virginia." The house was crowded; Miss Tracy has many friends in this city, and all were anxious that she should make a success. Miss Tracy was graceful in her movements and read her part intelligently, but she evinced a lack of power which would prevent her ever becoming a tragic actress. John McCullough's impersonation of "Virginius," on the contrary, was faulty, at times, in the opposite extreme. On the following evening Richelieu was performed, with John McCullough as the King-Cardinal, and Miss Helen Tracy as "Julie." Miss Tracy was more snccessful as "Julie" than in the part she nssnmed on the preceeding evening, and John McCullongh's representation of "Richelieu" was an artistic performance. Henry Edwards made a very good "De Mauprat," and the play as a whole went smoothly. On Thursday Mrs. Sophie Edwin, of whom California is justly proud as an honor to the stage in every way, took a benefit. It is unnecessary to state that the house wns crowded in every part. The sensation drama entitled The Child Stealer was performed, and Mrs. Sophie Edwin played the part of "Ellen O'Brien" in a style which delighted every one. Last night the highly sensational play of The Huguenot Captain was produced. This drama is full of startling situations, hair-breadth escapes, duels, etc., and affords an opportunity for much fine scenery, good music, and well arranged tableaux. The Huguenot Captain will fight his battles over again this afternoon and evening on the Opera House stage.

On Friday evening next, Willie Edouin the comedian at the Opera House, who, never when he is cast for a part suited to him, fails to make the most of it, and who displayed so much talent in his impersonation of the character of "Samnel Gerridge" in Caste, will be the recipient of a benefit. The Writing on the Wall will be played, and the performance will conclude with a comic ballet pantomime, (for the first time in California) entitled tho Dancing Scotchman. All who witnessed the performance of Willie Edonin as the dancing master in The Pet of the Petticoats, are aware that they may anticipate any amonnt of fun on this occasion.

On Mouday Mrs. Chnrles Poole made her first appearance in San Francisco, at the Metropolitan Theatre, in the character of Massaniello, a play founded on the opera of that name. Mrs. Poole's style of acting is not that which is popular in San Francisco. She made Massaniello swagger too much and act a little too crazily before he lost his senses. Auber's music introduced, by Frank Howson, was well performed; the glorious choruses were very effectively sung. On Thursday evening Mrs. Poole appeared in the part of "Medea," and played it very well, appearing to much better advantage in a female character than she did in a male role. Last night the spectacular play of The Sea of Ice was played, and the same bill will be performed this afternoon and evening.

Frank Howson, who so pluckily kept the Metropolitan Theatre open during the dullest season of the year against every opposition, and nfter struggling bravely against ill-luck, giving entertainments that should have drawn good houses, and engaging all available talent, having finally resolved to relinquish the field of management, a number ot our cftizens have tenderd him a complimentary benefit. That the pnblic of San Francisco will cordially unite in making this testimonial a substantial one, is beyond a doubt. The sympathies of the public have throughout been with Mr. Howson personally in his enterprise, and the straightforward manner in which he has behaved in all business transactions has gained for him the respect of nll. All connected with the Metropolitan Theatre iu any capacity, from the leading man down to the call-boy, have volunteered their services gratuitously on this occasion. The entertainment will consist of the beautiful opera of Fra Diavalo, which will be prodnced with novel scenic effects, and the play of The Dowager.

Every one will be glad to hear that Dan Bryant has been prevailed on to give us a taste of his quality as an Ethiopian comedian and minstrel previous to his departuro for the East. California's favorite comedian, Joe Mnrphy, with a great band of minstrels, will support Dan Bryant, who will open at Platt's Music Hall, on Saturday next, November 23d. in an entirely original entertainment.

The Metropolitan Theatre will open under new management on Saturday November 23d, the lessees being Messrs. Edwards, Bates, and Vinson. In addition to these gentlemen, each of whom is an actor, the following actors and actresses are comprised in the new Metropolitan company. Messrs. Fitzgerald, Melville, Buckley, W. Hamilton and others; Mesdames Bates, Saunders, Fitzgerald, Miss Julia Corcoran, and the Howson family, the latter almost a company in themselves.

The first star of the season will be the popular Charles Wheatleigh, who will make his first appearance after an absence of eighteeen months. Angust Daly's original drama Under the Gaslight, will be prodnced on this occasion. During the time the theatre remains closed, it will be refitted and decorated. The new management commence the campaign under happy auspices, with the most popular actor in the city, and the most popular play of the day. The company is a well selected one and the lessees are all experienced managers.

The Temple of Music is a most popular place of amusement. and gives a varried programme. Among some of the performances given last week I may mention the song of "She's Gone to Alabama State," by Harry Leslie, "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother," by Henri Herberte, "Dancing Mad," by Messrs. Leslie and Raynor, and the "American Step Dance," by C. H. Wright. Many novelties have been prepared for the coming week. The usual fashionable matinee will be given to day at 2 o'clock.

TOUCHSTONE.

THE LOVES OF THE KEYSERS.

BY JOHN QUILL.

WILLIAM KEYSER was a robust young butcher, who wore a hat with crape on it, and had red morocco tops to his boots. He was also of a noble and aristocratic mein, and the owner of stall Number 49 in the market. He had an uncle in the marine corps, and his mother was cross-eyed, yet notwithstanding this, he had connected himself with hose company No. 54, and his temperament tended to the bilious, while his dog was a double-nosed terrier with a weakness for beef, and a yellow spot on his off hind leg.

Bill also had a slightly bald head, and killed on Tuesdays and Fridays.

William was in love.

And with a girl.

While yet in the very prime of his manhood, with all the grace and beauty of youth upon him, and beef selling at 35 cents a pound for the good pieces, William bestowed his tenderest affections upon a fair maiden who resided in the dwelling adjoining his own.

Some'eres about twenty summers had shed their tenderest caresses upon her head, and while her education was all that the most fastidious could desire, she still weighed one hundred and thirty-five pounds on William's scales, and had a ringing, musical laugh that affected you like a strain of music wafted on the midnight air—say like a glee-club straining itself under your window.

Her hair was luxurious and black as night—any night you choose except a moonlight one—and she mingled the blitheness of the lark, with the harty appetite of the ostrich.

Such was the etherial creature to whom William Keyser had given his heart. And she was worthy of his love. I have said that she weighed one hundred and thirty-five pounds. So she did, all but a few ounces, which Bill made up by throwing a chop or two in the scale.

But she was not much on the wait, on the contrary, she was anxious to be married at once, and one calm summer evening, when Bill had come home from market, she leaned her fair young head upon his heart, and would have greased his waistcoat with bandoline, while she told him how ardently she desired their union, had it not been that he still had on his butcher's shirt.

Our story opens at this interesting period, with these two lovers in this touching and beautiful position. Bill tenderly kissed her on her marble brow, and wiped the dews from the end of her nose with his shirt-sleeve.

"So, dearest, you have dressed yourself in your noblest attire to welcome me. How marvelously beautiful you look," ejaculated William, in accents of tenderest affection.

"Yes, I've got on my new gored dress. How do you like it, love?"

"Ah, beautiful! beautiful! And 'my dress, too, is gored," said William, pointing to the clots of blood upon his shirt.

A few moments of profound silence elapsed. The occasion was too solemn for words. Then she said—Mary Jane was her name—she said:

"William, do you truly love me?"

"With my whole heart," said William, "and heart now is worth seventeen cents."

"And you love none but me?" she asked murmuringly.

"Have I not often told you so beef-ore? Do you not trust me?"

"Yes, dearest, but a pang will shoot through my heart sometimes when I think of the fickleness of man's affection."

"But, dearest, did I not re-veal my love to you with vows always to be true. The fact that I possess your affection is one of my chief de-lights, although there is an active demand for lights, now, since the dog-catchers knocked off."

"But perchance some other maiden, more fairer than I, might dazzle you with her beauty and rob me of your love."

"Believe me, dearest, I steel myself against such syrens. No other woman shall pour-loin my heart from you. I listen to no tale of love from other lips than yours. Tails bring seventy-five cents now for soup, to be sure, but I have a soupreme contempt for lucre gained by treachery."

"Oh, William!" exclaimed Mary Jane, as overcome by her feelings, she bowed her head and wept tears of tender, heartfelt joy.

"Yes, angel of my soul," continued he, "I cannot hide my love. I will marry you, and you alone. As Eve was to Adam, so you shall be my rib; I'll wear you next my heart as I do this bit of rib-bone," and snatched a ribbon, tied with a true love-knot. from her hair, and stuck it on his shirt with a skewer.

It's skewerious how silly these lovers sometimes are.

"William, I derive hope and consolation from your words. Kiss me, and mind you don't act as if you were sucking juleps through a straw, and were pressed for time."

A few moments elapsed, and no sound broke upon the stilly air of night bnt a subdned noise, like tearing a piece of muslin.

There was a muzzlin' to some considerable extent aronnd there just then.

"You're one of the right s-tripe!" exclaimed William Keyser, ns he leaned back refreshed in his chair. "I'd chop my head off for you, I would, upon my sacred word of honor as a butcher, anything bnt-yer girls that won't kiss uow and then."

"O, William, that you would always love me thus," said Mary Jane, as she placed her head in its old position once more, for she appeared to like it that way.

"Love yon! Onr love is sometimes more than human. It is destined to im-more-tallow-ty. I have too much stake to cast yon idly by. I have, or I'm a Dutchman, that's so."

"And when shall we be married, dearest?" asked Mary Jane, taking a pin out of her dress body, so William Keyser, the affectionate young butcher, would not lacerate his fingers. "When shnll we stand at Hymen's altar and plight our vows?"

"Stand at which, and do how?" asked William, for he was defective in his heathen mythology, although he could dress a beef within a half an hour.

"And do which? my love for you is boney-fide, but don't ask me to do anything wicked or rash."

"When shall we be married, love, I meant?"

"Just whenever you plense, darling. I live for you alone. If you should cast me off I'd ceaso to be a liver. I'd blow my brains out with a marrow bone."

"Make it Tuesday week then, with the Orthodox Quaker ceremony."

"Which ox?"

"Orthodox Quaker, dear: be married in meeting, you know. No cards; only friends of the family invited."

"It is meat that it should be so. I'll take yon for better or for worse, for richer or poorer, and I'll cleave to you through life. I've had some practice as a cleaver."

Thus did these two young persons sit and converse in tender accents, as the soft moon flung her radiance over the landscape, and flooded with lovely light the front doorstep of Mary Jane's house, while the old man lay snoring on the settee in the back room, waiting for William to be gone, so that he could lock up the house.

And so they were married at last, and down the path of life, strewn with flowers, ns it was, these two loving hearts bounded joyously for about two weeks, when they stopped bounding joyously, on account of Mary Jane belting Willliam—her own William—over the frontispiece with the saucepan, because he wanted her to make hash out of the old scraps he had left over, twice a week.—Philadelphia Sunday Transcript.

THE MONEY DRIFT.—The people of Califorania are always complaining that all the money is going out of the country. A great deal of money does go out of the country, and any projects having the end of keeping it here should be encouraged. Thos. Mooney, President of the Builders' Building and Savings Bank, has been most successful in carrying on business which has done much to check the drift of money to the East and Europe. The Alta having shown that nearly a million of dollars a year are sent out of the country to Eastern and Foreign Life Insurance Companies. Mr. Mooney proposes to retain this million dollars here to aid in the developement of the State, and to this end offers material nid in establishing a Local Life and Health Insnrance Company. A forcibly written communication to the Alta appears in our advertising columns.

ROUNDABOUT PAPERS.—Number one will appear in our next issuo.

"DEAD."—A poem by W. A. Kendall appears on the first page of to-day's CALIFORNIAN.

THEODORE TILTON, the editor of the the New York Independent, has a volume in press entitled "The Sexton's Tale," and other poems.

A RECENT writer alleges that the literary matter in a single number of the North American Review costs about $1,000.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN'S list of forthcoming publications includes "Silcote of Silcotes," by Henry Kingsley, reprinted from Macmillan's Magazine.

QUEEN VICTORIA, we read. has ordered a collection to be made of all the reviews of the biography of Prince Albert. They make a huge volume.

THE FISHER LAD.

Elsie, the lass with the golden curls,
Sings like the thrushes and climbs like the squirrels;
All night long she sleeps in her nest,
And dreams of the fisherboy out in the West.

All night long he rocks in his boat,
And hums a song as he lies afloat—
A song about Elsie, the rosiest rose
That blooms on the cliffs where the night wind blows.

The dun duck dives, and the roving lark
Flits, with shrill whistle, into the dark;
And, heaving the herring-nets over the side,
Night long the fisher-boy drifts with the tide.

Under his feet the herring are streaming;
Over his head the stars are dreaming:
And he sits in his boat as it rocks in the bight;
And watches and waits for the morning light.

The wind is soft, and the stars are dim;
But never a mermaid whispers to him;
And the siren may warble her softest note,
But she won't beguile him out of his boat.

At break of day from the sandy bay
He draws his nets and he sails away—
"Over the foam let gipsies roam,
But Love is best when it stays at home."

CHASED BY TARTAR CAVALRY.

AN INCIDENT IN THE NORTH CHINA CAMPAIGN.

During the last China war, I had the good fortune to be attached to the British Naval Brigade which accompanied the army throughout the campaign. Thus it was that I eventually found myself in the mythical old city of Pekin.

Although the allied armies had marched without sustaining a single defeat up to the very walls, and after a show of resistance now held their Imperial city in military occupation, yet the force of our arms had failed to strike terror into the hearts of the Chinese individually. The Chinamen were abject enough in the immediate presence of a superior force, but let them get the upper hand by treachery or otherwise, and it would go hardly with you.

In this way it happened that many of the English soldiers strolled into the city in twos and threes, and were never seen again. They were without doubt, tortured to death. In our Government returns, the word "missing" was written after their names; that was all that was done; it saved so much trouble.

With the French it was very different; they did not content themselves with simply reporting their men as missing. They sought out and discovered those who were implicated in the murder, and the Chinamen generally had to pay about six lives for one. If the outrage could not be satisfactorily traced to any one of the people, the whole street in which it was perpetrated would be razed to the ground. It must be a very blundering Chinaman who would molest a Frenchman; the Nemesis follows so quickly.

As regards the English, these things went on with such impunity that as many as six of the Rifles went together into Pekin with their arms, and all their accoutrements, and never returned. They were reported missing and there was an end to the affair.

These things were not pleasant, especially to those who had seen the effects of the slow bone crushings and the myriad other tortures that had been inflicted on those unfortunate men who had been captured on the march, and whose lacerated bodies were sent back in retaliation upon the English.

Bad as was this state of affairs in Pekin, it was worse on the plain between it and Tungchow. Tungchow, being the nearest city to Pekin in direct water communication to the fleet, was the head-quarters of the commissariat department. It is a walled city of considerable size, and is situated on the Houenho, a tributary of the Pei-ho. Pekin is twenty-five miles distant in a north-westerly direction. Between the two cities there is an Imperial road, paved throughout with enormous slabs of stone. But this road led to one of the south gates of the city, and the camp of the allies was at the north-east gate; besides, it was believed to be undermined. The army, therefore, found its way across the plain, without following any road in particular. With the exception of a few hills, just visible on a fine day far away in the horizon, the country is as flat as a billiard table. The pagoda at Tungchow is soon lost sight of, and after that there is no landmark until Pekin, entirely hidden by its high gray walls, is reached. Here, and there, like oases in the desert, are clumps of trees with a few houses amongst them; they are all alike, and serve rather to increase the monotony of the scene than otherwise. But these peaceful-looking farm-houses have proved fatal to many stragglers.

Some soldiers on the line of march discovered a sword-scabbered half buried in the ground on the outskirts of one of these villages. It belonged to a man whose regiment had marched to the front some time before. In digging up the ground, not only the rest of his accoutrements were found, but his whitened skeleton as well, clean, without a scrap of flesh on the bones. Some Chinamen of the village being seized, one of them more frightened than the rest, confessed that the man who had lagged behind the "Foreign Braves" (mark the politeness now) had been kidnapped, and boiled to death in a cauldron, which he proceeded to point out. Such it was too evident was the revolting fact.

A few days before the incident that I am about to relate occurred, a slow lumbering train of baggage-wagons with a strong escort left Pekin for Tungchow at noon. At two o'clock, a soldier well armed and mounted, was sent to order back a portion of the baggage. It was presumed that they could not have gone very far by that time, and so he went alone. He was cut off before he could overtake them, and was never seen again. Another was added to the list of "missing."

It should be borne in mind that these murders, of which the number was not small, were committed after the Treaty of Peace had been signed, and were, nevertheless, persistently winked at by the English authorities.

One morning despatches were put into my hands by the Commander-in-Chief to be immediately delivered to the head of the Commissariat Department at Tungchow. The usual escort of mounted Sikhs, without which no one dreamed of crossing the plain, was ordered to accompany me. But the commanding officer, a most unpleasant man of the red-tape order, made so much fuss and bother about sending his men away, that I concluded a rather warm argument by telling him that he and his Sikhs might go anywhere they pleased, for I would have none of them, but would go alone.

This rash resolution was condemned by every one. Friends and strangers were unanimous in declaring that I should never reach Tungchow. "Why?" "There was that entrenched Tartar camp in ambush outside the city, no one knew exactly where, so that you couldn't tell how to avoid it. Then there was the certainty of losing your way, and the probability of getting murdered by the village cut-throats, like Smith of the 2nd Queen's, poor Johnson of the 1st Royals, Green, of the 3d Buffs, etc., etc. You surely haven't forgotten that fellow who was sent after the baggage-train the other day, and never turned up again. Why, you must be quite mad," and so on, in this strain, for half an hour.

When my old messmate, Lieutenant Jack Deverenx, heard of it, he came up and took me by the hand, saying, "Well, old boy, if you're determined to go, I'll go with you, for you've always stuck to me like a brick, and now I'll do as much for you."

In vain I tried to dissuade him, and used all the arguments that had been urged against my going; but he was just as obstinate as I was.

At two o'clock, then, on indifferent military train horses, we started. The first half-hour was pleasant enough; after that we lost sight of Pekin, and there was nothing but the great hot plain before us. A small division of the army had left for Tungchow that same morning at daylight; their foot-prints and other traces of their march were still visible. We gradually got careless about the track, and finally lost it altogether. The way seemed tolerably easy, and we began to congratulate ourselves on the clever manner in which we were shaping our course. Just then we came to a white marble monument of peculiar form. It represented a monstrous tortoise carrying an inscribed slab vertically on his back. Such as these are erected to the memory of the kings of one of the old dynasties. It occurred to us that we had passed one of these half an hour before; on closer inspection it proved to be the same one. Without knowing it we had lost our way and made a complete circle.

This was particularly annoying, especially when the danger of being overtaken by the darkness on this wide plain of the enemy's was considered. Besides my horse was beginning to show signs of flagging, and stumbled continually. We halted and started again, "taking a fresh departure," as naval men say, this time taking the sun for our guide, and looking out for footprints.

To our great satisfaction, we came upon the track again, or rather upon a track. The possibility that these could be any other than the footprints of an English army—for instance, those of Tartars leading to their camp—never suggested itself. With light hearts, we unsuspectingly followed up this track, until, right ahead, there appeared a long, low wall, with here and there the top of a tent showing above it. One significant look, full of meaning, sufficed to show us that we had accidentally discovered the much-dreaded Tartar camp.

Without a word we wheeled round and galloped back as fast as the poor jaded old steeds would carry us. Any hope that we had not been observed was instantly dispelled by seeing nine or ten Tartar horsemen, well mounted, rush out in hot pursuit. Thus had we fallen into the very pitfall that was our worst danger.

Our miserable horses seemed, by some curious instinct, to be aware of the danger. They tore along at a speed that agreeably surprised us. Hedges, trees, fields flew by; over the rice plantations, crashing through the millet stalks—away, away, over everything. This was a race for life, and the speed was frightful; this furious pace could not last. Gradually the Tartars gained ground. On they came in a cloud of dust, the foremost ones alone visible through it. Away, away, over the arid plain, the thick hot air resonant with the eager shouts and savage yells of our pursuers.

But all the fierce goading of our horses, we too well knew, was useless; in the long run we must be captured, and then——. Heavens! the thought was too horrible. There was nothing left for us but to sell our lives as dearly as we could, and, if it were possible, to reserve the last precious bullet in our revolvers for ourselves.

Nearer and yet nearer, they gained on us rapidly. Now an arrow whizzed past, followed by a crossbow-bolt; then another and another in quick succession. Still closer and closer they pressed on us. When within safe distance of the foremost one, I drew my revolver, turned round in the saddle, and fired. From over anxiety I missed the mark. Jack, who fired shortly afterwards, also missed his man, but killed the horse, which was nearly as well. His next shot missed—mine also; not, however, through bad aiming, but because, at the instant that I pulled the trigger, an arrow grazed my right arm, tearing through the coat and the fleshy part; but, happily, it did not stick.

Nerved with rage, although smarting with intense pain, my arm was steady for the next shot. With a long and careful aim, the man well covered, I fired; a flash, a sharp, ringing report, and one of my pursuers rolled over with a bitter scream and laid weltering in his life's blood.

Faster and more fiercely came on the rest of the savage horde. One received a bullet in the head from Jack's revolver that tumbled him in silence on the sand, and effectually prevented his ever chasing again. His next shot, however, was not so successful. I had two bullets left; and Jack three; the number that followed us were reduced to seven. If all our shots were sure to tell there would just be a chance of our escaping. A report from Jack's pistol and a hasty glance at our pursuers told me that he had again fired without result.

Our horses were flagging tremendously, and it was evident that the critical moment was at hand. As we still sped onwards, the arrows whizzing past, I cocked my pistol, and reined in a little to let the foremost man come within certain distance—I could afford to waste no more shots. He rapidly came up, I got an excellent aim, and fired. With a shriek and a yell of agony, he dropped, and his horse galloped past me; at the same instant my horse fell down dead, struck by an arrow or bolt; I was aware of a certain shock, my head was jammed into my shoulders, and I rolled over and over in the dust.

Half blinded, and choked with sand, I scrambled to my feet just in time to put a bullet through the body of a Tartar, who in another moment would have ridden or cut me down. As he fell his horse luckily stumbled and fell also. I rushed to him, and stifling his objections with the butt-end of my revolver, dragged him clear of his horse. In less time than I can write it I had the horse on his legs, and was scouring across the plain on his back.

In the meantime, Jack, perceiving my downfall, wheeled round, and with consummate coolness lodged one bullet most cleverly in the skull of the nearest Tartar, who dismounted another with his last. We rode on together, and were exceedingly glad to see the rest of our pursuers turn back to attend to their wounded. Our first care was to reload our revolvers. This done, we halted for a moment whilst Jack bound up my arm, which was intensely painful and bleeding profusely. Having shaken hands, and congratulated each other on our escape, our former difficulty as to the right way recurred; we could only, as before, steer by the sun, and trust to "that sweet little cherub that sits up aloft." Thus we jogged along as fast as Jack's poor horse would go. I had benefited immensely by the forcible exchange that I had made, having now a beautiful Tartar steed, with any quantity of life and vigor in him.

The loss of blood consequent on the wound was beginning to tell on me, and I was getting faint and weary, when over the tops of some distant trees I descried the pagoda of Tungchow glisten in the rays of the setting sun. Never had the sight of any object been so welcome to us as that old pagoda. How we blessed the builder of it! It was about five miles distant on our right. Therefore it was evident that during our long chase we must have been going very nearly in the right direction. However, had we not seen the pagoda we should have passed the city to the northward, and in that case it is not easy to say when we should have found it.

We now rode straight for the city, and arrived just as it had become quite dark, and it will be long before I forget that terrible day, and the chase of the Tartar cavalry.

Pleasure itself soon ceases to be pleasure when there is no object in it but pleasure.

A wife who loses her patience must not expect to keep her husband's heart.

Birds are a poor man's music; and flowers the poor man's poetry.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for benoficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bonrne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

Bradley & Rulofson's

MAGNIFICENT ESTABLISHMENT.

Has more room, larger lights, greater facilities, and

PRODUCES FINER PHOTOGRAPHS

Than any other in the City.

F. DIXEY,
Merchant Tailor,

625 WASHINGTON STREET

Cloths, Cassimores for Vestings, always on hand and made to order in the most Fashionable Styles.

Satisfaction Guaranteed

Joseph Catania & Co.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FRESH AND SALT
STALL NO. 48 FISH MARKET, Clay Commercial and Leidesdorff Streets.

A large supply of fresh fish always on hand. Shipping, Restaurants, Hotels and Families supplied at short notice, and on the most reasonable terms.
N. B.—Fish sent to any part of the city free.

GEO. A. PARKER. SAM. B. WATTSON. DAVID CONKLING.

PARKER, WATTSON & CO.,

Importers and Jobbers in

Havana & Domestic Cigars, Tobacco,

ETC.....ETC.....ETC.

Nos. 306 and 308 Clay street, one door above Front,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

Chickering & Sons' Pianos

RECEIVED THE

FIRST PREMIUM,

(Gold Medal,)

At the Paris Exposition.

FURTHERMORE, THE Improvements, Workmanship, and General Superiority of those instruments over all others on exhibition, was so marked an important, the Emperor created Mr. T. E. CHICKERING

KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOR.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

D. GHIRARDELLI & CO.'S
Italian Manufactury,

415 and 417 JACKSON ST., SAN FRANCISCO,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PLAIN, SWEET, CINNAMON AND VANILLA CHOCOLATES;

PREPARED COCOA, COCOA PASTE, CRACKED COCOA, COCOA SHELLS, etc., etc.

PURE GROUND OLD JAVA COFFEE AND COSTA RICA COFFEE;

CHARTRES AND RIO COFFEE:

GREEN COFFEE OF EVERY QUALITY.

CHOICE WINES AND LIQUORS.

N. B—Ghirardelli's Chocolate is manufactured by steam from Cocoa of the finest quality, imported direct. In excellence and delicacy of flavor, it is superior to any imported Chocolate.

PARIS EXPOSITION,
1867.
GLORIOUS NEWS

FOR

THE FLORENCE!

OFFICIAL CATALOGUE JUST RECEIVED, (September 8th) the only copy on this coast—29 days from London. FREE FOR INSPECTION.

THE FLORENCE

RECEIVED THE ONLY PREMIUM awarded to any Sewing Machine (except Button Hole Machine) for sale on the Pacific Coast.

SAMUEL HILL, Agent,
No. 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

T. B. RODGERS,
CUTLER,
108 Leidesdorff street.

Corner California, adjoining the Pacific Insurance Office, San Francisco.

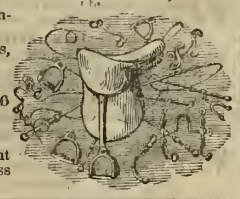
SAVE YOUR TEETH.—Do not have them extracted without first consulting a good Dentist. The loss is irreparable, and, in many instances, unnecessary. DR. BEERS, corner of Pine and Kearney streets, makes a specialty of filling the fangs of dead Teeth, and building up broken crowns with Pure Gold—thus restoring them to their original usefulness and beauty.
☞ Call and examine the work. Finest quality of artificial work also manufactured.

C. MAIN. E. H. WINCHESTER. T. B. HAYES.

Main & Winchester,

Manufacturers and Importers of

Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Collars, Saddlery Ware, etc.



Nos. 214 and 216 Battery Street,
San Francisco.

N. B.—Good assortment Concord Stage Harness constantly on hand.

BLASTING POWDER.

Price, - - - - $3 00 Per Keg.

ALSO, SPORTING, CANNON, AND MUSKET POWDER, of superior quality.

FUSE AND SHOT always on hand and for sale at the

OFFICE OF THE

CALIFORNIA POWDER WORKS,

No. 318 CALIFORNIA STREET.

JOHN F. LOHSE, Secretary.

FREE HOMESTEADS FOR ALL
ON FILING A PETITION.

UNDER THE LAWS OF MEXICO, which are now in force in this city, all the inhabitants are entitled to a HOMESTEAD LOT OF LAND, simply on petition. Justice Field has decided, and the Supreme Court of the United States has confirmed that decision, that the city of San Francisco is a Pueblo of four square leagues of land, and that the citizens thereof are the owners, which vests the right in each citizen to a lot of land for a homestead; and the undersigned have opened an office at 37 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, to enforce those rights, by petition to the Mayor, etc.; and each and every citizen can procure a Free Homestead by calling at their office and signing a petition, which will forthwith vest the right to the lot in question in them, and thereby secure to the petitioner property worth a large sum of money under the existing laws now in force.

BROOKS & MERRITT,
No. 37 New Merchants' Exchange.

N. B.—The Supreme Court of the United States have settled this question in another case, as to the ownership of the Outside Lands. In the case of J. B. Towused vs. Geo. G. Greeley, December Term, 1866, No. 124, the Court say: "It is, therefore, now the settled law that the municipal lands held by the city of San Francisco, as successors to the former Pueblo exi-ting there, are not held in absolute property, but IN TRUST for its inhabitants."

Therefore, all the inhabitants have to do, under this decision, is to ask the city, by petition, for their vested rights, as this is the only way, under the law, that they can proceed to get their property.

E. L. B. BROOKS,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

All legal business transacted in the French and Spanish languages, if desired.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT,
Wholesale Candy Manufacturers,
No. 408 CLAY STREET,

Between Sansome and Battery Sts., San Francisco.

FANCY AND COMMON CANDIES

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Sugar Toys, Figures, Animals, Birds, etc.

Are prepared to receive orders to any extent and in any desired style.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT.

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices

536 In this City,
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

TO PATRONS OF THE PRINTERS ART.

CUBERY & CO., No. 536 Market street, Opposite Second, San Francisco, are now prepared to execute all kinds of BOOK and JOB PRINTING. Having superior facilities for printing every description of work, we respectfully solicit the patronage of friends and the public generally. BRIEFS and TRANSCRIPTS correctly printed according to legal requirements.

WM. M. CUBERY,
F. W. VAN REYNEGOM.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

WM WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter

Dealer in

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &C., &C.,

735 Market Street.

Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco

C. ROBERTS,
CARRIAGE AND WAGON MAKER,

HORSE

SHOEING

AND

JOBBING

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

Fourth Street, between Howard and Folsom, San Francisco.

All styles of Carriages, Wagons and Carts made to order and Repaired.

G. E. T. GLOVE COMPANY.

FACTORY, 526 MERCHANT STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome,

Manufacture all kinds of Oil DRESSED AND INDIAN TANNED GLOVES for Gentlemen, Drivers, Teamsters, Miners and Lumbermen. Also, BUCKSKIN MITTENS, GOLD BAGS, PURSES, etc., in endless variety, and all sewed by hand. All work warranted. The Trade supplied. We warrant one pair of our manufacture to outlast two pairs of Eastern manufacture.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist

No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.

Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

☞ Use Ellery's Patent India Rubber Cement and Paint.—It is for all outside surfaces, TIN, IRON, OR METAL ROOFS; Iron however manufactured, Brick and Wooden Buildings, Ship and steamboat Painting; will not rot, peel, blister, or crack. Water proof coating for cloth roofing on tops of houses, decks of steamboats, tops of stages and cars. Cloth roofs cemented and painted for $9 per 100 square feet. New or old Tin Roofs, in good or bad condition, cemented and painted, guaranted, at $1 to $2 50 per 100 square feet.

EPES & E. H. R. ELLERY,
No. 226 Jackson street.

No Charge for Consultation.

ADOLPH CAMAN, M. D.
HOMŒOPATHIC PHYSICIAN,

ACCOUCHEUR AND SURGEON,

Devotes special attention to the diseases of Women and Children. He takes a professional pride in curing those cases which have baffled the skill of other eminent physicians.

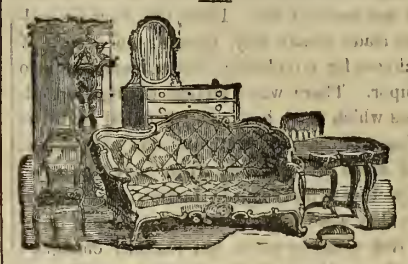
DR. CAMAN would call attention to the beneficial effects of the Homœopathic treatment in all cases of Chronic Diseases, Insanity, Paralysis, all kinds of Spasms, Delirium Tremens, and persons suffering from an unnatural thirst for spirituous liquors.

No. 26 Montgomery Street, opposite the Lick House.

NOTICE.

WE TAKE OCCASION TO INFORM OUR FRIENDS and customers that we have sold our entire stock in warehouse also invoices to arrive to Messrs. N. COLE & CO., 312 and 314 Pine steeet. The whole forms a most complete and desirable assortment of FURNITURE, and well merits attention before purchasing elsewhere.

J. PIERCE & CO.



FURNITURE.

WE beg leave to call the attention of the public to our warerooms,

Nos. 312 and 314 Pine Street.

Having purchased the entire stock of Messrs. J. Pierce & Co., and in addition to our large invoice from our factory at the East, we are prepared to fill all orders promptly, both wholesale and retail, and call the attention of the public to our salesroom, as containing the most complete assortment of desirable goods on this coast.

N. P. COLE & CO.

ZEITSKA & SHEPPARD,

Merchant Taylors,

NO. 610 CLAY STREET,

Near Montgomery,

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE "GROTTO,"
JOHN DUNCAN, Proprietor.

530 Sacramento street, opposite What Cheer House,

FINE WINES, LIQUORS, ALES AND PORTER,

Wholesale and Retail.

Importer of Wise's Celebrated Irish Whisky.

"OUR OPERA."

CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,

621 WASHINGTON STREET, 621,

SAN FRANCISCO,

Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

H. T. GRAVES,

Manufacturer of

WIRE CLOTH, COAL SCREENS, FLOUR SEIVES, QUARTZ SCREENS, for Batteries, Door and Window Screens, for excluding Flies and Mosquitos.

CLOAK, SHAWL, CLOTHING AND BONNET STANDS

Fancy Work for Gardens, and a great variety of

WIRE WORK OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.

Sole Agent for the sale and application of

BROWN'S PATENT AND METALIC WEATHER STRIPS,

For the perfect exclusion of wind, dust, and rain; ☞ And for CRAMER'S PATENT WINDOW LIFTING PLATES AND RODS.

Call and examine them at the

CALIFORNIA WIRE WORKS,
412 Clay street, San Francisco.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,
DENTIST,

No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens. North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.

N. T. WHITCOMB.

A. PARDINI,

No. 729 WASHINGTON STREET, above the Plaza, San Francisco.

Boots and Shoes Made to Order,

IN THE BEST FRENCH STYLE.

☞ The same, ready made, always on hand.

Dr. John T. Crook,

Late of the Pacific Mail service, has established himself in the practice of his profession in this city.

—OFFICE:—

S. W. corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets.

OFFICE HOURS—9 to 10 A. M.; 2 P. M.; 4 to 6 P. M.

SOTOYOME HOTEL,
B. C. WRIGHT, Proprietor, Healdsburg Cal.

GARRICK'S END.

He was bronght np to London by easy stages. He arrived at the Adelphi on the evening of the 16th of January. The next day he seut for his apothecary, Lawrence, who found him dressing and apparently better. Young O'Keefe, then newly come to London, a raw Irish lad, recollected seeing him walking briskly up and down in front of his house on the Adelphi terrrace. Yet the end was not far off. There were some alarming symptoms, which made the apothecary advise sending for Dr. Cadogan, who, when he came, prononnced the matter so uncertain and serions, that he recommended him to settle his affairs at once. Garrick answered him calmly, that nothing of that kind remained to be done, and that as for himself, he was ready to die. From that hour his malady made steady way, bringing on a sort of dullness for circulation, which increased into stnpor. There was a pictnre during that illness which mnst have long hannted his wife. Weary of ceaseless watching and attendance, she made an agreeable friend stay and dine, expecting to find some distraction in his society. As they were talking, Mr. Garrick came in, in a rich dressing-gown, but fearfully changed; his face yellow and shrunk, his eyes dim, and his gate slow and tottering. By a strange association he seemed to the guest like Lesignan, one of his old favorite characters, of the old years, when he wore just snch a dress. He sat down on the sofa wearily, remained for more than an hour, and never spoke a word. He then went back to his room, which he never left again. But greater physicians were now called—Dr. Warren and Heberden, Johnson's doctor. Many more came late, all friends, eager to give their aid by advice. When the sick man saw the face of Dr. Schomberg, he put out his hand, and, with one of his old smiles, said, "Thongh last, not least in love." Though the stnpor was gaining on him, he could at times talk calmly and cheerfully. He told one of his friends that he did not regret his having no children, for had they turned out nnkind or disobedient he conld not have supported such a trial. On the last day of his life a letter was brought in—the last he ever received, and it ran to the old story—acknowledgement of his kindness. It was from young Miss Farren. As at times the film cleared from his mind, he saw the room filled with figures, and asked who all those people were, he was told they were physicians. With a sense of the grotesqne he shook his head, and mnttered from "The Fair Penitent:"

"Another and another still snceeeds,
And the last fool is welcome as the former."

For that day he was qnite composed, and talked at intervals with exceeding tranquillity. Early the next morning, 20th January, about eight o'clock, the dreary scene of his life had shifted, and he passed gently away from this human stage where he had played so often, and always played with snch dignity.

TAYLOR'S SALOON.—This quiet retreat on Third street, a few doors from Market, has long heen the most popular resort for gentlemen of taste in liquid luxurics of any saloon south of Moatgomery street: Taylor has achieved more than mere local fame for the purity of his heverages and the superiorlty of his hrands of ale. His lunches, also, are the very embodiment of good lunches. If you want good cheer, go to "Taylor's," No. 16 Third street, southwest side.

Architectural Designs

—FURNISHED BY—

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS,

Southwest corner of Sacramento aad Kearay Streets, San Franeisco.

Asphaltum for Sale

IN ANY QUANTITY TO SUIT, BY THE

PACIFIC ASPHALTUM COMPANY,

No. 533 Kearny street, coraer of Sacramento, SAN FRANCISOO.

This Asphaltum is the purest to be found in the market, hoing frce from rock and clay, or other impurities.

Sidewalks Laid and Roofing Done at Shortest Notice.

NEUVAL & CO.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre Montgomery street, [Bstween California and Pine]

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO., 603 MONTGOMERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street, NEW YORK.

Dealers in' American, Swiss and English WATCHES,

JEWELRY AND ATERIALS.

☞We have made arrangemeats to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a diseount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches AT The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit heing the small per cent. allowed by huyiag in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

Removal! Removal!

A. J. PLATE,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer In

Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

—ALSO—

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS,

Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, etc., otc.

—HAS REMOVED TO—

NO. 510 SACRAMENTO STREET,

Between Sansome and Leidesdorff Streets, San Francisco.

☞New Work made to order, and Repairing executed n the neatest manner.

Tyler Brothers,

691 Market st., cor. Third, SAN FRANCISCO,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in SCHOOL BOOKS, STATIONERY, PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS, BLANK BOOKS, PORTFOLIOS, JUVENILE BOOKS, CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS, FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

ESPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we Stamp with Initials WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS

Engraved, Written or Printed.

JOHN DANIEL,

Marble Works,

421 PINE STREET,

(Betweon Kearny and Montgomery.)

MANTELS, MONUMENTS, TOMBS, PLUMBERS' SLABS, ETC.,

On hand and manufactured to order.

Orders respectfully solicited.

BOWEN BROS.

GROCERS,

Tea aad Wine Merchants,

S. E. cor. Montgo'ry and California, San Fraacisco.

Wholesale Store, 204 Front Street.

BUCKMAN BROS.,

(Successors to John Myers,)

CAPITOL SALOON,

226 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Opposite the Russ House

Removal.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

Machinist,

Has romoved from No. 416 Market street, to No. 10 Stevensou street, nexl to the corner of First.

Maker of Models for Inveators, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

F. D. RING,

MANUFACTURER OF

JEWELRY AND SILVER WARE,

No. 540 Market Street, adjoining the Hibernia Baak, SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of precious Stooes set in the latest style and most approved manner. Watches aud Jewelry carefully repaired by experienced workmon.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

APOTHECARIES AND CHEMISTS.
Geo S Dickey, Pioneer Apothecary, cor Ellis & Stockton
Wm. Simpson, 609 Davis st., opposite Oakland Ferry.

ARCHITECTS.
Hoaglaad & Newsom, s.w. cor Kearny and Sacramento.
McDougall & Marquis, 328 Montgomery street.

ALE, PORTER, AND CIDER.
J. H. Todman & Co., (Jobbers,) 511 Front street.

BAKERIES.
Dempsey's Bakery, 127 Fourth street,

BOOTS AND SHOES.
W. H. Hanna, (children's work,) 335 Sutter street.
Weatworth, Hohart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

BUTCHERS.
C. Wagner & Co., (Golden Gate Market,) Davis street, corner Clark.
I. Gans, "New York Market," Fourth st, near Market.

BRUSH AND BROOM MANUFACTURERS.
San Francisco Brush Factory, 211 to 217 California st.

CIGARS AND TOBACCO.
G H. Behrens & Co., 4 Kearny street, near Market.
Chas. C. Lindsey, Excelsior Store, 156 Stewart street.
M. Rosenshlae, (Wholesale and Retail,) 214 Pacific st.
Chas, Schwenke & T. Menser, 16 Stewart street.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay strcet.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commerciul.

COAL DEALERS.
S. Klein, formerly Greehood & Co, 209 Sansome street.
H. W. Newbauer, all kiads of coal, 121 Sansome street.

COACH AND CARRIAGE MATERIALS.
Waterhouse & Lester, (Dealers,) 29 and 31 Battery st.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.
Dell, Cranaa & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.
Dorman & Wolf, 426 Davis street.
George Hughes, 410 Davis street.
W. J. Lowry & Co., S.W. corner Washington and Davis.
Thos. Newell, 62 Clay street hetween Drumm and East.
J. W. Nye & Co., 219 Washington street, corner Cedar.
Chas. C. Wilson & Co., S. E. corner Clay and Davis sts.

CONFECTIONERS.
Alex. L. Ross, 121 Third street.
Baldwin & Lawlers, South Park Store. 418 Third st.
N. B. Booth & Co., 20 Kearny, near Market.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 645 Clay street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DRY GOODS.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.
H. Rothschild (Variety Store), 112 Third street.
Irving, Landers & Co., No. 4 Third street.
M. Waterman, 22 Second street, corner of Stevenson.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 523 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Derby & Johnson, northeast cor. Bnsh and Powell sts.
Fred. Lange, Family Grocer, cor. Powell and Lombard.
Lange & Butt, southwest cor. Bush and Stockton sts.
McKee's Family store, 31 Kearny, near Post.
Seacca Jones, Family Grocer, 105 Third street.
T. Williams, coraer Third and Tobama streets.
Wellman, Peck & Co., wholesale grocers, 404 Front st.
Jos. Van Doren, northeast cor. Bush aud Mason sts.

GUN-SMITHS.
W. Rudolph, Unloa Gun Store, 216 Pacific street.
Wilson & Evans, 513 Clay streat.

HAIR DRESSING SALOONS.
Prof. Smith, 114 Market street, opposite Third.

HARDWARE AND CUTLERY.
L. B. Benehley & Co., (American and Foreign,) 3 and 5 Front street.
J. S. Sesser, 138 Fourth st, het. Mission and Howard.

HATTERS.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Moatgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
Grant & Smith, 26 Market and 19 Sacramento sts.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.
George Morrow & Co., 21 Clay and 23 Commercial sts.
Wm.H. Nichols, 18 Sacramento, and 17 Commorcial.

HOTELS.
Atlantic House, John McManus, 210 aad 212 Pacific st.
"Branch," M. O'Neil, 12 Sutter street.
Brooklya, Joha Kelly, Jr., Sansome, cornor Pine.
Chicago, Droste & Pfefferle, 220 Pacific street.
Empire House, Peter Thompson, 106 Jackson street.
Franklin Hotel, Hugh Curran, cor Sansome & Pacific.
Franklin House, C. Maloney, cor. Br'dway & Sansome.
Golden Gate Hotel, J. Blackman, 728 Market street
Mariner's Home, Brown & Chandler, 504 and 506 Davis.
"Oriental," H. Saxtorph & Co., Washington & Drumm.
Sanders' Hotel, J. P; Sanders, 24 Sucramento st.

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER.
James R. Kelly, 38 California street.
Michael English, 414 Pine street.

HARNESS AND SADDLE MANUFACTURERS.
A. B. Bois, 510 Davis strect,
D. Feunel, 522 Battery street, opposite the Post Offlcc.

INSURANCE.
Firemen's Fund Ins. cor. Califoraia and Sansome.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agets, 206 Front, cor. Cal.
North British Mercantilc, S. E. cor Sansome & Califor'
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LADIES' FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.
S. Summerfield, 20 Second strect, and 116 Kearny.
Thomas Collinson, 160 Third, near Howard street.

LIVERY STABLES.
Central Stable, Washburn & Co., 207 and 209 Sutter st.
Gardner & Finch, 211 and 213 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Davis, cor. Mission & Spear sts.

MARBLE WORKERS.
P. Kelly, 12 Fourth strect.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnsoa, Odd-Fellow's Hall, 325 Moatg'ry st.

MILLINERS.
Miss A. A. Craddock, 4 Virginia Block, Stockton street.

MUSIC TEACHERS.
Prof. J. R. Boullet, Pianist and Vocalist, 1320 Stockton.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibboy, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
H. Bush, coraer Post, Market and Montgomery streets.
Hicks & Staring, 143 Fourth street.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
Kohler, Chase & Co., 421 Montgomery strcet.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Secoad.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

PLUMBERS AND GAS FITTERS.
Chas. Barman, 121 Fourth street, near Minna.

PRINT SELLER AND PUBLISHER.
Thomas H. Lawlor, Sceond street, near Howard.

PAINT MANUFACTURERS.
Epes & Ellery, dealers in paints, etc, 226 Jackson st.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY, CONTINUED.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 M
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Market, by Haozo & Besson, 520 Merchant street
The Opera, J. Weiss, 335 Pine street.

SALOONS.
Beck's Saloon, 504 Drumm street, near Pacific.
Blancy & Carroll, "Sample Rooms," 107 Third street.
"Bourbon Saloon," A. Farr, Long Bridge.
Charley Smith's Saloon, 539 Washington street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N.E. cor Third and Howard
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.
Cleveland's Sample Rooms, 318 Bush, above Monty.
"Excelsior," Haase & Co., cor. Drum and Commercial.
Fourth Street Exchange, Chas. F. Slater, 245 Fourth st.
J. P. Levin's Saloon, northwest cor. Battery & Br'dwy
J. Dillon, "Fourth St. Exchange," cor. F'rth and Mkt.
King & McCormick, "Rotunda," Market & O'Farrell.
E. H. Murphy's Saloon, cor. Third and Stevenson sts.
"Manadnock," A. Horstkemper, Drumm & Oregon sts.
P. Johnson & J. B. Holje, 28 Clay street.
Peter Ring's Saloon, California street, below Drumm.
Regatta House, Burns & McLean, foot of Third street.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Riog's Saloon, Peter Ring, cor California, below Drumm.
Uncle Billy & George, Saloon 707 Davis st.
"Young American," Geo. C. W. Heuer, Stewart & Howard

SCALES.
Fairhanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairhanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.

STATIONERS AMD BOOKBINDERS.
Jas. E. Damon & Co., 521 and 423 Sansome street.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TRUNK MANUFACTORY.
James Longshore, 428 Kearny street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bonrae's Pioneer, 10 Post. near Montgomery.

WAX FLORIST.
Mrs. M. E. Gerrish, 11 Post street.

WHOLESALE WINE AND LIQUOR DEALERS.
Campbell & Co., 629 Front st., bet Jackson and Pacific.
Henry M. Cutter, Importer, 520 Front street.

WHOLESALE UPHOLSTERERS.
D. N. & E. Walters, 13 Battery street, corner Bush.

A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

W. E. BRIDGE,

St. Lawrence Stables,

212 Sutter street, between Kearny and Dupont, SAN FRANCISCO.

JOHN H. TODMAN & CO.,

Successors to JAMES MEARS.

ALE, PORTER AND CIDER

BOTTLING ESTABLISHMENT,

511 Front Street.

A large stock of Champagne Cider on hand, in glass and bulk.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

—OF—

MACCARONI,
VERMICELLI,
PASTE, and
FARINA

First Premium in 1857—1859—1864—1865.

Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co.,

706 SANSOME STREET,

San Francisco.

M. H. QUINN,

HAT MANUFACTURER,

127 Fourth street, bet. Howard and Mission, San Francisco.

Dress Silk Hats for Ladies or Gentlemen Manufactured to order, Cleaned or Renovated, at reasonable prices.

THE SANCY DIAMOND.

The great Sancy diamond, which stands ninth in the glittering and very restricted aristocracy of the world's big diamonds, is to be sold, and while it is on show at one of the first jewelers, the story of its life and tronbles travels round Paris. And, indeed, since it was found on the battlefield in the sword-hilt fallen from Charles le Téméraire's dying hand, its vicissitudes have been great, and far too numerous to recount in full. At one time Henry IV. borrowed it from De Sancy, to give it as gaurantee to the Swiss for the troops they had lent him; and the messenger to whom De Sancy confided it disappeared before he reached the King. A long and anxious time elapsed before any one learned what had become of the faithful servant, but it was at last discovered that he had been attacked and assassinated. The body was fonnd. exhumed. opened, and in the stomach lay poor Sancy! The messenger had swollowed it, to preserve it from the hands of the assassins. The precious stone went on leaping from impossibility, until it reaches the scene of its last trouble, which is laid in Lyons, about twenty years ago. Monsieur le Comte Demidoff and his wife were visiting Lyons with the amiable writer Jules Janin. The day was hot, and the Comtesse threw off her shawl, and, taking out the pin, in which was mounted the celebrated diamond, asked Jules Janin to put the jewel in his pocket. They passed the day looking at the sights of the town, and in the evening went to the theatre. Apropos, mon ami, said the Count, between the acts, did you give the pin to the Comtesse? Poor Jules Janin bonnded on his seat, plunged his hands convulsively into his waistcoat pockets, and then, without uttering a word, rushed from the box. Dnring his headlong course back to the hotel all the incidents of the day, all the horrors of his situation, pressed on his brain like a nightmare. He remembered that after their walk he changed his dress; that he had left the door of his room open, because the garcon was coming to arrange it; that the waistcoat containing the diamond had been thrown npon a chair; that the blanchisseuse was due that day; and that the waistcoat was to be washed. A complication of horrors! His fears were groundless; he found his door open; he had procured no light in his haste, but rushed into the darkness toward the fatal chair, when he perceived that the room was full of bright rays, and flashing and glittering on the floor, lay the Sancy. The garcon had arranged the room, the blanchisseuse had come, the waistcoat had been taken to be washed; but the diamond had slipped ont and was saved, and so was Jules Janin. But he still remembers with horror the episode of the Sancy diamond.

THE SNUG.—"The Snug" has been located one door below Maguire's Opera House, for ten years past. It was established for the convenience of the habituates of the Opera House, and has the reputation of dispensing the best wines and liquors in the city, under the charge of its present proprietor, Mr. Timothy McCarty. Entrances from various parts of the Opera House to the bar have been cut, for the convenience of the public. Mr. McCarty gives his entire attention to his guests, and renders his establishment a "Snug" place by day or night.

BUILDER'S INSURANCE CO.

OFFICE IN THE BUILDING OF THE CALIFORNIA SAVINGS BANK, CALIFORNIA ST., one door from Sansome.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

Builders' Insurance Company,

OFFICE, CALIFORNIA STREET, NOV. 1, 1867.

EDITOR OF THE CALIFORNIAN:—Sir—Permit me to report two months' progress of the BUILDERS' INSURANCE COMPANY.

Total amount received.....$44,009 11
Total amount of Losses..... 22,778 65

Balance in favor of the Company on two months' business.....$16,230 56

All which I trust will be satisfactory to my friends, enemies, and the public. Respectfully,

THOMAS MOONEY, PRESIDENT.

AMERICAN HOTEL, Main street, Petalnma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

ST. CHARLES RESTAURANT,

At the Hotel of C. Galliand, Nos. 507 and 509 Pine Street, between Kearny and Dupont streets.

BY MME. CAZINTRE.

☞ All who will call at this Restaurant will find an excellent table and prompt attention.

California Coffee and Dining Saloon.

Nos. 612 and 614 MONTGOMERY STREET, Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.
J. R. REAGAN, Proprietor.

A Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot en chafing disbes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.
French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

ITALIAN RESTAURANT,

No. 515 Merchant Street,

Between Montgomery and Sansome, San Francisco.

Taglierini, Maccaroni, Risotto and Ravioli, In the Italian Style.

MEALS FIFTY CENTS, OR TO ORDER.

Rooms for private parties up stairs.
MR. GUISEPPE CADENASSO.

LEON DINGEON. F. W. HAUBRICK.

DINGEON & HAUBRICK,

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET.

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties.

NEW RESTAURANT.

MR. SORBIER takes pleasure in informing his friends and customers that be bas opened a FIRST-CLASS RESTAURANT under the name of

SORBIER'S RESTAURANT,

at No. 607 SACRAMENTO STREET, above Montgomery, where he will be pleased to see his old friends and the public in general, and where all can be assured that they will be served with the very best the market affords, at most reasonable rates. JOHN E. SORBIER,
Late of the Occidental Restaurant.

F. C. BELDEN,

Of the well-known Family Depot, 612 Sacramento street, has opened the

SUMMER STREET RESTAURANT

at the northeast corner of Spring and Summer Sts.

☞ Meals to order, and by the plate. Wines and Liquors of the best quality.

OCCIDENTAL RESTAURANT,

536 Washington Street, below Montgomery.

GEORGE WITTMAN would inform the public and the former patrons of this POPULAR RESTAURANT

That he bas assumed full charge, and will continue to keep all the delicacies of the season and one of the best lists of WINES, etc., and solicits the continuance of their patronage.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

JOHN WIELAND, Proprietor

MRS. C. COOK,

FIRST PREMIUM HAIR JEWELRY,

519 Montgomery street,

Between Clay and Commercial.....SAN FRANCISCO.

REESE W. GLUYAS. S. E. DUTTON.

GLUYAS & DUTTON,

COUNTING HOUSE STATIONERS,

Fireman's Fund Insurance Company's Building,

No. 227 Sansome Street.....San Francisco.

PRO BONO PUBLICO.

LACOUR'S

SARSAPARIPHERE

BITTERS

POSSESS INVALUABLE PROPERTIES.

They give Health to the Sick,

Strength to the Weak,

Joy to the Afflicted,

☞SOLD EVERYWHERE.☜

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street, between California and Pine.

Belden's Family Depot for Domestic Luxuries.

AT this depot are, all should know,
For him who strong or faint is,
Superior grub—for home or club—
And every kind of dainties.
Westphalia hams, fresh oysters, clams,
Constituents of chowder,
Fine breakfast tea, and hominy,
And genuine curry powder.
Oil, mustard, wine, both French and Rhine,
Lard, coffee, ketchup, capers.
Crushed sugar, peas, and Switzer cheese,
And sperm and waxen tapers.
The giblets, pinck, of goose and duck,
Of woodcock, snipe and plovers,
Of partridge, too, and cockatoo—
The last express for lovers!
It seems absurb there scarce a bird—
My rhyme this somewhat ruffles—
Bnt Belden's got in tin or pot,
The LIVER of with TRUFFLES.
Prnnes, raisins, rice, preserves and spice,
Gin, whisky, rnm and brandy,
Drinks made of malt, and table salt,
Tongues, sausages, and candy.
Above's not all to which I'd call
Particular attention.
Le vin d'elite, Chatean Lafitte,
And others, I wonld mention.
Surpassing fine Madeira wine,
St. Julien, port and sherry,
Cbateaux Margaux and Veuve Clicquot,
Old apple jack and cherry.
La Rose, Chablis, and Burgundy
Botb wbite, and red and sightly,
Prime Hermitage of ripe old age,
Still, sparkling too and sprightly.
Santerne, medoc, still sparkling hock,
Johannesberg, Hockheimer,
Tben sirs and dames (these German names
Would craze an Englisb rhymer!)
Jnst come and bny, snd cease to sigh
For Egypt and its fleshpots;
Ne'er better fare did Pharoh share,
Or any otber despots.

ET CETERA
No. 652 Sacramento Street.

First Premium

AWARDED BY THE STATE FAIR TO

SILAS SELLECK,

FOR THE BEST PLAIN PHOTOGRAPH.

—ALSO—

SPECIAL PREMIUM

For the Best Cabinet Portraits.

MR. SELLECK is now prepared to execute the very best PHOTOGRAPHS, in all the different styles, at No. 415 Montgomery Street.
N. B.—The best Water Color and India Ink Artist in this city is attached to this Gallery.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S STEAMSHIPS FOR

NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Brannan-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.
On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.
When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.
Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.
Departure of 18th or 19th is expected to connect with the French Transatlantic Co.'s steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.
Departure of 10th is expected to connect with English steamer for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America. Through tickets can be obtained.

STEAMERS FOR NOVEMBER.

Nov. 9—CONSTITUTION, Capt. J. M. Caverly, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.
Nov. 18—MONTANA, Capt. E. T. Farnsworth, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Connor.
Nov. 30—GOLDEN CITY, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with ARIZONA, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.
Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.
These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.
Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained of P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.
For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.
The steamship GREAT REPUBLIC, Capt. S. Doane, will be dispatched on December 4th, from wharf, corner of First and Brannan streets, for YOKOHAMA and HONGKONG; connecting at Yokohama with the steamer COSTA RICA, for SHANGHAI.
For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

C. F. HAYWARD,
—DEALER IN—
Harness, Saddles, etc.,
305 BATTERY STREET,
Near Sacramento,
San Francisco.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company,

OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

—OFFICE—

S. W. cor. California and Sansome streets.

CAPITAL, $500,000, FULLY PAID IN GOLD COIN.

INSURE MARINE RISKS

Under Open Policies, on Cargoes, Treasure, Freights, Profits, and Commissions.

—ALSO—

ISSUE POLICIES ON TIME, VOYAGE AND HARBOR RISKS ON HULLS.

INSURE AGAINST LOSS BY FIRE

On Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Wares, and other Personal Property.

FIRE, MARINE, HARBOR, AND INLAND TRANSIT RISKS,

On terms as favorable as any other reliable First-Class Company.

Greatest amount taken on any one risk, $50,000. Portions of Risks considered too large, will be re-insured in responsible Companies.

LOSSES PROMPTLY PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!

D. J. STAPLES, President,
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

HAMBURG, BREMEN,
Fire Insurance Company.

CAPITAL, - - - - $1,000,000

MORRIS SPEYER, Agent.

OFFICE—526 Washington Street, a few doors below Montgomery.....San Francisco.

Being no longer governed by the Tariff of the Board of Underwriters, this Company will effect Insurances at as LOW RATES as those of any other responsible Company.

OCCIDENTAL

Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

FIRE INSURANCE.

Manhattan Fire & Marine Insurance

OF NEW YORK.

Incorporated.....1821.
Cash capital.....$500,000
Surplus..... 650,000

Total Assets, over.....$1,190,000

The above named responsible and well known Company has complied with the law of the State of California, and has deposited $75,000 as additional security for policy holders,
Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, and other property insured against loss or damage by Fire, on the most favorable terms. Also, Insurance on Merchandise, Specie and Freight to or from all parts of the world. Losses promptly adjusted and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., General Agents,
206 Front street, corner of California.

J. CUTBERLET,
CUSTOM
BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

—ALSO—

FRENCH SCREWED BOOTS AND SHOES,

No. 546 Washington Street, near Montgomery Street.

The finest quality of CUSTOM WORK neatly executed. Always on hand other fine work ready made.

JOSEPH FREDERICKS

CARPET AND UPHOLSTERY STORE,

PAPER HANGINGS, ETC.,

123 Kearny St., between Sutter and Post, San Francisco

FAMILIES ARE INVITED TO EXAMINE

OUR VARIED ASSORTMENT

Of the Finest Carpeting in the State. The best of taste displayed in Decoration and the unique Upholstering of Rooms, Halls and Public Buildings, and at prices conforming to the times. Call and examine goods.

A Nannie Goat's Taste—Sudden Disappearance of One Hundred and Fifty Dollars in Greenbacks—A Goat Swallows Them.—An honest and well-to-do citizen of South Brooklyn recently leased a house, and, having ample verdure round his place, it occurred to him that there was now a fine opportunity for maintaining a goat, which would furnish his little family with milk. Acting upon this idea, Mr. Shay, such being the name of the party, purchased a fine nannie goat, which for a week or so was the delight of the children, while the milk furnished, which is excellent for tea or coffee, give great comfort to the elder members. A few days since Mr. Shay had received in payment a roll of bills, amounting in the aggregate to $600.

On entering the basement of his abode he laid the package of money on the kitchen table thoughtlessly, and went into an apjoining room. Meanwhile the goat rambled round in search of some fresh "cud to chew"—as goats are want to do—espying the pile of greenbacks, as it lay near the edge of the table she made for it. Slowly and carefully she nibbled, detaching note from note in the hight of goatlike feeling, relishing each bill with evident gusto, as though conscions of the extravagant morsel undergoing mastication. After a short absance the owner ot the money re-entered the room, when his horror is easier imagined than described at the havoc made in his earnings. An investigation revealed the fact that $150 of the money had been utterly destroyed by the quadruped in question. The facts above stated are entirely reliable.—New York News.

Cocomungo Saloon.—The famous Cocomungo Wine, together with the choicest liquors and cigars, are offered to the public at this Saloon, No. 536 Merchant street, Montgomery Block. A Hot Lunch, equal to any set forth in San Francisco, every day from 11 to 2 o'clock. A Reading Room, abundantly supplied with the daily, weekly, and leading Eastern journals, is one of the attractions of the Cocomungo. J. M. WASHBURN, Agent.

Carrington's Yeast Powders

ARE THE BEST IN THE MARKET.

Try them if you do not believe it.

J. LANDSBERGER, Sole Agent,
429 Jackson Street.

R. T. HOUSTON,

Merchant Tailor,

No. 414 BUSH STREET,
Between Kearny and Dupont, San Francisco.

Steam Scouring, Cleansing and Repairing neatly executed.

Also—Ladies' Cloth Dressea and Cloaks neatly Cleaned and Pressed, or Mis-Fits altered.

Great Reduction

IN PRICES OF

BOOTS AND SHOES.

On account of the widening of Kearny Street, we are compelled to remove. Before doing so, we will sell at retail our entire stock of boots and shoes at the lowest

WHOLESALE PRICES.

HOLCOMBE & KAST,
Corner Washington and Kearney steets.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,

SANSOME STREET, San Francisco.

FIRE PROOF.

Two Hundred Rooms well Ventilated and Richly Furnished.

Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.

The Exchange Coach, with Red Lights, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel Free of Hange.

The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully inform the traveling public that the

AMERICAN EXCHANGE

Is now and will continue as it ever has been, the most comfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the tate. TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

Peter Short,

FASHIONABLE AND PRACTICAL TAILOR,
613 WASHINGTON STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny, San Francisco.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ANN LEEDOM, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, awarding the care and custody of her daughter Julia to plaintiff, and allowing her to resume her maiden name.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 7th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

[SEAL.] WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By Octavius Bell, Deputy Clerk.

Geo. W. Tyler, Plaintiff's Attorney. s14-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JOHN L. TAGGARD, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of E. W. Taggard, the administrator of the estate of John L. Taggard, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of dministration have been duly paid; and that n portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of the said John L. Taggard, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on TUESDAY, the 19th day of November, A. D. 1867, at two o'clock P. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said John L. Taggard, deceased, according to law:

And it is further ordered, That n copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said nineteenth day of November, A. D. 1867, in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated October 18th, 1867.

Messrs. Winans & Belknap, Att'ys for Petitioner.
oct19-26 nov2 9-16

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of HENRY BENTZ, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate left unadministered of Henry Bentz, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell some portion of the real estate, to pay the debts, expenses and charges of the administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 26th day of November, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

Dated October 24th, 1867,

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court, in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Court, this 24th day of October, A. D. 1867.

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. Jeguers, Deputy Clerk.

J. F. Finn, Esq., Att'y for Petitioner. oct26-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JEAN VICTOR SUBERVEILLE, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Lucae Ponton de Arce, Administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the Administrator to pay the debts, charges and expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts, charges and expenses, and because after the sale of so much of said estate as shall be necessary to pay such debts, charges and expenses, the residue thereof would be of such a character with reference to its future disposition among the heirs of said deceased as clearly to render it for the best interest of all concerned that the same should be sold, and for other reasons set forth in said petition.

It is ordered that all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court, at the Court room thereof, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 25th day of November, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., of that day, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And it is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the city and county aforesaid.

Done in open Court this 25th day of October, A. D. 1867.

oct26-5w M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

W. C. Burnett, Attorney for Administrator.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS. — ESTATE OF J. KING ROBINSON, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of J. King Robinson, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator, at southeast corner of Stockton and Geary streets, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated San Francisco, September 30th, 1867.

THOS. A. ROBINSON.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, Stato of California.

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of JOSEPHINE M. RICHARDSON, a Minor.

It appearing to the said Court by the petition this day presented and filed by William Harney, the guardian of and for Josephine M. Richardson, a Minor, praying for an order of sale of the real estate, that it is necessary to sell a portion of the real estate of said Minor, to pay the claims now outstanding against it, and that such sale is also necessary to provide for the maintenance and education of the said Minor.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said Minor, appear before the said Probate Court, on MONDAY, the 18th day of November, A. D., 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenon, of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, in the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the aforesaid William Harney, guardian, to sell so much of the real estate of the said Minor as shall be necessary.

And it is further ordered, that a copy of the foregoing order be published at least four successive weeks in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county of San Francisco.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated October 14th, 1867.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of AMELIA MOSS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, Administrator, with the will annexed of Amelia Moss, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the devisees and legatees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on MONDAY, the twenty fifth day of November, A. D. 1867, at two o'clock, P. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the devisees and legatees of the said deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said twenty-fifth day of November, A. D. 1867, in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated October 25th, A. D. 1867.

Messrs. Winans & Belknap, Attorneys for Petitioner.
oct26-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MARY GAFFNEY, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, the Executor of the Estate of Mary Gaffney, deceased, some times known as Grace Wellington, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor, at his place of business, at the office of Winans & Belknap, northwest corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated San Francisco, October 19th, 1867.

HENRY RAYMOND,
Executor of the Estate of Mary Gaffney
Winans & Belknap, Attorneys for Executor.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOHN W. CROSLEY, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Executor of the last will of the estate of John W. Crosley, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executor, at his place of business, southwest corner of Market and Fremont streets, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated October 18th, 1867.

L. L. TREADWELL,
Executor of the last will of John W. Crosley, deceased.
J. W. Brumagim, Esq., Attorneyy for Executor.
oct19 26 nov2 9-16

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of WM. D. PALMER, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Samuel L. Palmer, the administrator of the estate of William D. Palmer, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and those persons entitled, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said William D. Palmer, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the ninth day of December, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said William D. Palmer, deceased, and the persons entitled, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said ninth day of December, A. D. 1867, in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 7th, 1867

A. J. Gunnison, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
nov9 16 23 30 dec7

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of WILLIAM LOBB, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator of the Estate of William Lobb, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that n portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled.

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said William Lobb, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on WEDNESDAY, the eleventh day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said William Lobb, deceased, according to law:

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said eleventh day of December, A. D. 1867, in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 1st, 1867.

J. T. Finn, Attorney for Petitioner. nov2 5w

Administrator's Sale of Real Estate.

OLNEY & CO., Auctioneers.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, in the State of California, made on the twenty-third day of October, A. D. 1867, in the matter of the estate of CLAUDE JACQUIN, deceased, the undersigned, Administrator of said estate, will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, in one parcel, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on MONDAY, the 18th day of November, A. D. 1867, at 12 o'clock, noon, at the auction rooms of MESSRS. OLNEY & CO., No. 418 Montgomery street, in said City and County of San Francisco, all the right, title, interest and estate of the said intestate at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has by operation of law or otherwise acquired other than, or in addition to that of the said intestate at the time of his death, in and to all that lot or parcel of land, situate, lying and being in the said City and County, and described as follows, to wit:

Commencing on the northwesterly line of King street, at a point distant on said northwesterly line of King street, forty five feet and ten inches southwesterly from the southwesterly line of Fourth street; thence running northeasterly along said northwesterly line of King street, forty five feet and ten inches; thence at right angles northwesterly, one hundred and twenty feet; thence at right angles southwesterly, forty-five feet and ten inches; and thence at right angles southeasterly one hundred and twenty feet to the point of commencement.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE, CASH—Ten per cent. of the purchase money to be paid to the Auctioneer on the day of sale, balance on confirmation of sale by said Probate Court. Deed at expense of purchaser.

WILLIAM ROWAN,
Administrator of the Estate of Claude Jacquin, deceased.
San Francisco, October 26th, 1867.

OLNEY & CO., Auctioneers,
418 Montgomery street,

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF EDWARD A MAGRATH, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of EDWARD A. MAGRATH, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his office and place of transaction of business, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated October 24th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Administrator of the estate of Edward A. Magrath, deceased. oct26-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS — ESTATE OF MARIA MACK, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of Maria Mack, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his office and place of transaction of business, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated October 24th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Administrator of the Estate of Maria Mack, deceased.
oct26 5w

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES.

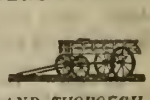
CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

George P. Kimball & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS

....OF....



CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, STAGE AND THOROUGH BRACE WAGONS,

Market street, near corner of Fourth, San Francisco.

DICKEY'S

CREME DE LIS

DE CALIFORNIE.

FOR CLEANSING AND PRESERVING THE TEETH, Beautifying the Complexion, and removing Freckles, Eruptions, Sunburn, and Tan.

A New Combination, equal to the best French preparations, and free from their poisonous ingredients.

Invented by GEO. S. DICKEY, Chemist,
Corner of Market, Stockton, Ellis and Fourth streets,
San Francisco.

The Ladies are of one mind in pronouncing BOWMAN'S AMERICAN WASHING COMPOUND the best preparation for washing and cleaning in use. It is acknowledged to be a saving both in money and labor. The Compound softens the dirt, consequently the clothes require not more than one-half the rubbing necessary in washing by the old method; besides all who give it a trial acknowledge that their clothes are made whiter in washing with this Compound, than they were ever known to be by using any other preparation. For washing Woolen Goods and Flannels it cannot be equaled. Calicoes that can be washed with soap, without feding, are washed in the water used for boiling the white clothes. This Compound has been used in the eastern States for the past three years with perfect success. Warranted not to injure the clothes. For sale by all Grocers.

LYNCH & PARSONS, Agents,
Jackson street, near Battery.

NEW MODE OF HORSE SHOEING.—A great change is about to take place in the mode of horse shoeing in Paris, it having long been understood that the method in present use is extremely defective. A man named Charlier has had the idea of altogether disembarrassing the hoof of the awkward appendage of a shoe, which not only impedes the movements, but also deprives the animal of a certain amount of steadiness and elasticity. Charlier does not cut the hoof, but leaves it just as nature forms it. He merely protects it against violent blows and accidents, and against the wear and tear of the Paris pavement, by enclosing it in a thin circle of iron, which wards it from danger without compressing it. In this way the horse standsupon a healthy member instead of upon one which is being constantly wounded by the iron and knife of the smith. Not only does this simple invention spare much time and money, but also acts as a preventive against the various diseases of the foot.

HOW BOAT RACERS ARE TRAINED.—The Ward Brothers, who won the boat race at Springfield last week, went through a severe training for that contest. For several weeks they eat lean mutton and beef, careful always to avoid fat; had no pepper, spices or any condiments in their food, and only a little salt; abjured vinegar, and all other acids, as well as tobacco in every form; drink little water at their meals, or at any other time, and no strong liquors, except occasionally a little Scotch ale or claret; took exercise systematically, with an muscular power and after every exercise were persistently "rubbed down," as a well attended horse would be. This discipline had attained such complete results that the brothers were able to row six miles with scarcely a quickening of the pulse.

M. S. WHITING. F. G. BERRY.

Whiting & Berry,

609 Sacramento Street, two doors above Montgomery,

Tea. Wine and Spirit Merchants,

Importers and Wholesale Dealers in fine Brandies, Whiskies, Gins, Port, Sherry and Champagne Wines, Ale, Porter, Cider, Bitters, Cordials, Syrup, etc., for medicinal and family use, and suppliers to Families, Apothecaries, Physicians, City and Country Dealers, Hotels, Clubs, etc., in large or small quantities.

Observe Firm Name on each cork and fac simile signature on label.

[Trade Mark Registered.] WHITING & BERRY.

This is the only exclusive TEA, WINE AND SPIRIT STORE on the Pacific Coast.

It is neither a saloon or sample room, (as no wine or spirits are permitted to be drank on the premises,) but a depot where selected Teas and Pure Wines and Spirits may be procured at wholesale or retail for medicinal and family use. In this respect it is our aim to vie with Binninger & Co., New York, Bigelow & Dawes, London, and Cozzen & Co., of Washington, where every facility is offered to ladies as well as gentlemen in making their own selections and purchases in quantities to suit.

N. B.—Our Treatise on Wines, Spirits and Teas, may be had at our depot gratis, and will be mailed to consumers and dealers in the interior when requested.

WHITING & BERRY,
609 Sacramento Street, second door above Montgomery.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.

The Hat wearing community are invited to examine the Stock at the above store, and in quality, style and price,

THEY DEFY COMPETITION!

Their Stock embraces all of the latest "novelties" and Standard Styles to be found elsewhere.

"THE" HAT STORE,
647 Washington Street.

NOTICE!

Not Out of Business—Only Removed.

Pioneer Steam Marble Works Com'y

HAVE REMOVED

Their Marble Mantel Warerooms from No. 546 California street to their extensive Steam Factory,

422 and 424 Jackson Street,

Where they keep constantly on hand the best and most select stock of

MARBLE MANTELS AND GRATES, HEADSTONES AND MONUMENTS.

Our Steam facilities enable us to sell better work at reduced prices than that manufactured by hand.

422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Between Montgomery and Sansome.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

Wholesale & Retail Confectioners,

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the state. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prises. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

AYER'S PILLS

ARE PARTICULARLY ADAPTED to derangements of the Digestive Apparatus, and diseases arising from Impurity of the Blood. A large part of all the complaints that afflict mankind originate in one of these, and consequently these PILLS are found to cure many varieties of Disease. They are sugar-coated, and hence may be taken readily by the most sensitive and delicate persons.

Subjoined are the statements from some eminent physicians, of their effects in their practice:

AS A FAMILY PHYSIC.

From Dr. E. W. Cartwright, of New Orleans—Your Pills are the prince of purges. Their excellent qualities surpass any cathartic we possess. They are mild, but very certain and effectual in their action on the bowels, which makes them invaluable to us in the daily treatment of disease.

FOR JAUNDICE AND ALL LIVER COMPLAINTS.

From Dr. Theodore Bell, of New York City—Not only are your Pills admirably adapted to their purpose as an aperient, but I find their beneficial effects upon the Liver very marked indeed. They have in my practice proved more effectual for the cure of Bilious Complaints than any one remedy I can mention. I sincerely rejoice that we have at length a purgative which is worthy the confidence of the profession and the people.

DYSPEPSIA—INDIGESTION.

From Dr. Henry J. Knox, of St. Louis—The Pills you were kind enough to send me have been all used in my practice, and have satisfied me that they are truly an extraordinary medicine. So peculiarly are they adapted to the diseases of the human system, that they seem to work upon them alone. I have cured some cases of Dyspepsia and Indigestion with them, which had resisted the other remedies we commonly use. Indeed I have experimentally found them to be effectual in almost all the complaints for which you recommend them.

FOR HEADACHE—SICK HEADACHE—FOUL STOMACH—PILES—DROPSY—PLETHORA—PARALYSIS—FITS—DYSENTERY—DIARRHŒA—RELAX—Etc., Etc.

From Dr. Edward Boyd, Baltimore—Dear Dr. Ayer: I cannot answer you what complaints I have cured with your Pills better than to say all that we ever treat with a purgative medicine. I place great dependence on an effectual cathartic in my daily contest with disease, and believe as I do that your Pills afford us the best we have, I of course value them highly.

☞ Most of the Pills in market contain mercury, which although a valuable remedy in skillful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. Those contain no mercury or mineral substances whatever.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine everywhere.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco.
Wholesale Agents.

PRO BONO PUBLICO.

LACOUR'S

SARSAPARIPHERE

BITTERS

POSSESS INVALUABLE PROPERTIES.

They give Health to the Sick,

Strength to the Weak,

Joy to the Afflicted.

☞SOLD EVERYWHERE.☜

$100 00

SAVED in a very Short Time by using

STANDARD SOAP CO.'S
WASHING POWDER.

TRY IT!

Does Not Injure the Clothes.
Sold Everywhere.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE, 533
CLAY STREET.

Cards, Billheads, Circulars, Books, Briefs, Transcripts, Posters, Bills of Fare Envelopes, Letter and Note Headings, Tickets, Pamphlets, and all Legal Papers printed at short notice, and upon reasonable terms.

Asphaltum for Sale

IN ANY QUANTITY TO SUIT, BY THE

PACIFIC ASPHALTUM COMPANY,

No. 533 Kearny street, corner of Sacramento,
SAN FRANCISCO.

This Asphaltum is the purest to be found in the market, being free from rock and clay, or other impurities.

Sidewalks Laid and Roofing Done at Shortest Notice.

NEUVAL & CO.

IRON SHUTTER WORKS,

Established 1849.

John Upstone,

MANUFACTURER OF FIRE-PROOF

Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Balconies, Gratings, Prison Cells, Awnings, Stairs, Iron Fence, etc.,

Corner of California and Drumm Streets,
San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

Pioneer Iron Shutter Works,

ESTABLISHED 1849.

CALVIN NUTTING,

Manufacturer of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS & SHUTTERS,

STEEL LINED BANK VAULTS,

Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc.

123 Bush street, between Sansome and Battery,
San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

Pioneer Iron Works,

CORNER OF MARKET AND FREMONT STREETS,
San Francisco.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT

Manufacturers of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS, SHUTTERS, BANK VAULTS, PRISON CELLS, BALCONIES, GRATINGS, IRON FENCE, STAIRS, Etc.

BURGLAR PROOF BANK VAULT LOCKS

Constantly on had, a large assortment of Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

BAURHYTE & McAFEE,

Steam Boiler and Sheet Iron

WORKS.

Owned and conducted by Practical Boiler Makers.

HIGH AND LOW-PRESSURE BOILERS, STATIONARY AND MARINE.

Howard street, bet. Fremont and Beale, San Francisco.

Having had twenty two years experience in this business, we feel confident of being able to compete—as to quality of work—with any establishment on the Pacific Coast.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

MADISON & BURKE'S

REGULAR WEEKLY LIST

OF REAL ESTATE FOR SALE,

SINCE LAST REGULAR ADVERTISEMENT.

We have better opportunities to sell Real Estate than any other office in the city; dealing with so many tenants and landlords, and being so well known throughout the country, we frequently make sales where they would not otherwise have been made. Parties purchasing will find it to their advantage to call, and examine our list, for we have property of all descriptions, and all prices, in various parts of the city. We only desire to make a fair commission, and DEAL ON THE SQUARE with both Seller and Buyer.

HOUSES TO LET.

In all parts of the city, and at all prices, from five dollars a month upwards. Especial attention paid to this branch of our business. Ladies will receive every information. Landlords cannot but see the advantage of placing houses in our charge, as so many persons visit our office for the purpose of getting houses. Besides we have a very large number of tenants, who visit our office to pay rent and then see our list of houses.

RENTS COLLECTED. Large and small. Bad paying and destructive tenants made to move in short time, which is well known to this class of tenants.

MADISON & BURKE,
316 Montgomery street,
Between Pine and California.

J. H. MADISON, Late Hoags & Madison. MARTIN J. BURKE, Late Chief of Police.

OFFICE OF CITY LETTER DELIVERY COMPANY.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO

PRIVATE MEDICAL AID.

QUICK CURES AND MODERATE CHARGES.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY,

PRIVATE MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE,
Sacramento Street, below Montgomery, Opposite Pacific Mail Steamship Co's Office, Private Entrance on Leidesdorff Street,
San Francisco.

Established expressly to afford the afflicted sound and scientific Medical Aid, in the treatment and cure of all Private and Chronic Diseases, cases of Secrecy, and all Sexual Disorders.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY returns his sincere thanks to his numerous patients for their patronage and would take this opportunity to remind them that he continues to consult at his Institute for the cure of chronic diseases of the Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Digestive and Genito-Urinary Organs, and all Private Diseases, viz: Syphilis in all its forms and stages, Seminal Weakness, and all the horrid consequences of Self-Abuse, Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Nocturnal and Diurnal Emissions, Sexual Debility, Diseases of the Back and Loins, Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, etc.; and he hopes that his long experience and successful practice will continue to insure him a share of public patronage. By his practice of many years in Europe and the United States, he is enabled to apply the most efficient and successful remedies against diseases of all kinds. He uses no mercury, charges moderate, treats his patients in a correct and honorable way, and has references of unquestionable veracity from men of known respectability and high standing in society. All parties consulting him, by letter or otherwise, will receive the best and gentlest treatment, and implicit secresy.

TO FEMALES.

When a female is in trouble, or afflicted with disease, as weakness of the back and limbs, pain in the head, dimness of sight, loss of muscular power, palpitation of the heart, irritability, nervousness, extreme urinary difficulties, derangement of digestive function, general debility, vaginitis, all disease of the womb, hysteria, sterility, and all other diseases peculiar to females, she should go or write at once to the celebrated female doctor, W. K. DOHERTY, at his Medical Institute, and consult him about her troubles and disease. Irregularities, suppressions, etc., will receive the Doctor's most particular attention. Let no false delicacy prevent, but apply immediately and save yourself from painful suffering and premature death. Ladies whose delicate health or other circumstances prevent an increase in their families, should write or call at DR. DOHERTY'S MEDICAL INSTITUTE, and they will receive every possible relief and help. The Doctor's offices, consisting of a suite of six rooms, are so arranged that he can be consulted without fear of observation.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Patients (male or female) residing in any part of the State, however distant, who may desire the opinion and advice of DR. W. K. DOHERTY on their respective cases, and who think proper to submit a written statement of such, in preference to holding a personal interview, are respectfully assured that their communications will be held most sacred. Dr. Doherty takes this opportunity of observing that all letters are only opened and replied to by himself, and the latter as promptly as possible.

If the case be fully and candidly described, personal communication will be unnecessary, as instructions for diet, regimen, and the general treatment of the case itself, (including the remedies) will be forwarded without delay, and in such a manner as to convey no idea of the purport of the letter or parcel so transmitted.

Consultation, by letter or otherwise, FREE. Permanent cure guaranteed, or no pay. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D.
San Francisco, Cal

SPERMATORRHŒA.

DR. DOHERTY has just published an important pamphlet embodying his own views and experiences in relation to Impotence or Virility, being a short treatise on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, Nervous and Physical Debility consequent on this affection, and other diseases of the Sexual Organs.

This little work contains information of the utmost value to all whether married or single, and will be sent FREE by mail on receipt of Six Cents in Postage stamps for return postage. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D., San Francisco, Cal.

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

—OF—

MACCARONI,
VERMICELLI,
PASTE, and
FARINA

First Premium in 1857—1859—1864—1865.

Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co,

706 SANSOME STREET,
San Francisco.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

Hay, Grain, and Feed of all kinds.

Hucks & Lambert's Patent AXLE GREASE.

21 Clay street and 28 Commercial street, between Drumm and East, San Francisco.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor.
CARS. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

MISS HELEN TRACY,

Supported by

MR JOHN McCULLOUGH,
MR. HENRY EDWARDS,
MR. HARRY JACKSON.
MRS. SOPHIE EDWIN,
MRS. E. F. STEWART,
AND THE STAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

Matinee to-day,

THE HUGUENOT CAPTAIN.

This Evening,.....November 16th,

The sensational Play, just received from London, entitled

THE HUGUENOT CAPTAIN.

Reno de Pardillon.....John McCullough
Hector de Savigny.....H. Edwards
Bucharis.....S. W. Leach
Lemours.....P. Thayer
Chatienvieux.....Mr s Sinclair
Annibal Locust.....Harry Jackson
Gabrille.....Miss Helen Traey
Dutchess Jeanne.....Mrs. E. F. Stewart

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra.....$1 00
Parquette.....50 | Upper Circle.....25

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

F. A. HOWSON.....Lessee
FRANK HOWSON.....Manager
J. H. VINSON.....Stage Manager

Saturday Afternoon and Evening, November 16th,

MRS. CHARLES POOLE,

SUPPORTED BY THE

HOWSON FAMILY AND THE METROPOLITAN COMPANY, will appear in

THE SEA OF ICE!

Monday Eveuiug.....November 18th,

GRAND COMPLIMENTARY BENEFIT TO

Mr. Frank Howson,

On his retiring from the management, tendered by his fellow-citizens and the Company and attaches of the Metropolitan Theatre. The bill for the occasion will be the Opera of FRA DIAVLO!

To conclude with

THE DOWAGER!

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats.....One Dollar
Parquet 50 cts | Gallery 25 cts

No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

Doors oreh at 7 o'clock; to commence at 8.
Box Office open from 10 to 3 o'clock.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

NEW MANAGEMENT!!

The new season will he inaugurated on

SATURDAY, - - - NOVEMBER 23d,

Under the Direction of

Messrs. Edwards, Bates & Vinson.

The highly popular Actor,

CHARLES WHEATLEIGH,

will make his first appearance, after an nbsence of eighteen months.

Augustin Daly's great original and heart stirring drama of

UNDER THE GASLIGHT!

will he produced on the occasion.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

FRIDAY.....NOVEMBER 22d,

Willie Edouin's Benefit,

On which occasion will be presented,

WRITING ON THE WALL,

And the Comic Ballet Pantomime (for the first time In California) entitled the

DANCING SCOTCHMAN,

Introducing WITTICISMS, SPADE DANCE, ETC.

Leslie, Raynor & Smith's Minstrels.

Congress Hall, No. 320 Bush Street,

Between Montgomery and Kearny.

Immense Success of the Grand Combination

NEW MINSTREL TROUPE!

Endorsed by the presence of thousands of our First Families.

To-day.....at 2 o'clock,

A GRAND MINSTREL MATINEE.

TO-NIGHT, ENTIRE CHANGE OF PROGRAMME!
HENRY HERBERTE EVERY EVENING!
SEATS SECURED FOUR DAYS IN ADVANCE!

A Cloak Room, with Competent Attendants, for Ladies and Children. No Fees or Gratuities to be given to Attendants.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Orchestra Chairs and Dress Circle.....75 Cents
Parquet.....50 cents | Upper Circle.....25 cents

Box Office open from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M., where Seats can be secured without extra charge.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

BOYS'

Pioneer Clothing Store,

CLOSING BUSINESS!!!

CLOSING BUSINESS!!!

We offer the entire stock at the following reduced prices:

	Regular Prices.	Present Prices.
Boys' French Cass. Basket Pants	$6 00	$4 00
Boys' Velvet Cass. Ext. Sup. Pants	8 00	5 00
Boys' Cadet Union Suits	8 00	5 00
Boys' Union Sack Overcoats	8 00	5 00
Boys' Petersham Overcoats	14 00	10 00
Boys' Bl'k Castor Beaver Overcoats	16 00	12 00
Boys' Bl'k Esquimaux Beaver Overcoats	18 00	13 00
Boys' French Cloth Frock Coats	18 00	12 00
Boys' Esqtimaux Bever Suits	15 00	12 00
Eoys' Fine Esquimaux Bever Suits	26 00	18 00
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants	2 50	1 50
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants, ex. Fine	3 00	2 25
Youths' CaSsimere Knee Pants, embr'd	4 00	3 00
Youths' Gatihaldi Fancy Suits	7 00	5 00
Youths' Garihaldi Extra Fine Suits	8 00	6 00
Youths' Embroidered Cloth Suits	10 00	5 00
Youths' Black Beaver Suits	10 00	6 00
Youths' Pilot Cloth Overcoats	10 00	7 00
Youths' Chinehilla Overcoats	10 50	8 00
Youths' Uuion Sack Overcosts	8 00	6 00
Youths' Black Castor Beaver Overcoats	12 00	9 00
Youths' Heavy Black Beaver Garricks	10 00	8 00
Youths' Black Cloth Overcoat (sleeves)	11 00	8 50

500 Men's Esquimaux and Castor Beaver Overcoats,

Forty per cent. less than any other store on this Coast.

100 dozen Men's Star Shirts, $1 50

Astonishing low figures.

Remember, our goods are all Custom-made, from our Broadway store in New York, thirteen years' standing. Everybody must know our goods. Retiring from business, the goods must be sold. Call at LOCKWOOD & CO'S, and examine the great reduction in prices.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
624 Clay Street.

Evening Silks,
Bridal Silks,
Pointed Laces,
Opera Cloaks.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.

No. 9 Montgomery Street,

HAVE JUST RECEIVED

A SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF

Plain Silks, Gros de Paris, Gros de Rhine;
Bridal and Evening Silks, embroidered with Gold and Silver;
Benoiton and Bismarck Satins, Chene Silks, extra rich;
Moire and Watered Silks, etc., etc.
Shade Covers, in Chantilly and Point;
Barbes, in Chantilly, Point and Applique;
Chantilly Capes,
Point Capes,
Lace Collars,
Lace Veils,
Applique and Chantilly Flouncos,

INDIA SHAWLS.

Flora and Breton Cloth Sacques,
Velvet Cloaks,
Silk Basquines, etc., etc.

LACE SHAWLS,

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
RETAIL STORE,
No. 9 MONTGOMERY STEET,
LICK HOUSE BLOCK.
WHOLESALE HOUSE,
107 BATTERY STREET, near Pine street.
SAN FRANCISCO.

SOTOYOME HOTEL,
B. C. WRIGHT, Proprietor, Healdsbur Cal.

Musée des Salons.

PLATT'S MUSIC HALL.

Dan Bryant,

In His Great Orlginal Ethiopian Delineations,

SUPPORTED BY

JOE MURPHY,

AND AN EXCELLENT BAND OF MINSTRELS,

FOR SIX NIGHTS ONLY.

Opening Night—Saturday, November 23d.

WILL & FINCK,

EXCELSIOR CUTLERS, LOCK-SMITHS & BELL-HANGERS, Importers and Manufacturers of all kinds of Cutlery. Razors, Shears, and all kinds of Cutlery, ground and repaired — Bell-Hanging and Lock-smithing done in the best manner. 613 Jackson street, fourth door west of Kearny.

Country orders promptly attended to.

Life Insurance---The Money Drift.

EDITORS CALIFORNIAN—Sirs: I read in yonr issne of the 11th, a very important statistical paper, compiled by yon from the Federal revenne returns, which proves the astonnding fact that the distant Life Insurance Companies plying in California throngh "Agents" draw away nearly a million dollars per annm.

The drain under this head as yon state it amonnts to:

Year ending 1st Augnst, 1866.....$496,239
Year ending 1st August, 1867.....$877,264

And as we write the drain increases and must be now near a million a year—to he a million and a half next year and so on.

And von naturally ask with surprise why this matter has not been taken in hand by some of onr enterprising insurance men, so as to arrest the flight of a moiety at least of this enormous drain?

I think, sirs, yonr question is well pnt, and thongh my hands are full, I am yet willing to step forward and assume some of the responsibility and bear some of the preliminary expenses of forming such a Company.

When you reflect sirs that this million dollars a year is carried over land and sea, thousaud npon thonsand of miles, to places where it is leut out by distant Managers and Directors to their manufacturing and commercial friends around them, at Five Per Cent. per annum, while onr merchants and manufacturers, who are to compete with these have to pay Fifteen Per Cent. per annum for money, [we snpply them with the golden weapons to beat us] yon will then conceive the magnitude of the injuries effected by the sapping and miniug operations of those distant Insurance Companies. The money which must drain away, day by day, steamer after steamer, from onr people, will, if not stopped, impoverish this conntry qnite as much as if it were conquered by a foreign power and held in perpetual tribute. A million a year by compound interest will be ten millions in five years, twenty millions in ten years, forty millions in fifteen years, eighty millions in twenty years, one hundred and sixty millions in twenty-five years, three hundred and tweuty millions in thirty years! I will admit that the ordinary percentage of deaths on a business of thirty years will effect a drawback of one-third of the income, which in thirty years we will put at one hundred millions. Notwithstanding this, if we go on at our present scale of draining, we shall in thirty years lose by the insurance operation two hundred millions of dollars! Bnt our drain, if we don't stop it, will not stand at one million a year, it will increase year after year from one million a year to two millions a year, which by my foregoing compntation would in thirty years foot np to FOUR HUNDRED MILLIONS! What it would amount to in sixty years I leave to other calculators. In round numbers, I should guess it would come to the full number of dollars equaling the national debt of the United States.

Now, sirs, I care not what may be said of me by critics or jealous opponents, some of whom cannot see farther than their noses. I announce myself as ready to make an effort to stop this drain, and I hold every man who cooperates with me a benefactor to his adopted country.

Let the capital of a Local Life and Health Insurance Company be one hundred thousand dollars to begin, in shares of one hundred dollars each. I shall cheerfully take the name of cooperators in a book opened this day in the office of the California Building and Savings Bank, California street, for that purpose.

I remain your obedient servant,
THOMAS MOONEY.

Buildings and Savings Bank, California street.
November 12th, 1867.

Turnbull & Smith,
PRINTERS,
522 CLAY ST.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Good Work!—One Price!—Punctuality!

D. BRUCE,

PRINTER,

COMMERCIAL STREET BELOW MONTGOMERY.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of T. O. HOPKINS, deceased.

All papers and proceedings in the above entitled matter having been transferred to this Court from the Probate Court of Alameda County by reason of the disqualification of the Judge of said Court to act, and among said papers, a petition of A. J. Lowell, Administrator of said estate, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of said estate, that the same has been audited, allowed and confirmed, that all the debts and expenses of administration have been fully paid, that a portion of said estate remains for distribution to the heirs of said deceased, and praying for a distribution to the heirs entitled.

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of the said T. O. Hopkins, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on MONDAY, the 16th day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said T. O. Hopkins, deceased, according to law:

And it is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before said hearing, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated November 13th, 1867. nov16-23-30 dec7-14

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—IN THE MATTER OF the Estate of EDWARD O'DONNELL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Edward O'Donnell, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said estate of the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, on the southeast corner of Sansome and California streets, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, November 14th, 1867.
CHARLES B. POLHEMUS,
Administrator of the Estate of Edward O'Donnell, deceased. nov16-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF BENJAMIN OBER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Executrix of the last will of the estate of Benjamin Ober, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executrix, at her place of business, at the law office of Messrs. Clarke & Carpentier, No 606 Washington street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, November 14th, 1867.
JANE E. OBER,
Executrix of the last will of Benjamin Ober, deceased.
H. K. W. CLARKE, Esq., Attorney for Executrix.
nov16-23-30 dec7-14

Musee des Salons.

COCO-MUNGO SALOON.

J. M. WASHBURN, AGENT.

No. 536 Merchant Street, (Montgomery Block.)

THE BEST OF LIQUORS,

SKILLFULLY CONCOCTED MIXED DRINKS,

AND A FIRST-CLASS HOT LUNCH,

Not inferior to any offered in San Francisco, is furnished daily at the COCO-MUNGG—Clam Chowder, Fish Chowder, Gumbo Soup, Pork Tenderloins, Cape Cod Boned Turkey, Venison, Quail, and all the delicacies of the season, as fast as they are to be found in the market, figure upon the lunch-table of the COCO-MUNGO.

A Reading Room, abundantly supplied with Domestic and Foreign Papers and Periodicals, is one of the features of the COCO-MUNGO.

North American Steamship Company.

NEW OPPOSITION LINE VIA PANAMA.

The North American Steamship Company will dispatch the elegant and commodious Steamship

OREGONIAN,
(3000 Tons,)

JOSEPH SUTTON.....Commander,

For PANAMA, from Mission Street Wharf, at 12 o'clock noon, on

MONDAY, - - - - - NOV. 25th, 1867,

Connecting, via Panama Railroad, at Aspinwall with the Company's new and splendid Steamship NEBRASKA, 3,000 Tons, for NEW YORK.

One hundred pounds Baggage free.

The OREGONIAN has been fitted by the Company especially for this route, and passengers will find her accommodations unequalled on this coast. The connecting steamer NEBRASKA, recently built for the Company in New York, is the fleetest steamship in the California trade on the Atlantic Ocean.

The Company will continue their Line via Nicaragua as usual.

For further information apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VII., No. 27. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, NOVEMBER 23, 1867. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

The Theological Movement; Superintendent Fitzgerald's Manifesto; The Colleges of the South; My Shanghai Pony and What it Cost Me, by Forbes Maitland; My Mother, by Trem; Roundabout Papers, the Use of the Knife, by "Prospector;" A Mystery, a poem by A. G. Bierce. Literary Gleanings: Song Birds in Cities; Mr. Harte Criticised; The Literature of the Cuisine, etc. Lion's Mouth: Selling Tickets for a Theatre; "Paddy Fields" and "Villagers;" Lessons for Locals—No. Two; "My Uncle;" Song and Supper. Dramatic Affairs, etc., by Touchstone; Recollections of the War—Two Brave Soldiers; Wilkins on Accomplishments, by JohnQuill; The Unlucky Captain; Front Seats, by Dutton Cooke; How there came a Napoleon III.; Poetry, Paragraphs, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

Lessons For Locals—Number Two.

Writers for the local columns of our dailies, who are ambitious of rivaling the fame of such veteran celebrities as Fitz Smythe, should diligently exercise themselves in turning common English into reporters' English, which is a very different sort of thing; by persevering practice, a degree of proficiency may be attained that is really amazing. The would-be "witty reporters" never speaks of the Police Court, without designating it "Judge Rix's Palais de Justice," and the County Jail is in their vocabulary, "the Maison de Fer on Broadway." When the witty reporter has to mention the circumstance of a pickpocket being sentenced to six months' imprisonment, he phrases it somewhat in this fashion: "John Smith, a member of the light-fingered fraternity, was presented with carte blanche for his beard and lodging at the expense of the City and County, at the Hotel de Fer," etc.

The witty reporter, must use sporting and slang phrases, and foreign words whenever an opportunity offers. For this purpose he should study the nomenclature of the turf, the P. R., of the detective police, and indeed all peculiarities of phraseology, no matter to what class they appertain. Without these varied acquirements he is in danger, when practising the rules laid down in our "First Lesson," of becoming merely stilted and grandiose instead of witty. For instance, if he were about to quote the adage: "Put a beggar on horseback and he will ride to the devil," he would probably give it somewhat thus: "Install a mendicant on the upper section of a charger and he will equitate to Apollyon," which is heavy and Johnsonian, and needs to be relieved by some of the lighter elegancies above enumerated.

For the witty reporter who would mount to the highest grade of his profession, life is indeed a perpetual struggle. There is no respite. He must be continually marching on, and making new conquests. For wit (of the kind in which he deals) wears out faster than shoddy clothing. What was witty last week, becomes intolerable the next. Words and phrases that when freshly coined seem to sparkle like a half dollar just from the mint lose their gloss as they become current, and pass into general use. Thus, the witty reporter must keep his brain forever on the rack to keep up a new coinage to replace the old. "Intelligent contraband," "unreconstructed rebel," "miscegenationist," "swinging round the circle," etc., etc., though they are not specimens of "reporters' wit," and had a flavor of genuine cleverness in their day, will nevertheless serve to illustrate how soon phrases, bright and humorous when first thrown upon the market, become as flat as stale soda-water. In the next lesson or one of the subsequent ones, we shall furnish a catalogue enumerating specimens of worn out wit and humor, which all but the most abject of witty reporters should solicitously avoid.

Song and Supper.

On Thursday evening a concert and a supper were given in the vestry of the Howard Street M. E. Church. Being engaged for that evening we sent Jones to represent us and bring back a report of the concert. Jones is fond of music, but he is still fonder of good living, and consequently his report was devoted, to a great extent, to the supper. He told us that the "organ voluntary by Professor L. Schmidt and the chicken pie were both first class;" that Mrs. Northrop's performance of the air "Beautiful Bird" and the cold chicken were very sweet, Miss Gaskill's "Merry Birds" and the stewed quail were delicious, Master Louis Schmidt's violin solo and the cold tongue were very superior, and that the cheruses and pies displayed much artistic skill. Jones approves of this style of entertainment and is glad to see it inaugurated in this city. It gives a man two chances, if the concert turns out bad the supper may be good and compensate for it, on the other hand the supper may be bad and the music good. By all means let song and supper go together, says Jones.

"Paddy Fields" and "Villagers."

Every one who is in the habit of reading the Oriental news contained in the China Mail, and in the "summaries" published in the large dailies, has been more or less perplexed and mystified by occasional paragraphs in relation to the eccentric performances of belligerent "villagers" issuing from "Paddy Field's" (or possibly Paddyfields) and doing bloody deeds. The writer of the following communication has evidently been exercised in his mind by questions in relation to the same subject:

"MR. LION'S MOUTH:—From time to time I come across an item in the oriental news, giving an account of an attack by "the British gunboat the 'Spider,' or the British gunboat 'Wasp,' or the British gunboat 'Scorpion,' or some other British gunboat, felicitously named after some other agreeable and amiable insect, upon a horde of Chinese pirates. Of course the pirates always get badly whipped, as they ought to be. But then they invariably go off, and get a lot of new boats, and "lay" for new chances. But what 'bothers me entirely' about this business is that all these piratical items invariably contain something about the movements of 'the villagers,' who generally happen to be on the spot at the critical and decisive moment. 'Villager' is a pretty pastural designation, naturally associated in our minds with dances on the green, knee breeches, Swiss caps, ribbons, and first peasants and peasantesses—all rural, rustic and rosy-cheeked. But these Chinese villagers seem to be of quite a different breed. There is but the slightest modicum of the butter-cup and daisy element in their composition. They are as savage and sanguinary as our native Apaches, and rush in with murderous zest upon every occasion, when cutting, slashing, scalping, and cutting throats is on the programme. But the bewildering feature about this business 'that quite 'gets' me, is the circumstance that these bloody minded 'villagers' always come charging out of 'Paddy Field's,' or 'Paddyfields.' Whether this phrase indicates a public house kept by one Paddy Field, or whether it designates in Chinese agricultural parlance, some particular kind of field, I have never been able to determine to my own satisfaction. At any rate, the name comes in well enough when associated with a fight, and yet, I don't at present recollect hearing of the settlement of China, by a colony of emigrants from the Green Isle. Possibly, however, their hereditary love of a scrimmage, has, (though in a modified way substituting chopping knives for shillelahs,) survived their recollection of their lineage. Their style of fighting certainly is quite different from that of the nations of the original Hibernian 'Paddy Fields.' Possibly the climate has had an 'alternative' effect. At all events they are not all like 'our' villagers' of the 'ould airt.'

DENNIS O'DONOHUE."

"My Uncle."

Even in the Golden State, there are persons who occasionally become impecunious and are forced to request a loan of "my Uncle," depositing collateral security. Figgs, who keeps a small store on Commercial street, never allows himself to be without money to defray current expenses as long as he has any "collateral" which my Uncle will accept. Figgs goes on a spree occasionally, and spends the very few dollars which he has earned by selling yards of tape, packages of buttons and papers of pins. Then Figgs posts off to my Uncle with his watch, (a silver one, worth about seven dollars,) and borrows two dollars on it. He soon spends this, and he has but one article remaining which will be accepted as security for a loan. Quite early in life Figgs lost all his teeth, and a maiden aunt, who was much attached to him, presented him with an entire set of artificial ones. Figgs, when his last dollar is spent, goes to my Uncle and says, "Lend me five dollars on these," taking out his teeth. My Uncle says, "Vell, dey is worn more as dey vas ven you put dem in last. I lends you three dollars." Figgs replies, "M-m-y fren m-m you needn't be m-m fraid, I'll get 'm out m-morrow." My Uncle, touched by the terrible aspect of Figgs' shrunken cheeks and his inarticulate utterance, lends him five dollars. For perhaps three days Figgs is the most taciturn and sullen of men; when he makes a raise and recovers his impignorated teeth he is the most talkative and smiling fellow to be met with in the city. Figgs' teeth are "up" at present for three dollars and a half.

The Value of the Bible.

The other day a gentleman lately arrived in this city from Missouri paid us a visit. A very handsomely bound bible attracted his attention; taking it off the table he gazed at it admiringly and said, "That's pretty; what is it? A volume of pomos?" We replied, "No, it is a bible." "A bible!" he exclaimed, "Well, they do get things up in style now, that's a fact. I've got a bible at home. It belonged to my great grandfather, it ain't nothing like this, but it's a real curiosity. I'm going to leave it to my eldest boy, when I die, and I guess that his grand children will be able to get a heap of money for it."

Police Court Shysters.

Under the above heading, the Call savagely attacks the guerilla lawyers who hunt for clients in the vicinity of the Police Court. There is no doubt but the dignity of the Law is much lowered by being peddled round the streets by these unlicensed hawkers. They don't sell a very good article of law either, and another thing is that they charge more than respectable lawyers. Altogether, we agree with the Call—"shysters" should be suppressed, perhaps, however, if more care were used in admitting persons to practice law, and greater qualifications were insisted on, we should be troubled with fewer shysters.

Selling Tickets for a Theatre.

"Old Delph" has an abundant store of amusing stories connected with theatricals in California. He told us the following the other day, and at our request kindly wrote it:

It was Sunday morning when we arrived in Gold Hill, where we were to perform that night. The streets were crowded with honest miners, and everything looked lively and promising. Our ticket seller had been introduced to several corner groceries, and late in the evening was reported sick to Harry Brown, who was manager and leading actor of the company. Harry knew well what was the matter, and quietly observed, "Soak his head and put him to bed, and he'll be well in the morning." "What shall we do for a man to sell tickets?" asked one of the company. "That's all right," replied Harry, "I'll get Harry Gilson." Now, Mr. Gilson, at that time a resident of Gold Hill, was a young man wonderfully endowed with the gift of the gab, and particularly fond of everything that promised fun and frolic. He readily consented to become our ticket seller for the nonce, and when the time arrived to open, he had arranged his table and tickets on the pavement beside the door, and was holding forth in a Cheap John's style to a vast crowd that had congregated around him. "Here you are, gentlemen, here you are. Who'll take another? Only one dollar a piece, and cheap at half the price, and remember there's only a few more left. Walk up, gentlemen, and take your choice, and then walk in and take your seats. Don't forget the Gyascutis will be exhibited to-night for the first time South of Mason and Dixon's line, with all the paraphernalia of his native element. All right, sir, how many? Two? Thank you, sir. Cash takes two, and a few more left." We were dressing just behind the stage, and all of us could hear Gilson's excited harangue; it never ceased for more than a moment. "Just listen to that cuss," exclaimed Harry Brown, "Hear him! Why, curse the fellow, he's trying to make the people believe we have a whole menagerie on exhibition." Gilson had just concluded a glowing description of a pair of dancing Elephants, with "a few more left." "Come, hurry up, everybody," urged Brown, "and let's commence before that infernal cuss gets us all murdered." In a few minutes we were all ready and Brown rang the first bell. "Listen to that," shouted Gilson, "that's a signal for all hands on board, and hats off in front. If you miss first sight of the animals you loose half the fun! One dollar apiece, who'll take another? Sold, and a few more left." With a little impatient oath, Brown rang the bell again and up went the curtain, and immediately after he entered as the dashing "Ruy Gomez," in the play of Faint Heart Never Won Fair Lady. The Hall door was wide open, consequently the crowd in the street had a distinct view of the stage, and before Brown—the "Ruy Gomez"—had uttered a word, the assiduous Gilson was ready with another volley. "Ah, ha!" he shouted in a tone of admiration. "Look at that! Behold that fellow and weep! Twig his legs, they're worth the price of admission twice told. There's a man who travels on his shape, and has money enough to buy a quartz mill. Count the spangles on his breast, all gold, and a few more left! Who'll take another?" For a moment Brown was completely nonplussed, but a loud yell from the audience partly restored him, and with a terrible grimace, he roared out, "Shut that d——d door!" "Certainly, Mr. Brown," responded the obliging Gilson, "You're right—outsiders have no right to see the caged wonders of the arena without a ticket. A few more left, who'll take another!" The house was crowded, but it was Harry Gilson's last night as ticket seller.

Theatrically Speaking.

A certain actor in a certain theatre in this city occasionally gets tight, and is very apt when "under the influence" to get into a fight. Not long ago he went into the green room with a gorgeous black eye; he looked inexpressibly funny, the eye being nearly hidden by the swelling caused by the contusion. A brother, actor who has a good deal of dry humor after gazing, at him for some time, went up to him and in a very quiet manner said: "Say, ——, what are you made up for?" The same actor worried the stage manager to death to induce him to put on Oliver Twist in order that —— might play "Bill Sykes;" he thought it "such a pity that a black eye like that should not be made available for theatrical purposes."

The Unfeeling Telegraph.

The news which comes by telegraph is often expressed with a terseness which is almost brutal. For instance the latest news from Australia telegraphed from New York is as follows:

The Fiji cannibals have murdered and eaten Rev. Mr. Baker, a Wesleyan missionary, and six Christian natives.

Of course, in telegraphing, it is necessary to use as few words as possible, and however much we may be shocked by the above paragraph we must own that it might have been made still more unfeelingly curt by the omission of the words "murdered and." "The Fiji cannibals have eaten Rev. Mr. Baker, a Wesleyan missionary and six Christian natives."

Legal Diversions.

San Francisco has been much shocked by the fact, that in a late trial for gambling, two pillars of law were put upon the stand to testify as experts. One of them appeared to be as well posted as the Bulletin's reporter.

"OLD TIMES."

[Here is an exquisite poem, appeared in the Chicago Journal, and is probably from the pen of B. F. Taylor:]

THERE'S a beautiful song on the slumbrous air,
That drifts through the valley of dreams;
It comes from a clime where the roses were,
And a tuneful heart and bright brown hair,
That waves in the morning beams.

Soft eyes of azure and eyes of brown,
And snow-white foreheads are there;
A glimmering Cross and a glittering Crown,
A thorny bed and a couch of down,
Lost hopes and leaflets of prayer.

A breath of Spring in the breezy woods,
Sweet wafts from the quivering pines—
Blue violet eyes beneath green hoods,
A bubble of brooklets, a scent of buds,
Bird warmblers and clambering vines.

A rosy wreath and dimpled hand,
A ring and a slighted vow—
Three golden links of a broken band,
A tiny track on the snow white sand,
A tear and a sinless brow.

There's a tincture of grief in the beautiful song
That sobs on the slumbrous air,
And loneliness felt in the festive throng,
Sinks down on the soul as it trembles along
From a clime where the roses were.

We heard it first at the dawn of day,
And it mingled with matin chimes,
But years have distanced the beautiful lay,
And its melody floweth from far away,
And we call it now Old Times.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE WAR.

BY JAMES FRANKLIN FITTS.

TWO BRAVE SOLDIERS.

THE name of Tom D'Auvergne is embalmed in history as of the stout-hearted French grenadier who defended a pass against an entire regiment, saving the army from surprise and perhaps rout, by his own individual bravery. He has become the hero of tales and ballads without number, and his name is used as a synonyme for the unflinching discharge of duty. This is well; bravery and good soldiership are no national matters, and we Americans can afford to recognize and honor them on either side of the water. But we can still claim, and with perfect truth, that no braver, more faithful, nor more efficient soldiers, than our own ever carried arms; and I can cite a dozen instances occurring during the rebellion where such remarkable qualities were displayed in critical emergencies as to satisfy me that we had any number of Tom D'Auvergnes in the ranks, and that nothing more than an adequate occasion was required to display them. And chief among these I count the conduct of Private Charles Brigham, a soldier of the Fifteenth Maine Regiment. He deserves, and shall have, his honorable place in the recollections.

As the traveler pursues his way along the valley turnpike southward from Winchester, he will see on the left-hand of the road, about sixty rods beyond the town, a dingy frame house of two stories, standing in a barren yard. It is an unattractive place, and would be passed by without comment; but I remember it as the scene of a tragedy which created no little stir in our camps when it was announced. It fell to my lot to investigate the affair officially; and the statements of this sketch are drawn from memoranda taken at the time.

At the time of which I am about to write, Hancock commanded our forces in the Shenandoah. There had been no enemy of any respectable strength in this quarter of the military situation since October, 1864, when the crushing rout at Cedar Creek, overtook Early and his army; and during the following winter we had lain in and about Winchester as a corps of observation and occupation. But the early days of the eventful April of 1865 brought stirring news from the South; the evacuation of Petersburg, the occupation both of that place and Richmond, and the breaking up of the historic army of Virginia followed each other in swift succession; and apprehending that the Shenandoah Valley might be seized by the mass of the rebel army as the most practicable route of escape, General Hancock promptly moved out a division in front of Winchester, and sent a large body of cavalry on a reconnoissance beyond Strasburg. The division chosen was Dwight's, late of the Nineteenth Army Corps, to the staff of which I was at this time attached as judge-advocate. The instructions which I received from General Hancock, and communicated to Dwight, were to put the division in position across the pike, about a mile beyond Winchester, and there await developements on the part of the enemy. We moved through Winchester about nightfall, and took the assigned position, waiting here for several days to fight an enemy that never came; for Appomattax Court-house was at the same time closing the military history of the great revolt and our soldier life was fast drawing to a close.

Winchester was held by the provost-guard which had preserved quiet there all the winter; but between the town and the front there were several houses which it was thought needed protection from stragglers and depredators. Our division was well disciplined, and there was no fear of outrage upon the inhabitants from any soldier of it; but there is always hanging upon the skirts of an army, a lot of harpies, eager for booty, who stop at no crime to obtain it, and against whom it is necessary to take the most careful precautions. It was therefore to guard against some roving outlaw of this description that a safeguard was ordered to be sent to each of these houses; although, as it happened, the depredator in this case was an entirely different person. One of the provost-marshals of the division was ordered to post a single guard in each house, with particular instructions as to his duty. It became important to inquire afterward as to the nature of these instructions; and both the officer and safeguard said that they were to protect the family and the property against robbers, and to allow no one to enter the premises except an officer of the division on duty.

The night passed at headquarters, and in the early morning the staff was astir, awaiting orders for the movements of the brigades, which it was reasonably anticipated might happen before noon. Breakfast had not been eaten when the field officer of the day rode up, and reported to the adjutant-general his twenty-four hours of duty.

"Everything is quiet at the front," he said. "The pickets are vigilant, and I have nothing to suggest about them. I hear there was some kind of a row between here and the town, last night. I don't know the particulars; but there is one dead man lying on the floor in the parlor of that unpainted house up yonder, with a bayonet hole clear through him. He seems to be an officer, too."

"How did it happen?" asked the adjutant-general.

"I don't know the particulars. I understand the safeguard did it; and that's about all I know of it."

I stood and listened to the conversation; and before the officer of the day left the headquarters inclosure, I received an order to repair at once to the scene of the killing, make a thorough investigation, and report.

My horse was ready in three minutes, and in company with another of the staff, who went from curiosity, I cantered over to the house, and there ascertained all the particulars of the affair. I dismounted at the door, and giving my horse to the orderly, went inside. A knot of idlers was gathered near the steps, and as I passed, I heard from one of them, the words, "It is blood, sure." They stepped back as I approached, and I saw a dark red stain on the ground, as large as the palms of two hands, while smaller stains were scattered near it. The front door was approached by a single wooden step, of eighteen inches high; and on this, also, there were the same significant stains. Going into the hall, which ran back half the length of the house, I was met by a woman to whom I declared my name, rank and errand, and from whom I learned that she was the mistress of the house, and lived there with two daughters.

"What happened here last night?" I asked.

"Such a dreadful thing, sir!" she answered. "There was one of your officers killed dead by the guard; his body is here in the parlor, now. But it was his own fault, sir. The soldier wasn't to blame a bit, and I hope he won't be harmed for it. He was only protecting us. That officer has been here more than a dozen times, and declared he was in love with one of the girls. I told him often I didn't want him to come; but he would, and now he has rushed on his fate."

The girls appeared at this moment, pale, trembling and terrified. They, as well as their mother, seemed to consider that my visit had an unfriendly meaning to them, and they all now joined in the assurance that they had been persecuted for a whole month by the officer, who would force his attentions upon them, in spite of their entreaties that he would not come to the house any more; and the three protested, again and again, that the guard was not in the least to blame. I calmed their fears, and asked to see the body. The matron led the way into the parlor. A sheet spread upon the floor concealed the corpse, but not its outlines; and an inert hand which lay upon the outside would have told a story of death, without words to help it. The woman took the sheet by the corners and turned it down, with the remark:

"Maybe you knew him, sir. He was a handsome young man, but awfully wild they say."

The cold, lifeless face which was disclosed was indeed familiar to me. The dress was an officer's pants and blouse, without any mark of rank; but I had no difficulty in recognizing Lieutenant G—, of the cavalry, noted beyond his regiment as a hard rider, a hard drinker, and, as the old lady said, "awfully wild." Not two weeks before, I had been introduced to him in a saloon in Winchester; and though I had never seen him before nor since, the remembrance of his handsome face and jaunty air, which carried with them an irresistible conviction of a bad heart, were still with me. But this was all that was left of him, now—this miserable clay, testifying from every pore, of a wasted life, a lost soul!

"Where is the soldier?" I asked.

He was in the back room. I found him there, leaning on his musket with its bloody bayonet. He was a slender fellow of hardly twenty-one, almost a boy, with a thin face, and an air which was a mixture of boldness and timidity. I sat down by the table, and began to talk with him.

"It is my duty to find out all about how this happened," I said, "and I want you to tell me the exact truth. Don't be afraid to tell it just as it was. If you have done your duty, you shall be protected. What is your name?"

He gave it; but as it would be hardly just to give it this publicity without his sanction, I will call him Charles Brigham. The members of the 15th Maine will have no difficulty in recognizing him; and there are hundreds more to whom this sketch will recall the incident.

"How long since you enlisted?"

"Just one month to-day."

Such was the strange fact. Only a month from the pine woods of his native State, never beyond its boundaries before his enlistment, a raw recuit for an old regiment in the field, he had acted in the fearful alternative thrust upon him, with the promptness of a veteran.

It occurred to me immediately, upon learning who was the victim of this affair, and that he belonged to the cavalry corps, that it might assume a partizan shape, as such difficulties in the army are apt to do. I was, of course, entirely unprejudiced in the matter, and my duty now was merely to obtain the facts as near as possible; but from what I had seen of the soldier and the dead officer, as well as from what I knew of the latter, I was prepared to believe that the women were correct in saying that the man had done no more than his duty. It was therefore with some anticipation of being required to defend him upon a charge of murder before a court-martial, that I took down in writing a carefully detailed statement from his own lips, of the affair, which was immediately corroborated in every important particular, by the women. Owing to circumstances to which I will refer hereafter, this was the only investigation ever made into the killing, and I give the result of it as the truth.

The boy's statement was briefly as follows: He had been posted by the provost-marshal, about dark, and had received his instructions from him. After the officer had gone, he stood in the hall for some time, with his gun; but after an hour, one of the women came out and invited him into the parlor, where he stood his musket up in the corner, and went into the room with them. The women appeared very timid, and started as if in terror, at the slightest noise outside. One of them said to the others, "I don't believe he will come, now that we have a soldier here to protect us." But they still continued to appear frightened, and the girls at last went to bed reluctantly, and only after their mother had expressly commanded it. The hours wore away towards midnight, with no other disturbance than the rumbling of a loaded wagon passing out to the front, or the loud remonstrance of some straggler carried along in the clutches of the provost-guard. It was in the very stillest of the night that a squad of horsemen galloped up to the door, stopped, and began to converse together in low tones.

"There he is again," the old lady said, rising, and walking into the hall. "He'll want to come in, and I'm bound he shan't. There's no lock on the door, but if you'll help me, we'll hold it."

But Brigham had no idea of pursuing such tactics as these. He followed the woman into the hall; but, instead of accompanying her to the door, went to the corner and seized his musket. His bayonet was in the sheath at his belt, and this he fixed on the gun. When he reached the door, the voices had grown louder; and as he took the handle from the woman and flung it wide open, he heard the words, called out in a loud tone:

"Stay there, Tom, and take care of the horses. We will go in and visit."

"The figure of a man stepped briskly from the darkness, and mounted the steps. The form of the woman, shrinking back into the hall, was visible from the outside, as he came on, and with a loud, coarse salutation, "Ho, old girl, glad to see you!" the man had placed his foot within the door, when the way was barred by the safeguard, holding his musket at arms front. With an oath of astonishment, the man started back.

"Who the —— are you?" he demanded.

"Safeguard," Brigham responded. "My orders are to admit no one but officers on duty. You can't come in."

"We'll see about that, my fine fellow," the intruder returned. "I'd have you know that I'm an officer, a lieutenant of Torbert's cavalry, and on duty, too, for that matter. Let me in."

"What's your name?"

"The devil take your impudence! what's that to you? I've no name to give you. Stand aside!"

"You say you're on duty; where's your arms?"

"Hang you for an impertinent footpad! I'll show you as much as a pistol, pretty quick, if you don't stand aside!" And with these words, delivered in a loud, bullying voice, and with a swagger of command, the officer again placed his foot on the threshold. Brigham brought down the stock of his musket into the palm of his left hand, and as he did so, the point of the bayonet almost grazed the officer's face. With a whole volley of oaths and imprecations, the intruder started back, Brigham following him till he had left the step.

"I tell you again," he said, "yon can't come in here. You have no business here, and this lady wants you to stay out. You'd better not try it!"

I do not know whether Lieutenant G—— was to any extent under the influence of liquor, or whether he was blinded by passion; but I think no man in the possession of his sober senses would have dared attempt an entry past that bayonet, in the face of such determination as I know blazed out of Charley Brigham's eyes, as he uttered this warniug. At all events, the officer did not heed it; and, as it appeared, his companion was as badly deceived in the man as was he. This companion, who was undoubtedly also an officer, now appeared, walking swiftly from the direction of the horses, and laughing scornfully at G—— as he came.

"A pretty lieutenant of cavalry yon are!" he said, "to be faced down by a single infantry soldier! Go in and clean him out, quick, or you're not the man I've taken you for. I'll help you out."

Stung by the tannts of his companion, and shonting to the safeguard to get out of the way, G—— rnshed headlong at the doorway, and was instantly transfixed by Brigham's bayonet.

"I lunged just as hard as I could," he said. The bayonet struck him full in the heart, and came two inches out of his back. He never said a word, nor even groaned; he just stopped in his tracks, stone dead, and I bore his weight on the bayonet till I let him down to the ground."

And hardly had the brave boy disengaged his weapon from the body, before he saw the other man rushing straight at him with a cocked pistol, and heard the most awful oaths and imprecations showered on him.

"I think my blood was up by this time," he said, in describing the affair to me. "I was perfectly ready for this fellow; I guess I shouldn't have feared a dozen, one at a time. As he came up on a run, holdiug the pistol right towards me, I made a pass at him. I didn't hit him in the breast, but I meant to. He swerved a little at the last second, as he saw I was dead in earnest, and the bayonet went through his arm. With that, he gave a loud yell, and ran for the horses. The last I heard from him, he was begging his orderly to help him into the saddle; and as they rode off towards Winchester, he was groaning with pain."

This was substantially the report that I carried back to headquarters. The general listened attentively to my statement, and said, after he heard it:

"This man has done nothing more than his duty, and he must be proteeted in it. He will have to be put in confinement until he can be tried; but whenever he is arraigned, you will appear and defend him. He has set an example in the strict performance of duty which older soldiers might well follow."

These instructions I prepared myself to obey, and spent some days in arranging the defence, expecting that the man would be court-martialed immediately. I believe charges were preferred against him; but very soon after this occurrence came the assassination of the President, our division was ordered to Washington to picket the city against the escape of the conspirators, and nothing further was heard of any prosecution of Brigham. He was shortly after released, and returned to duty, and was subsequently honorably discharged with his regiment.

It has always seemed remarkable to me that so young a soldier and one whose recent enlistment could have given him little or no opportunity to become acquainted with the nature of a soldier's duty, could have conceived so perfect an idea of what was required of him. It is not too much to say that he was made of the stuff that makes heroes, and that he was fully capable, upon a proper occasion, of displaying the quality of courage as conspicuously as did Tom D'Auvergne.

As a pendant to the above, I present the following touching incident connected with the death of Sergeant W——, one of the bravest men that ever breathed the air of battle.

As a general rule, I believe that the courage which leads men into battle and enables them to do their duty unflinchingly, is a negative quality. Men are not brave in themselves, but in spite of themselves; every instinct of the human mind protests against the exposure of the body to death and mutilation amid the accumulated horrors of the battle-field, and we shall generally find that the bravest are those whose wills are the strongest, and who are therefore the best able to hold themselves to the horrible work with steady endurance. Perhaps the latter word best expresses the idea I wish to convey. The brave man endures the battle, because his duty sternly requires it of him. With the best will in the world to absent himself, honor and duty nevertheless hold him to the work. He is brave in spite of himself.

"You are awfully frightened," said a captain, jeeringly, to his lieutenant, upon observing the white face of the latter, upon going towards the front of a battle.

"Well, I don't deny it, cap," replied the sub. "and I believe if you were half so frightened as I am, you would have run long ago."

The incident perfectly illustrates what the quality of courage is, as it is displayed in battles.

This, I say, is a general rule; my own experience and observation teaches it as such. Yet I have known men of quiet, mild dispositions, men who seemed almost phlegmatic in the absence of excitement, who, when nerved into action by the roar of artillery, the crash of musketry, and the thousand discords of the battle-field, would seem to warm to the work as though they loved it, and fight without the least regard for personal safety. Of this class is General Sheridan. No one who has ever seen this wonderful man on the battle-field as we saw him at Winchester and Cedar Creek, riding here and there along the lines, with his hat off, his eyes blazing, his face flaming with the fury of the fray, and his voice uttering short, impassioned appeals to the men—no one, I say, who has ever seen him thus, can suppose that he takes thought or heed of the dangers of the hour, or even notices the whistling of bullets and the sereech of shell. And of this stamp was Sergeant W——, of my own company, a man whose heroism was the wonder and admiratiou of his comrades and officers. He was a tall, rather awkward young man, with a sober, reflective face, and perhaps the last man who would be selected from a crowd as a hero. I remember to have said to myself, after I first saw him, that he had very little fight in him, and that I hardly dared hope he would acquit himself well in action. But never was an officer more widely mistaken than I.

At the battle of Winchester, his true soldierly charaeter showed forth in an unmistakable light. The regiment, three hundred and fifty strong, was ordered to an advanced position somewhat beyond the line of battle, in front of a point of woods, at the opening of the fight. Here, for more than an hour, we fought a whole rebel brigade, losing one hundred and ninety in killed and wounded, under the terrible front and flank fire which was poured upon us. After the fight had waged awhile, and the men were falling so thickly that it seemed as if the regiment must be utterly annihilated in ten minutes, the order was given to lie down. Sergeant W—— did not obey. He stood alone, his tall form towering up from the plain, loading and firing as coolly as though at a turkey-shoot at home, while the air was cut and coursed in every direction with shrieking minnie balls, and men lying on the ground were continually hit by the close aim of the veterans we were fighting.

"Lie down, W——," I called to him.

"I'd rather not, cap," the brave fellow replied. "I can put in five bullets standing, to three lying down, and put them in closer, too, I think." And the bark of his rifle, as he sighted and fired it towards the long gray line which stretched out not two hundred yards in front, emphasized the speech.

With this plucky spirit he fought this desperate battle through, escaping without a mark, and doiug remarkable execution. A few days later, at Newmarket, his conduct was the same. The regiment had been deployed as skirmishers all day, driving the rear guard of the flying enemy before it. Just at night, the enemy took a position behind a fence, and opened a brisk fire upon us. The right wing of the regiment was immediately assembled on a hill, overlooking this position, where our men lay down and sighted their rifles over it. Not so W——; he was erect on his feet, as before, fighting with all his energy, a conspicuous mark for the bullets that hailed about him without harming him in the least. The men who observed his utter contempt of danger, began to whisper that he bore a charmed life; and it seemed to me little short of the miraculous how he could escape snch peril as he defiantly braved.

But his day came at last. Fighting with his usual reckless bravery, on the front line at Cedar Creek, he was instantly killed by a rebel bullet. He lies now, with a long row of others of the regiment, buried within the stone wall which surrounded the house which was the center of the hottest fighting of the morning; and a wooden head-board tells you the name and regiment of one who was truly "the bravest of the brave."

W—— had always received double the number of letters of any other man in the company, and after his death, several more came to his address. As was customary, I opened them before destroying them, to see if they contained anything valuable. One was written in a delicate female hand, and a sprig of rose geranium dropped from its folds. And then I knew that this daring, gallant spirit had been the idol of some girlish heart, and that grief unspeakable would follow the rebel bullet that had cut him down.

"And the sad truth lives in language of unutterable woe,
They are all some true hearts' darlings who have died before the foe."

There is an essential meanness in the wish to get the better of any one; the only competition worthy of a wise man, is with himself.

There are roses whose thorns entirely disappear from culture, as wild animals sometimes lose their horns by domestication.

A sound discretion is not so much indicated by never making a mistake as by never repeating one.

They who wish to build up the structure of happiness must lay virtue as the foundation stone.

HOW THERE CAME A NAPOLEON III.

In the ever memorable month of June, 1815, the marvelous career of Napoleon I., Emperor of the French, came to an end forever. The escape from Elba and the history of the subsequent hundred days are known to every one. With a world in arms against him, small indeed was his chance of success from the first. He did as much as mortal man could do, but finally succumbed on the field of Waterloo. The evening of Sunday, June 18, saw him flying for his life towards the capitol, surrounded by the debris of a once splendid but now panic-stricken host. On reaching Paris, he appears to have been greatly perplexed as to his future movements. But he had not much time for consideration; the allies were at his heels; a few days would see Paris occupied by their armies. He finally decided on starting for Rochfort, with the idea of escaping to America. This plan he at once proceeded to carry out; but before leaving the capitol he went through the form of abdicating in favor of his young son. But before the Duc de Reichstadt could be acknowledged, or permitted to assume the title of "Emperor of the French," there were some rather important personages to be consulted. The allies were to have something to say in the matter, and the rightful monarch of the French was yet alive in the person of the Bourbon Prince, Louis XVIII. Napoleon I. had at this time about as much right and as much power to make the young Duc de Reichstadt Emperor of France as he had to make Louis XVIII. King of England. The nations of Europe had had quite enough of the Bonaparte family—for a time. It was not to be supposed that they would recognize the young duke as emperor, nor did any of them ever do so. Louis XVIII. quietly re-entered Paris on the 8th of July, and resumed the government. Napoleon's destiuation, as we all know, was not America, but St. Helena. The Duc de Reichstadt retired to Austria, where, at the age of twenty-one, he died, not Emperor of the French, but with the title which he inherited and by which he has been known from his birth, simply, Le Duc de Reichstadt.

Thirty-seven years pass by and we see on the throne of France another Emperor, and oh! more wonderful than fairy tale or romance, another Napoleon Bonapartel The success of the coup d'etat in December, 1851, put the supreme power into the hands of the unscrupulous president, and he was not the man to let that power slip. A few more months and he was able to carry out the darling dream of his life, to have himself acknowledged by the French people as their Emperor. Since that day Louis Napoleon Bonaparte has been known to the world as l'Empereur Napoleon le troisieme. But one and one will never make more than two. Let those who fancy they can make three of them try their best, they will find it as difficult a task as to discover the lost link in the chain of the three emperors. Thus far we have told truth, and nothiug but the truth. There is something to be added which will save us from the accusation of having concealed anything, and thereby, perhaps, not having told the whole truth. This, then, is what we have heard, and we believe there is solid foundation for the report. It is said that when Louis Napoleon found the pulse of the French people to be favorable, and that the time was ripe for carrying out his design, he intended to have proclaimed himself emperor under the title of Napoleon II, and that it was accident that caused him to be called Napoleon III. It seems that a number of placards had been simultaneously printed and sent to all the heads of the different departments and towns in France on a certain day, with orders that they should be issued and distributed all over the country on the same morning. These placards were thus headed: Vive l'Empereur! Vive Napoleon!!! These three notes of admiration were taken up by the people to represent the Roman numeral "III," and he was from that time hailed as Napoleon le troisieme; as such he has ever since been known; but it is equally true that his proper title should have been Napoleon II.

Why it is Superior.—Mrs. A. M. Williams, 523 Spruce street, Philadelphia, who has had a Grover & Baker Machine in nse eight years, thus states the reasons for its superiority over other machines: "In the Grover & Baker, we use the common spools of cotton, without rewinding, and in the Ladd & Webster, Wheeler & Wilson, Florence, and Singer, the cotton all has to be wound on a bobbin. And the Grover & Baker is superior to all those machines in that respect. Also the stitch of the Grover & Baker is more elastic and more durable than that of either of the other machines. The feed of the Grover & Baker is superior to the feed of the Singer. The wheel feed of the Singer will not allow you to sew a light material or do fancy quilting without drawing the light material. Also the machine of Grover & Baker is more simple in its construction, and not so liable to get out of order, and more easily managed by a lady operator; and the tension of this machine is self-adjusting to different fabrics, while the other machines are not. You can't depend upon the tension in the other machines."

[From testimony taken before the U. S. Commissioner of Patents, on the application for the extension of the patent for the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine.].

The true light of Mount Hood is 11,225 feet.

LITERARY GLEANINGS.

SONG-BIRDS IN CITIES.

BIRDS, except those of the gallinaceous kind, are not often seen within the limits of San Francisco outside of a cage or coop. We have no parks or gardens large enough, or sufficiently secluded in their location, to offer a shelter capable of attracting even the least shy of the feathered tribes. It would be a bold pair of birds indeed that would think of such a thing as building a nest in the trees of the Plaza, or of Post Office Square—and those are the only public "parks" that we know of in San Francisco, that can boast of such a thing as a tree of anykind. In New York, however, it is said that even the smaller of the city parks, such as Washington, Madison, and Tompkins Squares, are frequented during the Spring and Summer by numerous song-birds that build their nests and rear their young in the trees and shrubbery. Squirrels, too, found shelter there, and became so numerous and mischievous that measures had to be taken to drive them away. A writer in the Tribune recently gave a pleasant account of these "city song-birds," from which we give a few extracts:

The dull routine of a great, dusty city in Summer time has almost always numerous features which serve to redeem it from unpleasantness, and cheer the hearts of those whose purses will not permit them to rusticate during the hot and sultry months. The imprisoned canary or mocking-bird has, we doubt not, frequently charmed away the droning of dull care with the silvery accents of the whistled song; and even the domestic cluck, cluck of a collection of hens and pullets may greatly enliven the little back-yard of monotony and dullness, when "the world is out of town," and humiliated insignificants are alone left to keep up the appearance of life in the close shuttered streets and avenues of the fashionables.

But in this respect we have an element of gladness and cheer which is always attainable by the most lowly of our citizens, in the numerous exquisite song-birds, which, from early Spring to later Autumn, haunt the leafy coverts of our public park and squares. These are to be found everywhere. Not only among the extensive hills, and fields, and bushes of Central Park do they abound. In Washington, Union, Madison, Tompkins squares, and the rest, they may be seen at any fine morning, hopping over the sanded walks in search of the unfortunate early worms as daily provender for the hungry occupants of the little nests which are hidden somewhere up among the leaves, and talking merrily together about the prospects of the day before them—for they must be too happy to have any care beyond the single day.

They may also be seen alighting on stray chips and stones in the middle of the bubbling fount, pledging bright breakers to the rising sun, and fluttering their tiny pinions gaily in the morning bath. If you sit and watch them, on a clear Summer morning, you are surprised at the varieties of birds, and the combined twittering and whistling of their jocund voices form a music which is soft and pleasant to the ear. They are all here, from the humble little gray-coated "chippy" to the gandier minstrel of emerald throat and gold-tipped wing.

The season of nest-building is over; and the close-woven shelters of the happy ones are already reared by knotted trunk and leafy bough, but the good green grass and sand walls are covered with them, hopping here and there in search of daily food. Now there come quite a convocation of tiny wrens and tomtits, chirping and chattering as they peck along the sand, with one of them making a great fluttering and a cry, as a choice tit-bit is discovered and appropriated, and all of them vanishing and reappearing among the laburnum bushes and scrub-trees of the border. Then, with a swift flutter, almost phantom-like in his suddenness, the prince of all, the golden oriole, drops from above. His burnished crest flashes like a topaz, and the yellow-bordered crimson of the sharp, little pinons burns brightly in the morning light, like an embodied sunbeam out of sight.

As the day advances, and the hot shafts of the sun-warmth began to pierce the foliage, the pleasant vocalism grows apace, until at last, the whole park rings with the joyous notes, and the air seems clearer and more brilliant for the sweet music which informs it.

> The cowslip startles in meadow green,
> The buttercup catches the sun in its chalice,
> And there's never a leaf or a blade too mean
> To be some happy creature's palace;
> The little bird sits at his door in the sun,
> Atlit like a blossom among the leaves,
> And lets his illumined being o'errun
> With the deluge of Summer which it receives;
> His mate feels the eggs beneath her wings,
> And the heart in her dumb breast flutters and sings;
> He sings to the wide world, and she to her nest—
> In the nice ear of Nature's which song is the best!

That these little city songsters do a vast deal of good in refining and poetizing the natures of the lowly, and quite as frequently exalting and bettering the feelings of the corruptly better-born, there can be no doubt. Stray through any of our large, shady squares when the sun is not too warm, and among the hundreds who occupy the benches and lounge along the pleasant walks you will notice more than half interested in the beautiful birds that dance upon the ground, or balance themselves "atilt like blossoms among the leaves." At one time these places also teemed with squirrels, that were comically pleasant in their gambols, but it was found that the song birds fled their presence, and the former was wisely banished to more secluded fields.

HARPERS' NEW PAPER.

The Bazaar is a handsome paper, of the same size as Harpers' Weekly, and seems to be designed mainly as a repository for such information and literature as will be peculiarly interesting to the ladies. Much of the space of the first number is devoted to matters of dress, the fashions, and household affairs. A very large number of "modes" and patterns are given, together with minute practical directions calculated to render them practically serviceable. Nevertheless, The Bazaar is not exclusively a fashion journal; on the contrary, it contains a variety of general reading of a sound literary quality. We quote a poem by C. H. Webb, entitled:

"TO LILY."

> If I were a bee-bird
> What would I do?
> I'll tell to no other,
> Darling, but you.
> On the breast of the Lily,
> Folding my wings—
> Think it no harm, darling,
> 'Tis a bee sings.
>
> There I'd repose me
> All of the day,
> None of the garden
> Should tempt me away':
> The Tulip, proud lady,
> I would disdain,
> The Violet's blue eyes should
> Woo me in vain.
>
> The tears of the Blue-bell
> Ever might fall;
> The Rose and the Woodbine
> Cling to the wall,
> The Cowslip and Daisy
> Lie in the sun,
> I would not kiss them—
> Never a one.
>
> But alone with my Lily
> Ever I'd rest,
> Shrined in the blossom
> Of her white breast—
> Think it no harm, darling,
> Not mine the tongue—
> I but interpret
> What the bee sung!

MR. HARTE CRITICISED.

The Territorial Enterprise publishes the following notice of Mr. Harte's "Condensed Novels," in which the very grave charge is made against the author—and we think with perfect justice—that "his tastes fetter him to the classical models of the language." The same damaging objection of undue respect for "classical models," was recently made by the Nevada critic against Mr. Stoddard's poems:

Without time to thoroughly examine the contents of this volume, we shall speak of it and its author in general terms, reflecting the impressions we have derived from the perusal of numerous articles contributed by him to the journals of this coast. Mr. Harte is the most finished and pleasing writer California has yet produced. His taste is exquisite, his diction faultless. His perception of the humorous is more delicate than that of a dozen or so professed humorists of California, in addition to which he displays what no other living writer of his State has exhibited—genuine wit. Yet with all these rare qualities he has failed to accomplish any marked success in letters, and appears as likely hereafter to fail in any signal achievement in literature. His tastes fetter him to the classical models of the language. He seems to think it incumbent upon him to issue his productions on the collateral security of some acknowledged author. This assimulation, or overcautiousness—or whatever it may be—on the part of Mr. Harte, has led to the preferment of charges of plagiarism against him by members of the opposition press; but all the proofs they have ever adduced have been far-fetched and unsubstantial. The mistake they made was in endeavoring to convict him of felony, when the offense—if that may be called an offense which injures nobody and delights every one—was that of imitation. Imitating the cut of another man's coat, and appropriating said garment itself, are two different things. Thus, we venture to say, Mr. Harte has never absolutely appropriated any author's vestment, though he may have shaped his material to the pattern of many an admired mantle. The "Condensed Novels" of Mr. Harte are acknowledged and obvious types of all his writings. Whether credited or not, they are all copies—more or less free in drawing and tone—from approved originals. But if—as maybe the case—the gentleman's productions thus far are the purposed results of a severe schooling in art—if, with commendable zeal, he has devoted his youthful energies to the patient study of the masters—he has been eminently successful, and in good time will bring rare skill to the execution of his original conceptions. The present volume is a collection of sketches published during the past five years, principally in California journals. It is one of the most entertaining works in the range of light literature, and possesses peculiar interest to the readers of this coast, being of a local character.

THE LITERATURE OF THE CUISINE.

Professor Blot, the great master of Gastronomy, and the "Founder of the New York Cooking Academy," has at last given to the world a "Handbook of Practical Cookery," in so much of the science and art of preparing human food, as can be communicated without the aid of oral instruction, in which precept it is illustrated by example, and carried out in practice. Beyond question the book will be eagerly welcomed, not only by professional cooks, but also by a large class of practical housekeepers, to both of which classes it must prove exceedingly useful. Nearly all the books on cookery now in use, have been compiled by women who had but a narrow experience, and were at best, only amateurs. The most popular and best known ones, consist largely of receipts of the kind that are continually floating around in the newspapers. The chief merit of Professor Blot's book, seems to be that it goes methodically into the rationale of gastronomy, and the chemistry of the material used as food. In other words, he treats the subject philosophically, so that his assumption of the dignity of an art, based upon a science, for his "profession," is scarcely to be regarded as a subject for ridicule. We quote a few extracts from the chapter on BILLS OF FARE.

Bills of fare vary according to the season of the year, and therefore to the produce in the market.

We will try to give another, and we think a better way of making them to suit everybody, every purse, and at any time.

A dinner, no matter how grand, is composed of three courses, and seven kinds of dishes.

The first course comprises dishes of four kinds, viz: potages, hors-d'œuvres, relevés, and entrees.

The second course comprises dishes of two kinds, viz., rots and entremets.

The third course comprises dishes of one kind, the desert.

The number of dishes of each kind is generally according to the number of guests.

It may also be according to the importance of the occasion for which the dinner is given; to the honor the giver or givers wish to show the personage or personages invited; to the amount of money they are willing to spend, etc.

* * * * * * * * *

It is just as easy to select dishes for a small family dinner as for a grand one; two, three, four, or more dishes can be selected; for instance, you select a potage, an entree or rot, or both, one vegetable or a sweet dish, or both; and one or as many plates of dessert as you please.

Have a bouquet in the middle of the table, if possible, or at least a basket of fruit. Flowers during dinner have the same effect as music after it; they soften the manners, and gently and sweetly gratify the senses.

* * * * * * * * *

Order of dishes.—1. Potages. 2. Hors-d'œuvres. 3. Relevés: of fish, and then of meat. 4. Entrees: beef, mutton, lamb, veal, fish, poultry, and game last. 5. Rots: of meat and then of fish. 6. Entremets: salads of greens, vegetables, eggs, macaroni, sweet dishes, and cakes. 7. Dessert: cheese the first.

First part or Potages.—Any kind coming under the head of potages or soups.

Second part or Hors-d'œuvres.—These are small dishes placed on the table as soon as the soup dish is removed or even before, and which are removed just before serving the sweet dishes of the entremets. They are passed round after every dish, on account of being considered more as appetizers, as repairers of the natural waste of animal life. Very little of them is partaken of at a time; they are anchovies; artichokes, raw; pickled beets; butter; caviare; raw cucumbers; figs; every kind of fish, salted, smoked, pickled, or preserved in oil; every kind of pickled fruit; horse-radish; horse-radish butter; melons; broiled mushrooms; olives; raw and pickled oysters; steamed potatoes served with butter; sardines; sanicissons; sausages, salt and smoked, but not fresh; salted and smoked tongue; tunny; walnuts in salad.

Third part or Relevés.—Relevés are composed of fish and large pieces of meat. A fish served whole is always a relevé; in pieces, it is an entree. Pieces of beef, mutton and pork, roasted, are always served as relevés. At a family dinner the relevé is almost always a fish. The other pieces of meat that are served as relevés are bear, buffalo, boiled and corned beef, leg and saddle mutton, quarters of lamb, large pieces of veal; also all rot-au vents of meat and of fish, bouchees and fishpies.

Fourth part or Entrees.—These comprises every dish of meat, except poultry and game, when roasted; every dish of fish not served whole: also patie de foies gras, sour-krout, snails, meat-dishes, terrines, pains of game and of poultry. The dishes of meat mentioned in the relevés may be served as entrees at a family dinner. The order of the dishes is described above.

Fifth part or Rots.—Poultry, game and fish. At a family dinner, lamb and veal are often served as roasted pieces, especially at seasons when there is no game, and poultry is scarce.

Sixth part or Entremets.—The following are served as entremets: all salads of greens; all dishes of vegetables, of omlets, except four, viz.: with bacon, salt pork, ham and kidneys. All dishes of macaroni, of rice, eggs a la neige, all sweet dishes (sweet dishes are also served as dessert,) and cakes; such as baba, brioche, genoisese, maderines, savarin, and sponge-cake.

Seventh part or Dessert.—The dessert comprises ripe fruit, sweet dishes (these are also served as entremets, according to taste,) pastry, except meat-pies, terrines, and pains,) salads of fruit, and cheese. After cheese, there is no rule for serving the other plates of dessert; it is according to one's taste.

Punch is served after the entrees or after the relevés of fish according to taste.

MISCELLANY.

CHARLES DICKENS AND SIR E. B. LYTTON.—The foreign correspondent of the Boston Post says: "He does not recall the early portraits where he shone with beautiful black eyes, splendid hair, and the complexion of healthy youth. He has not fallen off indeed as Lord Lytton has done. If you stand in Knebworth Hall, as I have stood, and look at the portrait of Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer, by Maclise, you will find it difficult to believe that the elderly gentleman in an old-fashioned blue coat, with a stoop in his shoulders, high collar and stiff neckerchief round his throat, and who puts his hand behind his ear when you speak to him—was the original of the painting. Charles Dickens is not a contrast of that kind. He has escaped the ill-health which has shattered the author of 'Pelham.' But his hair is iron-gray, and scanty; he wears a moustache and pointed beard, and his face has a red-brown tinge, which sometimes reminds one of the complexion of Louis Napoleon."

MR. DION BOUCICAULT has succeeded in his endeavors to get a protection for the property of French authors, a notification having been given to that author by the Board of Trade that the desires of dramatic authors will be granted, and that the next session will probably witness the passing of a bill embodying the wishes of English authors, and some sort of justice to the French. Mr. Tom Robertson, as an English author who invents his own plots, is delighted at the prospect; Mr. Tom Taylor, who borrows his ready-made, is supposed to be correspondingly doleful.

MRS. SCOTT-SIDDONS, great granddaughter of the great Siddons, is a dramatic failure.

SATAN.

That emperor, who sways
The realm of sorrow, at mid breast from the ice
Stood forth; and I in stature am more like
A giant than the giants are his arms;
Mark how great that whole must be, which suits
With such a part. If he were beautiful
As he is hideous now, and yet did dare
To scowl upon his Maker, well from him
May all our misery flow. Oh, what a sight!
How passing strange it seemed when I did spy
Upon his head three faces: one in front
Of hue vermilion: the other two with this
Midway each shoulder join'd and at the crest;
The right 'twixt wan and yellow seem'd; the left
To look on, such as come from whence old Nile
Stoops to the lowlands. Under each shot forth
Two mighty wings, enormous as became
A bird so vast. Sails never such I saw Outstretch'd on the wide sea. No plumes had they,
But were in texture like a hat; and there
He flapped i' th' air, that from him issued still
Three winds, wherewith Cocytus to its depth
Was frozen. At six eyes he wept: the tears
Adown three chins distill'd with bloody foam.
At every month his teeth a sinner champ'd,
Bruised as with ponderous engine; so that three
Were in this guise tormented. —Dante.

A MORMON OTHELLO.

OTHELLO was most excellently played at the Opera House on Monday evening last, and Mr. McCullough filled the title role in a splendid manner. The part at best is an ardous and trying one, but the Mormon version must be fearfully exhausting, if the following account of it, for which the "Fat Contributor" is responsible, be true:

At a Mormon theatre, not long ago, they played Othello. "Othello" was represented, as usual, but polygamy demanded more than one "Desdemona," so there were fifteen Mrs. Othellos for this Moor to be jealous of. The consequence was he grew fifteen times as jealous as any other "Othello" on the stage, and raved and ranted fifteen times as loud. The actor who undertook the part has been laid up in bed ever since.

In the first place, there were fifteen "Brabantios" clamoring for their daughters, who had eloped and married the Moor. The text had to be changed a little, of course. When brought before the Senators, charged with winning fifteen young women of Caucasian blood by the use of charms, love powders, etc., he said:

"Their fathers loved me, oft invited me;
Still questioned me the story of my life,
From year to year: the battles, sieges, fortunes
That I had passed."

Fifteen mortified and repentant fathers immediately regretted that they had seemed to countenance negro equality by inviting the black man to their homes, although he had fought nobly during the war. Then "Othello" drew a touching picture of the sympathies which his tale excited in the breasts of the fifteen young women; how they would hurry through their housework to listen to it, half washing the breakfast things, and leaving the chamber-work until afternoon. He found at length "a pliant hour," when the fifteen susceptible young women were all together, and drew from them "a prayer of earnest heart," that he would give them the story entire in one number, which they had got in fragments from day to day. He consented, and often did beguile tears from fifteen pairs of eyes when speaking of some distressful stroke that his youth suffered. Fifteen woman-power sighs rewarded his story, and then they swore—fifteen of 'em—

"They wished they had not heard it, yet they wished
That heaven had made them such a man."

They requested him, if he knew of any promising young man of good income who was in love with them, to teach him how to repeat that entertaining yarn of his, and that would woo them. Of these fifteen hints he spoke:

"They loved me for the dangers I had passed,
And I loved them that they did pity them,—
Here come the ladies, let them witness it."

Then the fifteen Desdemonas enter, perceiving a divided duty between their husband and their fifteen paternals, but they shake their papas, and cling to the Moor, thus administering a salutary rebuke to the opposers of universal suffrage.

The plot progresses. "Iago" excites the jealous rage of "Othello" by pretending to find fifteen pocket handkerchiefs, that the Moor had given his wives, in "Cassio's" bed-chamber. They were neatly embroidered handkerchiefs, with a butterfly in one corner, and his initials, "G. W. O." (George Washington Othello,) in red.

It was hard to make "Othello" believe for some time that his fifteen wives had gone back on him, but the wily and treacherous "Iago" plies his arts so skilfully that the Moor is at length convinced, and resolves to avenge his honor, that has received fifteen deadly stabs, by making himself a widower. This he accomplishes by smothering his fifteen wives with their fifteen different bolsters, being called before the curtain by the enraptured audience at the death of each of the fifteen Desdemonas.

[For the Californian]

ROUNDABOUT PAPERS—NO. I.

ON THE USE OF THE KNIFE.

IN that happy period of life when candy holds a prominent place in the affections and notions of paradise are associated with plentiful supplies of apples, cakes, and nuts, nothing so charms the mind of childhood as much as one of those good old tales beginning with "once upon a time." But the growing literary taste of which nursery tales form the germ, soon requires stronger food than elves and fairies. Robinson Crusoeish yarns, and startling adventures by sea and land, gratify the craving for intellectual excitement, until the youth merges into that dreamy age when love-sick novels fascinate his imagination, and looking with wistful eyes round the circle of his female firmanent, he fixes on one bright particular star as the center of his sighs, enshrines her in his air-built castles, and mentally makes his adored one the personification of all the virtues and beauties of the fictitious heroines. Now comes the merging point from which we assume an individuality that lasts through life, but whether the sighing swain becomes a sensible married man, a pleasant or disagreeable bachelor, an adept at consuming whisky, or a Dashaway, the sentimental stage of life's journey having been passed, sentimental literature is abjured and we hanker with a sharp relish after the sensational. Now, Mr. Jones, don't deny it, although you are a subscriber to the Patigonian Tract Society, I know well enough that your first glance on opening the newspaper is for terrible murders and spicy divorces; and not only that, Mr. Jones, but I have the effrontry to say that there is such a naughty corner in every man's heart, as to induce him to peruse, (surreptitiously, of course,) publications of the National Police Gazette stamp, with wicked avidity. And your worthy sponse is just as bad; for is it not a fact that she skipped that report in this morning's Alta, on the "Mammoths of Siberia," to read the scandal about Mrs. Sumner and the German Attaché? Well, I don't blame either of you. It is a weakness in human nature for which we must censure Adam, and I have used my knowledge of the failing to head this article with a formidable title.

"Read under false pretences," you may exclaim, for there is nothing horrible, bloody, or murderous in my theme; no tragic episode of the Barbary Coast, no startling denouement ending in fearful revenge, nothing at all about dagger, poignard or stilletto, but merely an essay on the use and abuse of the dinner knife.

Having followed me down the column, pray give me your attention to the end, and the subject introduced in such a roundabout manner shall be followed without further divergence.

What are the faults of the fork that it should no more be used? Why is the juicy morsel no longer conveyed to the expectant palate, impaled upon its shining prongs? Have we, in our anxiety to cast aside Old World customs, inaugurated a new code of manners, of which the first commandment reads, "with thy knife only shalt thou eat." Certainly we have brought the use of the domestic weapon to great perfection. I have seen Chinese jugglers throw a fringe of knives round a brother celestial, when the slighest mis-aim would have inflicted a serious wound, but I daily see Americans take the glittering blade between their teeth with such precision that an eighth of an inch to the right or left would be fatal to the jaws. But here is something to say on the score of economy, in defense of the custom, as salt spoons have become unnecessary, and butter knives obsolete; but whether the money gain is not counterbalanced by the uncleanliness of the action I will not stop to discuss. If in a laudable desire to hurry through the meal in fifteen minutes, it is found that the powers of feeding by means of the fork is too slow a method, will not some humanitarian take the matter in hand and add another prong to the ill-used steel, so that we can shovel in our food as fast as with a knife. The small vices of nations are better known than their great virtues, and our tobacco chewing and knife using have become world famous as American characteristics. Dickens, Basil Hall, and Mrs. Trollope have all referred to it, foreigners universally comment upon it and it is without doubt an ungraceful and unmanly custom. If I can induce any of the readers of this journal to forego the habit, my short article will have done some small good. Such is my roundabout paper. PROSPECTOR.

COLLIDED.—The steamer Washoe collided with a bark just before reaching this city on her last trip yesterday, and received considerable damage thereby. One of her wheelhouses was demolished and her pilot house was carried away. A passenger named Bosford, who is employed as a compositor in the Times office, was severely if not fatally injured.

A WORD TO PRUDENT HOUSEWIVES.—We must call the attention of the prudent housewives of San Francisco to Meagher, Taaffe & Co.'s advertisement in another column. They announce that they will, on Monday, November 25th, continue their sale of goods at reduced prices. The goods which are to be sold at a sacrifice, comprise lace curtains, cloths for boys, wear and cloakings prints, shirtings and sheetings, hosiery, silks, etc.

GOLDEN SHOES.

May bought golden shoes for her boy,
Golden leather from heel to toe,
With silver tassel to tie at the top,
And dainty lining as white as snow:
I bought a pair of shoes as well,
For the restless feet of a little lad,
Common and coarse and iron-tipped,
The best I could for the sum I had.

"Golden," May said, "to match his curls;"
I never saw her petted boy:
I warrant he is but a puny elf,
And pink and white, like a china toy;
And who is he that he should walk
All shod in gold on the king's highway,
While little Fred, with a king's own grace,
Must wear rough brogans every day?

And why can May from her little hand
Fling baubles at her idol's feet,
While I can hardly shelter Fred
From the cruel stones of the broken street?
I envy not her silken robe,
Nor the jewels' shine, nor the handmaid's care;
But, ah! to give what I cannot,
This, this it is so hard to bear.

But down I'll crush this bitter thought,
And bear no grudge to pretty May,
Though she is rich, and I am poor,
Since we were girls at Clover Bay;
And ask the Lord to guide the feet,
So painfully and coarsely shod,
Till they are fit to walk the street
That runs hard by the throne of God.

"Good-bye, friend Ellen," "Good-bye, May:"
What dims her eyes so bright and blue,
As she looks at the rugged shoes askance?
"I wish my boy could wear those, too;
But he will never walk, they say."
So May, with a little sigh, has gone,
And I am left in a wondering mood,
To think of my wicked thoughts alone.

It needs not that I tell you how
I clasped my sturdy rogue that night,
And thanked the God who gave him strength,
And made him such a merry wight;
Nor envied May one gift she held,
If with it I must also choose
That sight of little crippled feet,
Albeit shod in golden shoes.

DAMAGES AWARDED.—The suit entered against the Potrero and Bay View Railroad Company for $10,000 damages for obstructing the navigation of the Bay by building a bridge near the powder magazine, was concluded yesterday, and the jury found for plaintiff, assessing the damages of $450.

HYMEN.—Hymen was a young man, of Athens, obscurely born, but extremely handsome. Falling in love with a lady of rank, he disguised himself in female attire, the better to carry on his amour; and as he was one day on the seashore celebrating the Eleusinian rites with his mistress and her female companions, a gang of pirates came upon them by surprise, and carried them off to a distant island, where the pirates got drunk for joy and fell asleep. Hymen then armed the virgins, and dispatched the sleeping pirates; when, leaving the two women upon the island, he sped to Athens, told his adventure, and demanded his beloved in marriage as her ransom. His request was granted; and so fortunate was the marriage, that the name of Hymen was ever after invoked on all future nuptials; and in progress of time the Greeks enrolled him among their gods.

WE should like, says a London paper, to see the reading of the translation of "Plutarch's Lives" revived, and introduced into boys' and girls' schools. They are the best introduction to a knowledge of Roman life that can be gained by any one far better than the histories of Rome—short or long—that abound. They taught Shakspeare what Rome was; they are regularly studied in France; and the verdict of our own best scholars is in their favor now.

THE sales of Dickens' works shows "Pickwick" to be decidedly the most popular of all. "David Copperfield," generally considered his most perfect story, comes after "Pickwick," and then the relative popularity of the principal others stands thus: "Nicholas Nickleby," "Old Curiosity Shop," "Christmas Stories," "Dombey," "Oliver Twist." There is no marked difference among the remainder of the list.

LADIES' STATIONERY.—Tyler Brothers have a new and splendid stock of fine stationery at their store, 691 Market street, corner of Third, and prepare all stationery with stamped initials without extra charge. They keep on hand also every variety of school books and school stationery in use in our schools, for the accommodation of their juvenile friends. They give particular attention to these branches of their business, and wish all residents of the southern portion of the city to bear this fact in mind.

REMOVAL.—John G. Hodge & Co., importers and wholesale stationers, have removed to the southwest corner of Sansome and Sacramento streets. This old house is now located in more commodious quarters, and has gained increased business facilities.

BOYS' CLOTHING at less than cost, can be bought at H. M. Lockwood & Co.'s, 625 Clay street. They are closing out business, and have made youths' and boys' clothing an especial branch in their business for years past. See there advertised list of prices elsewhere.

LITTLE THINGS.

In a little precious stone what splendor meets the eyes:
In a little lump of sugar how much sweetness lies!
So in a little woman, love grows and multiplies:
You recollect the proverb says—"a word unto the wise."

A pepper-corn is very small, but seasons every dinner,
More than all other condiments, although 'tis sprinkled thinner:
Just so a little woman is, if love will let you win her,
There's not a joy in all the world you will not find within her.

And as within the little rose you will find the richest dyes,
And in little grain of gold much price of value lies,
And from a little balsam much odor doth arise,
So in a little woman there's a taste of Paradise.

The skylark and the nightingale, though small and light of wing,
Yet warble sweeter in the grove than all the birds that sing:
And so a little woman, though a very little thing,
Is sweeter, far than sugar, and flowers that bloom in Spring.

FRONT SEATS.

A CHAPTER IN THE HISTORY OF THE STAGE.

BY DUTTON COOKE.

IN the early days of the British theatre it was usual to permit the class of spectators who frequented the boxes to take their seats, if they so preferred, on the stage, and to provide them with stools, for the use of which they paid sixpence or a shilling, according to circumstances. Ben Jonson, in the Induction to his "Cynthia's Revels," makes one of the characters offer a stool to another for the sixpence. "For what, I pray you?" he demands. "What shall I do with it?" "Oh, Lord, sir," replies the first, "will you betray your ignorance so much? Why, throne yourself in state on the stage as other gentlemen use, sir." Seated upon their stools, or reclining upon the rushes with which the stage was strewed, the young nobles, gallants, wits, and poets of the day held inquest upon the performance and criticised its deficiencies, the while they regaled themselves with pipes and tobacco supplied by their own pages or by the attendants of the theatre. They laughed, jested with each other, and sometimes interrupted and addressed the players much after the manner of Duke Theseus and his friends during the performance of the tragedy of "Pyramus and Thisbe" by the clowns in "Midsummer Night's Dream." The play-going gallant had, as Dekker says, "A signed patent to engross the whole commodity of censure, may lawfully presume to be a guider, and stand at the helm to steer the passage of the scenes." Smoking was then a common practice in theatres as well as everywhere else. King James, in his "Counterblast to Tobacco," affirms that "no time or action was exempted from the public use of it;" and the "Gull's Horn Book" says that the gallant made great display of his smoking abilities at the playhouse. Occasionally the actors on the stage smoked as well as the spectators, although this, no doubt, was chiefly the case in such plays as were intended to represent the manners of the age. Thus, in "Every Man out of his Humour," Fastidius is found smoking perfumed tobacco from a pipe hearing "the true form of a woodcock's head." He makes love and puffs smoke at every pause. "Troth, sweet lady, I shall—he prepared to give you thanks for those thanks, and—study more officious and obsequious regards—to your fair beauties.——Mend the pipe, boy." Whereupon Marciente, another of the characters, comments: "I ne'er knew tobacco taken as a parenthesis before."

It was on a stage thus dimmed with smoke and diminished by a crowd of lounging critics that the works of Shakspeare and his contemporaries were first presented to the public. No wonder that the prologue to his "King Henry the Fifth," after longing "for a muse of fire," the poet should descend to apologetic terms.

"But pardon, gentle all,
The flat, unraised spirits that have dared
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object: can this cockpit hold
The vasty fields of France? or may we cram
Within this wooden O the very casques
Thus did affright the air at Agincourt?"

In time, however, an alteration took place in the disposition of the seats on thest age. They were not altogether aholished; hut they were, by means of a dwarf screen or partition, severed from the portion of the theatre devoted to the players, and they then assumed the form of stage boxes—as may be seen in the engraving after Hogarth of the interior of the theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields during the performance of the "Beggar's Opera." The audience still sat behind the curtain and encroached upon the domain of the actors; hut they interfered much less than fomerly with the view of the representation. In 1729, however, an attempt was made at Drury Lane Theatre to revive the old custom, and on the occasion of the first performance of the "Village Opera"—an obscure work upon which the more familiur "Love in a Village" is in a great degree founded—the Duchess of Queensberry—Prior's "Kitty, beautiful and young"—took her seat on the stage in the full view of the spectaters. To judge by the following lines, current at the time, the lady's proceeding was not very favorably regarded by the house:

"Bent on dire work, and kindly rule, the town,
Impatient, hissed thy seat, dear duchess, down;
Conscious that there, had thy soft form appeared,
Lost all in gaze, no vacant ear had heard:
Thy lambent eyes had looked their rage away,
And the relenting hiss, and saved the play.
Thus, not in clouds (as Father Homer sung)
Such as fair Venus round Æneas flung,
Had our dull bard escaped the dreadful fright,
But sunk concealed in an excess of light!"

There can he no doubt, however, that for a long time the spectators who were admitted to seats upon tho stage seriously incommoded the actors and affronted the less privileged portion of the audience. In an early "Spectator" Steele, describing a visit to the Haymarket Theatre, makes mention of his surprise at seeing a "well-dressed young fellow in a full-bottomed wig appear in the midst of the sea, and without any visible concern take snuff." The Fine Gentleman in Garrick's little comedy of "Lethe," describes to Æsop his manner of spending his evenings: "I dress, and go generally behind the scenes of both playhouses—not, you may imagine, to be diverted with the play, but to intrigue and show myself; I stand upon the stage, talk loud and stare about, which confounds the actors and disturbs the audience, upon which the galleries, who hate the appearance of one of us, begin to hiss and to cry, 'Off, off!' while I, undaunted, stamp my foot so, loll with my shoulder thus, take snuff with my right hand, and smile scornfully thus. This exasperates the savages, and they attack us with vollies of sucked oranges and half eaten pippins." "And you retire?" Æsop inquires. "Without douht," replies the Fine Gentleman, "if I am sober; for orange will stain silk, and an apple disfigure a feature."

It was long a custom in the London theatres, on special occasions or particular benefits, to accomodate an overflowing house by means of benches erected across the stage rising one above the other, until sometimes the spectators were perched up higher than the trees of the scenery, and hats and bonnets were beheld fastened to the clouds. The playhill of Garrick's benefit in 1742 contains an announcement that "the stage will he formed into an amphitheatre, where servants will be allowed to keep places." In the following year it was stated that "the stage will be formed into side boxes, and seven rows of the pit will he railed into boxes." The entrances were oftentimes on these occasions so choked up by the spectators that the players could hardly come upon the scene; "and," says an authority, "the feats of Bosworth field, amidst drums, trumpets, battle-axes and spears, were enacted between two audiences, while Richard spoke his tent soliloquy and his dying lines upon a carpet no higger than a table cloth."

Tate Wilkinson relates that he had seen Mrs. Cibber, as Juliet, prostrating herself upon an old couch covered with black cloth to represent the tomh of the Capulets with at least two hundred persons behind her, and that when Quin returned to the stage for one night to play Falstaff for Ryan's benefit, notwithstanding the impatience of the audience to see their old favorite, he was several minutes before he could force his way on to the stage through the numbers that wedged him in.

Bnt this arrangement, however remunerative to the actor whose benefit was thus so liberally patronised, was very unsatisfactory to those among the spectators who came to the theatre for entertainment, and with an eye to scenic illusion. Moreover, hickerings and jealousies ensued between the audiences before and behind the curtain. Thereupon arose a practice, especially favored by the less popular comedians, of inserting at the bottom of their advertisements and playhills, by way of an additional attraction, a notice in the following terms, —"N. B. There will he no building on the stage." Thus, on the occasion of Mrs. Bellamy's benefit in 1753, the hills of the night announced, "No part of the pit will he railed into boxes, nor any building on the stage."

The presence of the spectators behind the scenes was for a long period a grave inconvenience and annoyance to the players. Efforts were made from time to time to abate what had become a real nuisance. In 1738, on the production of "Comus" at the Drury Lane, there was a notice in the playhills: "N. B. To prevent any interruption to the music, dancing, etc., 'tis hoped no gentlemen will take it ill they cannot he admitted behind the scenes or in the orchestra."

In the following season another notification appeared, "The audience having been much disgusted at the performance being interrupted by persons crowding on the stage, it is humbly hoped none will take it ill that they cannot be admitted behind the scenes in future." When "King John" was received in 1745 there appeared a somewhat similar announcement, the reason alleged being that the play was so full of characters that company behind the scenes would be of great prejudice to the performance. A few years later appears another notice, "As the admission of persons behind the scenes has occasioned a general complaint on account of the frequent interruptions in the performance, 'tis hoped gentlemen won't he offended that no money will he taken there for the future."

Garrick, when he became manager, was much bent upon a thorough reform in this matter; hut thorough reforms, as we all know, are not easy of accomplishment. The actors, in many cases, would not venture upon the expense of taking benefits if they were to he deprived of the privilege of crowding their friends upon the stage. The building on the stage put sometimes as much as a hundred, or even a hundred and fifty pounds into the pockets of the "beneficiaire." Then the young men of fashion, steady patrons of the drama, claimed the right to go "behind," not merely on benefit nights, hnt on all other occasions as well, and questioned the manager's power to control their wishes; while he, on his side, had some natural compunctions about offending such very constant supporters. It was not until the theatre was enlarged in 1762, and the space before the curtain made to contain as many persons as formerly filled the boxes, pit, galleries, and stage, that the actors were appeased, the excuse for going on the stage was removed, and the inconvenience and evil of the proceeding in a great degree suppressed. From that time only a very privileged few were admitted to the "arcana" of the playhouse.

The close contact into which the old custom of providing seats upon the stage brought the spectators and the players occasionally gave rise to rather curious incidents.

Mrs. Bellamy, the actress, in her autobiography, narrates an adventure that befell her on the Dnblin stage. She was performing Cleopatra to a crowded house, and amid tumultnous applause, when a gentleman who stood near the stage-door, took the liberty of demonstrating his approval after a very unjustifiable fashion. "Being a little flushed with liquor" (a condition in which it is to he feared tho fine gentleman of the last century was too frequently to he found,) "or otherwise," says the lady—"I am persuaded he could not have been capable of the rudeness—he put his lips to the back of my neck as I passed him. Justly enraged," she continues, "at so great an insult, and not considering that the Lord Lieutenant was present, or that it was committed before such a number of spectators, I instantly turned about and gave the gentleman a slap in the face." This prompt punishment of the offender seems to have delighted the house. The Earl of Chesterfield, the Lord Lieutenant of the time, rose from his seat clapping his hands, and the whole audience followed his example The tipsy gentleman was compelled to make a public apology, and a regulation was soon afterwards put in force prohibiting the admission behind the scenes of any not connected with the theatre.

It is a little curious to find Dr. Johnson a chief performer in a disturbance on the stage; hut Garrick used to tell a story that when, in the younger days of himself and his friend at Lichfield, their native place, some strolling players came and performed at the theatre, Johnson took a chair and seated himself on the stage. Leaving his seat for a few minutes, he found it occupied on his return hy a stranger, who refused to give it up, although formally requested so to do. Thereupon Johnson, without further parley, took up chair and man together, and hurled them into the pit! Mrs. Thrale thonght it worth while to inquire if the story was true. "Garrick has not spoiled it in the telling," said the doctor quietly; "it is very near true, to he sure."

That Johson was a man of athletic constitution, capable in his youth of putting forth great strength, there can be little question. As the bathing-man said in 1766 at Brighthelmstone, when he saw the doctor swimming and buffeting with the waves, "Why, sir, you must have been a stout-hearted gentleman forty years ago.—Cassell's Magazine.

HAIR IN MODERN FICTION.

HAIR has become one of the leading properties in fiction. The facility with which it flows over the shoulders and bosoms in its owner's vicinity is quite extraordinary. In every emergency it is ready for use. Its quantity and color, and the reflections in it, and even the "fuzz" which is its modern peculiarity, take the place of all those pretty qualities with which heroines used to he endowed. What need has a woman for a soul when she has upon her head a mass of wavy gold? When a poor creature has to be represented, her hair is said to be scanty, and of no particular color. Power, strength, a rich nature, a noble mind, are all to be found, embodied in this great attribute. Samson, being a Jew, had probably black locks, which would be against him; hut otherwise Samson would have made a great figure in these days, if indeed, Deliah had not outdone him with amber floods of equal potency. Amber is the tint patronized in the works of Ouda. It is the only idea we have been able to evolve out of her gorgeous pages, if indeed it can he called an idea. With other and more orthodox writers the hue is gold or red. When the conception demands a milder shade of coloring, auburn, and even chestnut (with gold reflections), are permissible; hut when very high effect is intended, red is the hue par excellence. Red and gold, in all its shades, are compatible with virtue; amber means rich, luxurious vice—meanness and poverty of character. As for black and brown, which were once favorites in fiction before it took too violent coloring, they are "nowhere." They may be permitted now and then in a strictly subordinate position, but they have nothing to do with the symbolism of modern art.

THE New York Review says, Bryant's Minstrels, we hear, are to be re-organized, and are to have a room in the new Tammany Hall building, on Fourteenth street.

WEAKNESS may be quite as good as strength, if you are wise enough to make a wise use of it.

THE UNLUCKY CAPTAIN.

I STOOD on Rosseau's Bridge at Geneva, at mid-day, waiting for the steam-boat to start for Montreux. How long I waited, I knew not, nor, indeed, did I care. Who can tire of the rushing past of that glorious river? There it glides from the lake, more transparent than at Ville Neuve, and with a far more vivid color. Here it flings itself, with a joyful bound, under the bridges, and over the shining sands! A pure life it has had (like other lives I know,) never dimmed by contact with base things, but purifying all in its vicinity, and leaving a bright line of light behind. Always so brilliant and so clear, reflecting sun and Alps and city in even brighter colors than their own. As I gazed into the blue and shining water, a swan, "milk white," floated majestically by. I raised my eyes, and there, high among the clouds, shone out Mont Blanc, that monarch of mountains, with "his diadem of snow," and nearer still, rose many mountains, forest-clad, or with soft velvet turf, and flowers and aromatic plants (and my soul was singing a hymn of Paradise,) when a shriek prolonged, repeated, recalled me to myself. It was the last cry of the departing steam-boat. I had seen my luggage placed on board some hours before, and I had only time to run across the bridge and spring on deck, before the paddles were in motion and the hawser cast off.

A slight shudder came over me when I recognized, in the person of the captain, an old friend, familiarly known as the "Ungluecklicher" (Unlucky One.) I turned to the friendly shore, in the vague hope of deferring my voyage; but the little wooden bridge was up, and there were many yards between me and the land. There was nothing left for it but for I and the Unlucky Captain to swim or sink—as I felt in my inmost heart the chances were we should—together. I took a sorrowful farewell of Geneva, and threw an anxious glance across the lake. It was smooth as glass; but what had waves and winds to do with fatality such as the Unlucky Captain's?

It was some comfort to find we were towing two large empty boats. Taking up a position as near to them as possible, I drew from my pocket a letter containing recent news of the "Ungluecklicher."

How many good ships and new, had sunk beneath our captain's military-looking legs, it is impossible for me to state correctly. As a mere tourist I knew of three. The extraordinary habit he had of wrecking them in that glassy sea, was only exceeded by his wonderful gift of fishing them up again. One went down like the Royal George, in port, on the loveliest and calmest day. In three weeks she was up again—in a deplorable state, certainly, as regards cabin furniture, and full of fish—but still up, and afloat! She had come, in the usual course of things, to pass the night in the harbor, when "a turn too much," as the captain expressed it, ran her over the small portion of an old pier, so close to the shore that it had never been considered necessary to remove it. Moreover every stick and stone of that old arrangement could be distinctly seen from boat or shore. These little "misfortunes" had always happened within a few yards of land, and had never been attended with any loss or even danger of life; but "the company" were in despair. The losses to them were incalculable. The wages of fishers up, the repairs or actual destruction of ships, were to them frightful. But the most curious feature in the whole proceeding was the way in which the half-ruined company protected and clung to its Unlucky Captain! No sooner was a ship "down" and up again, than "presto" (and pending the necessary repairs.) behold our dear old friend in command of the best boat on the lake. His little gentlemanly feet shod in the most irreproachable boots, his white pantaloons girded round the waist with a crimson sash, a loose blue jacket with gold buttons, showing the device of an anchor, emblem of hope, or "better luck next time" buttons, as Jack used to call them; a little blue cap showing on the front a still larger anchor. The whole man, so to speak, was steeped in hope; and bravely his goddess carried him through. His face shone with good humor and fun, with a dash of the "vaurien" rakishness best described by an English lady in the habit of making the voyage, "He has such a dear good-for-nothing look!" But listen to a recent act of this heroic "good-for-nothing." In one of his successful voyages across the lake, they encountered one of the sudden and terrific storms that sweep down the rifts of the Alps. The steamer was safe enough, but they were not far from a small pleasure boat, wherein were two boys battling in vain with the large wing like sail, to take it in. In a moment the boat capsized. One of the boys clung fast while it floated bottom upward, but the other was already in the current of the Rhone stream that was carrying him slowly but surely, far from help. Our dear old captain plunged into the lake, and swimming hard, overtook him before he sank, and held him safely until the steamer's boat rowed to the rescue, and took them in. And they picked up the other little fellow as they passed. Who would not be such an Unlucky Captain?

But to return to the actual state of things and to this particular voyage from Geneva to Montreux.

"I suppose you have heard of our friend's last exploit?" said an old friend of mine, an inhabitant of Geneva, pointing over his shoulder to where the captain was standing, surrounded by a little knot of admiring passengers.

"No; do tell!" said an American lady.

"Well," continued my friend, "he is at the top of the tree now. He wrecked that lovely little Seagull, the admiration even of naval men; six weeks ago, and now they've given him this, the best boat on the lake.

"His promotion was gained in this wise: About six weeks since, the Unlucky Captain was on the deck of the Seagull, talking in his genial way, with an English tourist and myself. You all know the Russian Princess' house, about ten miles further up? The land stretches out in a point there, well enough defined; but everybody hereabouts knows it must have a wide berth before making for the bay beyond. He pointed out the princess' house to the Englishman, and signed to the man at the wheel to edge in a little, until, in fact, we were not twenty yards from land.

"Suddenly, crash! Crack went the ship! The people sitting upon camp stools, rolled over and about in all directions. The ship was immovable, happily for us and our carpet-bags; for as long as the sharp rock she had struck upon remained in the hole it had made, the water entered but slowly. Still, we were as if you were balancing a toy-boat on the tip of your finger.

"I looked at the captain, he was stamping his feet and tearing his hair, but only for a moment. He soon recovered from his surprise, and giving a tighter twitch to his scarlet sash, addressed himself with the greatest intelligence to doing the best that could be done under the circumstances. Some ladies came screaming up from the saloon, naturally alarmed by the breaking up of the flooring, and the fountain of water springing up among the flowers in the carpet; but they were greatly relieved to find how near they were to a hospitable shore, being within that particular distance usually described by, 'as far as I can kick my hat.'

"The captain ordered round the boats (they had been 'out' in readiness all day,) and the debarkation of the women and children commenced instanter. In about ten trips, and in as many minutes, the passengers and crew were all safe on shore—all but the captain, who stuck gallantly to the ship. He sent everything moveable out of her, had the carpets torn up, and indeed saved everything—except the ship and the engines. There was great excitement among the unfortunate shareholders at Geneva. They sent off immediately three of 'the company to inquire into the circumstances of the accident, to report upon the same, and to administer a reprimand to the captain, if deserved. While they were holding a solemn and anxious meeting at Geneva, a letter was received from the three delegates, full of enthusiastic admiration of the 'resource and intelligence' of the captain under extraordinary difficulties.

"They had evidently gone over to the enemy, and succumbed under the influence of his genial countenance. 'His efforts,' they said, 'were superhuman, his energy, untiring. Night and day he worked and directed with every hope of success.' In a postscript was added that the shareholders might rest assurred that every care was taken of the captain, and that he was supplied with everything that he could possibly require to soften, as far as might be, the great misfortune that had befallen him. A pair of goloshes had just been returned to them with the captain's best thanks, but the water being two feet above the deck they were unnecessary.' The company groaned at the forlorn picture.

"For a week the captain and his staff worked without intermission. An enormous raft of wood encircled the scene of his disasters and labors. At last the little Seagull rose several feet out of water, and that night the captain went on shore to take some rest. Poor man he slept the sleep of the wet and weary. He dreamed that he was swimming for his life with his head under water (the normal state of his affairs in the flesh;) in his efforts to breathe he awoke, and found himself upon the floor. He was off at daylight to the scene of his triumphs, and in the joy of his heart, sent to invite the delegates on board to breakfast.

"In about three weeks, passed in the alternations of hope and fear, the steam-boat fairly floated. To be sure, she was full of water, her back and ribs were broken, she had scarcely a whole bone in her body; but still she floated, and, supported by a little forrest of fir-trees without, and a cargo of timber within, 'the company cherished every hope of being able on a calm day to tow her back to Geneva.' Some rough weather postponed the attempt for some days—days passed by our friend in triumphant glee. He was feted by the shareholders, and all along the shores of Lake Leman nothing was heard of but the genius for hydraulics deveveloped in the Unlucky Captain. He received very graciously a deputation of shipbuilders, was appointed to this splendid boat with increased pay, and was presented with a silken banner, federal-embroidered, by ladies: the very banner now waving above us.

"At the end of a week the weather moderated. The steam-tug crept up the lake, and made fast to our crippled friend, 'and all went merry as a marriage bell;' (one naturally quotes Byron here.) The voyage might take seven or eight hours. The dear old captain was in the highest spirits; he could not remain in the dirty little tug, but rowed merrily round and about his old disabled love, as if to keep up her spirits with his own; when, swoop came a blast of wind down that terrific gorge we are just passing! In five minutes the whole lake was up. The captain sought refuge in the tug; and the poor little Seagull, after twirling and twisting, the sport of winds and waves, shook herself free from the protecting fir-trees, and settled down at the bottom of the lake. The tug cast off the firwood at the captain's stern command. 'The company,' awaiting in a body the arrival of the wreck, were touched by the captain's agitation and distress. He really was knocked up in body and mind, so they took him home, and coaxed him into health and appetite, (the last thing that fails a true son of Tell,) and, presenting him with a testimonial, sent him afloat again."

"The question is whether we shall float," growled a nervous passenger; "why does that ass of a tourist occupy the captain's attention?"

"Oh," said my friend, "don't be alarmed about that. I forgot to tell you that 'the company' held a meeting—closed doors, and all that—and when they re-appointed the captain, they also appointed a lieutenant: that fellow standing on the paddle-box. He is to direct the steersman, and in fact has the entire charge of the navigation. The captain being requested, 'as a favor to the company,' to take his stand at the gangway, at the exit and entrance of passengers, to receive tickets, in consequence of discrepancies in the issue of them and the reception of money. This relieves him of all responsibility regarding the ship, and is, in fact, a compliment, as showing the confidence reposed in him by the company. I am myself a shareholder," continued my friend; "I have sustained considerable losses; but I also participate in the enthusiasm for our captain. I declare to you he is the best fellow——"

Hallo! What's that? There was a crack and a scrape from end to end of the ship. We breathed again, for we were making way; but we had evidently passed over some hard and dangerous substance.

"There!" again groaned the nervous passenger.

"Ease her! Stop her! Back her!" shouted the captain, and the man at the helm (who hated the lieutenant) obeyed. The captain, with a wild gleam in his eyes, pointed (for he could not speak) to a dark something in the lake; and there, reposing under the shining water, we distinctly saw the beautiful little Seagull, or all that remained of her.

We had struck upon her topmast, and had scraped over it from end to end without injury; but, alas! while hovering so lovingly over and around the remains of his lost pet, the captain once more took "a turn too much," and—not far off from the scene of the last catastrophe—struck heavily, and, I felt assured, hopelessly, on the sand.

There was no danger for the moment, as the bottom was soft, and not a breath of air was stirring the sleeping lake. The dear old captain assured us that we should float again in half an hour; but my time in Switzerland was short, and bidding a hasty adieu "To the ship and her crew," I, with my bag and the nervous gentleman, rowed to shore; thence to get on, as we best might, to Montreux.

Three days afterwards, in the train, I passed near the scene of our disaster, and there, with shocked surprise, I beheld the ship still hard and fast, surrounded by a fleet of boats and the inevitable fir-trees, the little tug creeping up from Geneva, and the dear old captain, in his scarlet sash, radient and gleaming amongst the crowd, lending a hand everywhere, directing, working, and sending off reassuring telegrams every half-hour. I was obliged to continue my journey direct to England; but I felt a pleasurable conviction that this accident being only, as it were, in connection with the last and developing, in an equal degree, the resources of the commander—would be worth to him at least a silver cup and a banner, cantonal.

As the train rushed by, I strained my eyes to catch a last glimpse of the dear old fellow and his staff. There they were, the ship, the water, and the Alps, all glowing in the sunset! As I smiled at his uncertain voyages, may I be forgiven for confessing that these lines of Wordsworth's visited my brain:

> Where lies the land to which the ship must go?
> What haven is her mark?
> And almost, as it was, when ships were rare,
> A doubt, and something dark,
> Some reverential fear
> Is with thee, at "this" farewell, joyous bark.

It is announced that the "Christmas" number of Once A Week will appear on the 1st of November! This fashion of publishing periodicals a long time before their date is being carried to a most absurd extent. By-and-by we shall be reading our Christmas numbers under the shade of trees at midsummer.

Fame is an undertaker that pays but little attention to the living, but bedizens the dead, furnishes out their funerals, and follows them to the grave.

A high human soul is a temple dedicated to heaven; and like the Pantheon at Rome, it is lighted only from above.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO,.....SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1867.

CAUTION.

ALL PERSONS advertising in THE CALIFORNIAN are hereby cautioned against paying any bills to W. M. WALLACE, a former solicitor for this paper. No persons are authorized to collect for advertisements in THE CALIFORNIAN except the undersigned proprietors.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN.

San Francisco, November 13, 1867.

THE THEOLOGICAL MOVEMENT.

WITHIN the last five or six years the indications of a radical change in the heretofore accepted ideas of Protestant theology have been rapidly multiplying. We say of Protestant theology, because such changes do not, and it would seem cannot in the nature of things occur in that Church whose motto is, Semper, ubique eadem, and whose claim of infallibility is inconsistent with the idea of change. Among the indications referred to, the most significant, are not so much the mere fact of the appearance and immense circulation of such books as those of Colenso and Renan, "Ecce Homo," "Liber Librorum," "The Human Element in the Inspiration of Scripture," the "Prophecy of the Extinction of Christian Civilization," and others of a similar spirit and tendency, as the singularly modified tone in which works of this character are spoken of by the religious and literary organs that represent, or are in sympathy with the various Protestant denominations. Such books are no longer greeted with outbursts of ecclesiastical wrath, or austerely dismissed as "infidel publications;" they are calmly, even if not fairly criticised, and are treated in all respects as legitimate literary works, which it is no sin to read or to discuss, and the authorship of which entails no social odium. So far at least as Protestantism is concerned, Christian doctrine has assumed the garb of rationalism and has almost entirely lost its dogmatic features. It is scarcely too much to say, that the "orthodoxy" of fifty—or even of thirty years ago, has ceased to exist. The sects popularly known as Calvinistic no longer hold the doctrines of Calvinism; and their most conservative theologians have long ceased to teach what their own creeds and authorized formularies contain. There are some of the "Thirty Nine Articles," that few Episcopalians would profess to believe in their literal construction; and no Episcopal congregation could probably be found in the United States that would not be horrified at the reading of the Athanasian Creed. In most of the other Protestant denominations, especially the Baptists and Presbyterians, the discrepancy between their former and their present teaching, between the doctrines laid down in their standards and those promulgated from the pulpit, is much greater than is the case with the Episcopalians. Meantime, while this process is still going on, and while its effects are seen in all Protestant bodies, radically modifying their preaching and their denominational literature, the Roman Catholic Church remains to all appearance utterly exempt from its influence. Members of her communion as individuals, are of course to a greater or less degree affected by it, for none can resist altogether the spirit of the age, but the Church as an ecclesiastical organization can make no concessions to it. By her very nature and constitution, by her proud boast of infallibility and unchangeableness, by all her historic pretensions, and by the traditions of more than twelve hundred years, she is bound to do battle with Rationalism, even to the death. She cannot, like the Protestant communions, either yield or compromise. She cannot attempt to conciliate the critical and rationalistic spirit by explaining away her mysteries, by denying her miracles, or by the change of a jot or tittle of her dogmas, in order to make them easier of belief or less humbling to the pride of the understanding. If the revolution which is so radically transforming the Christian theology in all the Reformed Churches, is to affect her at all, it must utterly destroy her.

THE underground railway in London is declining in favor since the press pointed to the mysterious deaths occurring among travelers by that mode of conveyance. The London Globe, of the 31st August, in reverting to the subject, says: "What we have said, and now repeat, is this, that the atmosphere in this subterranean way is so horribly foul, that before long, we may expect choke-damp, if, indeed, it is not even now present in the tunnel, and unless effectual means are at once taken to remove the evil, there must be fire-damp."

VERDI avers that he will write no more operas. If he keeps his word, the world will be the loser.

MR. SUPERINTENDENT FITZGERALD'S MANIFESTO.

AN article recently published in the Spectator, the organ of the "Methodist Episcopal Church South," on this coast, and edited by the Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald, State Superintendent of Public Instruction elect, has elicited a large amount of comment from the city and interior press. The Bulletin having remarked upon the vague and non-committal character of the article, its covert and indirect use of language, and spoken of it as "a feeler," the Examiner, assuming an absurdly magisterial tone, says:

We assure the Bulletin that its suggestions touching school matters and what course the Democratic Superintendent should pursue, are both gratuitous and impertinent. He understands his duty and will discharge it without consulting the Radicals. On one thing that paper may rely. There will be a weeding out and a doing away with all political text books designed to poison the minds of the youth of the State by educating them in Radical heresies; and also of teachers who worship the infamous murder and incendiary, John Brown, and have introduced "his soul goes marching on" as a national anthem in our schools.

Evidently the Examiner is laboring under the illusion that the powers of the Superintendent are autocratic in their nature. The fact is, that Mr. Fitzgerald will not be quite absolute in his control of school matters, as the Examiner seems to imagine. The Board of Education of San Francisco, retains certain powers with which the State Superintendent cannot interfere, and in the interior, the trustees of the district schools wield a corresponding authority. The law has fortunately set limits to the powers of the State Superintendent, and should he manifest a wish to carry out the principles vaguely hinted at in his recent manifesto, there are multitudes of men even of his own party, including some who occupy more important positions on the ticket on which he was elected, than himself, who will confront him with a most pronounced and resolute antagonism.

THE COLLEGES OF THE SOUTH.

THE undergraduates of Yale College, aided in all probability to no small extent, by the professors, are publishing a periodical entitled the Yale Courant. In one of its recent issues, the Courant solicited correspondence from the South, furnishing information in regard to the present condition of Southern Universities, and the losses sustained by them during the war. The answers thus far received present a sad picture of the desolating effects of the recent struggle. The president of the Mercer University of Georgia, writes that "we lost about $100,000 by the war, and adds that they have now only sixty-five students against twice that number, before the commencement of hostilities." "The people," he adds, "are too poor to send their sons to college." The University of Alabama reports that the building of that institution was burned on the 3d of April, 1865, "by a brigade of United States Cavalry," and that buildings worth $250,000, together with a library of 20,000 volumes, were destroyed by order of Major General Wilson. The New York Evening Mail, commenting upon these reports from Southern educational institutions, says:

"We can hardly account for such an uncalled for destruction of valuable and harmless property, at a time too, when the power of the rebellion was entirely broken. We trust it was not done by Major General Wilson's command. The Southern colleges have paid the penalty of the rebellion, like everything else in the South. The remark of the president of Mercer University, that all their alumni, and nearly all their students had served in the Confederate army, has a peculiar significance, when we consider the losses and present condition of the Southern colleges. We trust however, that the places of learning in the South will revive, now that peace is restored; we are certain, indeed, that they will not only revive, but that they will enter upon a career of prosperity which they never could have entered under the former institution of the South. They are now, as they never were before, fairly in the field with the Northern Colleges. There is no barrier between Southern learning and Northern learning. The Southern colleges are poor and crippled by the war, but they are in the right path. Let our Northern Universities extend the right hand of fellowship to those of the South and all go on together in the work of educating our young men and advancing science together."

MR. DICKENS' proposed visit to this country has set afloat once more among the newspapers the farewell verses which Tom Hood—Tom Hood, Sr.—addressed to his friend Boz on the occasion of his first trip across the Atlantic. The poem will probably be new to most of our readers.

TO C. DICKENS, ESQ., ON HIS DEPARTURE FOR AMERICA.

Pshaw! away with leaf and berry,
And the sober-sided cup!
Bring a goblet, and bright sherry,
And a bumper fill me up!
Though a pledge I had to shiver,
And the longest ever was!
Ere his vessel leaves our river,
I would drink a health to Boz!

Here's success to all his antics,
Since it pleases him to roam,
And to paddle o'er Atlantics,
After such a sale at home!
May he shun all rocks whatever,
And each shallow sand that lurks;
And his passage be as clever
As the best among his works.

[For the Californian.]

A MYSTERY.

A THING to be thought with abated breath,
And named with tears.
There ever shall be as there ever have been,
Beyond our ken,
The weight of the Past with its burden of sin,
A shadow thrown from the Future within,
On the souls of men.
And the weight unfelt and the shadow unseen,
With the cry of the Present unheard between,
Is all of life.
And 'tis only through toil and the nameless pain
Of wishes forever unwished again,
By an aimless strife,—
As who should do battle with weapon of steel
To the fleshless Dark which he cannot feel,
As it hedges him round—
That peace is found.
Thinkst thou that "to smile" is the same as "to live,"
That a life shall receive what it need not give,
That toil is toil;
That a fruitful future unmoistened by tears,
Brings harvest of ears,
And wine and oil?
O, Dreamer of Dreams, there forever shall be
A blossomless growth in the spirit of thee,
Still draping in gloom.
Each fairy façade of each castle so fair,
By thy fancy upreared in the roseate air,
As ivy a tomb.
'Tis rooted in life and its fruit is of death,
And the prisoned breath,
In its baleful shadow, still shudders and moans
In voiceless tones.
Wouldst thou know, O mortal, the secret of Pain?
'Tis the payment in blood for each wish we obtain.

San Francisco, November 18th, 1867. A. G. BIERCE.

CALIFORNIAN PUBLICATIONS.

ROMAN & CO., of this city, have during the last twelve-months, evinced extraordinary enterprise and hardihood in the business of publishing California books, by which we mean, books written by California authors. We regret to say, that the majority of these books are not of a character calculated to reflect any high credit either upon the author or the publisher. Nor are we able to perceive how they could have proved remunerative, or even how they could have paid the expenses of paper, composition, press-work, and binding, by their sales. If the authors were anxious to appear in print, and without reference to considerations of profit and were in such pecuniary circumstances, that they could afford to guarantee the publishers against loss, and to become responsible for the expense of producing their books, we cant understand how a firm of publishers of ordinary sagacity should undertake to produce such books as "Ianthe, the Greek Slave," "In Bonds," and "Leah's Confession," neither of which possesses sufficient literary merit to stand the slightest chance of winning the favorable consideration of any eastern publisher. We do not believe the sales of either of the books named have paid, or will ever pay, one half of the expenses of publication, and we cannot suppose that the publishers have been so imprudent as to assume the risk of producing works which any intelligent publisher's reader would have condemned, after the most cursory examination. Unless Californian publishers can bring out a very different class of books from those which we have mentioned, we do not think that the cause of literature will be at all advanced by their enterprise.

GIVE US FACTS.

The subject of California wines and wine-making, seems to have excited an unusual amount of attention recently, and a number of our own journals have spoken of it in the most desponding terms, as though the whole business had proved a failure. The Alta some time since published an article on this subject, of the nature indicated, which we have seen reproduced in the New York Tribune, and in part, in other Eastern papers. While it is perfectly proper to speak out on this subject, withholding no facts, and representing things precisely as they are, statements damaging to the wine growing interest ought not to be sent abroad, unless their accuracy is undoubted. Without subscribing to the doctrine that seems to prevail to some extent in the community that papers and individuals are under a moral obligation to "crack up" the climate productions, business, and society of the State, on every available occasion, we think it not unreasonable to insist upon great care in avoiding the opposite extreme in all matters of grave practical import. The wine-manufacturing interest of California is a most important one, though yet in its infancy. A very large amount of capital is invested in it, and until it is clearly ascertained that the business cannot be profitably carried on, everything should be done to encourage and foster it. Meantime those who are swift to declare that it is impossible to produce good wines from the products of our vineyards, and to announce the failure of the attempt, should deal less in mere generalities, and furnish the facts upon which they base the inferance.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

MISS HELEN TRACY was honored by a very large attendance on the occasion of her benefit on Monday last, the house was crowded in every part. In the farce of The Spitfire, with which the performance commenced, Harry Jackson as "Tobias Shortcut," kept the audience in a continual roar of laughter. The farce being concluded, Othello was presented with John McCullough as the "Moor," for the first time, and Miss Helen Tracy as "Desdemona." "Iago" was played by Henry Edwards. Mr. McCullough's rendition of "Othello" was admirable, evincing a thorough appreciation of the character, and ability to represent it truly. I have seen Mr. McCullough in no part in which he appears to equal advantage. He dressed and made up for the character in capital taste, He realized that during a great part of this play "Othello" is a madman, and was not afraid to represent him as such. He ranted as "Othello" did rant, and groaned as the booby soldier groaned when his great trouble came upon him: in reading the pathetic passages he modulated his voice artistically and gave them with due effect. Mr. McCullough's "Othello" was not a slavish copy of that given by other actors, nor at the same time did it evince a straining for original points. In the second scene in the fourth act, where he leaves "Desdemona," and throws a purse down at "Emilia's" feet, his simulation of furious rage was admirably sustained, and the manner in which he slammed the door behind him as he left the room was thoroughly natural. He delivered the words "damn her" with such honest emphasis that the house was startled and some of the gods could not refrain from laughing at the reality of his indignation. Miss Tracy's "Desdemona" evinced careful study and a good conception of the character, but her pronunciation of some common English words is very faulty. The "Iago" of Harry Edwards was a finished piece of acting; his reading was faultless, and the quiet manner in which he made telling points was the theme of general admiration. Mr. Sinclair deserves credit for the careful manner in which he played "Cassio," carefully avoiding anything like exaggeration. Mrs. Stewart was excellent as "Emilia," and delivered the speeches which fell to her with telling effect. This actress has returned to this State looking about six years younger than when she left it. If she continues to move backward and become young at this rate it will not be long before she takes to juvenile business once more. On Tuesday Richelieu, in which Mr. McCullough made such a hit, and in which Miss Helen Tracy won much applause by her representation of "Julie," was played. On Wednesday Mrs. Judah took a benefit. The Love Chase was performed, Henry Edwards, J. H. Vinson and Mrs. Bates volunteering for the occasion. The piece was capitally played throughout. The performance concluded with Handy Andy, in which Dan Bryant made his last appearance in Irish comedy. The house was densely crowded; after eight o'clock it was impossible to obtain standing room. Mrs. Judah is a talented, experienced and reliable actress, and fully merited the compliment paid her. On Thursday night The Huguenot Captain was played. Last night Willie Edouin, the young low comedian, took a benefit. He had, as he deserved, a bumper. The performance consisted of the melodrama of The Writing on the Wall, and the ballet pantomime of The Dancing Scotchman. This afternoon The Writing on the Wall will be played, and also in the evening, when it will be preceded by the side-splitting farce of The Spitfire. On Monday Two Loves and a Life will be played. Everyone must bear in mind that Wednesday evening next is set apart for the benefit of John McCullough, when Richelieu will be played. Mr. McCullough is a great favorite and is sure to have a large attendance. It is as well that the public should cheer these days, the saddest of the year, by patronizing benefits. It is is only once a year, as a rule, that the actor or actress tries to gather in a little harvest. Miss Olivia Rand, who has made commendable progress in her profession, works hard, is generally correct, and sings Con-stan-ti-no-ple stunningly, will have a benefit on Friday evening. The Child of the Regiment will be performed. In this play Miss Rand will appear to good advantage. It is good that our native bred California actresses should be encouraged a little, therefore I hope Miss Rand's benefit will prove a substantial assistance to her.

The Temple of Music has been thronged nightly with votaries of Calliope and Momus, and by constantly changing the programme and introducing novelties, the proprietors fully succeed in keeping the popularity of the entertainment up to its original high standard. The "old song night," last Thursday, was very successful and will bear constant repetition. The ghost, invented by Professor Pepper and Henry Dircke, will be exhibited on Monday. Leslie and Raynor claim that this illusion is different entirely from that heretofore exhibited in this city under the name of Pepper's Ghost.

To-night the Metropolitan Theatre will open under the new management consisting of Messrs. Edwards, Bates and Vinson. Charles Wheatleigh, who is deservedly a great favorite with the San Francisco public, will make his first appearance since his return from New York, as "Snorkey," in Augustin Daly's new play Under the Gaslight, supported by Mrs. F. M. Bates as "Laura Courtland," H. Edwards as "Ray Trafford," and a strong company in the other characters. The play will be produced with new scenery painted expressly for this occasion by Messrs. Rogers and Hesse; new and appropriate music by F. A. Howson, and novel mechanical effects by Mr. Robbins and assistants. The fact that J. H. Vinson has superintended the placing of this play on the stage is sufficient guarantee that little will be lacking which could serve to render it perfect.

To-night, Dan Bryant makes his first appearance in California, at Platt's Hall, as an Ethiopian minstrel. An immense programme has been prepared, which will be fully carried out by Dan Bryant supported by Joe Murphy and his band of minstrels. Platt's Hall will certainly be crowded in spite of all rival attractions.

G. M. Ciprico, who has lately returned from the interior, is busy making arrangements for the production of The Merchant of Venice, during the second series of Occidental Theatricals. The Occidental Club, by the by, had nothing to do with the exhibition which took place at the American Theatre on Saturday last, a party of independent amateurs having assumed their title for the nonce.

TOUCHSTONE.

[For the Californian.]

MY MOTHER.

BY TREM.

I DON'T like to talk against my mother, but I feel bound to expose her unequal manner of dealing with members of the family. We are a large family. Some of us are weak, others strong; some of us are inclined to be steady and well behaved, others too are dissolute. What puzzles me is the partiality which my mother shows towards certain of her children, and the harshness with which she treats others. One of my big brothers stays up until about four o'clock every morning, drinks twelve or thirteen hot whisky punches, and in the morning my mother simply pinches his ear and says, "Oh you naughty boy!" One of my younger brothers eat a small slice of roast pork the other day, and thus offended my mother. She almost immediately after discovering what he had done, flew at him like a tigress, and commenced punching him in the abdomen. He protested, but in vain, my mother was enraged. In eating pork he had committed an unpardonable sin, though many of my other brothers might devour the whole hog with impunity. My mother is very eccentric. One of my brothers pretends that it is very easy to please her. He says she has laid down certain plain, easily understandable laws for our guidance, and if we follow them strictly we shall never get spanked. He told one of my little brothers who was very weak, that our mother wished him to get up at five o'clock every morning and take a salt water bath as he did. My weak brother followed the advice of my strong brother with the hope of pleasing my mother, but alas! though he followed the example of my elder brother in every particular within three months after he commenced to do so, he died. Sometimes my mother says to me, "take exercise;" I immediately set out on a long walk, and perhaps before I have proceeded two miles, my mother is pinching me savagely in the back, and I am forced to sit down. The fact of the matter is, none of us understand our mother thoroughly. She makes different rules for each one of us, and that conceited prig of an elder brother of mine, who says that if we will all rise early, and take salt water baths, our mother will treat us kindly, knows nothing about the matter. I have had a sad quarrel with my mother of late. She ill-treated me, as I thought, without cause, and I became obstinate. Just because I got into the habit of staying up late at night, and drinking one or two glasses of whisky punch, the old woman got her dander up. She knocked me down flat, and heating a lot of wires red hot, passed them through the small of my back, then she took a small air pump, and exhausted all the air from my lungs, leaving a horrible feeling of tightness in my chest; by far the hardest part of this trial was the reflection that two or three of my brothers had done just the same as I had done, and had received no punishment. I have lost all confidence in my elder brothers who pretend to understand my mother perfectly, and declare that she has laid down certain rules for the guidance of her family which, if duly observed, will relieve her from the disagreeable necessity of punishing them. I'm not going to live on dry toast and tea, because my small brother says she told him that she would just whale him if he didn't do so. I won't take a walk before breakfast—at six o'clock in the morning—because another of my brothers thinks to curry favor with my mother by doing so. Not a bit of it! I don't believe that anyone understands my mother perfectly. Mother Nature lays down different laws for each of her children. When her children are stupidly disobedient, she spanks them, and they generally profit by the punishment. My mother is subject herself occasionally to a little disarrangement of her system, caused by earthquakes, volcanic eruptions and other diseases, and she shows a little charity towards her children. Her children, however, must each one for himself, talk to his mother, and try to understand the rules which she has laid down for him individually, instead of thinking that what applies to one applies to all.

MY SHANGHAI PONY AND WHAT IT COST M

BY FORBES MAITLAND.

MANY people labor under an impression that Frankfor is the greatest place in the world for lotteries, raffles, etc. These parties have evidently never visited the city of Shanghai, as it was in 1860, just after the close of the war. What between French officers on their way home, who at the sacking of "Yuug-miu-Yung," (the summer palace of the emperor,) had "looted" more watches and other valuables than they could conveniently stow away, British officers who had not looted enough and wished to get rid of their "private" horse in this manner, and "merchant princes" who wished to dispose of a few surplus curios, but would not see them on any account, we had rather a lively time, in fact a little too lively for us junior mercantile assistants. Our general office used to be daily inundated with lottery sheets, and of course, the bearer of each being a particular friend of some one in the house, and a capital fellow to boot, you could not well refuse—it was only three dollars—down went your name, and at the end of the month your account was sent in. To my disgust I generally found a debit note on my desk to the tune of some twenty dollars, rather a hard tax on a young man working hard in a wretched climate, and all for some "capital fellow" who wished to get rid of a spavined horse, an old French watch, (all the watches were, of course, "captured at the summer palace;" I had my doubts as to this, however,) or a lot of rubbish curios, because the party was too much of a gentleman to dispose of his goods in the legitimate manner, at least that was the reason generally given. My opinion, however, was that they got rid of goods by raffle, for the simple reason that the goods raffled brought three times their actual value, and in some instances could not have been "moved" at any price.

My own personal experience in raffles was considerable, more particularly in the horse-flesh line. Out of over forty horse raffles I went in for, I only won one miserable Chinese pony, (value, well say fifty dollars,) a set of plated harness went with him. This, by the way, I did not win in a legitimate manner. I happened to arrive late in the throwing, and my brother had won the animal, but having no room in his stable, said he would "throw off," on condition if I won I would pay for a basket of "Widow Clicquot," to which little arrangement I of course agreed, and an expensive agreement it turned out. We accordingly went at it, and of course I won this miserable pony; that's my luck: anything that was not worth winning, I won; anything worth winning, I lost. I am fond of the raffle system. This frantic attempt at owning horse-flesh cost me at the lowest estimate, taking in account raffle tickests purchased, the "Widow," and tickets on this occasion, two hundred Mexican dollars, whereas, I could have bought a far better animal from any Chinaman for twenty-five. But the worst part of the tale has yet to come. I took possession, and, in company with a friend, mounted for a ride down the Woosung road, or embankment; the river Woosung flowing quietly at our side, eight or ten feet below. My friend and myself had only ridden about one mile when up popped the head and horns of a confounded buffalo, which had been luxuriating among the rushes. The wretched little beast I was on, shied, and over the bank we went. The next moment I found myself stuck head down, feet up, kicking in the most absurd manner in the filthy swamp. When my friend got me out, I found my pony had put his shoulder out of joint, and I shot him on the spot, and had to pay a Chinaman to remove the beast, in compliance with the sanitary regulations. Next day I thought as I had got rid of the pony, I might as well dispose of the harness; not wishing, however, to have anything more to do with raffles, I sent the latter to auction without a limit, the auctioneer, being in want of a set similar to what I had sent him for sale, bought in the lot for two dollars and a half, charged me eighty cents storage and commission, handing me over the balance of one dollar and seventy cents. Thus, after having won a pony, and a miserable one at that, I came out the looser of twenty-eight dollars and thirty cents. All I say is, I wish the people joy of raffles. No more for me however. Total loss on raffles in less than one year, over two hundred dollars. Why one might fight the "Tiger" cheaper than that.

MORE NEWSPAPERS.—The city of San Francisco not being blessed with a sufficiency of newspapers, several enterprising parties are about endeavoring to supply her deficiency in that respect. We have first a large Sunday Weekly to be called the Golden City to be published by Foard & Densmore, two well known newspaper men, in the course of a few weeks. The Occidental, and The Spare Hour, are the titles of two religious papers to be issued shortly under the editorial charge of local pastors. There are rumors of other journals about town, but the above named are all that are to be considered as fixed facts as yet.

NEW MUSIC.—We have received from the publisher, Mr. Gray, 613 Clay street, a copy of a ballad entitled "Beautiful Norah," words and music by Charles Bamphlin. This ballad has been sung by Henri Herberte, and has always been favorably received. Both words and music are pretty and the song bids fair to become quite popular.

THE KING OF THE CRADLE.

Draw back the cradle-curtain, Kate,
Whilst watch and ward you're keeping;
Let's see the monarch lie in state,
And view him whilst he's sleeping.
He smiles and clasps his tiny hand,
As sunbeams in come streaming;
A world of baby-fairy land
He visits while he's dreaming.

Monarch of pearly powder-puff
Asleep in nest so cosy,
Shielded from breath of breezes rough
By curtains warm and rosy;
He slumbers soundly in his cell,
As weak as one decrepid,
Though King of Coral, Lord of Bell,
And Knight of Bath that's tepid!

Ah, lucky tyrant! happy lot!
Fair watches without number
To sweetly sing beside his cot,
And hush him off to slumber;
White hands in wait to smooth so neat
His pillow when its rumpled,
On couch of rose-leaves, fresh and sweet,
Not one of which is crumpled!

Will yonder dainty dimpled hand—
Size, nothing and a quarter—
E'er clasp a sabre, lead a band
To glory and to slaughter?
And, may I ask, will these blue eyes—
In baby patois "peepers"—
E'er in the House of Commons rise,
And strive to catch the Speaker's?

Will that fair brow o'er Hansard frown,
Confused by lore statistic?
Or will those lips e'er stir the town
From the pulpit ritualistic?
Impossible, and yet mayhap—
Though strange, quite true it may be—
Perhaps Nero was once fed on pap,
And Beales was once a baby.

Though rosy, dimpled, plump and round,
Though fragile, soft and tender,
Sometimes, alas, it may be found
The thread of life is slender!
A little shoe, a bitten glove—
Affection never waning—
The shattered idol of our love
Is all that is remaining!

Then does one chance, in fancy, hear
Small feet in childish patter,
Tread soft as they a grave drew near,
And voices hush their chatter;
'Tis small and new, they pause in fear,
Beneath the gray church tower,
To consecrate it by a tear
And deck it with a flower,

Then take your babe, Kate, kiss him so,
Fast to your bosom press him!
Of mother's love what does he know?
Though closely you caress him.
Ah! what a man will be that boy,
What mind and education!
If he fulfills the hope and joy
Of mother's aspiration.

FRENCH THEATRICALS.

THE French excell us, and especially in the machinery whereby it is changed and shifted. There is no such thing as our system of wings and flats, pushed on creaky rollers from the side by tall carpenters in shirt sleeves and blue cotton breeches, catching, jerking and pulling to the center, first on one side, and then the other, and either failing entirely to connect, or at best, leaving a distinct line when the flats join, traversing trees, mountains, seas and castles in a most earthquaky manner. But everything either descends from above or rises through the stage to take its place in one solid piece, and without noise. At some preconcerted signal, the mountains, lakes and castles, which have been on during the completed act or scene, rises from the firm base into mid-air, like magic, while from the floor up rises forest and garden, to be met by a cottage or two swinging into place on the sides. And all is done so quick and so silently, as to suggest the work of the slave of Aladdin's lamp. A castle, when once on terra firma, is a complete castle, with no side wings where the lamplighter's boy stands in plain view of the audience, smoking a short six and holding a gin cocktail ready for Bill Barry when he shall come off the stage. A prison scene rises up from the ground; at a signal the picture of barbarous feudality, suggesting oubliettes and dungeons of little ease, where water stands, where rats abound, and from which no escape is possible—not as with us, leaving at least a dozen places at the sides where it is perfectly obvious that the prisoner is only prevented by a stage etiquette from walking out and being free. Even if the spectator is not seated near the side where he can see the steps down which the lazy musicians are making their way to the "Snug" for their lager, chamber scenes and the interior in all houses are as perfect as they can be made, showing the ceiling complete—just as they are in fact.

It is difficult to know at what moment love begins; it is easy to know that it has begun.

WILKINS ON ACCOMPLISHMENTS.

BY JOHN QUILL.

MRS. WILKINS, of all the aggravating women I ever came across, you are the worst. I believe you'd raise a riot in the cemetery if you were dead, you would. Don't you ever go prowling around any Quaker meeting, or you'll break it up in a plug muss. You? why you'd put any other man's back up until he broke his spine. Oh, you're too annoying to live; I don't want to bother with you. Give me more covers and go to sleep."

"But, Wilkins, dear, just listen a minute. We must have that piano, and——"

"Oh, don't 'dear' me, I won't have it. You're the only dear thing around here; you're dear at any price. I tell you once for all that I don't get any new piano, and Mary Jane don't take singing lessons as long as I'm her father. There, if you don't understand that I'll say it over again. And now stop your clatter and go to sleep, I'm tired of hearing you cackle."

"But, Wilk——"

"Now don't aggravate me. I say Mary Jane shan't learn to sing and plant another instrument of torture in this house, while I'm boss of the family. Her voice is just like yours; it's got a twang to it like blowing on the edge of a piece of paper."

"Ain't you ashamed, Wilk——"

"It's disgrace enough to have you sitting down and pretending to sing, and trying to deafen people, without having the children do it. The first time I heard you sing I started round to the station house and got six policemen, because I thought there was a murder in your house and they were cutting you up by inches. I wish somebody would. I wouldn't go for any policeman now, not much."

"I declare you are a perfect brute."

"Not much I wouldn't; but Smith he told me yesterday that his family were kept awake half the night by the noise you made, and he said if I didn't stop those dogs from yowling in my cellar he'd be obliged to complain to the Board of Health."

"What an awful story, Mr. Wilk——"

"Then I told him it was you, and you thought you could sing, and he advised me as a friend to get a divorce, because he said no man could live happily with any woman who had a voice like a cross-cut saw. He said I might as well have a machine shop with a lot of files at work in my house as that, and he'd rather any time."

"Phugh, I don't care what Smith says."

"And you a talking about a new piano! why haven't we got musical instruments enough in the house? There's Holofernes Montgomery been blowing away in the garret for ten days with that old key bugle, until he's got so black in the face that he won't get his color back for a month, and then he only gets a spurt out of her every now and then. He's blown enough wind in her to get up a hurricane, and I expect nothing else but he'll get the old machine so chock full that she'll blow back at him some day and bust his brains out, and all along of your tomfoolery. You're a pretty mother, you are. You'd better go and join some asylum for feeble minded idiots, you had."

"Wilkins, I declare you're too bad, for—"

"Yes, and there's Bucephalus Alexander, he's got his head full of your sentimental nonsense, and he thinks he's in love with a girl around the corner, and he meanders about and tries to sigh, and won't eat his victuals, and he's got to going down in the cellar and trying to sing 'No One to Love' in the coal bin, and he like to scared the hired girl out of her senses, so that she went up stairs and had a fit on the kitchen door-mat, and came near dying on my hands."

"That's not true, Mr. Wil——"

"And never came to until I put her head under the hydrant. And then what does Bucephalus Alexander do but go round night before last and try to serenade the girl, until the old man hoisted up the sash and cracked away at Bucephalus Alexander with an old boot, and hit him in the face and blacked his eye, because he thought it was two cats a yelping. Hang such a mother as you are. You go right to work to ruin your own offspring."

"You're talking nonsense, Wilk——"

"You're about as fit to bring up children as a tadpole is to run a ferry boat, you are; but while I'm alive Mary Jane takes no singing lessons. Do you understand? It's bad enough to have her battering away at that piano like she had some grudge against it, and to have her visitors wriggle around and fidget and look miserable, as if they had cramp colic, while you make her play for them, and have them get up and lie, and ask what it was, and say how 'beautiful' it is, and steep their souls in falsehood and hypocrisy all on account of you. You'll have enough sins to answer for, old woman, without that."

"I never did such a thing, and you——"

"Yes, and then you think Mary Jane can play, don't you? You think she can sit down and tackle that piano and jerk out more music than a whole orchestra, don't you? But she can't. You might just as well set a crowbar to opening an oyster as to set her to playing on that piano. You might, indeed."

"Play! she play? Pshaw! why she's drummed away at that polka for six months and she can't get her grip on it yet. You might as well try to sing a long metre hymn to Fisher's Hornpipe as to undertake to dance to that polka. It would jerk your legs out at the sockets certain, or else it would give you St. Vitus dance, and cripple you for life."

"Mr. Wilkins, I'm going to tell you a secret."

"O I don't want to hear your secret—keep them to yourself."

"It's about Mary Jane's singing."

"What?"

"Mary Jane, you know; her singing."

"I don't know, and I dont' want to; she shan't take lessons, so dry up."

"But she shall take them."

"I say she shan't."

"She shall, and you can't help it."

"By George, what do you mean? I'm master in this house, I'd like you to know."

"Yes, but she's been taking lessons for a whole quarter, while you were down town, and I paid the bill out of the market money."

"Well, I hope I may be shot! you don't mean to say that? Well, if you ain't a perfectly abandoned wretch, hang me. I'm going to sleep alone after this."

And Wilkins kicked out onto the floor and went in the other room. But he made it up with his wife, for I heard him quarreling with her next day because she left a work-basket full of needles on the chair, coveerd with a piece of work, and he sat down on it.

ECCENTRICITY.

THE gentleman who found the operation of shaving every day so intolerably monotonous, that one morning, in sheer desperation, and for the sake of a little variety, he cut his throat, must have "moved in circles"—to use the slang of society—in which there were few, if any eccentricic people. Again, had Mr. Tennyson's Mariana, in her "Moated Grange," been blessed with such an attendant as a comic housemaid, or a groom and gardner who was at the same time an "odd fish," she would not have grown so very weary, nor uttered such frequent and irreverent aspirations for death. Nor, we are persuaded, would the unfortunate family, of whom Mr. Toole, in such doleful accents, has chaunted the "Horrible Tale," have come to such irremediable grief, had they infused a spice of eccentricity into their daily life. Why were they all driven to snicide? Why did that "determined feller," the brother, strangle himself with the gingham umbrella? Why did even the fly on the ceiling—the worst case of all—blow himself up with spontaneous combustion?" Why? Because their lives were dreary and colorless, and joyless. They "never saw no company." They knew no eccentric folks, and consequently they were driven to desperation and made away with themselves. If Sir Hudson Lowe had been an eccentric man, Napoleon might have found his exile on the rocks more supportable. But the Governor of St. Helena was the most prosaic of mortals; there was nothing eccentric about St. Helena itself, beyond the fact of the ex-Emperor's being there; and Napoleon fell a victim at last to ennui, and the "spleen"—the very ailment by which, according to foreigners, Englishmen are incurably affected.

Depend upon it, eccentricity is the salt of social life. The Americans, although they often say and do odd things, are, in outward appearance and demeanor, the least eccentric of human beings; and America, with all the wonders it presents, is, humanly speaking, a melancholy and taciturn country. If Nature abhors a vacuum, she looks with equal detestation upon a dead level. Where ten, or twenty, or thirty millions of people look, talk, dress, and write as though they were all cast in the same mould, and wound up every night with the same key, those millions will constitute nothing but a nation of bores—bores to themselves and to the rest of the world. Eccentricity is essentially individual. If every man in the community he as eccentric as his neighbors, none are so. One Chinese with a fan, a pigtail, and paper clogs, his eyes turned up, and his mouth simpering after the tea chest fashion, is curious, amusing, and eccentric; but the aggregate population of the Flowery Land are the dullest dogs imaginable. To say that a man is an original is equivalent to saying that he is eccentric. Unique and original the eccentric must be. The world would not tolerate two Whalleys; and till Sibthorp died, Whalley dared not to crop up. He who simulates eccentricity, or copies the eccentricities of others, is either an impostor or a fool.

Great works are but the reproductions of great thoughts. The true poem is the poet's mind; the true ship is the shipbuilder.

They who possess the deepest knowledge of human nature are the least violent in blaming its frailties.

The world, in its fall, is a vase of misery; reversed, it becomes an urn of joy to the human race.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three-spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

Bradley & Rulofson's

MAGNIFICENT ESTABLISHMENT.

Has more room, larger lights, greater facilities, and

PRODUCES FINER PHOTOGRAPHS

Than any other in the City.

F. DIXEY,

Merchant Tailor,

625 WASHINGTON STREET.

Cloths, Cassimeres for Vestings, always on hand and made to order in the most Fashionable Styles.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Joseph Catania & Co.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FRESH AND SALT

STALL NO. 48 FISH MARKET, Clay Commercial and Leidesdorff Streets.

A large supply of fresh fish always on hand. Shipping, Restaurants, Hotels and Families supplied at short notice, and on the most reasonable terms.

N. B.—Fish sent to any part of the city free.

GEO. A. PARKER. SAM. B. WATTSON. DAVID CONKLING.

PARKER, WATTSON & CO.,

Importers and [illegible]

Havana & Domestic Cigars, Tobacco,

ETC.....ETC.....ETC.,

Nos. 306 and 308 Clay street, one door above Front, SAN FRANCISCO.

N. GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

Chickering & Sons' Pianos

RECEIVED THE

FIRST PREMIUM,

(Gold Medal,)

At the Paris Exposition.

FURTHERMORE, THE Improvements, Workmanship, and General Superiority of those instruments over all others on exhibition, was so marked an important, the Emperor created Mr. T. E. CHICKERING

KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOR.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,

421 Montgomery street.

BLASTING POWDER.

Price, - - - - $3 00 Per Keg.

ALSO, SPORTING, CANNON, AND MUSKET POWDER, of superior quality.

FUSE AND SHOT always on hand and for sale at the

OFFICE OF THE

CALIFORNIA POWDER WORKS,

No. 318 CALIFORNIA STREET.

JOHN F. LOHSE, Secretary.

SAVE YOUR TEETH.—Do not have them extracted without first consulting a good Dentist. The loss is irreparable, and, in many instances, unnecessary. DR. BEERS, corner of Pine and Kearney streets, makes a specialty of filling the fangs of dead Teeth, and building up broken crowns with Pure Gold—thus restoring them to their original usefulness and beauty.

☞ Call and examine the work. Finest quality of artificial work also manufactured.

PARIS EXPOSITION,

1867.

GLORIOUS NEWS

FOR

THE FLORENCE!

OFFICIAL CATALOGUE JUST RECEIVED, (September 8th) the only copy on this coast—29 days from London. FREE FOR INSPECTION.

THE FLORENCE

RECEIVED THE ONLY PREMIUM awarded to any Sewing Machine (except Button Hole Machine) for sale on the Pacific Coast.

SAMUEL HILL, Agent,
No. 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

D. GHIRARDELLI & CO.'S

Italian Manufactury,

415 and 417 JACKSON ST., SAN FRANCISCO,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PLAIN, SWEET, CINNAMON AND VANILLA CHOCOLATES;
PREPARED COCOA, COCOA PASTE,
CRACKED COCOA, COCOA SHELLS, etc., etc.
PURE GROUND OLD JAVA COFFEE AND COSTA RICA COFFEE;
CHARTRES AND RIO COFFEE;
GREEN COFFEE OF EVERY QUALITY.
CHOICE WINES AND LIQUORS.

N. B.—Ghirardelli's Chocolate is manufactured by steam from Cocoa of the finest quality, imported direct, in excellence and delicacy of flavor, it is superior to any Imported Chocolate.

FREE HOMESTEADS FOR ALL

ON FILING A PETITION.

UNDER THE LAWS OF MEXICO which are now in force in this city, all the inhabitants are entitled to a HOMESTEAD LOT OF LAND, simply on petition. Justice Field has decided, and the Supreme Court of the United States has confirmed that decision, that the City of San Francisco is a Pueblo of four square leagues of land, and that the citizens thereof are the owners, which vests the right in each citizen to a lot of land for a homestead, and the undersigned have opened an office at 37 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, to enforce those rights, by petition to the Mayor, etc.; and each and every citizen can procure a Free Homestead by calling at their office and signing a petition, which will forthwith vest the right to the lot in question in them, and thereby secure to the petitioner property worth a large sum of money under the existing laws now in force.

BROOKS & MERRITT,
No. 37 New Merchants' Exchange.

N. B.—The Supreme Court of the United States have settled this question in another case, as to the ownership of the Outside Lands. In the case of J. B. Townsend vs. Geo. G. Greeley, December Term, 1866, No. 124, the Court say: "It is, therefore, now the settled law that the municipal lands held by the city of San Francisco, as successors to the former Pueblo existing there, are not held in absolute property, but IN TRUST for its inhabitants."

Therefore, all the inhabitants have to do under this decision, is to ask the city, by petition, for their vested rights, as this is the only way, under the law, that they can proceed to get their property.

E. L. B. BROOKS,
Attorney and Counseller at Law.

All legal business transacted in the French and Spanish languages, if desired.

A. PARDINI,

No. 729 WASHINGTON STREET, above the Plaza, San Francisco.

Boots and Shoes Made to Order,

IN THE BEST FRENCH STYLE.

☞ The same, ready made, always on hand.

Carrington's Yeast Powders

ARE THE BEST IN THE MARKET.

Try them if you do not believe it.

J. LANDSBERGER, Sole Agent,
429 Jackson Street.

First Premium

AWARDED BY THE STATE FAIR TO

SILAS SELLECK,

FOR THE BEST PLAIN PHOTOGRAPH.

—ALSO—

SPECIAL PREMIUM

For the Best Cabinet Portraits.

MR. SELLECK is now prepared to execute the very best PHOTOGRAPHS, in all the different styles, at No. 415 Montgomery Street.

N. B.—The best Water Color and India Ink Artist in this city is attached to this Gallery.

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main Street, Petaluma

TOWNE & BACON,

Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
In this City,

536

Try them
With a Job,
And you will be Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE, 533
CLAY STREET.

Cards, Billheads, Circulars, Books, Briefs, Transcripts, Posters, Bills of Fare Envelopes, Letter and Note Headings, Tickets, Pamphlets, and all Legal Papers printed at short notice, and upon reasonable terms.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

WM. WORTHINGTON,

House and Sign Painter

Dealer in

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &C., &C.,

735 Market Street.

Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco

G. E. T. GLOVE COMPANY,

FACTORY, 526 MERCHANT STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome,

Manufacture all kinds of OIL DRESSED AND INDIAN TANNED GLOVES for Gentlemen, Drivers, Teamsters, Miners and Lumbermen. Also, BUCKSKIN MITTENS, GOLD BAGS, PURSES, etc., in endless variety, and all sewed by hand. All work warranted. The Trade supplied. We warrant one pair of our manufacture to outlast two pairs of Eastern manufacture.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT,

Wholesale Candy Manufacturers,

No. 408 CLAY STREET,

Between Sansome and Battery Sts., San Francisco.

FANCY AND COMMON CANDIES

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Sugar Toys, Figures, Animals, Birds, etc.

Are prepared to receive orders to any extent and in any desired style.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT.

Dr. John T. Crook,

Late of the Pacific Mail service, has established himself in the practice of his profession in this city.

—OFFICE:—

S. W. corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets.

OFFICE HOURS—9 to 10 A. M.; 2 P. M.; 4 to 6 P. M.

☞ Use Ellery's Patent India Rubber Cement and Paint.—It is for all outside surfaces, TIN, IRON, OR METAL ROOFS; Iron however manufactured, Brick and Wooden Buildings, Ship and steamboat Painting; will not rot, peel, blister, or crack. Water-proof coating for cloth roofing on tops of houses, decks of steamboats, tops of stages and cars. Cloth roofs cemented and painted for $9 per 100 square feet. New or old Tin Roofs, in good or bad condition, cemented and painted, guaranted, at $1 to $2 50 per 100 square feet.

EPES & E. H. R. ELLERY,
No. 226 Jackson street.

No Charge for Consultation.

ADOLPH CAMAN, M. D.

HOMŒOPATHIC PHYSICIAN,

ACCOUCHEUR AND SURGEON,

Devotes special attention to the diseases of Women and Children. He takes a professional pride in curing those cases which have baffled the skill of other eminent physicians.

DR. CAMAN would call attention to the beneficial effects of the Homœopathic treatment in all cases of Chronic Diseases, Insanity, Paralysis, all kinds of Spasms; Delirium Tremens, and persons suffering from an unnatural thirst for spirituous liquors.

No. 26 Montgomery Street, opposite the Lick House.

NOTICE.

WE TAKE OCCASION TO INFORM OUR FRIENDS and customers that we have sold our entire stock in warehouse also invoices to arrive to Messrs. N. COLE & CO., 312 and 314 Pine steeet. The whole forms a most complete and desirable assortment of FURNITURE, and well merits attention before purchasing elsewhere.

J. PIERCE & CO.

FURNITURE.

WE beg leave to call the attention of the public to our warerooms,

Nos. 312 and 314 Pine Street.

Having purchased the entire stock of Messrs. J. Pierce & Co., and in addition to our large invoice from our factory at the East, we are prepared to fill all orders promptly, both wholesale and retail, and call the attention of the public to our salesroom, as containing the most complete assortment of desirable goods on this coast.

N. P. COLE & CO.

ZEITSKA & SHEPPARD,

Merchant Taylors,

NO. 610 CLAY STREET,

Near Montgomery,

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE "GROTTO,"

JOHN DUNCAN, Proprietor.

530 Sacramento street, opposite What Cheer House,

FINE WINES, LIQUORS, ALES AND PORTER,

Wholesale and Retail.

Importer of Wise's Celebrated Irish Whisky.

"OUR OPERA."

CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,

621 WASHINGTON STREET, 621,

SAN FRANCISCO,

Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

H. T. GRAVES,

Manfacturer of

WIRE CLOTH, COAL SCREENS, FLOUR SIEVES, QUARTZ SCREENS, for Batteries, Door and Window Screens, for excluding Flies and Mosquitos.

CLOAK, SHAWL, CLOTHING AND BONNET STANDS

Fancy Work for Gardens, and a great variety of

WIRE WORK OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.

Sole Agent for the sale and application of

BROWN'S PATENT AND METALIC WEATHER STRIPS,

For the perfect exclusion of wind, dust, and rain;

☞ And for CRAMER'S PATENT WINDOW LIFTING PLATES AND RODS.

Call and examine them at the

CALIFORNIA WIRE WORKS,
412 Clay street, San Francisco.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,

DENTIST,

No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens. North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.

N. T. WHITCOMB.

Asphaltum for Sale

IN ANY QUANTITY TO SUIT, BY THE

PACIFIC ASPHALTUM COMPANY,

No. 533 Kearny street, corner of Sacramento,

SAN FRANCISCO.

This Asphaltum is the purest to be found in the market, being free from rock and clay, or other impurities.

Sidewalks Laid and Roofing Done at Shortest Notice.

NEUVAL & CO.

MRS. O. COOK,

FIRST PREMIUM HAIR JEWELRY,

519 Montgomery street,

Between Clay and Commercial.....SAN FRANCISCO.

HE GOT THINGS SLIGHTLY MIXED.

A Cincinnati paper sent a reporter to the State Fair. Before going he examined a few samples of beer, and this letter is the consequence :

[Special Report.]

On the Train,
September Something, This Year.

I'm on the train, bound for the fair. Everybody on the train. Fourteen hun'red thousand people on the train going to Dayton. Cincinnati and Dayton R. R. very obliging. They laid a track to Dayton years ago just for this Fair. Splen' road. Broad or nar' gauge, jes' you prefer. I took the broad, but gen'l-man sitting 'side me is ridin" on the nar'r, 'cos he bronght a nar'r ticket.

Conductor Eckert came along, and told me he wanted fare. Told him if it was State Fair he wanted, I could hand it to him at Dayton—lots of it there. He asked me if I conld pay fare. Told him I could if the Fair Paid. He "punched" my ear, and went on. (Private to Editor of Times—Better let the following little puff of the road go in. It won't do any hurt, you know :) The C. H. & D. Railroad is a good, paying well, pumping several thousand barrels a day. The Directors are in good rnnning order, the road bed gentlemanly and obliging the locomotives among the best financiers in the country, and the conductors roomy, well-ventilated, luxuriously upholstered, and provided with the patent brakes.

Jnst overtook a long procession of telegraph poles that the Union Telegraph Company is sending up to the Fair. Good deal struck with one of them—on the head. Depots waiting all along the road to get 'board.

An intos'cated man just woke up and wanted to know if the fight would commence soon's (hic) got there. He thought he was on an excursion train, going to see the Jones-McCoole mill. Conductor told me that it would.

A Yankee youth and a pretty girl sat facing each other at a husking party. The youth, smitten with the charms of the maiden, only ventured a sly look, and now and then tonched Patty's feet nnder the table. The girl, determined to make the youth express what he so strongly felt, bore with these advances a little while in silence, when she cried out, "Look here! if you love me, say so, but don't dirty my stockings."

It is ungenerons to criticise our fashionable young ladies for walking on their tiptoes now-a-days. They can't help it. The waterfalls on the top of their heads draw up the back hair so tight that they can't pnt their heels down squarely without great pain.

That is a bad religion which makes ns hate the religion of other people.

North American Steamship Company

THROUGH TO NEW YORK. VIA NICARAGUA.

THROUGH AHEAD OF THE MAIL!

THE NORTH AMERICAN S. S. CO.'S STEAMER

MOSES TAYLOR,

J. H. BLETHEN.....Commander,

Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 12 o'clock, M., on

THURSDAY, - - - - DEC. 5th,

Connecting nt GREYTOWN with the Company's new Steamship DAKOTA, 3,000 tons, for NEW YORK.
No expense on the Isthmus—100 lbs. baggage free.
Surgeon on board; medicine and attendance free.
For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,

SANSOME STREET, San Francisco.

FIRE PROOF.

Two Hundred Rooms well Ventilated and Richly Furnished,

Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.

The Exchange Coach, with Red Lights, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel Free of charge.
The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully inform the traveling public that the

AMERICAN EXCHANGE

Is now and will continue as it ever has been, the most comfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the city. TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English
WATCHES,
JEWELRY AND MATERIALS.

☞ We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

Removal! Removal!

A. J. PLATE,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

—ALSO—

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS,

Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, etc., etc.

—HAS REMOVED TO—

NO. 510 SACRAMENTO STREET,

Between Sansome and Leidesdorff Streets, San Francisco.
☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

Tyler Brothers,

691 Market st., cor. Third,
SAN FRANCISCO,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in SCHOOL BOOKS,
STATIONERY,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PORTFOLIOS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS,
FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

ESPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we Stamp with Initials
WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS
Engraved, Written or Printed.

JOHN DANIEL,

Marble Works,

421 PINE STREET,
(Between Kearny and Montgomery.)

MANTELS, MONUMENTS,
TOMBS, PLUMBERS' SLABS, ETC.,
On hand and manufactured to order.
Orders respectfully solicited.

BOWEN BROS.

GROCERS,
Tea and Wine Merchants,
S. E. cor. Montgo'ry and California,
San Francisco.

Wholesale Store,
204 Front Street.

BUCKMAN BROS.,

(Successors to John Myers,)

CAPITOL SALOON,

226 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Opposite the Russ House

Removal.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

Machinist,

Has removed frdm No. 416 Market street, to No. 10 Stevenson street, next to the corner of First,
Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work
REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

F. D. RING,

MANUFACTURER OF

JEWELRY AND SILVER WARE,

No. 540 Market Street, adjoining the Hibernia Bnnk,
San Francisco.

All kinds of precious Stones set in the latest style and most approved manner. Watches and Jewelry carefully repaired by experienced workmen.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

APOTHECARIES AND CHEMISTS.
Geo S Dickey, Pioneer Apothecary, cor Ellis & Stockton
Wm. Simpson, 609 Davis st., opposite Oakland Ferry.

ARCHITECTS.
Hongland & Newsom, s.w. cor Kearny and Sacramento.
McDougall & Marquis, 328 Montgomery street.

ALE, PORTER, AND CIDER.
J. H. Todman & Co., (Jobbers,) 511 Front street.

BAKERIES.
Dempsey's Bakery, 127 Fourth street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
W. H. Hanna, (children's work,) 335 Sutter street.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

BUTCHERS.
C. Wagner & Co., (Golden Gate Market,) Davis street, corner Clark.
I. Gans, "New York Market," Fourth st, near Market.

BRUSH AND BROOM MANUFACTURERS.
San Francisco Brush Factory, 211 to 217 California st.

CIGARS AND TOBACCO.
G H. Behrens & Co., 4 Kearny street, near Market.
Chas C. Lindsey, Excelsior Store, 156 Stewart street.
M. Rosenshine, (Wholesale and Retail,) 214 Pacific st.
Chas, Schweuke & T. Meuser, 16 Stewart street.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.

COAL DEALERS.
S. Klein, formerly Greyhood & Co, 209 Sansome street.
H. W. Newbauer, all kinds of coal, 121 Sansnme street.

COACH AND CARRIAGE MATERIALS.
Waterhouse & Lester, (Dealers,) 29 and 31 Battery st.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.
Dorman & Wolf, 426 Davis street.
George Hughes, 410 Davis street.
W. J. Lowry & Co., S.W. corner Washington and Davis.
Thos. Newell, 62 Clay street between Drumm and East.
J. W. Nye & Co., 219 Washingtou street, corner Cedar.
Chas. C. Wilson & Co., S. E. corner Clay and Davis sts.

CONFECTIONERS.
Alex. L. Ross, 121 Third street.
Baldwin & Lawlers, South Park Store, 418 Third st.
N. B. Booth & Co., 20 Kearny, near Market.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 645 Clay street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DRY GOODS.
Bayer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.
H. Rothschild (Variety Store), 112 Third street.
Irving, Landers & Co., No. 4 Third street.
M. Waterman, 22 Second street, corner of Stevenson.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Derby & Johnson, northeast cor. Bush and Powell sts.
Fred. Lange, Family Grocer, cor. Powell and Lombard.
Lange & Butt, southwest cor. Bush and Stockton sts.
McKee's Family store, 31 Kearny, near Post.
Seneca Jones, Family Grocer, 105 Third street.
T. Williams, corner Third and Tehama streets.
Wellman, Peck & Co., wholesale grocers, 404 Front st.
Jos. Van Doren, northeast cor. Bush and Mason sts.

GUN-SMITHS.
W. Rudolph, Union Gun Store, 216 Pacific street.
Wilson & Evans, 513 Clay street.

HAIR DRESSING SALOONS.
Prof. Smith, 114 Market street, opposite Third.

HARDWARE AND CUTLERY.
L. B. Benchley & Co., (American and Foreign,) 3 and 5 Front street.
J. S. Sesser, 138 Fourth st, bet. Mission and Howard.

HATTERS.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
Grant & Smith, 26 Market and 19 Sacramento sts.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.
George Morrow & Co., 21 Clay and 28 Commercial sts.
Wm. H. Nichols, 18 Sacramento, and 17 Commercial.

HOTELS.
Atlantic House, John McManus, 210 and 212 Pacific st.
"Branch," M. O'Neil, 12 Sutter street.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, Drosto & Pfefferle, 220 Pacific street.
Empire House, Peter Thompson, 106 Jackson street.
Franklin Hotel, Hugh Curran, cor Sansome & Pacific.
Franklin House, C. Maloney, cor. Br'dway & Sansome.
Golden Gate Hotel, J. Blackman, 728 Market street.
Mariner's Home, Brown & Chandler, 504 and 506 Davis.
"Oriental," H. Saxtorph & Co., Washington & Drumm.
Sanders' Hotel, J. P. Sanders, 24 Sacramento st.

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER.
James R. Kelly, 38 California street.
Michael English, 414 Pine street.

HARNESS AND SADDLE MANUFACTURERS.
A. B. Bois, 510 Davis street.
D. Fennel, 522 Battery street, opposite the Post Office.

INSURANCE.
Firemen's Fund Ins. cor. California and Sansome.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agents, 206 Front, cor. Cal.
North British Mercantile, S. E. cor Sansome & Califor.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Roscnblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LADIES' FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.
S. Summerfield, 20 Second street, and 116 Kearny.
Thomas Collinson, 160 Third, near Howard street.

LIVERY STABLES.
Central Stable, Washburn & Co., 207 and 209 Sutter st.
Gardner & Finch, 211 and 213 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Davis, cor. Mission & Spear sts.

MARBLE WORKERS.
P. Kelly, 12 Fourth street.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd-Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

MILLINERS.
Miss A. A. Cruddock, 4 Virginia Block, Stockton street.

MUSIC TEACHERS.
Prof. J. R. Boullet, Pianist and Vocalist, 1320 Stockton.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
H. Bush, corner Post, Market and Montgomery streets.
Hicks & Staring, 143 Fourth street.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
Kohler, Chase & Co., 421 Montgomery street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

PLUMBERS AND GAS FITTERS.
Chas. Barman, 121 Fourth street, near Minna.

PRINT SELLER AND PUBLISHER,
Thomas H. Lawlor, Second street, near Howard.

PAINT MANUFACTURERS.
Epes & Ellery, dealers in paints, etc, 226 Jackson st.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY, CONTINUED.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 M
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Market, by Hanzo & Besson, 520 Merchant street
The Opera, J. Weiss, 335 Pine street.

SALOONS.
Bock's Saloon, 504 Drumm street, near Pacific.
Blancy & Carroll, "Sample Rooms," 107 Third street.
"Bourbon Saloon," A. Farr, Long Bridge.
Charley Smith's Saloon, 539 Washington street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.
Cleveland's Sample Rooms, 318 Bush, above Monte'y.
"Excelsior," Haase & Co., cor. Drum and Commercial.
Fourth Street Exchange, Chas. F. Slater, 245 Fourth st.
J. P. Levin's Saloon, northwest cor. Battery & Br'dway
J. Dillon, "Fourth St. Exchange," cor. F'rth and Mkt.
John B. Holje & Co., 28 Clay street.
King & McCormick, "Rotunda," Market & O'Farrell.
E. H. Murphy's Saloon, cor. Third and Stevenson sts.
"Manadnock," A. Horstkemper, Drumm & Oregon sts.
Nolan's Exchange, (Ball & Racket Court,) 732 Haw'd st.
P. Johnson & J. B. Holje, 28 Clay street.
Peter Ring's Saloon, California street, below Drumm.
Regatta House, Burns & McLean, foot of Third street.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Ring's Saloon, Peter Ring, cor California, below Drumm.
Uncle Billy & George, Saloon 707 Davis st.
"Young American," Geo. C. W. Heuer, Stewart & Howard

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.

STATIONERS AND BOOKBINDERS.
Jas. E. Damon & Co., 521 and 423 Sansome street.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TRUNK MANUFACTORY.
James Longshore, 428 Kearny street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

WAX FLORIST.
Mrs. M. E. Gerrish, 11 Post street.

WHOLESALE WINE AND LIQUOR DEALERS.
Campbell & Co., 629 Front st., bet Jackson and Pacific.
Henry M. Cutter, Importer, 520 Front street.

WHOLESALE UPHOLSTERERS.
D. N. & E. Walters, 13 Battery street, corner Bush.

The Ladies are of one mind in pronouncing BOWMAN'S AMERICAN WASHING COMPOUND the best preparation for washing and cleaning in use. It is acknowledged to be a saving both in money and labor. The Compound softens the dirt, consequently the clothes require not more than one-half the rubbing necessary in washing by the old method; besides all who give it a trial acknowledge that their clothes are made whiter in washing with this Compound, than they were ever known to be by using any other preparation. For washing Woolen Goods and Flannels it cannot be equaled. Calicoes that can be washed with soap, without fading, are washed in the water used for boiling the white clothes. This Compound has been used in the eastern States for the past three years with perfect success. Warranted not to injure the clothes. For sale by all Grocers.
LYNCH & PARSONS, Agents,
Jackson street, near Battery.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

—OF—

MACCARONI,
VERMICELLI,
PASTE, and
FARINA

First Premium in 1857—1859—1864—1865.

Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co.,
706 SANSOME STREET,
San Francisco.

M. H. QUINN,

HAT MANUFACTURER,

127 Fourth street, bet. Howard and Mission,
San Francisco.

Dress Silk Hats for Ladies or Gentlemen Manufactured to order, Cleaned or Renovated, at reasonable prices.

NOTICE!

Not Out of Business—Only Removed.

Pioneer Steam Marble Works Com'y

HAVE REMOVED

Their Marble Mantel Warerooms from No. 546 California street to their extensive Steam Factory,

422 and 424 Jackson Street,

Where they keep constantly on hand the best and most select stock of
MARBLE MANTELS AND GRATES, HEADSTONES AND MONUMENTS.
Our Steam facilities enable us to sell better work at reduced prices than that manufactured by hand.
422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Between Montgomery and Sansome.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

Wholesale & Retail Confectioners,

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the state. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

RATS—THEIR INCREASE.—There were no rats in California before the gold discoveries. Then—in 1849—they were imported by sea in the rat's worst shape—that of the brown or Norwegian variety. Few of the interior towns were visited until 1852. Now they infest all part of the State. In 1850 there were no rats in New Mexico, and it used to be a speculation hor long the adobe houses would resist their gnawing teeth, whenever they should see fit to establish themselves in that country. It is said that the rat was unknown before the Christian era, and that his first appearance in Europe was long after in the Middle Ages. This was the black rat, coming from no place of which we now have any record. He soon spread all over Europe; and from his hostility to the mouse, which has been known through all recorded time, it is strange that the smaller rodont has not been exterminated. He would be were he not perhaps even more prolific than his bigger brother. The brown rat was not known in Europe before the eighteenth century, and though called a Norwegian rat, was actually imported from India. He is the strongest and most ferocious and destructive of his tribe. To-day, it is said, there is not a black rat in Paris, the race there having been killed out by the browner animal. This species is widely known all over the United States. The ravages of rats of both species are enormous. How they can be got rid of is a question worthy the attention of legislators. Such vermin, if possible, ought to be exterminated, a rat, no matter how domesticated he may be, having no more right to live in a civilized community than a wolf or a wild cat.

"MY wife tells the truth three times a day," remarked a jocose old fellow, at the same time casting a very mischievous glance at her. Before rising in the morning she says, 'Oh dear I must get up! but I don't want to.' After breakfast she adds, 'Well, I suppose I must go to work, but I don't want to;' and at night she goes to bed saying, 'There I have been working all day, and haven't done anything."

BAD JOKE ON A SHERIFF.—The Virginia City Trespass says: The Sheriff of Nye county had a complaint to serve upon a Mrs. Mc Evoy, in case of her husband applying for divorce. The complaint alleged adultery. The Sheriff struck the wrong Mrs. Mc., and proceeded to read. The lady stood amazed till he got to the charge of adultery, when she fired a frying-pan loaded with hot fat and doughnuts at him, and the Sheriff quit the premises.

THE SNUG.—"The Snug" has been located one door below Maguire's Opera House, for ten years past. It was established for the convenience of the habituates of the Opera House, and has the reputation of dispensing the best wines and liquors in the city, under the charge of its present proprietor, Mr. Timothy McCarty. Entrances from various parts of the Opera House to the bar have been cut, for the convenience of the public. Mr. McCarty gives his entire attention to his guests, and renders his establishment a "Snug" place by day or night.

BUILDER'S INSURANCE CO.

OFFICE IN THE BUILDING OF THE CALIFORNIA SAVINGS BANK, CALIFORNIA ST., one door from Sansome.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

Builders' Insurance Company,

OFFICE, CALIFORNIA STREET, Nov. 1, 1867.

EDITOR OF THE CALIFORNIAN:—Sir—Permit me to report two months' progress of the BUILDERS' INSURANCE COMPANY.

Total amount received	$44,009 11
Total amount of Losses	22,778 65
Balance in favor of the Company on two months' business	$16,230 56

All which I trust will be satisfactory to my friends, enemies, and the public. Respectfully,

THOMAS MOONEY, PRESIDENT.

Musee des Salons.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street, between California and Pine.

ST. CHARLES RESTAURANT,

At the Hotel of C. Galliand, Nos. 507 and 509 Pine Street, between Kearny and Du pont streets.

BY MME. CAZINTRE.

☞ All who will call at this Restaurant will find an excellent table and prompt attention.

California Coffee and Dining Saloon.

Nos. 612 and 614 MONTGOMERY STREET, Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco. J. R. REAGAN, Proprietor.

A Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot en chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

ITALIAN RESTAURANT,

No. 515 Merchant Street,

Between Montgomery and Sansome, San Francisco.

Taglierini, Maccaroni, Risotto and Ravioli, In the Italian Style.

MEALS FIFTY CENTS, OR TO ORDER.

Rooms for private parties up stairs.

MR. GUISEPPE CADENASSO.

LEON DINGEON. F. W. HAUBRICK.

DINGEON & HAUBRICK,

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET.

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties.

NEW RESTAURANT.

MR. SORBIER takes pleasure in informing his friends and customers that he has opened a FIRST-CLASS RESTAURANT under the name of

SORBIER'S RESTAURANT,

at No. 607 SACRAMENTO STREET, above Montgomery, where he will be pleased to see his old friends and the public in general, and where all can be assured that they will be served with the very best the market affords, at most reasonable rates. JOHN E. SORBIER, Late of the Occidental Restaurant.

F. C. BELDEN,

Of the well-known Family Depot, 612 Sacramento street, has opened the

SUMMER STREET RESTAURANT

at the northeast corner of Spring and Summer Sts.

☞ Meals to order, and by the plate. Wines and Liquors of the best quality.

OCCIDENTAL RESTAURANT,

536 Washington Street, below Montgomery.

GEORGE WITTMAN would inform the public and the former patrons of this POPULAR RESTAURANT that he has assumed full charge, and will continue to keep all the delicacies of the season and one of the best lists of WINES, etc., and solicits the continuance of their patronage.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

JOHN WIELAND, Proprietor.

REESE W. GLUYAS. S. E. DUTTON.

GLUYAS & DUTTON,

COUNTING HOUSE STATIONERS,

Fireman's Fund Insurance Company's Building,

No. 227 Sansome Street.....San Francisco.

DICKEY'S

CREME DE LIS

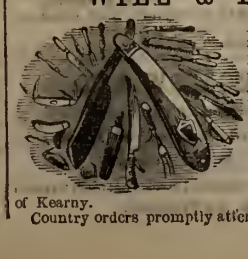
DE CALIFORNIE.

FOR CLEANSING AND PRESERVING THE TEETH, Beautifying the Complexion, and removing Freckles, Eruptions, Sunburn, and Tan.

A New Combination, equal to the best French preparations, and free from their poisonous ingredients.

Invented by GEO. S. DICKEY, Chemist, Corner of Market, Stockton, Ellis and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

WILL & FINCK,



EXCELSIOR CUTLERS, LOCK-SMITHS & BELL-HANGERS, Importers and Manufacturers of all kinds of Cutlery. Razors, Shears, and all kinds of Cutlery, ground and repaired—Bell-Hanging and Locksmithing done in the best manner. 613 Jackson street, fourth door west of Kearny.

Country orders promptly attended to.

COCO-MUNGO SALOON.

J. M. WASHBURN, AGENT.

No. 536 Merchant Street, (Montgomery Block.).

THE BEST OF LIQUORS,

SKILLFULLY CONCOCTED MIXED DRINKS,

AND A FIRST-CLASS HOT LUNCH,

Not inferior to any offered in San Francisco, is furnished daily at the COCO-MUNGO—Clam Chowder, Fish Chowder, Gumbo Soup, Pork Tenderloins, Cape Cod Boned Turkey, Venison, Quail, and all the delicacies of the season, as fast as they are to be found in the market, figure upon the lunch table of the COCO-MUNGO.

A Reading Room, abundantly supplied with Domestic and Foreign Papers and Periodicals, is one of the features of the COCO-MUNGO.

C. F. HAYWARD,

—DEALER IN—

Harness, Saddles, etc.,

305 BATTERY STREET,

Near Sacramento,

San Francisco.

Architectural Designs

—FURNISHED BY—

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS.

Southwest corner of Sacramento and Kearny Streets, San Francisco.

H. T. GRAVES,

Manfacturer of

WIRE CLOTH, COAL SCREENS, FLOUR SEIVES, QUARTZ SCREENS, for Batteries, Door and Window Screens, for excluding Flies and Mosquitos.

CLOAK, SHAWL, CLOTHING AND BONNET STANDS

Fancy Work for Gardens, and a great variety of

WIRE WORK OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.

Sole Agent for the sale and application of

BROWN'S PATENT AND METALIC WEATHER STRIPS,

For the perfect exclusion of wind, dust, and rain; ☞ And for CRAMER'S PATENT WINDOW LIFTING PLATES AND RODS.

Call and examine them at the

CALIFORNIA WIRE WORKS,

412 Clay street, San Francisco.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,

DENTIST,

No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens.

North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.

N. T. WHITCOMB.

Asphaltum for Sale

IN ANY QUANTITY TO SUIT, BY THE

PACIFIC ASPHALTUM COMPANY,

No. 533 Kearny street, corner of Sacramento,

SAN FRANCISCO.

This Asphaltum is the purest to be found in the market, being free from rock and clay, or other impurities.

Sidewalks Laid and Roofing Done at Shortest Notice.

NEUVAL & CO.

MRS. C. COOK,

FIRST PREMIUM HAIR JEWELRY,

519 Montgomery street,

Between Clay and Commercial.....SAN FRANCISCO.

Great Reduction

IN PRICES OF

BOOTS AND SHOES.

ON ACCOUNT OF THE WIDENING OF Kearny Street, we are compelled to remove. Before doing so, we will sell at retail our entire stock of boots and shoes at the lowest

WHOLESALE PRICES.

HOLCOMBE & KAST,

Corner Washington and Kearney steets.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street. Petaluma.

EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company,

OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

—OFFICE—

S. W. cor. California and Sansome streets.

CAPITAL, $500,000, FULLY PAID IN GOLD COIN.

INSURE MARINE RISKS

Under Open Policies, on Cargoes, Treasure, Freights, Profits, and Commissions.

—ALSO—

ISSUE POLICIES ON TIME, VOYAGE AND HARBOR RISKS ON HULLS.

INSURE AGAINST LOSS BY FIRE

On Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Wares, and other Personal Property.

FIRE, MARINE, HARBOR, AND INLAND TRANSIT RISKS,

On terms as favorable as any other reliable First-Class Company.

Greatest amount taken on any one risk, $50,000. Portions of Risks considered too large, will be re-insured in responsible Companies.

LOSSES PROMPTLY PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!

D. J. STAPLES, President, CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

HAMBURG, BREMEN,

Fire Insurance Company.

CAPITAL, - - - - - $1,000,000

MORRIS SPEYER, Agent.

OFFICE—526 Washington Street, a few doors below Montgomery.....San Francisco.

☞ Being no longer governed by the Tariff of the Board of Underwriters, this Company will effect Insurances at as LOW RATES as those of any other responsible Company.

OCCIDENTAL

Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.

J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.

B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

FIRE INSURANCE.

Manhattan Fire & Marine Insurance

OF NEW YORK.

Incorporated	1821.
Cash capital	$500,000
Surplus	650,000
Total Assets, over	$1,190,000

The above named respousible and well known Company has complied with the law of the State of California, and has deposited $75,000 as additional security for policy holders,

Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, and other property insured against loss or damage by Fire, on the most favorable terms. Also, Insurance on Merchandise, Specie and Freight to or from all parts of the world. Losses promptly adjusted and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., General Agents, 206 Front street, corner of California.

J. CUTBERLET,

CUSTOM

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

—ALSO—

FRENCH SCREWED BOOTS AND SHOES,

No. 516 Washington Street, near Montgomery Street.

The finest quality of CUSTOM WORK neatly executed. Always on hand other fine work ready made.

JOSEPH FREDERICKS

CARPET AND UPHOLSTERY STORE,

PAPER HANGINGS, ETC.,

123 Kearny St., between Sutter and Post, San Francisco

FAMILIES ARE INVITED TO EXAMINE

OUR VARIED ASSORTMENT

Of the Finest Carpeting in the State. The best of taste displayed in Decoration and the unique Upholstering of Rooms, Halls and Public Buildings, and at prices conforming to the times. Call and examine goods.

"THURRER BREDS."

A new rival of Nasby and Josh Billings has appeared in print, who calls himself "A Nutmeg, of Nutmeg Stait." Following is a speci. men of his style :

THURRER BRED HOSS.

A hoss which has had his breed improved by means of a sulky kontainin a feller with a long whip, till he ain't worth 18 sents for any purpose except a gamblin masheen.

THURRER BRED GENTLEMEN.

A bob tale kote, a 3 sent paper koller, a white kotten westkit, yaller trowsers without eny kloth into the legs, shiny lether boots, a pare of yaller glovs, and, inside of em all, a thing got up in imitashun of a man, but, as the konnterfit detectors say, poorly executed and not kalkelated to deseve. Must swar, drink shampain, and talk hoss. Mnstash indispensabnl, branes onnessary, fine specimens on exhibition at the sentral park.

THURRER BRED BIZNESS MAN.

Wun that knows ennff about stealing, so't thare kant ennybody steal from him, and ennff about law, so't he kin do his own stealin legaly. A karful annalisis of a fust klass spesimen gave the follerin resnlts :

Honor—Jest enuff to keep him ont of jail.

Konshuns—None except in very young spesimins.

Respectability—Accordin to suksess.

THURRER BRED RASKAL.

Same as abuv with exepshnn of the kloke.

THURRER BRED LADY.

The old fashund idee, about a woman sich as God made bein a lady is exploaded a modern thnrrer bred lady is made up as follers, commensin at the top :

1stly. A swab of hare, stole from the korps of a ded pawpnr in the old knntry.

2dly. A hed, with as much vacant room into it in proporshun to the size as a six-story tenement house.

3dly. A dress waste, kiverin a French kossit, into which is komprest abont equal quantities of Natur and Art—Art ockupyin' the front seats.

4thly. A hoop skirt, hung on a pare of kotten hips, and shoin when tilted "ala moad," a pare of sawdust kalls, the hnll bein kivered with an outside dressin of silk and kept in runnin order at an exrense of about five hundred dollars per month for repairs.

N. B.—It allus seemed a waste of time and vitality to raise this klass of thurrer breds, cos you can get them made of wax—jes as good—better lookin, and at a frackshun of the expenses.

COCOMUNGO SALOON.—The famous Cocomungo Wine, together with the choicest liquors and cigars, are offered to the public at this Saloon, No. 536 Merchant street, Montgomery Block. A Hot Lunch, equal to any set forth in San Francisco, every day from 11 to 2 o'clock. A Reading Room, abundantly supplied with the daily, weekly, and leading Eastern journals, is one of the attractions of the Cocomungo. J. M. WASHBURN, Agent.

Great Reduction

IN PRICES OF

BOOTS AND SHOES.

ON ACCOUNT OF THE WIDENING OF Kearny Street, we are compelled to remove. Before doing so, we will sell at retail our entire stock of boots and shoes at the lowest

WHOLESALE PRICES.

HOLCOMBE & KAST,

Corner Washington and Kearney steets.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,

SANSOME STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE PROOF.

Two Hundred Rooms well Ventilated and Richly Furnished.

Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.

The Exchange Coach, with RED LIGHTS, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel FREE OF CHARGE.

The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully inform the traveling public that the

AMERICAN EXCHANGE

Is now and will continue as it ever has been, the most comfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the state. TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ANN LEEDOM, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaitiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, awarding the care and custody of her daughter Julia to plaintiff, and allowing her to resume her maiden name.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 7th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

[SEAL.] WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.

Geo. W. Tyler, Plaintiff's Attorney. s14-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of HENRY BENTZ, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate left unadministered of Henry Bentz, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell some portion of the real estate, to pay the debts, expenses and charges of the administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court, on TUESDAY, the 26th day of November, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

Dated October 24th, 1867,

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court, in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Court, this 24th day of October, A. D. 1867.

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JENNENS, Deputy Clerk.

J. F. FINN, ESQ., Att'y for Petitioner. oct26-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JEAN VICTOR SUBERVEILLE, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Lucas Ponton de Arce, Administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the Administrator to pay the debts, charges and expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts, charges and expenses, and because after the sale of so much of said estate as shall be necessary to pay such debts, charges and expenses, the residue thereof would be of such a character with reference to its future disposition among the heirs of said deceased as clearly to render it for the best interest of all concerned that the same should be sold, and for other reasons set forth in said petition.

It is ordered that all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court, at the Court room thereof, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 25th day of November, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., of that day, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And it is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the city and county aforesaid.

Done in open Court this 25th day of October, A. D 1867.

oct26-5w M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

W. C. BURNETT, Attorney for Administrator.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of WILLIAM LOBB, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator of the Estate of William Lobb, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled.

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said William Lobb, decensed, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on WEDNESDAY, the eleventh day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said William Lobb, deceased, according to law:

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said eleventh day of December, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 1st, 1867.

J. T. FINN, Attorney for Petitioner. nov2 5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF EDWARD A. MAGRATH, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of EDWARD A. MAGRATH, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his office and place of transaction of business, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated October 24th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Administrator of the estate of Edward A. Magrath, deceased. oct26-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of AMELIA MOSS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, Administrator, with the will annexed, of Amelia Moss, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the devisees and legatees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on MONDAY, the twenty-fifth day of November, A. D. 1867, at two o'clock, P. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the devisees and legatees of the said deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said twenty-fifth day of November, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated October 25th, A. D. 1867.

MESSRS. WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Petitioner. oct26-5w

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of WM. D. PALMER, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Samuel L. Palmer, the administrator of the estate of William D. Palmer, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and those persons entitled, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said William D. Palmer, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the ninth day of December, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said William D. Palmer, deceased, and the persons entitled, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said ninth day of December, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 7th, 1867

A. J. GUNNISON, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.

nov9 16 23 30 dec7

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of T. O. HOPKINS, deceased.

All papers and proceedings in the above entitled matter having been transferred to this Court from the Probate Court of Alameda County by reason of the disqualification of the Judge of said Court to act, and among said papers, a petition of A. J. Lowell, Administrator of said estate, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of said estate, that the same has been audited, allowed and confirmed, that all the debts and expenses of administration have been fully paid, that a portion of said estate remains for distribution to the heirs of said deceased, and praying for a distribution to the heirs entitled.

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of the said T. O. Hopkins, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on MONDAY, the 16th day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said T. O. Hopkins, deceased, according to law:

And it is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before said hearing, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 13th, 1867. nov16-23 30 dec7-14

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF MARIA MACK, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of Maria Mack, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his office and place of transaction of business, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated October 24th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Administrator of the Estate of Maria Mack, deceased. oct26 5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—IN THE MATTER OF the Estate of EDWARD O'DONNELL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Edward O'Donnell, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said estate of the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, on the southeast corner of Sansome and California streets, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, November 14th, 1867.

CHARLES B. POLHEMUS,
Administrator of the Estate of Edward O'Donnell, deceased. nov16-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF BENJAMIN OBER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Executrix of the last will of the estate of Benjamin Ober, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executrix, at her place of business, at the law office of Messrs. Clarke & Carpentier, No 606 Washington street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, November 14th, 1867.

JANE E. OBER,
Executrix of the last will of Benjamin Ober, deceased.
H. K. W. CLARKE, ESQ., Attorney for Executrix.
nov16-23-30 dec7-14

GEORGE MORROW & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

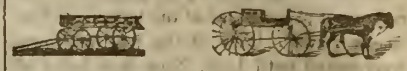
Hay, Grain, and Feed of all kinds.

Hucks & Lambert's Patent AXLE GREASE.

21 Clay street and 28 Commercial street, between Drumm and East, San Francisco.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,



Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

C. ROBERTS,

CARRIAGE AND WAGON MAKER,

HORSE

SHOEING AND JOBBING

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

Fourth Street, between Howard and Folsom, San Francisco.

All styles of Carriages, Wagons and Carts made to order and Repaired.

W. E. BRIDGE,

St. Lawrence Stables,

212 Sutter street, between Kearny and Dupont, SAN FRANCISCO.

A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

C. MAIN. E. H. WINCHESTER. T. B. HAYES.

Main & Winchester,

Manufacturers and Importers of Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Collars, Saddlery Ware, etc,

Nos. 214 and 216 Battery Street, San Francisco.

N. B.—Good assortment Concord Stage Harness constantly on hand.

CALIFORNIA

Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

North American Steamship Company

NEW OPPOSITION LINE VIA PANAMA.

The North American Steamship Company will dispatch the elegant and commodious Steamship

OREGONIAN,

(3000 Tons,)

JOSEPH SUTTON.....Commander,

For PANAMA, from Mission Street Wharf, at 12 o'clock noon, on

MONDAY, - - - - - NOV. 25th, 1867,

Connecting, via Panama Railroad, at Aspinwall with the Company's new and splendid Steamship NEBRASKA, 3,000 Tons, for NEW YORK.

One hundred pounds Baggage free.

The OREGONIAN has been fitted by the Company especially for this route, and passengers will find her accommodations unequalled on this coast. The connecting steamer NEBRASKA, recently built for the Company in New York, is the fleetest steamship in the California trade on the Atlantic Ocean.

The Company will continue their Line via Nicaragua as usual.

For further information apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
northw corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco

Last week a hotel keeper in Lancaster, Pa., "smelled a mice" in this wise: Two countrymen took lodgings at his place, and fared sumptuously, drinking three bottles of wine daily. The last day, and before they had their bill a dispute arose about the speed of their horses. They at last settled upon a race, and appointed the landlord judge, like those of the Olympian games, gave the word one, two, three, and go. Away they went, and have neither been seen or heard of since. No doubt they are running at this moment (a bill in some other place,) leaving this landlord fully compensated by having the honor of being judge.

Mr. Ernest Jones, at his recent lecture in Dublin, gave some interesting statictics. He said there were 71,000,000 acres in the three Kingdoms. In 1770 there were 250,000 owners of this land. In 1856 the number had diminished to 32,000, and was still decreasing. The Duke of Cleveland might ride twenty-three miles through his estate; the Duke of Devonshire had 96,000 acres in the county of Derby alone; the Duke of Richmond possessed 340,000 acres; and the Marquis of Breadalbane might ride 100 miles in a straight line through his property from his own house door.

Little Alice found out an ingenious way of getting to bed in a hurry. The crib in which she slept was so low that, by placing one foot on the inside, and taking hold of the post, she could easily spring in. "Mamma," she said to her mother one evening, "do you know how I get to bed quick?" "No," was the reply. "Well," said she, in great glee, "I step one foot over the crib, then I say 'rats,' and scare myself right in."

A friend asks: "Why are a fashionable young lady's brains like a speckled trout?" Answer: "Because they love to sport under a waterfall."

W. S. WHITING. F. G. BERRY.

Whiting & Berry,

609 Sacramento Street, two doors above Montgomery,

Tea Wine and Spirit Merchants,

Importers and Wholesale Dealers in fine Brandies, Whiskies, Gins, Port, Sherry and Champagne Wines, Ale, Porter, Cider, Bitters, Cordials, Syrup, etc., for medicinal and family use, and suppliers to Families, Apothecaries, Physicians, City and Country Dealers, Hotels, Clubs, etc., in large or small quantities.

Observe Firm Name on each cork and fac simile signature on label.

[Trade Mark Registered.] WHITING & BERRY.

This is the only exclusive Tea, Wine and Spirit Store on the Pacific Coast.

It is neither a saloon or sample room, (as no wine or spirits are permitted to be drank on the premises,) but a depot where selected Teas and Pure Wines and Spirits may be procured at wholesale or retail for medicinal and family use. In this respect it is our aim to vie with Bininger & Co., New York, Bigelow & Dawes, London, and Cozzen & Co., of Washington, where every facility is offered to ladies as well as gentlemen in making their own selections and purchases in quantities to suit.

N. B.—Our Treatise on Wines, Spirits and Teas, may be had at our depot gratis, and will be mailed to consumers and dealers in the interior when requested.

WHITING & BERRY,
609 Sacramento Street, second door above Montgomery.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.

The Hat wearing community are invited to examine the Stock at the above store, and in quality, style and price,

THEY DEFY COMPETITION!

Their Stock embraces all of the latest "novelties" and Standard Styles to be found elsewhere.

"THE" HAT STORE,
647 Washington Street.

NOTICE!

Not Out of Business—Only Removed.

Pioneer Steam Marble Works Com'y

HAVE REMOVED

Their Marble Mantel Warerooms from No. 546 California street to their extensive Steam Factory,

422 and 424 Jackson Street,

Where they keep constantly on hand the best and most select stock of

MARBLE MANTELS AND GRATES, HEADSTONES AND MONUMENTS.

Our Steam facilities enable us to sell better work at reduced prices than that manufactured by hand.

422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Between Montgomery and Sansome.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

Wholesale & Retail Confectioners,

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the state. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

AYER'S PILLS

ARE PARTICULARLY ADAPTED to derangements of the Digestive Apparatus, and diseases arising from Impurity of the Blood. A large part of all the complaints that afflict mankind originate in one of these, and consequently these PILLS are found to cure many varieties of Disease. They are sugar-coated, and hence may be taken readily by the most sensitive and delicate persons.

Subjoined are the statements from some eminent physicians, of their effects in their practice:

AS A FAMILY PHYSIC.

From Dr. E. W. Cartwright, of New Orleans—Your Pills are the prince of purges. Their excellent qualities surpass any cathartic we possess. They are mild, but very certain and effectual in their action on the bowels, which makes them invaluable to us in the daily treatment of disease.

FOR JAUNDICE AND ALL LIVER COMPLAINTS.

From Dr. Theodore Bell, of New York City—Not only are your Pills admirably adapted to their purpose as an aperient, but I find their beneficial effects upon the Liver very marked indeed. They have in my practice proved more effectual for the cure of Bilious Complaints than any one remedy I can mention. I sincerely rejoice that we have at length a purgative which is worthy the confidence of the profession and the people.

DYSPEPSIA—INDIGESTION.

From Dr. Henry J. Knox, of St. Louis—The Pills you were kind enough to send me have been all used in my practice, and have satisfied me that they are truly an extraordinary medicine. So peculiarly are they adapted to the diseases of the human system, that they seem to work upon them alone. I have cured some cases of Dyspepsia and Indigestion with them, which had resisted the other remedies we commonly use. Indeed I have experimentally found them to be effectual in almost all the complaints for which you recommend them.

FOR HEADACHE—SICK HEADACHE—FOUL STOMACH—PILES—DROPSY—PLETHORA—PARALYSIS—FITS—DYSENTERY—DIARRHŒA—RELAX—Etc., Etc.

From Dr. Edward Boyd, Baltimore—Dear Dr. Ayer: I cannot answer you what complaints I have cured with your Pills better than to say all that we ever treat with a purgative medicine. I place great dependence on an effectual cathartic in my daily contest with disease, and believe as I do that your Pills afford us the best we have, I of course value them highly.

☞ Most of the Pills in market contain mercury, which although a valuable remedy in skillful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substances whatever.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine everywhere.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
Wholesale Agents.

$100 00
SAVED in a very Short Time by using
STANDARD SOAP CO.'S
WASHING POWDER.

TRY IT!
Does Not Injure the Clothes.
Sold Everywhere.

Belden's Family Depot for Domestic Luxuries.

At this depot are, all should know,
For him who strong or faint is,
Superior grub—for home or club—
And every kind of dainties.
Westphalia hams, fresh oysters, clams,
Constituents of chowder,
Fine breakfast tea, and hominy,
And genuine curry powder.
Oil, mustard, wine, both French and Rhine,
Lard, coffee, ketchup, capers.
Crushed sugar, peas, and Switzer cheese,
And sperm and waxen tapers.
The giblets, pluck, of goose and duck,
Of woodcock, snipe and plovers,
Of partridge, too, and cockatoo—
The last express for lovers!
It seems absurb there scarce a bird—
My rhyme this somewhat ruffles—
But Belden's got in tin or pot,
The liver of with truffles.
Prunes, raisins, rice, preserves and spice,
Gin, whisky, rum and brandy,
Drinks made of malt, and table salt,
Tongues, sausages, and candy.
Above's not all to which I'd call
Particular attention.
Le vin d'elite, Chateau Lafitte,
And others, I would mention.
Surpassing fine Madeira wine,
St. Julien, port and sherry,
Chateaux Margaux and Veuve Clicquot,
Old apple jack and cherry.
La Rose, Chablis, and Burgundy
Both white, and red and sightly,
Prime Hermitage of ripe old age,
Still, sparkling too and sprightly.
Sauterne, medoc, still sparkling hock,
Johannesberg, Hockheimer,
Then sirs and dames (these German names
Would craze an English rhymer!)
Just come and buy, and cease to sigh
For Egypt and its fleshpots:
Ne'er better fare did Pharoh share,
Or any other despots.

Et Cetera
No. 652 Sacramento Street.

R. T. HOUSTON,

Merchant Tailor,

No. 414 BUSH STREET,
Between Kearny and Dupont, San Francisco.

Steam Scouring, Cleansing and Repairing neatly executed.

Also—Ladies' Cloth Dresses and Cloaks neatly Cleaned and Pressed, or Mis-Fits altered.

IRON SHUTTER WORKS,

Established 1849.

John Upstone,

MANUFACTURER OF FIRE-PROOF

Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Balconies, Gratings, Prison Cells, Awnings, Stairs, Iron Fence, etc.,

Corner of California and Drumm Streets,
San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

Pioneer Iron Shutter Works,

ESTABLISHED 1849.

CALVIN NUTTING,

Manufacturer of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS & SHUTTERS,

STEEL LINED BANK VAULTS,

Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc.

123 Bush street, between Sansome and Battery,
San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

Pioneer Iron Works,

CORNER OF MARKET AND FREMONT STREETS,
San Francisco.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT

Manufacturers of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS, SHUTTERS, BANK VAULTS,
PRISON CELLS, BALCONIES, GRATINGS,
IRON FENCE, STAIRS, Etc.
BURGLAR PROOF BANK VAULT LOCKS

Constantly on had, a large assortment of Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

BAURHYTE & McAFEE,

Steam Boiler and Sheet Iron WORKS.

Owned and conducted by Practical Boiler Makers.

HIGH AND LOW-PRESSURE BOILERS, STATIONARY AND MARINE.

Howard street, bet. Fremont and Beale, San Francisco.

Having had twenty-two years experience in this business, we feel confident of being able to compete—as to quality of work—with any establishment on the Pacific Coast.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

MADISON & BURKE'S

REGULAR WEEKLY LIST

OF REAL ESTATE FOR SALE,

SINCE LAST REGULAR ADVERTISEMENT.

We have better opportunities to sell Real Estate than any other office in the city; dealing with so many tenants and landlords, and being so well known throughout the country, we frequently make sales where they would not otherwise have been made. Parties purchasing will find it to their advantage to call, and examine our list, for we have property of all descriptions, and all prices, in various parts of the city. We only desire to make a fair commission, and DEAL ON THE SQUARE with both Seller and Buyer.

HOUSES TO LET.

In all parts of the city, and at all prices, from five dollars a month upwards. Especial attention paid to this branch of our business. Ladies will receive every information. Landlords cannot but see the advantage of placing houses in our charge, as so many persons visit our office for the purpose of getting houses. Besides we have a very large number of tenants, who visit our office to pay rent and then see our list of houses.

RENTS COLLECTED. Large and small. Bad paying and destructive tenants made to move in short time, which is well known to this class of tenants.

MADISON & BURKE,
316 Montgomery street,
Between Pine and California.

J. H. Madison, Late Hoags & Madison. Martin J. Burke, Late Chief of Police.

OFFICE OF CITY LETTER DELIVERY COMPANY.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO

PRIVATE MEDICAL AID.

QUICK CURES AND MODERATE CHARGES.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY,

PRIVATE MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE,
Sacramento Street, below Montgomery, Opposite Pacific Mail Steamship Co's Office, Private Entrance on Leidesdorff Street,
San Francisco.

Established expressly to afford the afflicted sound and scientific Medical Aid, in the treatment and cure of all Private and Chronic Diseases, cases of Secrecy, and all Sexual Disorders.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Dr. W. K. Doherty returns his sincere thanks to his numerous patients for their patronage and would take this opportunity to remind them that he continues to consult at his Institute for the cure of chronic diseases of the Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Digestive and Genito-Urinary Organs, and all Private Diseases, viz: Syphilis in all its forms and stages, Seminal Weakness, and all the horrid consequences of Self-Abuse, Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Nocturnal and Diurnal Emissions, Sexual Debility, Diseases of the Back and Loins, Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, etc.; and he hopes that his long experience and successful practice will continue to insure him a share of public patronage. By his practice of many years in Europe and the United States, he is enabled to apply the most efficient and successful remedies against diseases of all kinds. He uses no mercury, charges moderate, treats his patients in a correct and honorable way, and has references of unquestionable veracity from men of known respectability and high standing in society. All parties consulting him, by letter or otherwise, will receive the best and geutlest treatment, and implicit secresy.

TO FEMALES.

When a female is in trouble, or afflicted with disease, as weakness of the back and limbs, pain in the head, dimness of sight, loss of muscular power, palpitation of the heart, irritability, nervousness, extreme urinary difficulties, derangement of digestive function, general debility, vaginitis, all disease of the womb, hysteria, sterility, and all other diseases peculiar to females, she should go or write at once to the celebrated female doctor, W. K. DOHERTY, at his Medical Institute, and consult him about her troubles and disease. Irregularities, suppressions, etc., will receive the Doctor's most particular attention. Let no false delicacy prevent, but apply immediately and save yourself from painful suffering and premature death. Ladies whose delicate health or other circumstances prevent an increase in their families, should write or call at DR. DOHERTY'S MEDICAL INSTITUTE, and they will receive every possible relief and help. The Doctor's offices, consisting of a suite of six rooms, are so arranged that he can be consulted without fear of observation.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Patients (male or female) residing in any part of the State, however distant, who may desire the opinion and advice of DR. W. K. DOHERTY on their respective cases, and who think proper to submit a written statement of such, in preference to holding a personal interview, are respectfully assured that their communications will be held most sacred. Dr. Doherty takes this opportunity of observing that all letters are only opened and replied to by himself, and the latter as promptly as possible.

If the case be fully and candidly described, personal communication will be unnecessary, as instructions for diet, regimen, and the general treatment of the case itself, (including the remedies) will be forwarded without delay, and in such a manner as to convey no idea of the purport of the letter or parcel so transmitted.

Consultation, by letter or otherwise, Free. Permanent cure guaranteed, or no pay. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D.
San Francisco, Cal

SPERMATORRHŒA.

DR. DOHERTY has just published an important pamphlet embodying his own views and experiences in relation to Impotence or Virility, being a short treatise on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, Nervous and Physical Debility consequent on this affection, and other diseases of the Sexual Organs

This little work contains information of the utmost value to all whether married or single, and will be sent Free by mail on receipt of Six Cents in Postage stamps for return postage. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D., San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

STEAMSHIPS FOR

NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Brannan-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 18th or 19th is expected to connect with the French Transatlantic Co.'s steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th is expected to connect with English steamer for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America. Through tickets can be obtained.

STEAMERS FOR NOVEMBER.

Nov. 9—CONSTITUTION, Capt. J. M. Caverly, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.
Nov. 18—MONTANA, Capt. E. T. Farnsworth, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Connor.
Nov. 30—GOLDEN CITY, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with ARIZONA, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained of P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer GREAT REPUBLIC, Capt. S. Doane, will be dispatched on December 4th, from wharf, corner of First and Brannan streets, for YOKOHAMA and HONGKONG; connecting at Yokohama with the steamer COSTA RICA, for SHANGHAI.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

T. B. RODGERS,

CUTLER,

108 Leidesdorff street.

Corner California, adjoining the Pacific Insurance Office, San Francisco.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor.
CARS. THEBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

MISS HELEN TRACY,

Supported by

MR JOHN McCULLOUGH,
MR. HENRY EDWARDS,
MR. HARRY JACKSON.
MRS. SOPHIE EDWIN,
MRS. E. F. STEWART,
AND THE STAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

Matinee to-day,

WRITING ON THE WALL,

This Evening,.....November 23d,

The roaring Farce of

THE SPITFIRE!

And the melo drama entitled

WRITING ON THE WALL:

Fergusson Trotter, Esq., of Piccadilly, London.....W. Edouin
Richard Oliver.....H. D. Thompson
Bob Smithers, a Wandering Minstrel.....Harry Jackson
Lady Elton.....Mrs. E. F. Stewart
Marharet.....Miss Helen Tracy
Carlotta Smitherini.....Mrs. Harry Jackson

Wednesday Evening—Benefit of JOHN McCULLOUGH. "Richelieu."

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra.....$1 00
Parquette..... 50 | Upper Circle..... 25

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

Lessees and Managers,
MESSRS. EDWARDS, BATES & VINSON.

GRAND OPENING NIGHT OF THE NEW DRAMATIC SEASON.

SATURDAY, - - - NOVEMBER 23d,

On which occasion the highly accomplished Artist,

CHARLES WHEATLEIGH,

will make his first appearance, after an absence of eighteen months.

The performance will consist of Augustin Daly's great domestic dramatic picture, in five acts, entitled

UNDER THE GASLIGHT;

OR, A TALE OF LOVE AND LIFE IN THESE TIMES.

Snorkey, (a New York Messenger).....Chas. Wheatleigh
Ray Trafford, (a New "Blood,".....Henry Edwards
Councellor Splinter.....Mr. J. H. Vinson
Byke, (followed by the police,).....Mr. A. Fitzgerald
Peachblossom.....Mrs. C. R. Saunders
Pearl Courtland.....Miss Julia Corcoran

The Popular Favorite,

MRS. F. M. BATES,

Will sustain the character of Rose Courtland.

N. B.—The interior of the Theatre has been newly decorated. New Scenery, by Messrs. Rogers and Hesse. New Music, by Mr. F. A. Howson. Mechanical Effects, by Mr. Robins and Assistants.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats.....One Dollar
Parquet 50 cts | Gallery 25 cts
Doors open at 7 o'clock; to commence at 8.
Box Office open from 10 to 3 o'clock.

PLATT'S MUSIC HALL.

ORIGINAL MINSTRELSY.

FOR SIX NIGHTS ONLY,

—COMMENCING ON—

Saturday Evening.....November 23d.

Dan Bryant,

The originator of the original BRYANT'S MINSTRELS, at the urgent solicitation of many friends and citizens of San Francisco, will appear in his Original Ethiopian Characters, supported by California's favorite,

JOE MURPHY,

And his acknowledged MINSTREL TROUPE, in an Original Ethiopian Entertainment, SOIREE D'ETHIOPE, interspersed with Jokes and Comicalities, introducing the celebrated DAN BRYANT in his original acts.

During the week will be produced, Bryant's Burlesques, "Under the Gaslight," "Taming a Butterfly," "Old Time's Rocks," "Forrest and McCullough," "Somebody's Daughter," "Challenge Dance," "Fight for the Championship," and JOE MURPHY'S BIT. FIFTEEN TALENTED ARTISTS. Instrumental, Vocal, Terpsichorean, Burlesque and Operatic Scenes. ESSENCE OF OLD VIRGINNY.

Positively for SIX NIGHTS ONLY.

For particulars, see Programmes of the day. Box Office open at 9 o'clock A. M.

PRICES:

Dress Circle and Orchestra.....One Dollar
Parquette.....Fifty Cents

Leslie, Raynor & Smith's Minstrels.

Congress Hall, No. 320 Bush Street,

Between Montgomery and Kearny.

Immense Success of the Grand Combination

NEW MINSTREL TROUPE!

Endorsed by the presence of thousands of our First Families.

To-day.....at 2 o'clock,

A GRAND MINSTREL MATINEE.

TO-NIGHT, ENTIRE CHANGE OF PROGRAMME!

HENRY HERBERTE EVERY EVENING!

SEATS SECURED FOUR DAYS IN ADVANCE!

A Cloak Room, with Competent Attendants, for Ladies and Children. No Fees or Gratuities to be given to Attendants.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Orchestra Chairs and Dress Circle.....75 Cents
Parquet.....50 cents | Upper Circle.....25 cents
Box Office open from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M., where Seats may be secured without extra charge.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

WEDNESDAY.....NOV. 27th,

BENEFIT OF

Mr. John McCullough.

Bulwer's Great Play of RICHELIEU!

BOX SHEET NOW OPEN.

[Mercury and Era please copy.]

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

BOYS'

Pioneer Clothing Store,

CLOSING BUSINESS!!

CLOSING BUSINESS!!!

We offer the entire stock at the following reduced prices:

	Regular Prices.	Present Prices.
Boys' French Cass. Basket Pants	$6 00	$4 00
Boys' Velvet Cass. Ext. Sup. Pants	8 00	5 00
Boys' Cadet Union Suits	8 00	5 00
Boys' Union Sack Overcoats	8 00	5 00
Boys' Petersham Overcoats	14 00	10 00
Boys' Blk Castor Beaver Overcoats	16 00	12 00
Boys' Blk Esquimaux Beaver Overcoats	18 00	13 00
Boys' French Cloth Frock Coats	18 00	12 00
Boys' Esquimaux Bever Suits	15 00	12 00
Boys' Fine Esquimaux Bever Suits	26 00	18 00
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants	2 50	1 50
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants, ex. Fine	3 00	2 25
Youths' CaSsimere Knee Pants, embr'd	4 00	3 00
Youths' Garibaldi Fancy Suits	7 00	5 00
Youths' Garibaldi Extra Fine Suits	8 00	6 00
Youths' Embroidered Cloth Suits	10 00	5 00
Youths' Black Beaver Suits	10 00	6 00
Youths' Pilot Cloth Overcoats	10 00	7 00
Youths' Chinchilla Overcoats	10 50	8 00
Youths' Union Sack Overcoats	8 00	6 00
Youths' Black Castor Beaver Overcoats	12 00	9 00
Youths' Heavy Black Beaver Garricks	10 00	8 00
Youths' Black Cloth Overcoat (sleeves)	11 00	8 50

500 Men's Esquimaux and Castor Beaver Overcoats,

Forty per cent. less than any other store on this Coast.

100 dozen Men's Star Shirts, $1 50

Astonishing low figures.

Remember, our goods are all Custom-made, from our Broadway store in New York, thirteen years' standing. Everybody must know our goods. Retiring from business, the goods must be sold. Call at LOCKWOOD & CO'S, and examine the great reduction in prices.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
624 Clay Street.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ANTHONY GIFFORD, deceased.

Order to show cause why Order of Sale of Real Estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of Anthony Gifford, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts, expenses and charges of the administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 24th day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a weekly newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 22d, 1867.
T. J. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
nov23-30 dec7-14-21

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JOHN DE VRIES, deceased.

City and County of San Francisco—ss.

Notice is hereby given that B. B. McAllister, having, on the 20th day of November, 1867, filed in this Court his petition, praying to be allowed to amend the petition of Charles Ackerman, praying for an order of sale of real estate, filed herein June 12th, 1865, to establish certain facts, which are in brief, to-wit:

That the said real estate was, at the time of filing said petition for the sale thereof, almost wholly unproductive, and produced a monthly rental of eight dollars per month and no more, and for the further particulars, reference is here made to said petition on file in my office; the hearing of the same has been fixed by said Court for MONDAY, the 16th day of December, 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M. of said day, of the December term of 1867, at the Court room thereof, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco; and all persons interested in the said estate, are hereby notified then, and there to appear, and show cause, if any they have, why the said petition should not be granted.

Dated November 20th, 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

E. B. MASTICK & T. B. BISHOP, Esqs., Attorneys for Petitioners. nov23-30 dec7-14

Musee des Salons.

Life Insurance---The Money Drift.

EDITORS CALIFORNIAN—Sirs: I read in your issue of the 11th, a very important statistical paper, compiled by you from the Federal revenue returns, proves the astounding fact that the distant Life Insurance Companies plying in California through "Agents" draw away nearly a million dollars per anum.

The drain under this head as you state it amounts to:

Year ending 1st August, 1866.....$496,289
Year ending 1st August, 1867.....$877,264

And as we write the drain increases and must be now near a million a year—to be a million and a half next year and so on.

And you naturally ask with surprise why this matter has not been taken in hand by some of our enterprising insurance men, so as to arrest the flight of a moiety at least of this enormous drain?

I think, sirs, your question is well put, and though my hands are full, I am yet willing to step forward and assume some of the responsibility and bear some of the preliminary expenses of forming such a Company.

When you reflect sirs that this million dollars a year is carried over land and sea, thousand upon thousand of miles, to places where it is lent out by distant Managers and Directors to their manufacturing and commercial friends around them, at Five Per Cent. per annum, while our merchants and manufacturers, who are to compete with these have to pay Fifteen Per Cent. per annum for money, [we supply them with the golden weapons to beat us] you will then conceive the magnitude of the injuries effected by the sapping and mining operations of those distant Insurance Companies. The money which must drain away, day by day, steamer after steamer, from our people, will, if not stopped, impoverish this country quite as much as if it were conquered by a foreign power and held in perpetual tribute. A million a year by compound interest will be ten millions in five years, twenty millions in ten years, forty millions in fifteen years, eighty millions in twenty years, one hundred and sixty millions in twenty-five years, three hundred and twenty millions in thirty years! I will admit that the ordinary percentage of deaths on a business of thirty years will effect a drawback of one-third of the income, which in thirty years we will put at one hundred millions. Notwithstanding this, if we go on at our present scale of draining, we shall in thirty years lose by the insurance operation two hundred millions of dollars! But our drain, if we don't stop it, will not stand at one million a year, it will increase year after year from one million a year to two millions a year, which by my foregoing computation would in thirty years foot up to FOUR HUNDRED MILLIONS! What it would amount to in sixty years I leave to other calculators. In round numbers, I should guess it would come to the full number of dollars equaling the national debt of the United States.

Now, sirs, I care not what may be said of me by critics or jealous opponents, some of whom cannot see farther than their noses. I announce myself as ready to make an effort to stop this drain, and I hold every man who cooperates with me a benefactor to his adopted country.

Let the capital of a Local Life and Health Insurance Company be one hundred thousand dollars to begin, in shares of one hundred dollars each. I shall cheerfully take the name of cooperators in a book opened this day in the office of the California Building and Savings Bank, California street, for that purpose,

I remain your obedient servant,
THOMAS MOONEY.

Buildings and Savings Bank, California street.
November 12th, 1867.

Removal.

WILLIAM SHERMAN & CO.,

Have this day Removed their Stock of

Clothing & Men's Furnishing Goods,

From Sansome Street to

608 Montgomery street,

(East Side,) North of Clay.

San Francisco, November 22, 1867.

Removal.

JOHN G. HODGE & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale Stationers,

Have Removed to

329 and 331 Sansome Street,

Southwest corner of Sacramento.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

Hay, Grain, and Feed of all kinds.

Hucks & Lambert's Patent AXLE GREASE.

21 Clay street and 28 Commercial street, between Drumm and East, San Francisco.

Turnbull & Smith,
PRINTERS,
522 CLAY ST.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Good Work!—One Price!—Punctuality!

D. BRUCE,

PRINTER,

COMMERCIAL STREET BELOW MONTGOMERY.

Grand Reductions!

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.

No. 9 Montgomery Street,

WILL OFFER ON

Monday, - - - November 25th,

THE FOLLOWING GOODS

AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

LACE CURTAINS.

French Lace Curtains;
Swiss Lace Curtains;
Leno Lace Curtains;
Nottingham Lace Curtains;
Muslin Embossed Curtains.

FOR BOYS' WEAR AND CLOAKINGS.

Scotch Tweeds;
French Cassimeres;
Elbouf Cloths.

PRINTS.

French, English and American.

HOSIERY.

Balbrigan Hose;
French Hose;
Cachon Hose for Children.

SILKS.

Ponson's Gro Grain Black Silks;
Bichoff's Glace Black Silks;
Coutnrier's Gros de Rhin;
Bouret's Parchment Silks.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,

RETAIL STORE,

No. 9 MONTGOMERY STEET,

LICK HOUSE BLOCK.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,

107 BATTERY STREET, near Pine street.
SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT'S PRINTING OFFICE,

No. 533 Clay Street.

Cards, Billheads, Circulars, Books, Briefs, Transcripts, Posters, Bills of Fare Envelopes, Letter and Note Headings, Tickets, Pamphlets, and all Legal Papers printed at short notice, and upon reasonable terms.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF H. C. KORF, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of H. C. Korf, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator, at his office and place of transaction of business, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated San Francisco, November 19th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Administrator of the Estate of H. C. Korf, deceased.
nov23-4t

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VII., No. 28. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. SAN FRANCISCO, NOVEMBER 30, 1867. TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: Inquisitorial Committee; The Last Grand Jury; Presbyterian and Catholic; Bierstadt's New Picture, by Astræa; Our Chaplain in Java, by Forbes Maitland; A Leaf from an Actor's Log, by Old Delph; A Kangaroo Hunt, by Wilks; Dramatic Affairs, by Touchstone; Literary Gleanings: Verses of Society; A New California Poet; Miscellaneous. "Lion's Mouth:" Lessons for Locals—No. 3; Pure English; Alaska; Characteristics of Great Men; Paragraphs, etc. SELECTED: Recollections of the War; Incidents in the Shenandoah Valley, by James Franklin Fitts; A Cruise after Sandal Wood; A Costa Rica Duel; Snakes in Queensland; Fools; The First Gold Mine; Paragraphs, etc. POETRY: Sheridan's Ride, T. Buchanan Read; The Pumpkin, a Thanksgiving Poem, by John G. Whittier; A inging Lesson; Merlin.

SHERIDAN'S RIDE.

Up from the South at break of day,
Bringing to Winchester fresh dismay,
The affrighted air with a shudder bore,
Like a herald in haste, to the chieftain's door,
The terrible grumble, and rumble, and roar,
Telling the battle was on once more,
And Sheridan twenty miles away.

And wider still those billows of war,
Thundered along the horizon's bar;
And louder yet into Winchester rolled
The roar of that red sea uncontrolled,
Making the blood of the listener cold,
As he thought of the stake in that fiery fray,
And Sheridan twenty miles away.

But there is a road from Winchester town,
A good broad highway leading down;
And there through the flush of the morning light,
A steed as black as the steeds of night,
Was seen to pass, as with eagle flight,
As if he knew the terrible need;
He stretched away with his utmost speed;
Hills rose and fell; but his heart was gay,
With Sheridan fifteen miles away.

Still sprung from those swift hoofs, thundering South,
The dust, like smoke from the cannon's mouth;
Or the trail of a comet, sweeping faster and faster,
Foreboding to traitors the doom of disaster.
The heart of the steed, and the heart of the master
Were beating like prisoners assaulting their walls,
Impatient to be where the battle-field calls;
Every nerve of the charger was strained to full play,
With Sheridan only ten miles away.

Under his spurning feet the road
Like an arrowy Alpine river flowed,
And the landscape sped away behind
Like an ocean flying before the wind,
And the steed, like a bark fed with furnace ire,
Swept on, with his wild eye full of fire,
But lo! he is nearing his heart's desire;
He is snuffing the smoke of the roaring fray,
With Sheridan only five miles away.

The first that the general saw were the groups
Of stragglers, and then the retreating troops,
What was done? what to do? a glance told him both,
Then striking his spurs, with a terrible oath,
He dashed down the line, 'mid a storm of huzzas,
And the wave of retreat checked its course there, because
The sight of the master compelled it to pause,
With foam and with dust the black charger was gray;
By the flash of his eye, and the red nostril's play,
He seemed to the whole great army to say,
"I have brought you Sheridan all the way
From Winchester, down to save the day!"

Hurrah! hurrah for Sheridan!
Hurrah! hurrah for horse and man!
And when their statues are placed on high;
Under the dome of the Union Sky,
The American soldiers' Temple of Fame;
There with the glorious general's name,
Be it said, in letters both bold and bright,
"Here is the steed that saved the day,
By carrying Sheridan into the fight,
From Winchester, twenty miles away!

T. BUCHANAN READ.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"The gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I will aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 'twere any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

Lessons for Locals—No. Three.

Among the phrases and expressions, which however brilliant when new, have now become threadbare, and are foresworn by all first-class writers of "funny locals," and turned over to the more ignoble members of the reportorial guild. The following are a few: Hombre for man; "intelligent contraband," for negro; "gent," for gentleman; "fightist;" "shootist," "untamed courser," as applied to the horse, in Mazeppa; "pedal extremities;" the "fistic art;" "lager slingers" and "beer jerkers:" "syrens of Pacific street;" Maison de fer, for the County Jail; "vag," for vagrant; most of the old set of scientific terms associated with the P. R., such as "bunch of fives, potato-trap, mug, bugle, peepers, nob, luvoices," etc. Fitz-Smythe, it is true, occasionally airs one of these classic terms under peculiar circumstances, but in all his more elaborate and finished efforts, he aims at original phrases and combinations. Disgusted by the crowd of imitators who have trodden in his footsteps and appropriated all this old stock as their common property, he has struck out in search of "fresh fields and pastures new." There is also, a large class of familiar quotations that have long been abandoned by the more eminent and ambitious members of the reportorial brotherhood. Among these are such old acquaintances as, "To paint the lily, gild refined gold," etc.; "There's a divinity that shapes our ends," etc; "Richard's himself again;" "Sermons in stones, books in the running brooks;" "Sweet are the uses of adversity;" "Truth crushed to earth will rise again;" "One of the few, the immortal names," etc.; "Full many a gem of purest ray serene," etc. In fact, the witty reporter of our day no longer uses poetical quotations at all, unless he gives them a fine comic effect by introducing ludicrous innovations and improvements, as:

"How sharper than a serpent's thanks it is
To have a toothless child!"

Or:

"My name is Norval; on the Mission road,
My father keeps a hog ranch," etc.

And then the popular burlesques, travesties and extravaganzas furnish abundance of rich material for the expansive and ambitious "local" whose aspirations are not to be satisfied with "short items," and who loves to spread himself. In our next lesson we shall touch upon the subject of the style of quotation specially adapted to the witty reporter.

Pure English.

We have reason to suspect that there is not any very large number of "Portuguese and Brazilliau youth" among the readers of the CALIFORNIAN. If, however, this item should chance to meet the gaze of any youth of either of these nationalities, desirous of perfecting themselves in the Englisb tongue, we would call their attention to a little volume entitled "O Novo Guia Da Conversocao, Em Portuguez E Iugles,' designed to qualify them for "holding their own" in social converse with English-speakiug people. The following is an extract verbatim et literatim from the preface to this usefnl volume: "A choice of familiar dialogues, clean of galliciems and despoiled phrases, it was missing yet to studious portuguese aud brazillian youth. We sought all we may do to couect that want, composing and devising the present little work in two parts. The first includes a greatest vocahulary, proper names by alphahetical order; and the second, fourty three dialogues adapted to the usual precisions of life." This promising preface concludes in these words: "We were increasing this second edition with a phraseology in the first part, and some familiar letters, anecdotes, idiotisms, and proverbs We expect then, who the little book (for the care what we wrote him and for her typographical conectiou) that may be worth the acceptation of the studious persons, and especially of the Youth at which we dedicate him particularly." The studious "Portuguese Youth" should be grateful to the author who has been at such pains to facilitate the acquisition of English, hy makiug it so much like their native tongue in its idioms and construction.

Seward's Little Speculations Stopped.

Mr. Washburn offered a resolution in Congress on Novemher 27th, declaring that in the present financial condition of the county any further purchase of territory is inexpedient, and the House will hold itself under no obligation to vote money to pay for such purchased. The resolution was adopted; and thus many of Mr. Seward's real estate speculations are nipped in the hud. If Denmark chooses to sell Mr. Seward an island or two, it can do so; hut Uncle Sum won't pay for them. We should uot wonder if Mr Seward got desperate and bought a little territory on his own account. It is very hard for him to have to give up the idea of buying part of Borneo, Jerusalem, the Sandwich Islands, British Columhia, Ireland and Iceland, but perhaps it is all for the best, and it will be just as well to devote the money to improving Uncle Sam's already tolerably large estate.

Alaska.

The correspondent of the Alta in Alaska does not praise the vegetable products of that territory very highly. He says:

The cahhage, turnip, artichoke, parsnip and cauliflower, exhihit a fair display of leaves; hut the cahhages are headless, the turnips watery, the artichokes tough, the parsnips stale, and the cauliflowers tasteless.

To compensate for headless cahhages, watery turnips, tough artichokes, stale parsnips and tasteless cauliflowers, we have a mammoth crah, which measures six feet from tip to tip of its claws, the legs being about the thickness of a man's wrist, and filled with palatable meat. That's the reason why Seward bought Alaska; he knew that the vegetables weren't worth anything, but he also knew that there were any number of mammoth crahs, halihut, candle-fish, cod and salmon. As the Alta's correspondent expresses it:

"But her fisheries—her vast granaries of cod, halihut and salmon, are exhaustless."

"Granaries" is good. Seward honght Alaska because he knew that her vast "granaries" of fish were exhaustless, and would set Uncle Sam up in business as the largest fish-monger in the world.

Characteristics of Great Men.

When a man is once acknowledged to be famous for any one thing, it is astonishing in how many particulars he is different from other persons. For instance we are told that:

"George L. Barrett, the shrewdest horse dealer in Connecticut, is dead. He was very popular among his neighbors, never tasted liquor or used tobacco, was never on a steamboat, and only once in a railway car, and lived all his life in the same house."

Now, surely it is enough for the general public to know that the George L. Barrett who is now dead, was the shrewdest horse dealer in Connecticut, without being told that he never tasted liquor nor used tobacco in his life, that he was never on a steamboat, and only once in a railway car, and lived in the same house all his life. These peculiarities are not confined to shrewd horse dealers; other men who know nothing about horse flesh possess them. If a man lives to the age of 100 years, we are told that he was a constant attendant at religious service, was a baptist in belief, and generally wore a white hat with a black band around it. These particulars may he interesting to the general public, hut we doubt it.

The Discoverer of Gold in California.

The Bulletin's "own correspondent" in Coloma, in a late letter, gives some interesting particulars about Marshall, who was the original discoverer of gold in California. He informs us that he "lives in a hovel," has a dog, "a snarling ugly cur," that he is "hound up in his vineyard and spiritualism," and "has a wretched opinion of the American people, who show so little appreciation of the man who discovered their vast mines of gold, as not even to endow a dollar in pension money or otherwise for his benefit." The correspondent continues:

"We don't blame him for being sensitive about it, and it would not demoralize or hurt Congress, or California, to make up a purse for the old man. It is not too late yet, and better late than never."

"Ah! Marshall was not smart. He was like the boy who found the bird's nest, and immediately told his companions. He ought to have held his tongue until he had feathered his own nest, and then he would not have need to complain of the ingratitude of the American people, whom his lucky discovery has enriched.

Another Runaway Italian Boy.

We fear that the importers of juvenile Italiau musicians must be getting discouraged. A very short time ago an Italian boy was advertised as missing, and $10 offered for his recovery. Now, a more valuable boy—one worth $15—has struck work and bolted, preferring to go it alone to giving up his earnings to his guardian, or owner. The following appears in the Bulletin:

Information wanted of John Corleto, a boy musician, about ten years of age; round face and chestnut hair; had on black jacket and pants and a dark brown hat; he plays on the harp. Any person giving information of his whereabouts will receive $15 reward.
VINCENT PEUNELIA.

We fear that this advertisement, which is ornamented hy the picture of a small figure playing a lyre, will not lead to the recovery of the round-faced, chestnut-haired boy-musician, John Corleto, though only ten years of age, evidently thinks he is old enough to take care of himself, and intends to do wandering minstrel business on his own account.

"The Red Eye of Battle."

The Alta in one of its brilliant editorial notes says:

"The New York Hearld has been trying to be very funny at the expense of Senator Conkling, whom it accuses of inventing the phrase "The red eye of battle." The Herald thinks the figure a very fair shot for its farcical raillery, but unfortunately it is not Conkling's, but the invention of Thomas Champbell, in whose 'Lochiel's Warning" the offensive phrase may be found.

We cannot see anything offensive in this phrase; on the contrary we think that "the red eye of battle" is a very good way of describing "fighting whisky."

MERLIN.

MERLIN, the great magician,
Quelled by a woman's hand,
Lies under the mighty oak-trees
In the forest of Broceliande.

The fever of life comes never
To fret his poet-brain:
He has slept a thousand years, and shall sleep
A thousand years again.

Dews fall soft on the turf there,
Young birds twitter above:
Merlin sleeps and surely sleep
Is better than aught save love.

Merlin sleeps, while the winters
Freeze and the summers bloom,
And the old oaks whisper softly,
He is here till the Day of Doom.

He has no letters to answer,
He has no debts to pay,
No books shall he write, no journal read,
'Twixt this and the Judgment Day.

O happy, happy Merlin,
Afar in the forest deep!
To thee alone of the sons of men
Gave a woman the gift of sleep.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE WAR.

BY JAMES FRANKLIN FITTS.

NO. IX.—INCIDENTS IN THE SHENANDOAH VALLEY—GUARDING A WAGON TRAIN.

AFTER the battle of Winchester, our army pursued the enemy vigorously for fifty miles or more, halting finally at Harrisonburgh, which is nearly the geographical centre of the State. The infantry and artillery lay here for more than a week, resting after the severe labors of the past month, while the cavalry was pushed on to Staunton, twenty miles further. There was much speculation in the army in those days as to what Sheridan would do next. There was an enemy somewhere in front of him, although one that he could not hope to bring to another engagement by continuing to advance. He was now almost a hundred miles from Harper's Ferry, his base of supply, and over this long road, through a hostile country, his forage and subsistence must be transported by wagon-trains. The road swarmed with guerrillas; Mosby was never so active as at this period, when he turned his whole attention to the business of cutting off Sheridan's supplies; and it was generally thought that our advanced position must be abandoned. The experience of General Hunter the previous summer, who pushed his army southward to Lynchburg, only to find himself entirely destitute of supplies, and compelled to retreat through the Kanawha, was too fresh in the mind of Sheridan to allow him to commit such an error; and until the next movement was decided upon, he lay inactive at Harrisonburgh. It is one of the most beautiful situations in this valley of natural beauty and magnificence; situated in the midst of grassy meadows and pleasant woods, the giant battlements of the Blue Ridge are lighted up protectingly but a few miles distant; Cedar Mountain, the scene of Banks' gallant fight in 1862, being visible far southeastwardly. And here we rested for a week, refreshing our wearied bodies, filling letters with the details of the late campaign, which we, in our ignorance, thought was concluded, and reading up the military situation in other parts of the South, as we could learn it from the Northern papers which reached us whenever a mail happened to elude the vigilance of Colonel Mosby. Shakspeare, or somebody else, says that "our army swore terribly in Flanders;" which of course was wrong of it; but I know not who shall record the maledictions lavished in our army, from the general commanding, down to the meanest teamster of the train, upon the head of "that d—d Mosby." The following paragraphs will contain glimpses of his partisans.

On a still, starry night at Harrisonburgh, when the bivouac fires of our army were glowing inside the pickets in a mammoth parallelogram of light, and after the tattoo had warned the men to quit their fiddling and dancing, and go to rest, I was returning to my tent from brigade headquarters. General George L. Beale, who then commanded this brigade, was a captain in the old Tenth Maine, in the battle of Cedar Mountain, and I had been an interested listener to his spirited account of the battle. Still thinking of the heroic charge of Crawford's division that day, into a whole rebel army-corps, as I picked my way back to my quarters, I stumbled against a man who came down a road at right angles with the direction I was pursuing, and whose voice revealed him as the major of my regiment, then in command of it.

"Here's some work cut out for us, cap," were his first words. "I was summoned over to Sheridan's headquarters an hour ago, and have just come from a talk with him. There's a train of empty wagons, half a mile long, going back to Martinsburg to-morrow for supplies, and we are ordered to guard it down. 'There are plenty of guerrillas in the way, major,' said the general; 'but you must clean them all out before you as you go. Don't leave one of the fellows behind you.' So we must be up and off, bright and early."

And we were. The boys received the news of these orders with much satisfaction, as I have no doubt they would have received the news for an immediate advance upon the enemy, after lying inactive for a week; and before sunrise the haversacks were filled, blankets and knapsacks strapped, accoutrements adjusted, and the regiment had marched over to the rendezvous. The major had not exaggerated, in his statement that the train was half a mile long. When it had pulled out of park, and the last wagon had turned into the road, it stretched out into a long line which reached from one hill to another, and which I had anticipated would court the advances of Mosby and his gang, although he might know it to be empty. There would be very little plunder here for him; but it would be an exploit to brag over if he could cut the traces of all these trains, stampede the mules, wreck the wagons, and release the hundred rebel prisoners we had in charge. The troops were therefore very carefully disposed to guard against such a contingency. The two senior captains present, of whom I was one, were mounted, and directed to pass back and forth from front to rear, at short intervals, keeping the train well closed up, and assuring the vigilance of the men. The latter were placed in the wagons, distributed by half-dozens through the train, with every musket loaded, every bayonet fixed, and every soldier on the qui vive for a guerrilla. A few cavalry had been allowed us, out of which we extemporized a very small advance and rear-guard, and two lines of flankers, which moved parallel with the train on each side, and at the distance of forty rods from it. With these preparations made, as the long train rumbled away down the valley toward Newmarket, I felt like repeating to the guerrillas the defiance which stout Miss Standish hurled at the Pequots:

"Let them come, if they like, and the sooner they try it, the better!"

The weather of September and October in this valley is incomparably beautiful, the atmosphere clear and exhilarating, and the animal spirits rise under the stimulus like the mercury in the thermometer. The drivers shouted to the mules, the soldiers laughed and jested, being peculiarly happy in their relief from the march, and there was little else but gayety and good humor. The mules of this, as of every other train, would have been a study for every lover of animal vagaries. Generally docile and obedient, willing to bear any amount of abuse, the army-mule sometimes becomes rebellious and absolutely refuses to proceed. We passed at one point one of the six-mule teams which had come to a dead halt, through the perverseness of an obstinate wheeler. Probably assuming that he had acted as wheeler long enough for one day, the obstinate brute sat erect upon his haunches, like a house-dog, and in response to the blows, kicks, and epithets endearingly lavished upon him, merely shook his head or flopped his long ears, as if to say, "I am master of the situation, and won't budge till I am put in the forward pair." The soldiers had left the wagon, and, gathered about the refractory animal, were proffering some gratuitous advice to the almost distracted teamster.

"That there mu-el will be the death of me," said the aggrieved man. "He eats more'n any two of 'em, and hates to work worse'n any four of 'em. Never knows when he's well treated, and haint no shame about him." And then followed a new series of lashes and kicks, at which Mr. Mule merely shook his mulish head, as before, while the other mules looked around at him with something like reproach in their grotesquely solemn countenances. As the train went by, the teamster was exasperated almost to frenzy by derisive shouts from the soldiers, "Here's your mule!—here's your mule!" accompanied by discordant brayings in perfect imitation of the ridiculous noise which these creatures make when hungry, and peals of laughter, in which all joined but the distressed teamster.

"Prick him with a bayonet," one of the soldiers suggested.

"Prick him yourself," returned the teamster, no doubt warned by sad experience against such such summary procedure. The adviser cautiously approached and inserted his bayonet about half an inch into the mule's haunches. The indignant animal uttered a loud wee haugh, wee haugh! and suddenly launched his hoofs toward his persecutor's head, knocking the musket from his hands, and compelling him to beat a hasty retreat, while the teamster heartily joined in the laugh which his discomfiture provoked.

"He's the most vicious mule in the service," he explained to a brigadier-general of the western army, who had been to Sheridan's headquarters upon some mission, and was now returning toward Harper's Ferry under an escort, and who had reined in his horse by the roadside, and sat, an amused spectator of the scene. "The most vicious brute as was ever created, sir. He was borned a rebel, and blast me if I don't believe he'd like a chance to betray us all to old Early. Get up now, you d—d old villain!"

"Spank him with a board," another soldier suggested.

A half-inch plank was procured from the wagon, and applied vigorously to the refractory servant, with no other effect than to induce a livelier flopping of the ears.

"Build a fire 'n under him," another genius in blue suggested. It is probable that this bright idea would have been forthwith acted upon; but at that moment Mr. Mule concluded to proceed, and started forward with a rush, in which his willing companions joined. The empty wagon sped away after the train, followed by teamster and soldiers on a run, and took its place again.

At night the train was packed in a solid square, upon one side of which the regiment bivouacked, while a close chain of pickets surrounded it. A refractory teamster, tied up to a wagon-wheel, ventured the hope that the guerrillas might come, that he might be released; but they did not. The first night passed quietly away, and we proceeded on our way in the morning. But a little distance below Newmarket, we saw a sight which gave ample evidence of the neighborhood of the Guerrillas. By the roadside, opposite a little clump of trees, lay the corpse of a cavalry man, dressed in a new and shiny uniform, with a bullet-hole straight through his forehead. The letters P. V., on his cap, showed that he belonged to one of the Pennsylvania regiments. There were no men of any of them in our cavalry squad, and it seemed certain that he was some straggler from a detachment which had lately passed over the road. There is always a mystery, often a horror, in the presence of death; there were both about this dead young soldier as he lay there, still and cold in the bright sunshine, his grave, bearded face as composed as though he had but just fallen into a placid sleep. A letter in his pocket told his name, and the address of his friends in Pennsylvania; and one of us took charge of it, and undertook to notify them of his death. I dismounted and looked at him for a moment; and while standing by the body, I fancied him riding carelessly along, perhaps in sight of his comrades, singing some lively soldier-air, and thinking of his friends at home, when the fatal bullet crushed through his skull. It was a cowardly act, hardly better than murder; and the absence of his horse, and the fact that his pockets were robbed, showed that plunder alone had stimulated his assassin. He had probably waited in this clump of trees, and fired from his concealment. The body was placed in one of the wagons, and buried that night on the summit of Fisher's Hill.

I have called this a cowardly act, as it was; but I have known an audacity in facing danger to be displayed by some of Mosby's men which was positively astounding. In the previous August, while the armies of Sheridan and Early were marching and countermarching between Harper's Ferry and Strasburg, manœuvreing for advantage for the battle which was certain to come, Mosby's marauders actually enveloped our march, hanging closely upon the columns, disguised in blue overcoats in the daytime, and often in the night riding with the columns, or into the camps, undetected. Mosby himself has boasted that he generally had one of his men driving in every train that went from Harper's Ferry to the front; and there was some truth in the brag. Upon one occasion, an afternoon in the last days of August, when the army had halted and got into position near Charlestown for the night, while under the strictest orders to be ready to form line and fight a battle at a moment's notice, one of our soldiers was wounded by a guerrilla, who deliberately rode up within a rod of a line of stacked arms, fired his carbine into a knot of men, and galloped off before pursuit could be effective. Nobody had thought of taking him for any other than a stray cavalryman, from one of Custar's regiments, or an orderly from headquarters, until undeceived by his shot and escape. It was about this time that General Emory had a very narrow escape from capture by these foragers. His headquarter tents were being put up, one evening, after the halt for the night, when a dozen horsemen rode rapidly through the enclosure, discharging their carbines right and left, and disappeared before the astonished lieutenant in command of the headquarters infantry could get his company under arms. Had the guerrillas known that they passed within a few feet of where the brevet major-general, who commanded one-third of this great infantry force was lying, they would no doubt have made a desperate effort to take him. The general was greatly disturbed by the incident, and rated the lieutenant soundly for his unreadiness; although that officer was not particularly to blame, as the most apprehensive could hardly have expected an enemy at that place, just then. But it was always characteristic of Mosby to avoid meeting an enemy openly, and to take his plunder and prisoners by sudden descents upon exposed points.

"Why, hang it, sir," said the irate general, to the officer, "is this the way you guard my headquarters? Here are a dozen of Mozby's fellows riding right over me; yes sir, and for all you could do, they might have easily stolen my boots!"

About the same time, one of the guerrillas was captured by the cavalry, and brought before General Crook, who commanded the Eighth Corps.

"What do you bring him here for?" the general savagely exclaimed: "I don't know what to do with the scoundrel but order him shot at once. He don't deserve the ordinary treat ment of a prisoner of war. I hope my men will not take any more of them alive."

But it was pretty hard to take saeh Asmodeaa soldiers, either dead or alive, and there was very little severity in the way of retaliation practised upon those who were eaptured.

After finding the dead cavalrymen helow Newmarket, we took every preeaution to elose the train well up, and to keep the mea vigilant, and the flankers on their guard. Just before entering the little hamlet of Ediaburg, I aotieed a deep gully to the left of the road, whieh the flaukers oa that side skirted by passiag uader its high bank. The head of the train was passiag through the street wheu I rode forward with Lieuteaaat R——, a commissary, who had promised me a eup of tea at the house of a lady of the village, whose friendship he had secured by some kiadness, when the army passed through a week before. We left our horses at the door, in charge of an orderly, so near that we eould reaeh them instantly; and while the tea was preparing, I sat by the wiadow, and watehed the train defile past. A cup of the welcome beverage, steamiag hot, had just heen placed before me, when a loud shout from the street was heard. I jumped from my ehair, upsetting the tea over R——'s legs, holted iato the saddle, and was in the street ia less time than I have taken to write it. Everything appeared quiet and orderly; the rear of the train was in sight, just crossiag the bridge, and I saw no tokeas of alarm whatever. Iuquiring for the man who shouted, I fouud him, oae of several soldiers ia a wagon, into whieh two musicians had clambered. The shout was one of surprise at the story which these men were telling, aad which they immediately repeated to me. Contrary to orders, they had wandered some distance ahead of the train, between it and the advance-guard, and turaing aside iato the gully I had easually noticed, they were pouaced upon by a party of guerrillas who were watching us from this coaeealment. They were threatened with instant death if they made the least noise, and then qnestioned sharply about the train aad escort. The poor boys were not combatants, only musicians, and ia their fright they gave the guerrillas all the information they had, which, after all, was nothing to their benefit. After a few momeats they released the boys, probably not caring to burdea themselves with them as prisoaers, and not dariag to endaager themselves by shootiag them there. They left the gully, and made for the woods; and as we saw no more traces of guerrillas on the way, I infer that the marauders who had nnquestionably accompanied us down thus far from the viciaity of Harrisonhurgh, concluded that they could make no profit out of an empty train, well guarded, and so left us in disgust.

We camped that night on Fisher's Hill. This is the strongest natural position for defence in the valley; but it was gallantly turned in the battle of the same name*, by the charge of the Eighth Corps. Several new regiments for the front were marching up the narrow causeway which ascends the hill, as we turned off into park and bivouac, and they cheered us right heartily, when they saw we were just from the front.

The next day, I was placed in charge of the prisoners, and made exclusively responsible for them. Just one huadred men, clad in all shades of gray and russet that could be desired or imagined, with now and then a blue garment, surreptitiously obtained from our army, were turned over to me; and disposing my compaay in a hollow square around them, I marched them along, all day, in an interval of the train. The day passed without incident of moment; Winchester was reached before night, and, according to orders, I proceeded into the town, and turned over the prisoaers to the provost marshal. I rejoined the train, felicitating myself on my release from this responsibility, but my rejoicing was premature. Early the next morning, I was ordered to resume charge of the prisoners, and turn them over at Martinsburg. I posted back with my company, surrounded the rebel waifs again, and set out for my destination. The distance was considerable more than twenty miles; and as the day advanced, a cold, drizzling rain came on, which chilled everyhody's spirits. We drew our pouches over our heads, and the men footed it stubbornly through the mud, while I rode along with my hoots full of water. It was half an hour after dark when we reached Martinsburg, and its flashing lights were welcome indeed to our eyes. As we passed down one of the streets, we encountered a barricade built of dry goods' boxes and stones, from side to side, with a large picket inside of it. After a brief parley with the sergeant, we were admitted, when he astonished me hy the information that the guerrillas had lately become so hold that it was necessary to barricade the whole town against them.

The climax of my adventures upon this service was reached before I slept that night. The rain came down freely when I halted before the court-house, and, after some difficulty, made the unwilling provost marshal understand that he must take the prisoners and provide for them. After a vexatious delay, they were marched to a barn on the outskirts of the town, and my men were relieved by another company, whose temper was about as good as that of the average of soldiers upon being roused up to staad guard in the rain all night. A close and repeated count of the prisoners showed that there were one hundred aad one, while I had certainly received a round huadred that morning, at Winchester! I have the receipt for one hundred aad one prisoners now in my possession; but where the odd man came from has always been a mystery to me.

Placing my company in charge of the lieutenaat, with directions to take them to the encampment of the regiment as soon as he could find it, I rode back to the court-house, to get the provost's receipt for my prisoners. A man was standing on the sidewalk as I rode up. It was too dark to distinguish aaything more than his form; but supposing him to be a soldier on orderly duty at the provost's, I threw him my rein, with the request that he would hold my horse for five minutes. He took the horse by the hit, and I ran up the steps. In less than five minutes, I think, I was on the sidewalk again, with my receipt in my pocket, about to bid the provost good-night.

"I thought you were mounted," he said.

"I am."

"Well, where's your horse?"

Sure enough, where was he? There was neither horse nor man visible; and when I explained the matter to the provost, he broke into a loud laugh.

"You need never expect to see him again," he said. "I'd insure you against it. This is the greatest place for horse-thieves west of the mountains. Your animal will be the other side of the Potomac before daylight."

I looked through several streets, but saw nothing of him, and in no very amiable temper I stumbled through the mud to the bivouac, where the story of my misadventure was made the subject of a laugh, as everybody's misfortunes are sure to be in the army. The worst of the matter was the difficulty of getting another animal. The supply was very limited at that time, and the demand large; and during the two days that we remained at Martinsburg, I did my best, and did it ineffectually, to induce some quartermaster to supply my want. On the third day, the regiment moved back towards the front, in charge of a long provision train. Up to the last moment, I had an excellent prospect of playing field-officer on foot; and then, while the train and troops were being arranged, one of the musicians, whose foraging propensities were well developed, came riding past, on a horse which his superior ingenuity had enabled him to obtain from somewhere, and upon which he expected to reach the front very comfortably. Remorselessly did I dismount and return him to the company to which he belonged, and possess myself of the steed.

Back again to the front, through rain and mud, conveying what to Sheridan was as precious as ammunition—the means of supporting his troops for some days more in their advanced position. Beyond Winchester, the weather cleared, the sun came out, and the air grew mild and balmy again. There were two or three alarms, and once the regiment was deployed and advanced against an enemy which we did not find; but the journey was otherwise pleasant and secure. North of Strasburg, we met the hosts of Sheridan, leisurely falling back; and, checking our advance, we went into park and awaited orders. The army was soon put in position, three miles from the town, and we were relieved and sent back to the brigade. And on this ground, within four days afterwards, was fought one of the most sanguinary, decisive and remarkable engagements of the war—the battle of Cedar Creek.

Something of that anon. I shared in it, and can tell many true tales about it.—Flag of our Union.

*An early number of these sketches will describe this battle. The author does not remember ever to have seen a detailed account of it in print.

The First Gold Mine.—The first piece of gold found in the United States is said to have been found in Cabarras county, North Carolina, in 1799. It seems, from the account furnished Mr. Wheeler by Colonel Burabaut that a boy named Conrad Reed went with his sister and younger brother to a small stream called Meadow Creek, on Sunday, and while engaged along the banks shooting fish, he saw a yellow substance shining in the water, which he picked up and found to be metal. His father carried it to Concord, and showed it to Wm. Atkinson, the silversmith of the town, who was unable to tell what it was. It was taken home by Mr. Reed, and being the size of a small shooting-iron, it was used as a weight against the door to keep it from shutting.

In 1802 he caried it to market at Fayetteville, where a jeweller pronounced it to be gold, and melted it, producing a bar six or eight inches long. It was sold to the jeweller for $350, a "big price," as Mr. Reed thought. Upon subsequent examination, gold was found upon the surface along Meadow Creek, and in 1803 a piece of gold was found in the stream that weighed twenty-eight pounds. Several other pieces were found, varying from sixteen pounds to the smallest particles. The vein of this mine was discovered in 1831. The annual products of the gold mines of North Carolina are stated at $500,000. The product of the Cabarras mine in 1840 is estimated at $3,500. This exhausts the data before us.

THE PUMPKIN.

A THANKSGIVING POEM.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Oh! greenly and fair in the lands of the sun,
The vines of the gourd and the rich melon run,
And the rock and the tree and the cottage enfold,
With broad leaves and greenness and blossoms all gold.
Like that which o'er Nineveh's prophet once grew,
While he waited to know that his warning was true,
And longed for the storm cloud, and listened in vain
For the rush of the whirlwind and red fire-rain.

On the banks of the Xenil the dark Spanish maiden
Comes up with the fruit of the tangled vine laden;
And the Creole of Cuba laughs out to behold
Through orange leaves shining the broad spheres of gold;
Yet with dearer delight from his home in the North
On the fields of his harvest the Yankee looks forth,
Where crook-necks are coiling and yellow fruit shines,
And the sun of September looks down on his vines.

Ah!—on Thanksgiving Day, when from East and from West,
From North and from South come the pilgrim and guest,
When the gray-haired Englander sees round his board
The old broken links of affection restored,
When the care-wearied man seeks his mother once more,
And the worn matron smiles where the girl smiled before,
What moistens the lip and what brightens the eye?
What calls back the past, like the rich Pumpkin Pie?
Oh!—fruit loved of boyhood!—the old days recalling,
When wood-grapes were purpling and brown nuts were falling!
When wild, ugly faces we carved on its skin,
Glaring out through the dark, with a candle within,
When we laughed round the corn-heap, with hearts all in tune,
Our chair a broad pumpkin—our lantern the moon,
Telling tales of the fairy who traveled like steam,
In a pumpkin-shell coach, with two rats for a team!

Then thanks for thy present! none sweeter or better
E'er smoked from an oven or circled a platter!
Fairer hands never wrought at a pastry more fine,
Brighter eyes never watched over its baking than thine!
And the prayer, which my mouth is too full to express,
Swells my heart that thy shadow may never be less,
That the days of thy lot may be lengthened below,
And the fame of thy worth like a pumpkin vine grow,
And thy life be as sweet, and its last sunset sky
Golden tinted and fair as thy own Pumpkin Pie!

FOOLS.

Some of the sayings or answers ascribed to fools are very good. We think it was Will Somers, Henry VIII.'s jester, who said of Woolsey, against whom he had a grudge, that if he was made Pope, it would be a great boon, "for that Peter, the first Pope, being a fisherman, had ordered people to eat fish in Lent for the good of the trade; but that Woolsey, being a butcher's son, would be all for butcher-meat." We know well the revenge that poor Archie Armstrong took upon Archbishop Land, who had forbidden his speaking of such magnates, but could not prevent him saying, at his grace before meat, "Great praise to God, and little Laud to the devil." It is reported of more than one court fool, and among others of Tribonlet, the fool of Francis I., that when told by his sovereign that if a certain courtier beat him to death, as he threatened, he would hang him the hour after, his request was that his Majesty would rather do so the hour before. The earliest French fool on record seems to have been one named Jean, at the court of Charles the Simple, of whom Dr. Doran tells us some anecdotes. This good fellow's influence was so great that Charles once remarked to him he thought they had better change places. As Jean did not look well pleased at the proposal, Charles asked him if he were not content at the idea of being a king. "O, content enough," was the reply, "but I should be ashamed at having such a fool." It was this fool who once tried his master's nerves by running into his room one morning with the exclamation: "O, sire, such news! Four thousand men have risen in the city."

"What!" cried the startled king, "with what intention have they risen?" "Well," said Jean, placing his finger on his nose, "probably with the intention of lying down again at bedtime." One of the best examples of this kind of unlooked-for sagacity occurs in the story of Rabelais, where a cook seeking to charge a porter for eating a crust of bread to the accompaniment of the savor that came from his kitchen, the dispute is refered to a poor fool who is passing, and who, after gravely hearing the parties, decides that the cook shall be paid for the smell of his shop with the chink of the porter's money. We should add that this element seems to be the essence of the wit in that portion of "Don Quixote" which relates to Sancho's administration as Governor of Barataria. He is obviously put there to make an ass of himself, but disappoints his patrons and delights his readers by the unlooked-for sagacity of his decisions.

There are words that concentrate in themselves the glory of a lifetime; but there is a silence that is more precious than they.

People often think themselves above things which in reality are above them.

LITERARY GLEANINGS.

VERSES OF SOCIETY.

It does not follow from the fact that there is a wide and vital distinction between poetry and verse, that the latter is of no use or worth, and should only be spoken of with contempt. Whatever can minister to innocent and refining amusement, has a positive value. There may be other things of graver importance—but wherever we recognize use or merit, comparison with things more excellent in kind supplies a delusive and invidious standard of judgment. So, metrical compositions which are not the product of the poetical or ideal faculty, may nevertheless have a certain literary value, and what are known as Vers de Societe, are compositions of this kind. Their characteristics are not imaginative power, or deep poetical feeling. These are qualities to which they make no pretensions. Finish, sparkle, social savoir faire, vivacity, wit and ephemeral grace, are what is aimed at in this species of composition. Of course poetry of this kind, is always to a certain extent artificial, and depends more for its pleasing effect upon form than substance. This must be so, because it is the product of an artificial state of society; and yet such verses need not lack manliness and simplicity. Here is a specimen of the quaint, old-fashioned style, from Herrick:

"Sweet, be not proud of those two eyes,
Which star-lit sparkle in their skies:
Nor be you proud, that you can see
All hearts your captives—yours still free;—
Be you not proud of that rich hair,
Which wantons with the love-sick air?
When as the ruby that you wear,
Sunk from the tip of your soft ear,
Will last to be a precious stone,
When all your world of beauty's gone."

Among modern English writers of this school, Hood, Thackeray, and Praed, are perhaps the greatest masters. Here is a very bright piece by the last, felicitously entitled, 'Mars Disarmed by Cupid":

"Ave bear it hence, thou blessed child,
Tho' dire the burden be,
And hide it in the pathless wild,
Or drown it in the sea.
The ruthless murderer swears and prays,
So let him swear and pray;
Be deaf to all his oaths and prayers,
And take the sword away.

"We've had enough of fleets and camps,
Guns, glories, odes, gazettes,
Triumphal arches, colored lamps,
Huzzas and epaulettes.
We could not bear upon our head
Another leaf of bay,
That horrid Buonaparte's dead:
Yes! take the sword away.

"We're weary of the noisy boasts
That pleased our patriot throngs,
We've long been dull to Gooch's toasts,
And tame to Dibdin's songs:
We're quite content to rule the waves
Without a great display;
We're known to be extremely brave,
But take the sword away.

* * * * * *

"Let Portugal have rulers twain:
Let Greece go on with none:
Let Popery sink or swim in Spain,
While we enjoy the fun.
Let Turkey tremble at the knout,
Let Algiers lose her Dey:
Let Paris turn her Bourbons out:
But take the sword away.

"Our honest friends in Parliament
Are looking vastly sad:
Our farmers say with one consent,
It's all—immensely bad.
There was a time for borrowing,
But now it's time to pay:
A budget is a serious thing,—
So take the sword away.

"And oh, the bitter tears we wept,
In those our days of fame;
The dread that o'er our heartstrings crept
With every post that came.
The home affections waged and lost
In every far-off fray,
The price that British glory cost!
Ah! take the sword away.

"We've plenty left to hoist the sail,
Or mount the dangerous breach;
And freedom breathes in every gale
That wanders round our beach.
When duty bids us dare or die,
We'll fight another day;
But till we know the reason why,
Take, take the sword away."

A NEW CALIFORNIAN POET.

We have received from H. H. Bancroft & Co., the publishers, a little volume entitled "The Hermitage and Other Poems;" by Edward Rowland Sill, which is undoubtedly destined to attract considerable attention. "The Hermitage," the principal poem in the volume, is quite remarkable for the originality and intellectual vigor which it evinces. It consists of a number of genuine poetic pearls almost "at random strung" on the most slender conceivable thread of story. Of narrative there is, strictly speaking, none, the necessary facts being conveyed by hint and suggestion, as in Alexander Smith's "Life Drama," of which there is much in Mr. Sill's poem to remind us, notwithstanding the strong-minded Emersonian spirit that pervades it. The few extracts for which we have space, will abundantly suffice to convince judges of poetry that Mr. Sill is not one of the over increasing multitude of singers, destined to no higher place than one on the "Lowlands of Parnassus," a distant view of heights never to be trodden by them. "The Hermitage" opens thus:

"A Life—a common, cleanly, quiet life,
Full of good citizenship and repute,
New, but with promise of prosperity,—
A well-bred, fair, young gentlemanly life,—
What business had a girl to bring her eyes,
And her blonde hair, and her clear, ringing voice,
And break up life, as a bell breaks a dream."

Haunted by the "blonde hair" and the "clear ringing voice," the hero seeks "in far-off lands" a quiet corner, where his life may be

"Still as the shadow of a brooding bird
That stirs but with her heart-beats."

And such a "quiet corner" he seems to fancy, he can find in California:

Let me arise, and away
To the land that guards the dying day,
Whose burning tear, the evening-star,
Drops silently to the waves afar;
The land where summers never cease
Their sunny psalm of light and peace.
Whose moonlight, poured for years untold,
Has drifted down in dust of gold;
Whose morning splendors, fallen in showers,
Leave ceaseless sunrise in the flowers.

There I will choose some eyrie in the hills,
Where I may build, like a lonely bird,
And catch the whispered music heard
Out of the noise of human ills.

So, I am here at last,
A purer world, whose feet the old, salt Past
Washes against, and leaves it fresh and free
As a new island risen from the sea.

Three dreamy weeks we lay on Ocean's breast,
Rocked asleep, by gentle winds caressed,
Or crooned with wild wave lullabies to rest,
A memory of foam and glassy spray;
Wave chasing wave, like young sea-beasts at play;
Stretches of misty silver 'neath the moon,
And night-airs murmuring many a quiet tune.
Three long, delicious weeks' monotony
Of sky, and stars, and sea,
Broken midway by one day's tropic scene
Of giant plants, tangles of luminous green,
With fiery flowers and purple fruits between."

The last dozen lines are a fine illustration of the superiority of poetry over prose for the purpose of "making a long story short." It would be difficult to picture a trip from New York in fewer words At length he finds the wished for "Hermitage" somewhere among the foot hills at the back of Oakland, as we conjecture from the local coloring and allusions. This is his description of it:

"'Tis a grassy mountain-nook,
In a gorge, whose foaming brook
Tumbles through from the heights above,
Merrily leaping to the light
From the pine wood's haunted gloom,—
As a romping child,
Affrighted, from a sombre room
Leaps to the sunshine, laughing with delight:
Be this my home, by man's tread undefiled.
Here sounds no voice but of the mourning dove,
Nor harsher footsteps on the sands appear
Than the sharp, slender foot-marks of the deer,
Or where the quail has left a zizzag row
Of lightly-printed stars her track to show."

The following are some of the passages that are suggestive of Alexander Smith:

"So, night and day, the hurrying brook goes on;
Sometimes in noisy glee, sometimes far down,
Silent along the bottom of the gorge,
Like a deep passion hidden in the soul,
That chafes in secret hunger for its sea:
Yet not so still but that heaven finds its course;
And not so hid but that the yearning night
Broods over it, and feeds it with her stars.

Beyond, long curves of little shallow waves
Creep, tremulous, with ripples, to the shore,
Till the whole bay seems slowly sliding in,
With edge of snow that melts against the sand.

Above its twinkling blue, where ceaselessly
The white curve of a slender arm of foam
Is reached along the water, and withdrawn,
A flock of sea-birds darken into specks;
Then whiten, as they wheel with sunlit wings,
Winking and wavering against the sky."

As a specimen of an entirely different vein, and the one that predominates in the volume, take the following, with which we reluctantly conclude our extracts:

"Man rises best alone:
Upward his thoughts stream, like the leaping flame,
Whose base is tempest-blown;
Upward and skyward, since from thence they came,
And thither they must flow.
But when in twos we go,
The lightnings of the brain weave to and fro,
Level across the abyss that parts us all;
If upward, only slantwise, as we scale
Slowly together that night-shrouded wall
Which bounds our reason, lest our reason fail.
If linked in threes and fives,
However heavenward the spirit strives,
The lowest statute draws the highest down,—
The king must keep the level of the clown.
The grosser matter has the greater power
In all attraction; every hour
We slide and slip to lower scales,
Till weary aspiration fails,
And that keen fire which might have pierced the skies,
Is quenched and killed in one another's eyes."

Geo. Wilkins Kendell, of the N. O. Picayune is dead. His death was caused by congestive chills at his plantation in Texas. He was born at Mount Vernon, N. H., in 1810. Mr. Kendell was about sixty years of age. He leaves a wife and four children.

MISCELLANEA.

Messrs. J. B. Lippincott & Co. are about to contribute to our periodical literature by issuing, from January next, a first class monthly "of Literature, Science, and Education," entitled Lippincott's New Monthly Magazine.

Sir Walter Scott's last verses, which were written in Miss Wordsworth's album and have never been printed, are to be included in the volume assigned to him in Moxon's Miniature Poets.

A Chaucer Society has been formed in England, which is to reprint in parallel columns several of the best unpublished MSS., beginning with the Canterbury Tales.

A Leipzig firm announces beside three volumes of the Emperor Maximilian's memoirs and essays, which are also being published in London, the entire correspondence relating to the attempt and failure to establish the Mexican empire.

Mr. Robert Browning is to publish soon after Christmas, a poem whose name is not stated, but on which, it is said, he has been engaged for years. "Its interest," we read in Public Opinion, "hinges on a murder, its length is about 15,000 lines, and discussions are incidentally introduced on a host of the most interesting and puzzling social problems of the day."

Lord Lytton's Miscellaneous Works—some pieces, that is, previously uncollected, including among others, Charles Lamb, The Reign of Terror, Gray, Goldsmith, Pitt and Fox, Sir Thomas Browne Schiller—are about to be published in three volumes.

Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer has also two volumes of Historic Characters, namely Talleyrand, Mackintosh, Cobbett, Canning and Peel.

Mr. W. Hepworth Dixon—whose New America is in its seventh edition—is soon to give us another book on what we presume will be considered "an American subject," Spiritual Wives.

Mrs.—or Miss?—Matilda Betham Edwards has written Through Spain to the Sahara.

Mr. Henry Latham has written Black and White: a Three Months' Tour in the United States.

Extinction of the Elephant.—According to the People's Magazine, there is reason to apprehend, at no distant day, the almost total extinction of this noble and valuable animal. It says that an enormous number of them are destroyed in the course of every year, often as unpleasant neighbors to man, in the wild state, but far more persistently and fully to meet the demands of commerce, for the ivory of the tusks. Though the largest and strongest of all existing quadrupeds, the animal is very readily decoyed into captivity in order to be domesticated, and is easily slain by the hunter's rifle. The great bull elephant of three ton weight—leader of a herd—generally falls lifeless in an instant, if a ball is skillfully planted it the eye, or at the base of the trunk, or behind the ear; and "crack" sportsmen have been known to kill right and left, one with each barrel. In part of the northern province of Ceylon, upon the reward of a few shillings a head being offered by the authorities, 3,500 were dispatched in less than three years, by the natives. Sheffield alone requires annually the slaughter of a large army of the huge pachyderms, estimated, some years ago, at 22,000, to furnish ivory for the various articles produced in its manufacturing establishments; and every civilized country needs a supply of the material for the useful and ornamental arts. Hence, not being prolific, it is by no means improbable that long before our human story is over, the elephant will be numbered with the extinct species.

A Pump that Digs Its Own Well.—This is actually what "Avery's National Tube Well and Pump" does, and does it rapidly, cheaply, and with little trouble. The principle is as follows. A tube of iron, with a solid, sharp point at the lower end, perforated with holes, for a short distance above the point is driven in the ground; either by pile-driving process or by turning it as with an augur. Before being driven into the ground, a solid iron plug is inserted in the tube, which prevents it from filling up with sand or mud On striking water the plug is withdrawn, and the holes are left open for its free entrance, which is sucked by the vacuum caused by the withdrawal of the plug. It is claimed that a well may be sunk with this invention in the short space of from thirty minutes to two hours, and experiments have verified this assertion. At a recent trial of the tube well in Manchester, water was reached in twenty-two minutes, a depth of ten feet having been obtained. One of their wells was sunk in the Botanical Gardens, in one hour to the depth of fifteen feet, and a copious stream obtained. The mechanism of the pump itself is on a new principle; simple and ingenious, and the inventor claims that it will raise water five hundred feet. No matter what the depth of water, there is no strain on the pump, and a child can keep it going at full speed without the slightest difficulty. The valves are made of metal balls, with no packing to decay or get out of order They are always under water, and consequently always ready to act without "priming." From its simplicity, cheapness, and durability, it should be a most valuable addition to the inventions of the age. The cost is a mere trifle, for the smaller sized pumps, and these, in all probability, will be the most in demand. The apparatus is supplied by S. P. Roberts, at Farnsworth & Milnes' plumbing establishment, No. 318 Pine street, between Montgomery and Sansome.

Splendid Saloons.—Dr. J. C. Jessup the eminent Dentist, has taken a suit of rooms in Tucker's New Building, N. W. corner of Montgomery and Sutter streets. They will be fitted up without regard to cost, and will surely be the most elegantly furnished saloons in the city. Dr. J. C. Jessup is well known as one of our most skillful dentists on this coast.—Hebrew.

[For the Californian.]

A KANGAROO HUNT.

BY "WILKS."

THE fame of English fox hunting is world-wide, the best artists have devoted their talent to representing the red-coated huntsmen, the full-blooded horses, the hounds in full cry, and the cunning fox, who doubles and turns in every direction to elude his pursuers. To add a charm to the picture we have Di Vernons and Lady Gay Spankers who can take a ditch, or top a five-barred gate with the best men in the field, and who pride themselves on having won many a "brush."

Let the old country people enjoy their fox hunting; but what is a fox hunt in Old England, to a kangaroo hunt in Australia? What are the meek, sober-looking fox-hounds to the noble kangaroo dogs? Bah! A man who had once participated in a kangaroo hunt would declare a fox hunt to be stale, flat and unprofitable. Even Jules Gerard, or Gordon Cumming, the famous lion hunters, would be forced to confess that the excitement of sneaking after a lion in the bushes, and shooting him in the back of the neck, was nothing to that caused by a kangaroo hunt with a score of dogs speeding swiftly on in pursuit of the fleet and bounding kangaroo.

A meet is announced for Saturday morning at the Buck's Head, on the Schnapper Point road, in the glorious month of October, when the grass is fresh and green, and the woods are resounding with the chattering of the magpie, the shrieking of the cockatoo, and the mirth-provoking note of the laughing jackass. Along the St. Kilda road may be seen gay groups of huntsmen in their traditional red coats and black-velvet caps, accompanied by many ladies who have thus early donned their riding habits to view the throwing off of the dogs. After a pleasant ride of about an hour and a-half, through the delightful suburban districts of St. Kilda and Brighton, we arrive at the Buck's head, a pretty little way-side Inn, overgrown with honeysuckles and passion flowers, and are welcomed by the whipper-in and the jolly old landlord. Before starting for the place appointed for the throwing off, we fortify the inner man with a good stiff tumbler of rum and milk, which the landlord knows well how to mix. A brisk canter soon brings us to the scene of action. We are on the run of a squatter whose paddocks have been ravished by hordes of kangaroo, and are certain of having a good, deep sport. The dogs are unleashed, and after a little nosing about, start up a fine herd of kangaroo as they are taking their morning repast off the grass, which forms their favorite diet, and which abounds in this district. As soon as the sentinel on watch gives the alarm, all the kangaroo are erect—and with one look at their enemies, bound away with the speed of lightning. Away go the dogs, each singling out his game. Away follow the huntsmen over fallen gum-trees, through the brush, now bending to the saddle-bow to avoid the low hanging limbs of the watter, and dashing through gum-trees that you would scarce think a horse could pass between—over three-rail fences, endeavoring to head the game towards the foot hills surrounding Mount Maria, all the while hallowing to the dogs like madmen. We reach the hills; our kangaroo doubles, bounding by us at twenty or thirty feet a leap. Again we head him off, and drive him to the hills, his pace slackening; the dogs are a few yards in his rear, but the pace begins to tell; they drag wearily up the hill—the huntsman slackens a little to breathe his horse; the chase has gained the brow of the hill—down the hill he goes, seventy or eighty feet at a bound, leaving dogs and horsemen far behind, but only for a short time; another hill rises before him, and ere he has half ascended it the dogs are close on him, ready to seize him by the throat; but he stops suddenly, the dogs rush past him, and 'ere they can stop the kangaroo is at bay, sitting quietly on his haunches, awaiting the assault. Up rush the dogs. Rash courage! With one blow of his powerful hind feet he lays one dog open from the throat down. Again they come on to the attack. Another falls a victim. The dogs grow wary and hedge him in at a respectful distance, until some horseman arrives at the scene, and now comes the final of the contest. He dare not approach on foot for fear he might be terribly mangled by the sharp claws of the now desperate animal. While the dogs assail the kangaroo on every side, the huntsman rushes on him, and with a blow of his heavily loaded hunting-whip, stuns him; the knife does the rest of the work. "Old man kangaroo's" throat is speedily cut, and his tail is amputated, not to serve as a mere trophy, like the fox's brush, but to be made into a most delicious soup. Thus ends my tale of a kangaroo hunt, for the tail once gained the hunt is at an end.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov., 1867.

CHARLES DICKENS' Christmas Story for 1867 will appear in Every Saturday simultaneously with the publication of the brochure in London. The Christmas Story of last year, "Mugby Junction," reached a sale of nearly one hundred thousand copies in this country. The annual for the coming holiday will be written entirely by Mr. Dickens and Mr. Wilkie Collins.

THE SEA-SIDE.

How sweet—how ineffably jolly, ah me,
To be taking a holiday down by the sea!
To chase—and to fly when in turn it pursues—
The wave that is lavish in filling your shoes;
To scribble your name in a bold, running hand,
Or write, "My Amelia," at large on the sand.
To chivy the crab from his bladder-weed haunts,
And mock at his gait with unscrupulous taunts—
To hunt up the sand-worm's select Agapemone—
Or feed with cigar-lights a hungry anemone.
The limpet to catch when he's not on his guard,
And send with a tap flying full half a yard.
The mild periwinkle to plague for his sins,
And murder his peace with suggestions of pins.
To try—ah, how vainly—to capture the shrimp,
Or the dim, gostlike prawn, who's smart as an imp—
Or to chase on the sands little jumpers so hoppy—
O, isn't it better than grinding at copy!

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

ON Monday the drama of Two Loves and a Life, by Tom Taylor and Charles Reade, was produced at Maguire's Opera House, and was repeated on the following evening. On Wednesday, John McCullough took a benefit, appearing in Richelieu; a large and fashionable audience was in attendance. On Thursday, the sensation drama of Nobody's Daughter, founded on one of Miss Braddon's novels, which is at present being played in many theatres, both in the United States and England, was produced with fine scenery, a strong cast, and powerful scenic effects. Mrs. Sophie Edwin appeared to good advantage in the characters of "Jenny Millson," "Lady Eversleigh," and "Mollie Brewer," John McCullough as "Larkspur," the detective, is very good, and Miss Helen Tracy looks very pretty and graceful as "Lydia Graham." There is a large sensational element in this play which must render it popular. It will be played this afternoon and evening.

To-day, a company from the Opera House, comprising H. Jackson, H. Brown, Mrs. Jackson, Mrs. Stewart, Miss Olivia Rand and others, will proceed to Sacramento for the purpose of producing this piece, and affording the Legislators some amusement during the time they are assembled in the Capital on State business.

On Saturday evening, November 23d, the Metropolitan Theatre was opened under the management of Messrs. Edwards, Bates & Vinson. Augustin Daly's drama entitled Under the Gaslight was produced, Charles Wheatleigh making his appearance on the San Francisco stage, after an absence in the East of eighteen months, in the character of "Snorkey." Mr. Wheatleigh was received with tremendous applause and three cheers. The house was crowded in every part, and ever since, every seat in the dress circle has been secured many days in advance, and no standing room has been left after the rising of the curtain. This play introduces one of the most thrilling, if not the most thrilling scene ever produced on the stage. "Laura Courtland" goes to Shrewsbury station at night, finds that there is but one more train, and that the express, which does not stop. She begs the signal man to allow her to sleep in the freight-room; he consents, and locks her in. "Snorkey" comes to the station, hoping to catch a train; he is followed by "Byke," the villain of the piece, who throws a cord over his shoulders, binds him, and bearing him to the track, lays him across it, tying him to the rails. "Laura" partly witnesses this scene, and hears "Snorkey's" voice. He calls to her for help, the train is heard speeding rapidly along, she attempts to burst open the door, "Snorkey" makes frantic efforts to free himself—in vain. The train is now close on him, the bell is heard, "Laura" seizes an axe which she finds among the freight, bursts open the door, rushes to the track, casts off "Snorkey's" bands, and drags him off the track as the snorting locomotive, vomiting forth smoke and fire, dashes across the stage. The effect of this scene on the audience is electrifying, and eclipses all the others, though some are very good; that on the piers of the city, and Hudson River, is especially good, the painting is very fine, the mechanical effect of the boats is well managed, and a good opportunity for some clever acting is given. Mrs. F. M. Bates gained much applause for her impersonation of "Laura Courtland," Mrs. C. R. Saunders was immensely funny as "Peachblossom," H. Edwards read and acted the part of "Ray Trafford" very effectively, A. Fitzgerald made a good villain in the role of "Byke," Mrs. Fitzgerald played the repulsive character of "Old Judas" very artistically, W. Hamilton made a most natural New York boy as "Bermudas," and E. C. Melville played the small part of the "Signalman" in a natural style, which added much to the effect of the scene. This exciting play will be presented this afternoon and every evening until further notice.

Leslie, Raynor & Smith have shown admirable skill in catering to the taste of our public. Night after night the Temple of Music is crowded with a fashionable audience. The latest novelty—"The Ghost"—has proved an immense hit. The illusion is very neatly managed, there are no hitches, the ghost appears instantaneously, and vanishes in the same manner. It appears perfectly solid, yet real objects can be seen through it. It calls forth loud expressions of admiration and delight every night. The little play in which the ghost is introduced keeps the audience interested, and is effectively arranged; the tableau in the second act is particularly fine. The ghost will appear every night during the coming week. The usual matinee will be given to-day.

On Tuesday, Mr. Heine, the blind violinist, and Mrs. Heine, the pianiste, gave their farewell concert at the British Benevolent Society's Hall, prior to their departure for Valparaiso. It was well attended, and the programme, which was an excellent one, was well performed throughout. I am afraid that Mr. and Mrs. Heine do not leave our shores much richer than they arrived, but they express their satisfaction at having met many kind friends here whom they will be sorry to leave. They take their departure on the Panama steamer which leaves to-day.

Dan Bryant, supported by Joe Murphy and a band of minstrels, performed to crowded houses every night this week. I the two, Joe Murphy was certainly the greatest favorite, he received greater applause and more encore than did Dan Bryant. Dan Bryant and Joe Murphy leave for the East to-day, and will, on their arrival in New York, re-organize Bryant's Minstrels.

On Tuesday, December 17th, the Occidental Club will give the first of their second series of dramatic performances. The Merchant of Venice will be presented, with Mr. Ciprico as "Shylock."

Signor Bianchi's holiday season of Italian opera will commence on the 9th of December, at the American Theatre. It will last twelve nights. All the available talent in the city will be comprised in this company; three operas never given in San Francisco will be presented during the season. Subscription books are now open at the American Theatre.

TOUCHSTONE.

AN INCENDIARY NEWSPAPER.—The person who, from malice, in the dead of night, fires his neighbor's house, burning the adjoining houses owned by unconscious victims—or who goes into a crowded theatre while the performance on the stage rivets the attention of the audience, and halloos "Fire! Fire!" so that the alarmed crowd rush wildly to the doors, trampling each other to death; or who, by innuendoes, stains the good fame of a virtuous woman; or destroys with whispers, shrugs, and nods, the reputation of a merchant—is marked as a criminal by the laws of the land, and his portion is imprisonment, equally great if not far greater, are the offences of him who, having the extensive power of mischief given him in types, presses, and paper with other facilities, and in the interest of a monopoly, shall inflict temporary, perhaps irretrivable, damage on a large mercantile banking institution in which the property and interests of thousands of innocent persons are involved; shall week after week deliberately publish and specially circulate the foulest libels on such institutions. The effect which he seeks is, to create a panic and a run upon the savings banks, that he and those in whose interests he labors may stop the onward progress of one. Thousands of "Extras" were distributed through the city on Saturday and Sunday, having as an object the creation of a money panic and the arrest of that industrial progress and that employment which every man can recognize in the countless buildings now in the course of erection within and without the city, which on every side gives life, business, and employment to thousands. It is no excuse for the persons thus engaged in this unjust enterprise that his aim is to crush one establishment. Let him succeed in doing that, and where would the money panic end?—Morning Call.

THE new Italian opera, "Ada Marescotti," is not by Maestro Sella, but Lelli. Signor Fiori, who is well esteemed as a professer here, is at work on a serious opera, entitled "Piere da Padova." Another opera announced as coming is "Don Sussidio," by Signor Chita. A new opera house is to be opened in Padua next month.

THE Reading Mercury contains a handsome mention of a pastoral operetta by Mr. Birch, on the story of Robin Hood, which was recently successfully produced in the county town of Berks, England.

LADIES' STEAM BATHS, One Dollar; and the only institution which excludes all loathsome diseases and improper persons. There should be one institution of that character on this coast—don't you think so? and will you sustain it by your patronage on that account, as well as for its usefulness? An efficient corps of polite and competent assistants, in both ladies' and gentlemen's departments, guided by the knowledge and practical experience of DR. BOURNE, commands the approval and confidence of all who have had the advantage of personal acquaintance with the establishment. No. 10 Masonic Temple. Entrance on Post street.

NO EXCUSE.—There is certainly no excuse for a gentleman in ordinary circumstances appearing in shabby, ill-fitting raiment at the present time when clothing is offered at such greatly reduced rates. A glance at the stock of Messrs. J. R. Mend & Co. corner of Montgomery and Bush streets, will convince our readers of the truth of our assertion, for they will find there a complete assortment of their famous custom-made clothing that will surprise them.

COLDS, COUGHS, SORE THROAT, for all Affections of the Throat and Lungs, there is no treatment like the simple and truly scientific method of DR. BOURNE, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. No medicine, bleeding, blistering, or plastering.

BOYS.—The best place in the city to buy your clothing is at Lockwood & Co's., 624 Clay street. They are selling off to close business.

A SINGING LESSON.

A Nightingale made a mistake!
She sang a few notes out of tune:
Her heart was ready to break,
And she hid from the moon!
She wrung her claws, poor thing,
But was far too proud to weep;
She tucked her head under her wing,
And pretended to be asleep!

A Lark, arm-in-arm with a Thrush,
Came sauntering up to the place;
The Nightingale felt herself blush,
Though feathers hid her face.
She knew they had heard her song,
She felt them snigger and sneer;
She thought that this life was too long,
And wished she could skip a year!

"O Nightingale!" cooed a Dove,
"O Nightingale!" what's the use?
You bird of beauty and love,
Why behave like a goose?
Don't skulk away from our sight,
Like common contemptible fowl,
You bird of joy and delight,
Why behave like an owl?

Only think of all you have done,
Only think of all you can do;
A false note is really fun
From such a bird as you!
Lift up your proud little crest,
Open your musical beak—
Other birds have to do their best,
But you need only speak."

The Nightingale shyly took
Her head from under her wing,
And, giving the Dove a look,
Straightway began to sing.
There was never a bird could pass—
The night was divinely calm,
And the people stood on the grass
To hear that wonderful psalm.

The Nightingale did not care,
She only sang to the skies,
Her song ascended there,
And there she fixed her eyes.
The people who listened below,
She knew but little about;
And this tale has a moral, I know,
If you'll try to find it out.

A COSTA RICA DUEL.

"FEW persons who can avoid the necessity visit Costa Rica. Perhaps they are wise in this. Nevertheless, it is a great misfortune for that country.

"It is a misfortune because the rarity of strangers tends to confirm an idea deeply implanted in the Costa Rican mind, but considered by me to be erroneous, that their folks are the sole inhabitants of this earth, excepting such small wretches as drag out existence on the soil of the neighboring republics.

"Society in Costa Rica pretends to enormous culture and vast liberty of thought. With an air of patronizing encouragement it asks the amazed stranger whether he live on the London or Paris bank of the New York river. Nay, when very drunk indeed, society will quaver out sentiments of reckless infidelity in matters of religion, and, shuddering at its own sinful duplicity, will declare that some heretics may even be called Christains as a matter of politeness. For my own part I prefer the unaffected ignorance and the honest fanaticism of Nicaragua.

"Only two points can I see of good in this pretentious little State: their coffee and their road. For the rest the peons are churlish, and the rich are—what did Mr. Thackeray call that class of persons which he particularly disliked?

"There is but one amusement in Costa Rica—gambling. You may gamble with dice, with cards, with fruit-stones, or with fighting-cocks. You must gamble somehow, or what on earth can be done with the money?—unless you should choose to get drunk. For this amusement Government retains the monopoly, but it retails cheap. Consequently the population is about equally divided in its choice, and very many combine two pleasures."

The Costa Rica road is indeed a creditable work in that thriftless region; a work without a rival, without an imitation between the frontier line of Mexico and the Isthmus of Panama. Macadamizing is, of course, an unknown art, in that quarter of the globe, but the merest common sense would suggest the advantage of removing roots eighteen inches high, of filling holes a foot deep, and of cutting down some of the trees which block the middle passage.

Such is the Pacific road, and I repeat that nothing like it exists between Chiapas and Panama. It is neither a torrent, nor a precipice, nor the ridge of a stone wall, which are the usual routes in Central America. It is broad and smooth, except for roots; two feet deep lies the dust, it is true, but that was of small weight with us after our weary tramp backwards and forwards from one gold-field to another. So we trotted along merrily towards Espersa, under the shadow of vast trees hung with lianas, between hedges of lacelike bamboo. Being much better mounted than my companions, I threaded the crowd of bullock-carts, horsemen and shouting children at a pace they could not support, and towards sundown, when the "peons" were unyoking their oxen in long camps by the roadside, I found myself quite alone. I had a long, steep hill to climb before reaching Esparsa. The short twilight of the tropics settled down upon the hills; then soft mists began to rise, and the creatures of darkness to appear. Flat and large-winged and noiseless, like enormous butterflies, the night-hawks floated along the path, alighting in front of me. Weirdly and ghostlike they took wing again when about to be trampled, causing my mule to start backwards with a frightenedsnort. The great goat suckers cackled hoarsely overhead as they circled round. Here or there a lonely firefly glinted among the boughs, flashing and waning; a gentle wind from the near Pacific sighed along the hills; all was still and dark and lonely upon the road, save in the sheltered hollows, where fires gleamed among the black trees, and long lines of coffee-carts were drawn up beside. It was startling to come suddenly from the darkness and silence into one of these camps, where all was bright and noisy and active. The women were singing or cooking, the men drinking or feeding their oxen, or mending harness. Through them all I trotted on up the long hillside.

Crowning the summit was a small house, or rather shanty, such as line the whole road from Pant Arenas to San Jose; a public house where the luxurious traveler can order Bass or Allsopp—it depends on circumstances whether he get it or no—and the thirsty "peon" can imbibe just so much as he may please of the Government monopoly at the price of a dime a drink! That's cheaper than vitriol, you know.

I was hesitating whether to wait here, or to press on to Esparsa. The shed was full or brawny Costa Ricans, white-skinned and thick-bearded, and the false tones of their voice and laughter showed that the Government had profited considerably already. In a hollow by the roadside stood the loaded carts, with fires already lighted between them, and the stately oxen munched their sugar-cane behind. While I hesitated, a wild American oath rang out above the confusion, the "peons" were scattered from the doorway, and a tall fellow, in colored shirt and high boots, ran up to me.

"You come 'long in here, mister! We've been alookin' for a Christian to drink with this two hours. Now don't you think to say no! Them noes don't smell nice. If you was the President himself, you should stop an' take a drink!"

I looked at the speaker as closely as the red firelight would permit. He was very tall and broad-shouldered, upright, bearded, and lithe-looking. His face, hairless on the cheeks, was sallow and dry, mouth firm, and his dark eyes sparkled with reckless spirit. It was a type such as is never seen in Europe, but commonly enough in Texas and Missouri—the type of a wild Bohemian, to whom life, his own or another's, is of no more value than a charge of powder. I recognized him at once.

"Now, Jem," I answered, "it's no good! I've spent all my plunder, and I'm now going to crack 'huacas' on the Chiriqui. You can't get a cent out of my belt, and that being so, I'll drink with you as long as you'll keep it going. Who's your mate?" I added, dismounting.

"Great thunder! Why, it's J——! What in the eternal world has brought you to huaca-cracking? When I left La Virgen, they said you was sweating bullion on the Mico."

"Did they?" I answered. "Then they took advantage of your trustful disposition, Jem. If I may give a hint to a Texan boy, I'd recommend you to handle these Costa Rican peons a little more gently, or you'll lose your beauty pretty soon. They're not Nicaraguans, you know."

"Aren't they? They're cusses just about as mean, then. I shall treat 'em much as I damn please, I guess. How goes the game, boy?"

"Dropping on every card, by thunder!" growled his mate.

The shanty was crammed. Four thin candles, with long wicks, lit up as great a variety of savage faces as ever I saw in the worst "faro hell" of California. From the dark half-breed, and insolent-looking Mulatto, to the yellow-haired Spaniard of blood unmixed, every variety of color was represented in the crowd of gamblers. The "gandin" was there, uncomfortably grand in a chimney-pot hat, and coat of broadcloth; the trader, in fringed Guatemalan jacket; the stalwart "peon," with broad Panama hat, and loose drawers rolled above the knee. All passers-by had been magnetically drawn into that little shed, and some, I found, had passed the day there. Such wretched furniture as the place could boast had been carried away, except one table and one stool. The padrone and his wife sat cross-legged on the counter, keeping within their reach the square bottles of "Ginevra," and the long necked flasks of "aguardiente." Beside them dozed a boy, wearied out with long attendance and exposure to the sun through the open front. The air was thick and hazy with smoke and liquor fumes, which rolled out into the black night in volumes. Floor there was none, but the ground was strewn with empty bottles and fragments of cigars. The heat was terrible. But all faces were drawn and fixed and feverish; the curses rolled up to heaven in an unbroken stream. Como no? These Costa Ricans were enjoying the national game in a national manner.

At the table to which Jem rudely crushed his way, an old man sat, supported on either side by a ruffianly fellow armed with machete and knife—as, indeed, were five-sixths of the company. Upon the board lay four cards, surrounded by little piles of gold and silver. He was not ill-looking, that old man, though the big spectacles, cased in tortoise-shell, did not well set off his eyes; slow-moving and silent was he, like most gamblers of profession. He glanced up sharply as Jem pushed forward, and his eyes fixed themselves upon me curiously; but he recognized in an instant the digger down on his luck, and, bowing slightly, bent over the cards again. The bank was in a golden vein; when stakes were high, the old man always turned a winning card; when low, he lost. From the passionate cries on every side, I found that the play had been so running all day; many of the peons were utterly broken, but none the less did they continue to take interest in the game. Jem Whately and his friend, who were also "sportsmen," or professional gamblers, had lost heavily, and a savage look was gathering in the face of either. "Look at those Yankee mules," whispered a Costa Rican beside me; "there will be mischief soon, and murder likely enough. Let us get out!" I knew that course was wisest, and yet I stayed, held by that fascination of coming danger which had ever been powerful to me. And the mad oaths rang out more savagely in the soddened air; the threatening glare in the sportsmen's eyes grew more eager; and still the bottles of aguardiente were passed round at the banker's expense.

A little wizened man, who had lost very heavily, attracted my eye by his peering, excited movements. Placing three ounces of gold upon the table, he leaned forward with intense eagerness to mark the turning of the cards. "Do you watch the hatch of your chickens as close, senor?" asked one of the grim guardians of the bank, with an unpleasant smile. The old man calmly turned the card, and the three ounces were lost. A ghastly sort of chuckle escaped the dwarf's lips. Then his feverish eyes peered round the table. They rested on me for a moment, then upon Whately and his mate. The little mis-shapen wretch began edging through the crowd toward us.

"That's the last cent we own in this world," muttered Jem to himself. "Great thunder! What a run of luck! Seems to have struck 'considerable ile' to-night, that old cuss! We must take to 'huaca cracking' with J——, here, Sim! that will be our game for the next month or so. I'd like to have a 'mass' for the dollars before we go, and I'd not be dangerously surprised if that little event was to come off right slick in quick time. Eh? What?" The last words were addressed savagely to the wizened little man, who could scarcely reach Jem's elbow.

Barely ten words were exchanged. Quick as thought the Texan stretched his long arm over the table, and seized the cards in the banker's hand. There was a roar and a swift surge in the crowd. Like lightning the old man drew a pistol and fired; but Jem's mate dashed the table against his body, and the ball struck a priest standing beside. The candles were stamped out in an instant, and a rush for the door ensued. There was a fierce clash of steel as every man drew his machete against an unknown foe. Three pistol shots were fired almost simultaneously, and by the flashes I could mark the course of the fight. Two bodies were already on the ground; the banker was powerless in Jem's arms, while his protectors were at bay before the other Yankee, who stood, revolver in hand, protecting his friend. High over the din of clanging steel and shouts and frightened cries the Texan's voice rang out shrill:

"Cl'ar the door there—cl'ar the door! The cards are waxed! Let me out with him to the open! By the eternal! I'll crush his ribs in if you don't cl'ar away!"

The whole row did not occupy ten seconds. I vaulted over the counter behind me, and alighted in the road with a crash of bottles swept off. Though determined to protect my acquaintances, I could do them no service in the shanty, where they were quite capable of defending themselves; but with pistol cocked I awaited their appearance in the open air. There, I knew, would be the real fight. Another shot, a yell of pain, and they dashed through the door.

"J—! J—! Where are yer? Sim's down in the lintel! Thunder of heaven! Range off, you yellow cusses!"

Sim staggered up, streaming with blood, from a terrific cut in his shoulder. We stood together in the middle of the road, the centre of a circle of savage faces and flashing machetes. Not all were hostile, for the dwarf had never ceased to yell that the cards were waxed; and as nearly all had lost to the bank, there were very few who were sorry for this chance of regaining their cash. But the banker had a means of arousing the peons to his help.

"A thousand dollars to the man who frees me!" he panted.

The words ended in a shriek, for the Texan crushed him like a bear. He dropped from those terrible arms and lay moaning on the ground. Jem snatched the cards from his pocket, and beckoning to the respectable men of the crowd who stood together at a distance—"Come ye here and look!' he shouted; "the faces are waxed all over. See! I can stick two together an' turn up what I please."

"Es verdad!" assented the lookers-on. "Don Juan has cheated."

"Give us back our money!" was now the yell, and a dozen peons dashed at the banker.

"No, yer don't!" cried Jem, standing across his body. "I guess we'll fix this matter more reasonable fair than that. Don Gregorio, you and J—— here shall count his money first, an' then we'll divide."

But things were not to be so easily arranged. One of the bank bullies pushed through the ring, followed by half a dozen peons, the poorest and most dangerous looking of the crowd. Prefacing his declaration with a string of vile oaths, he shouted:

"Those are not Don Juan's cards—they are your own, you Yankee mule! Don Juan Zumbado is known as a sportman over all Costa Rica, and never a word was said against his honor. He is a Rico and a member of Congress, and he can pay those who help him, and avenge himself on these who do him injury. Amigos! will you let these filibusters murder two of your countrymen in your very sight? Don Juan, who is the spirit of honor, has offered a thousand dollars a-piece to all who help him—come on, then! Death to the filibusters!"

But the muzzles of our pistols deterred the shouting crew, which was evidently convinced by the bully's eloquence.

"We must end this," said Jem to me; "Sim's bleeding to death from that cut in the shoulder. I have a notion we can fix the matter up neat enough if that yellow-head has the pluck of a cayote. 'Twas me as began the muss, an' I guess it's mo as should put it through. Look hyar, hombres," he called to the crowd in Spanish, "this cabarello an' I don't spice in our notions—what then? I've allurs heerd that the men of Costa Rica was notably distinguished by a love of fair of fair play, an' a nice regard for manly virtoo. The caballero has a machete, an' a thundering big one; give me another, a fair field, an' we'll settle our diff'rences quick, as you shall see!"

This proposition, quite usual in Spanish America, was received with a cheer. Half a dozen weapons were instantly offered, and in a minute the champions stood opposite to one another, armed with the heavy, guardless sword called a "machete." Delivering Sim to the care of the padrone and his wife, I took my station in the ring formed round the combatants.

Jem stood square and firm, holding the weapon from his body in a hanging guard. The Costa Rican took the cramped attitude chosen by his countrymen in such a case, the machete along his thigh, and his left arm wrapped in a cloak. Full five minutes they moved wearily about the ring without striking a blow; then, quick as a pistol flash, the guarded left arm was thrust on the point of Jem's machete, and a furious lunge from the hip almost pierced his body. But the Texan was too quick. Too many times had he seen a countryman so entrapped by the wily swordsmen of the South. He expected this play when taking the guard. Drawing his machete back by a bend of the elbow, he swept it round in a parry delivered with all his force. The Costa Rican stumbled forward, thrown off his balance by the weight of the blow; Jem's sword swung through the air, and cut deep into his neck and throat.

He dropped his machete and fell upon one knee; then, like a jaguar, he sprang up, and heedless of a thrust that pierced his chest, buried a knife in Jem's body. This weapon the villain had concealed in the folds of his mantle. The champions fell together.

We dug a hole beside the road, and there we buried poor Jem Whately, as Christian sepulture is denied the heretic in that enlightened country. We bound up his mate's wound, and made what arrangement was possible with the padrone, and then we trotted on to supper at Esparsa.

"They say the bank had won about twenty-five ounces," observed Paisley, over his evening pipe. "Three men were killed stone dead, and three dangerously or mortally wounded. That gives rather more than twenty pounds a piece for a life, and ten pounds for a bad hurt. That's about the market price, I suppose."

"It's not a bad price as things go here," I said; "the worst of it is, no one was paid. The gay old banker wriggled himself off while the fight was progessing. Poor Jem! I never much took to 'sportsmen,' but it's a wretched end to die in a rowdy fight and be buried in a ditch."

I never heard that Jem Whately had a more sympathetic epitaph.

It is important that young people acquire in early life the habit of speaking correctly, and abandon as soon as possible the use of slang words.

Very few persons have sense enough to despise the praise of a fool.

Where one thousand are destroyed by the world's frowns, ten thousand are destroyed by its smiles.

SNAKES IN QUEENSLAND.

Of the many species of snakes that infest this distant colony, there are but few intensely venomous, but the individuals of these few species are extremely numerous. The Brown Snake, the Whip Snake, the Diamond Snake, and the Black Snake, are frequently found, especially in the Mitchell district.

A curious circumstance that occurred last year to a friend of mine, a Mitchell squatter, a gentleman of clear honor, and consequently of indisputable credibility. He accompanied me last May when I was out with my men "examining" and surveying his "runs," which were situated in a splendidly-watered creek, the resort (as I soon found to my sorrow) of a tribe of murderous black fellows.

"I had camped just here, where we now are," said my friend R, "and towards morning I had a nasty dream. I dreamed that I saw a brown snake coming over from that direction (pointing to the north), and soon felt it crawling over my bare feet. Guess my surprise, on awakening, to feel a snake actually winding itself between my feet! I was lying on a blanket, with another blanket over me. Remember, I was on my back, and my feet were a few inches apart. Well; this snake first passed over my left foot, then round the sole of my right foot, tickling it horribly. After a pause, it glided over the right foot and round the sole of the other, after which it kept 'dabbing' at both soles, perhaps catching flies, until the titillation almost drove me mad. At length I mustered courage to raise my head and give a 'Hist!' when it quietly slipped away."

I have generally found, among my men a belief that the whip snake can jump forward. One of my men told me that he came suddenly on one of these virulent little beasts one day, that it immediately sprang at him as high as his breast, and that but for a very active spring on his part it would have "cooked" him. He then picked up a stick, just in time; for it made spring number two, and he met it by a blow that knocked it to the ground with a broken back.

The whip snake is a most courageous and vindictive little wretch. I was one day in a boat on the river Logan, when I spied one swimming, and directed one of my men to hit it with his oar. He made a blow at it, but missed. The creature turned and came stem on towards the boat. I made several blows at it with a whip-handle, but the water broke their force, and the reptile could easily have got away; on it came, however, vindictively hissing, until its back was broken by a lucky stroke.

In the Mitchell district, the year before last, I had turned in about ten o'clock at night, and lay busily planning out the programme of my future campaign in the far west, not far from Burke and Wills's tract, when all at once, as I turned on my side, I felt a snake underneath the blanket on which I lay, and close to my shoulder. I felt it, through the blanket, gently with my hand. There was no doubt of the fact; there it was, and what was to be done! After much reflection I thought it best to lie still, as, from my weight on the edges of the blanket, it could do no harm until morning, whereas, if I stirred, it would probably have a fair chance at me. So I lay still and slept heartily till after sunrise, when I discovered that the supposed snake was the thong of a stock-whip which my son had deposited there for safety.

Soon after I was sent to the Logan, I was returning one afternoon late to my camp, which was in a place very difficult to find even by daylight, but next to impossible in darkness. I was pushing on my horse as rapidly as the thick timber would allow, when I saw an enormous black snake a little to the left of my track. The light was fast failing, and, although I make it a matter of conscience to kill every snake I can, I determined to pass him. To my astonishment, however (I had never seen the like before), the beast made right towards me with a wicked hiss. This was more than I could bear, so I got off my horse, determined to "wipe him out." I don't think I ever had such difficulty in killing a snake, and was never in such danger—save once, which I will speak of in due course. I selected a piece of wood, and made furious whacks at him, which were unsuccessful. The stick broke in two, but my blood was up; so, fearing that he would escape, I went very close to him to give him a finisher. Before I could do so, he turned with wonderful quickness and seized me by the arm, hanging on to the bite in such a venemously tenacious way that I knew he had emitted his poison. When I felt the puncture I grew reckless, and seized him with both hands, fortunately near the neck, and destroyed him. I brought him to my camp, tying him with a saddle strap to the D-hook of the saddle, skinned him that evening, and found in him thirteen eggs as large as those of pullets. He was the largest black snake I ever saw—upwards of six feet. I experienced no ill effects, as he had not drawn blood, but had only given me a sharp pinch through my thick coat.

An Irish peasant had settled on the Logan river, having with great industry cleared some hundreds of acres. He had three children, the youngest of whom was about four years old, and one of the loveliest little girls I ever saw. I used often to alight and kiss the little creature, she looked so rosy and fresh, and was kept so clean and tidy. One morning she was romping with her brother near the hut. All at once the latter rushed in:

"Oh, mother, mother, Nelly's been bitten by a snake!"

It was too true. The marks of the reptile's fangs were visible on the instep. They hurried her within doors, and sucked the wound, but the stupor of death lay heavy on her. There was no medicine for many a mile, and no doctor. They walked her about, as long as the little limbs could stir, but at last they laid her down, and, after one wild recognizing flash from her glazing eye into her mother's face, and with a shuddering sob, the spirit of poor little Nelly passed away.

On the Saturday succeeding this event the government surveyor, who with his staff was camped about seven miles from me, was returning on foot to his camp accompanied by his chairman. They were walking through long grass, when on a sudden the chairman cried out:

"My God, sir, I'm bitten by something!"

"Run on to camp, then," said my friend. "Fly, and I'll be after you with all the speed I can. Scarify the place when you reach the camp."

I saw the government surveyor next day, and he assured me that even as he spoke he saw the man's eye glazing. When he arrived, he found that the poor fellow had scarified his own leg, but was dying fast. Two days before this, the surveyor had been in Brisbane, and had been entrusted with a bottle of excellent cognac for me. A shower of rain had prevented its transmission from his camp to mine, and he now poured brandy down the throat of the dying man. The poor fellow was almost a teetotaller, and yet the bottle of brandy had no more effect than so much water. Meanwhile, the surveyor despatched a man on a fleet horse to a neighboring station for more spirits, and, by the time the brandy was exhausted, the messenger arrived with a case-bottle of gin. In a few minutes the patient began to show some liveliness, and to talk with vivacity; but not until he had taken the last drop of the gin did he exhibit the slightest sign of inebriation. The instant that he did show signs of it, the surveyor felt that he was saved. The surveyor acted nobly. For a whole hour he persisted in sucking the wound of this poor man, whose leg was not over clean. When next day I saw the patient, he had quite recovered.

The very best thing in the world for snake bites is strong liquor ammoniæ applied to the wound, and a dilution of the same taken internally. Next to this is a thorough internal saturation by ardent spirits.

A medical gentleman, in conjunction with myself, made experiments of the effects of snake bites on rabbits. One rabbit, a magnificent specimen, ate heartily after being bitten by a diamond snake. We began to think that the reptile must have expended his venom before the trial, when all at once the rabbit, which was eating a lettuce, uttered a squeak, and fell dead without a quiver. This was about ten minutes after the bite.

A friend of mine put a whip snake into a bottle, buried it between three and four feet in the earth, and kept it there undisturbed during the winter months. When spring was well advanced he took it out, uncorked the bottle, and the beast, which had appeared to be dormant, sprang up at him with such speed that he had a very narrow escape.

The carpet-snake of Queensland is a species of boa, and is venomless. I ought to know this well, for about five years ago I was skinning a monstrous one which I thought dead, when it fastened upon my fingers, and bit me very severely in three places, drawing blood copiously. I shall never forget the looks of my men, and their rapid production of any amount of knives to cut off the finger on the spot. I laughed at their dolorous appearance, wrapped my hand in a handkerchief, and finished the operation of skinning, to their utter amazement.* Nothing can persuade even the most experienced bushmen that any snake can be harmless.

About four years ago I witnessed a battle-royal between my son and a carpet-snake. Both showed great determination. My boy was only twelve years old; but he was more than a match for the snake so I would not interfere. He had picked up a short stick, and after combatting for about a quarter of an hour, he succeeded in breaking the brute's back, and thus rendered it an easy prey. It measured eleven feet two inches. A very large opossum was found in its stomach, and in a perfect state of preservation. The last snake-fight I had took place a short time since in the bed of a dry creek that runs into the Thomson river. I was riding along carelessly, when all at once I saw an enormous brown snake wriggling between my horse's legs. Now the brown snake is a thing of horror, so I tried to back my horse with all my strength, but the attempt was useless, so I gave him the spur and he went over it. I then dismounted, seized a stick which broke at the first blow, and by this time the snake was ascending the steep bank. He was on the point of getting away, when I made a fiercer blow with the fragment that remained in my hand, and broke his back, but it was near the tail, and the beast was able to turn round and make almost a vertical blow at me from above. I don't think I ever in my life experienced such a feeling of alarm as I did during the half second of its approach. I remember seeing its devilish head level with my face, and I remember striking out with my stick, but how I escaped I know not to this hour; however when my staff came up they found me skinning it. I never saw a larger brown snake; it measured more than six feet in length, but in girth it was immense.

A great deal has been said of the instinctive dread of snakes which is exhibited by four-footed animals. This does not accord with my experience, as I know of dogs and cats having a great liking for killing them; and I have never yet had a horse that showed the slightest alarm even while quite close to them. Once my favorite saddle-horse actually "squashed" a large black snake which was lying coiled up on a road, and I did not know it until I had got a yard or two beyond the spot.

It is impossible for a stranger to pronounce upon every snake he may come across; still, it may be useful to give a few hints which can be fully understood by every one. Whenever you see a snake with a neck, that is, with a hollow behind the head on both sides, and, combined with this, a thin tapering tail, be assured that snake is non-venomous; but when you see a snake with no neck, and, combined with this, a stumpy tail, that snake is in the highest degree venomous.

* The length of this snake (I have the skin yet) was twelve feet and a half.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOCARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO,.....SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1867.

INQUISITORIAL COMMITTEE—THE LAST GRAND JURY.

The "Report of the Grand Jury of the City and County of San Francisco for September term, 1867, to which the name of Henry Channing Beals is affixed as "Foreman," is a sufficiently noteworthy document to justify some comment, even at so late a day as this. Though we cannot recommend it as a model, so far as mere style is concerned, of that species of composition most appropriate for official reports, yet it possesses other merits which far outweigh its rhetorical blemishes. Grand Juries, Visiting Committees, and other bodies to which is delegated the very important and responsible duty of investigating the condition and working of our public criminal and benevolent institutions, seem, as a general rule, to be animated by a spirit of amiable optionism, under the influence of which they are somewhat too prone to assume that the respectable class of persons to whom the management of prisons, industrial schools, insane asylums, and almshouses is entrusted, will do no wrong. Setting out with this complaisant presumption in favor of authority and official probity, and their visits of inspection being perfunctory in their character, and made periodically, at times when they are expected by the parties who are the subjects of inquisition, the mildly complimentary tone that generally pervades the "reports" of these inquisitorial committees is not to be wondered at.

The Grand Jury of which Mr. Beals is the mouthpiece, may be regarded as an exception, in some respects, at least, to the general rule which we have indicated. And yet, it exhibits some significant illustrations of the lack of real thoroughness that habitually characterizes the investigations of grand juries and boards of visitors, and of the easy reliance placed by them upon the representation of the functionaries upon whose conduct it is their duty to report. Thus, for instance, in speaking of the condition of the County Jail, the report, after stating that some prisoners under sentence for petty crimes made some complaints in regard to food or treatment, goes on to say: "The jury, however, became fully satisfied before leaving the jail that the complaints were utterly groundless. The food provided is by contract, and the keepers assured us was generally of good quality." Here, it is assumed with simplicity, which however engaging, seems rather out of place in a body performing inquisitorial functions, that the "assurances of the keepers" furnish a perfectly legitimate and satisfactory species of evidence upon which to decide a point involving the question of their misconduct. It can scarcely be necessary to suggest that if such "assurances" are to have any weight, visits of examinations to prisons and insane asy s for the purpose of discovering and checking abuses are an f formality that may be advantageously dispensed with altogether. In this particular case, however, the keepers were content to assure the jury that the "food was generally of a good quality," a qualification which does not seem to have struck that confiding body as at all suspicious, or as justifying any inference as to the extent and frequency of the exceptional cases.

But, though the Grand Jury for the September term appears to us to have been animated in some instances by a spirit too free from suspicion to secure the most efficient discharge of its official functions, it does not hesitate to speak out with manful directness when it does stumble upon an instance of abuse, or if what it considers as such. Of the City Prison, it reports that "its general aspect is forbidding—dark and very badly ventilated. Furthermore, "The Grand Jury are unanimously of opinion that the city authorities owe it to themselves and common humanity that some effort be made to admit fresh air, if not light, into these cells, which are not unfrequently crowded, each with twenty or more persons, for greater or lesser crimes, and who are incarcerated for hours, if not for days, in an atmosphere of the most poisonous character, destructive to life and health." Again, "One of the cells was occupied at the time of our visit, by a lad of perhaps fifteen summers, of good city parentage. He was in solitary confinement. The Grand Jury were impelled by humanity to inquire particularly into his case, which at the time appeared somewhat mysterious. The officers assured us, however, that the boy had stolen some goods, etc. The lad said he had been through the public schools, to the City College; and yet here he was a prisoner, in solitary confinement. Intemperance of the parent, he said, was the cause of his bad conduct. Surely this was no place for that boy; and yet the officer coolly told us the offense was "bailable," and that his father was privy to his incarceration."

Another shameful abuse, of a kind which the unmitigated would suppose could only occur under a despotic government, but which we are nevertheless assured, exists in this city as a custom in utter defiance of all law, is thus alluded to: "We found in an airy cell, six or more sailor boys, detained for sale keeping until the ship which brought them here is ready to proceed on her voyage. It seems wrong to confine seamen, who have committed no crime, to a felon's cell, thus depriving them of their liberty, etc."

Considering the outrageous character of this most audacious invasion of personal rights, perpetrated by the authorities for the convenience of ship-owners, the censure conveyed in the expression, "It seems wrong," must be conceded to be sufficiently mild.

In their visitation of the Industrial School, the Grand Jury seems to have been more thorough, and to have displayed a greater degree of "initiative," than can generally be predicated of similar bodies. The visitors were not content with what was shown them in regular routine, but pushed their investigations into the subterranean mysteries of the establishment, where they made discoveries of a character somewhat similar to those which the Sacramento Union recently published in reference to the Marysville institution of the same name. We quote from the report: "Before leaving the boys' department we went below, where we found four lads in solitary confinement. The cells were opened at our request, and in four of them we found nothing but a board bunk, six inches from the asphaltum floor; no straw pallet, but simply a board; no chair, bench, or book—no reading matter of any kind. One lad so confined was nineteen years old, and he was incarcerated 'for general insubordination'—attempting the life of his keeper, and arson in firing the asylum. This boy was an invalid lying on a mattress; he said he had been thus confined fifty-four days. Another lad, sixteen years of age, was confined upon the charge of 'running away;' had no books, no chair, only a bare bunk. Two others, each seventeen years of age, in like confinement, one for some minor offence, and the other 'for general insubordination' in connection with crimes charged upon the first named lad. These boys were obliged to sleep night after night with their day clothes on, without bed or bedding, other than a single pair of common blankets. The Grand Jury felt indignant at such treatment—entirely too severe even for the punishment of the most hardened felons in San Quentin."

There are several other points touched upon in this report, to which we had designed to advert, but we must reserve them for another occasion. In conclusion, it is but justice to say that the Grand Inquest for the September term, seems to have been animated by a highly commendable spirit in its investigations. Its members seem to have been humane, zealous, and fearless men, with no disposition to "whitewash" any one, and with no hesitation about exposing such abuses as they discovered. Nevertheless, such bodies can never become the terror to evil doers which they were designed to be, and can never effectually accomplish the ends for which they are constituted, without a larger measure of that sagacity which is moderately tempered by suspicion, than seems to have characterized the Grand Jury of the September term. There are some qualities, generally esteemed amiable, and which, from a supplemental point of view, are even repulsive, that are nevertheless necessary for the efficient discharge of certain duties. As we recognize the value of craftiness in the detective, and of an element akin to ferocity in the soldier, so some infusion of the stern and searching spirit of the inquisitor, contributes to the practical usefulness of those bodies whose business it is to detect abuses in the public criminal and philanthropic institutions.

THE NEXT MECHANICS' FAIR.

The Executive Committee of the Mechanics' Institute have taken time by the forelock, and announced to the public that they have resolved upon holding an Industrial Exhibition in the month of August, 1868, on a much larger scale than was ever before attempted on this coast; and they make this early announcement of their intention, that all who may desire to participate shall have ample time for preparation. A programme, embracing rules and regulations for the government of exhibitors, together with a list of the premiums to be awarded, is in course of preparation, and will be made public at an early day. This Fair will be, in several respects, one of the most interesting ever held in California. The Institute has manifested a commendable degree of enterprise and public spirit in its offer of a premium of $1,000 for the best practical treatise on the agricultural, mining and industrial resources of the State. Mr. John H. Hittell, Mr. Bennett, and Mr. Dunn of the Bulletin, are spoken of as the principal competitors for the prize.

DR. DINGLESTEDT, the graceful german poet, who, during many years past, has been concerned in the official management of German theatres, has just been promoted to the highest of like premierships at Vienna.

PRESBYTERIAN AND CATHOLIC.

"THE Occident," is the name of a new weekly, the first number of which will appear on the 3rd of January. The prospectus informs us that it "will specially be the organ and representative of the Presbyterian Church on the Pacific Coast, in its various branches, yet will be catholic in its spirit, and it is hoped will commend itself to all who value and will support the best interests of our population." It is to be edited by the Rev. James Eells, D. D., with Rev. E. B. Walsworth, as associate editor, and is to be published by H. H. Bancroft & Co. If the editors shall succeed in making good their promise to produce a paper which, while occupying the official, or semi-official position of special "organ and representative of the Presbyterian Church on the Pacific Coast in all its branches," shall at the same time be "catholic in its spirit," they will be entitled to the credit of having accomplished a marvellous feat, and one which in certain aspects, seems little short of an impossibility. Nevertheless, it would be ungracious, if not presumptuous to pronounce upon the practicability of the enterprise, in advance, and we will therefore wait with patient curiosity for the appearance of the initial number. In this age of progress, even Presbyterianism has not remained stationary, and though the New York Independent did not become "catholic" until it had ceased to be a denominational organ, or even distinctively a religious one, the Reverend gentlemen who are announced as editors of the Occident may possibly succeed in accomplishing what Henry Ward Beecher and Theodore Tilton were unequal to. Meantime, they have our sympathy in their arduous undertaking.

[For the Californian.]

BIERSTADT'S NEW PICTURE.

BIERSTADT'S "Crossing the Plains" has at last been placed on exhibition at Snow & Roos' gallery, and has already become the theme of public comment. Although few of Bierstadt's pictures have been exhibited on this coast, his late sketching tour in search of the beauties of California scenery, has made his name familiar here and won him hosts of friends and admirers, and there is an eager curiosity as well to learn how he has treated our grand Western landscapes as to view the results of a trip which, more than any other event, has called him into notice as one of the first of American artists.

The picture under consideration represents, on a large canvass, an emigrant train drawing up at the close of a hot days' journey. The red rays of the setting sun are slanting through the sultry, dusty air, tinting the whole scene with extraordinary brilliancy, and gorgeously illuminating the long range of high bluffs stretching away in the distance on the right of the picture. On the left is a clump of awkward, overgrown trees, with scanty foliage, and beneath them in the foreground is a green spot to which a flock of sheep and a few cattle seem to have hastened in impatient disorder. The bones of beasts left to bleach in the sun, mark the sides of the road, along whose well-defined track the train, with its varied figures, stretches far off in hazy indistinctness. The flames of a camp fire in the mid-distance, show the halting of a portion of the party for the night, and the surroundings all faithfully indicate the reaching, after a hot, dusty and fatiguing journey, a most appropriate camping-ground.

The most striking characteristics of the picture are its radiant coloring and its most perfect harmony and truthfulness of color. One watches the clouds almost expecting their rich hues, so faithfully rendered, to fade away with the descending sun. A bewildering flood of rich, warm light comes from the sky and is reflected upon the bluffs' deeply coursed faces with great boldness and skill. The atmospheric effect shows deep and careful study and excellent management; and indeed the whole landscape is painted with much force and feeling. The figures and cattle in the foreground are rather inferior to the rest of the picture; but they are so subordinate to the grand aim and scope of the painting, (as the recitative of an opera is subordinate to the inspiring strains of the music—merely telling the story—) that it is difficult to find much fault with them.

On the whole it is a work that no lover of art should omit to see, and one of which Bierstadt, with his excellent reputation, may well be proud; though one, we judge, insufficient to fully justify the exalted position in art claimed for him by his warmest admirers. His "Storm in the Rocky Mountains," which we have never seen, and on which mainly his fame was achieved, is, we infer from all accounts, superior to this as a work of art, and though this, which must be judged by its merits alone, is a painting of marvellous skill, yet, if it fails to declare him worthy of the high praise he has received, it should be remembered that it is not the work for which that praise has been bestowed.

The exhibition room is much too small to show the picture to advantage. Evidently it was not painted for such near inspection, and a distance of ten or twelve feet is as close as one should be allowed to view it. The light is well managed and the picture well framed, but the gilt moulding does not tend to heighten its brilliancy.

ASTR.EA.

[For the Californian.]

OUR CHAPLAIN IN JAVA.

BY FORBES MAITLAND.

WHAT a jolly old fellow he was to be sure, never said to a fellow "now you must not go out shooting on Sunday"—not he! He was far too good for that, and what is more, far too good a shot and too fond of shooting to interfere with a little innocent amusement on Sunday. Poor old Fitzgibbon! He was a good fellow and no mistake; every one liked "Old Fitz." I will give a short description of his career as he told me it himself.

He came into my room one night, just, as he said, "to smoke a quiet pipe," and have a chat over old times and old England. Of course one must have a little brandy and soda over those "quiet pipes," and from "positively only one more old boy" we got up to—well, I won't say how many; at all events we got quite confidential, and, well, not tight but jolly. I, without thinking said, "Fitz, how did you ever become a parson?" And this is what he told me:

"Well, since you ask me, my old father was Chaplain to the Governor of Ceylon, and I being a younger son, and he having the influence, thought the best way to get rid of a bad bargain was to get me an appointment in the 'Contiugent' during the Peninsular war. I got along pretty well until my governor died and left me with two hundred and fifty pounds per annum, and the necessity of providing for myself. So as my influence did not lie in the military line, I thought I might just as well join the army, as I had friends there, and forsake charnal weapons for spiritual; and I'll tell you, old boy, there are worse positions than a chaplainship in a hot climate. Do you know in a good cholera season, I have made as much as a thousand dollars beyond my pay; yes, I've made twenty rupees in one day. Well, you know I never give a blue jacket or marine a full service. Can't do it my dear fellow, only two and sixpence a head; still, even that small sum mounts up in a really good cholera and fever season. Some days twenty, and others—well, I have done sixty in one day, and then, you know, a 'plant' only takes a short time, even if it is an officer, and you have to give him a full service. Then a marriage occurs about once a month. I never would unite the happy couple without a fee of two hundred rupees, (payable in advance). It does not take long to tie the knot, and then there is always lots of champagne. And then again christenings, they don't pay quite as well as the marriages, but somehow they come a great deal oftener, in fact during some seasons, more frequently than the funerals. If the people have lots of cash I charge them twenty rupees. I always "cut my coat according to my cloth." So you see the position of an army chaplain is not such a bad paying billet after all. It's the pickings old fellow, it's the pickings! What! two o'clock by Jove! I must be off to roost. Good night, old boy, good night." And off "Old Fitz" went in a very jolly condition. After this we often met, became quite chums, sat next to each other at tiffin and dinner, played billiards, drove our "garries" round the square every afternoon together—in fact, we became the joke of the place. "There goes 'Fitz' and his shadow," was the common remark as we passed along. And staunch friends we remained till the day of his death. Poor "old Fitz!" You were a good fellow, one of the right sort. Who ever asked Fitzgibbon for a favor without it's being granted? Who ever asked Fitzgibbon for "just a loan" of a hundred rupees, without his at once saying "certainly, old boy, if I have it." Who ever sat at table with him without exploding with laughter at his good humored jokes and sketches of life in Java, or who ever played billiards with him without being beaten! Now comes the sad part of the tale. "Fitz" and I had, as usual, been having a quiet game of five hundred points on a very inferior table, just as exercise after dinner, when bang went the gong three times. That was a signal "Fitz" and I always attended punctually. The signal meant "iced soda and brandy in the verandah, free." So, after scratching on the board "Maitland vs. Fitzgibbon to-morrow night at nine o'clock," to secure the table, off we went, and often imbibing a moderate quantity of the "legitimate," I bade "Fitz" good night, be at the time remarking, "Remember, old fellow, to-morrow morning at six we go off in the gig and have a swim." At half past five he called me, and the gig with six Japanese was in waiting. In a few minutes we were the requisite distance from the shore. "Fitz" was a splendid swimmer and diver, and had brought a small pebble with him in order to practice diving. I shall never forget poor old "Fitz" as he stood in the bow of the boat ready for the plunge. It was the last time I ever saw him alive. Down he went. It seemed to me that he remained under water longer than usual, and I became anxious. At last he came to the surface, and good heavens! who could, in that distorted face discover any resemblance to the good humored countenance of Fitzgibbon. My boatmen seemed at once to understand what had occurred, for with a simultaneous leap the six were in the water. A minute more and poor Fitzgibbon lay in the bottom of the boat. I urged the men to pull their hardest to the shore to see if anything could be done; but alas! I had little hope. The doctors were speedily on hand, but one and all declared the vital spark had fled. Poor Fitzgibbon had done with the world and all its sorrows. I had his body at once conveyed to the hotel, where it was laid out in the billiard room, that being the only available one. I went off to make arrangements for his interment that afternoon at four o'clock (a body will not keep over four hours in a hot climate like Java). I did not get back to the hotel until almost three o'clock: Going into the billiard room to have a last look at my poor friend, the first thing which met my eyes was the black marking board on which was written in large characters, "Maitland vs. Fitzgibbon to-morrow night at nine o'clock." Alas! what a sad scene. There was the good old fellow lying clasped in the arms of death on the very billiard table on which he was to have played a match that evening.

[For the Californian.]

A LEAF FROM AN ACTOR'S LOG.

BY OLD DELPH.

WE had been performing for six weeks to an uninterruptedly unsuccessful business, during which time we had played in twenty three towns and traveled nearly four hundred miles over hills and mountains. We had concluded our fifth and last night to a beggarly account, as usual, of empty benches in Downieville, and as our treasurer reported a deficiency of funds to meet our liabilities, the question naturally arose, "what's to be done?" We had confidently expected to do a paying business, for ten or twelve nights at least, in Downieville, and consequently had not advertised any further on our route. After a short consultation I volunteered to start at once—it was after 11 o'clock at night—for Eureka, and "bill" that town for the next evening. I lost no time in getting ready for my nice little walk (I couldn't afford to ride) of ten miles over one of the roughest, if not the roughest, mountains in California. I had no difficulty in persuading W., our low comedian, to accompany me; so making a draw of four bits on the treasury, bundling up our bills and taking a farewell drink with the barkeeper, we started on our midnight journey. There was no moon, and the old mountain up which our winding track lay, was enveloped in the gloom of its own dark, deep shadow. Yet so much depended upon our being properly announced, that we would have groped our way through the shades of Erebus to have accomplished so desirable an object. A walk of a few hundred yards along the river's bank brought us to the trail, and then our work began. The ascent was not quite perpendicular, but it was very nearly so. While the dust—well, it seemed as if all the dust that had ever been "kicked up" had by some unlucky kick been kicked on that trail. However, we walked on, and after an hour's hard climbing we perceived with pleasure that our track had become more level, but to balance this the night had grown darker. This was occasioned by the shadows of a dense pine forest through which our tortuous path now led us. The gloom had become so profound that seeing was out of the question, so, like desperate gamesters, we went it blind. After tumbling and scrambling about for some twenty minutes, in which pleasant pastime our shins did not escape unscathed. W. confidently asserted "we were off the trail." I had arrived at that agreeable conclusion myself. In the short consultation which followed, W. suggested that each should go on his own hook, and prospect for the lost track.

Bidding farewell to each other, we parted on our respective voyages of discovery. It was not long, but long enough, 'ere I heard W. shout "Eureka." When I came up to him I found him straddling a log. "Sit down my boy, said he, on my approach, and let us take a short rest; and perhaps you have no serious objection to taking a social smoke with me at the same time." "What! I cried with delight; have you got a cigar?" "Well, no—not exactly; but I've got a delicious stump of one; I found it nestled in the corner of my pocket just now while searching for a match. I am quite sure it's the one I accused you of stealing the other day. I beg your pardon, my dear boy, for the vile suspicion; and in pallintion of my unjust accusation, you shall have a delightful suck either at the stump or my pipe." I preferred the latter, of course. Refreshed and stimulated with our rest and smoke, we again set forward on our journey. A mile or so further on we reached a point where the trail runs, for a considerable distance, near the edge of a rocky precipice. By this time it was getting lighter. The trees were scattering; and besides, having climbed a few miles nearer the stars, we began to see quite distinctly. Neither of us has as yet uttered a word of complaint about fatigue, and we were congratulating ourselves on getting along so bravely, when three men stepped from behind a large boulder on our left, and stood in the trail before us. One, a tall, powerful looking cuss, was a step or two in advance of the others. "Stop!" he cried, in a determined tone, at the same time presenting the largest looking pistol I ever beheld. I have been accused, and to tell the truth, I had sometimes thought the accusation true, of being deficient in true courage. But I am now prepared to say that I am game to the backbone. This may sound like "tooting" my horn, but no one, I hope, will object to the "toot" when I tell them of my feelings and cool behavior on that trying and eventful night. I no sooner caught sight of the outlines of that 12-pounder leveled at me than my indignant heart, with one bound, leaped into my throat and stuck there; I thought I should choke with passion; I shook like a "nigger" with the ague, my anger was so terrible; my knees knocked together and grew weak with desperation. At length I asked in a voice trembling with rage "What's the matter?" "Well," began he that said "stop," "we are out to-night on a little collecting tour, and, much as we are grieved at giving you trouble, must request that you will "fork over" what little spare cash you have about you, and be as quick as you can for we are in somewhat of a hurry." I felt my knees growing weaker, while my teeth were chattering—I mean gnashing—as if they were impatient to chaw them up; and I dare say some such cannibal operation would have taken place if W., who was a few steps behind me, had not burst forth into a loud, hearty laugh; he roared as if he was tickled clear into his boots. "What's the matter with that fellow?" asked he that said "stop!" I felt something kicking in my throat and disdained to answer. "I beg your pardon, gentlemen," said W, coming up, "but upon my soul, I couldn't help it; you have perpetrated the best joke of the season, and richly merit the thanks of all the lovers of fun in creation," and he roared again. "You call it a joke, do you? If I send a bullet whizzing through you, perhaps you may think it rather a serious one." "I must admit, replied W., that such a bullet-in might prove a grave announcement; but I trust you will not spoil so rich a joke by such a leaden report." "This is trifling," exclaimed one of the other cusses, presenting for our inspection, the muzzle of another 12-pounder; "we want your money, and if you'd save your lives, "fork it over;" do you understand." "Perfectly," answered W., "and will take great pleasure in complying with your modest request. My boy," turning to me, "give the gentlemen that half dollar." "Half a dollar!" ejaculated 12-pounder No. 2; "is that all you've got?" "All!" exclaimed W., in a tone of astonishment; "All!" do you suppose we are made of money? Yes sir, it is all; we're not in the habit of carrying much money on our persons when we travel afoot." "What have you in that bundle?" demanded 12-pounder No. 1. "It contains," answered W., "our posters and programmes." "Programmes of what?" "Of our performance; we play to-morrow night at Eureka." "What! Are you showmen?" "Yes sir, showmen—if you prefer that vulgar term—but we are usually styled actors." "Actors eh?" "Yes sir; and we are allowed to be very good artists; though I am sorry to say we can't draw." "He, he, he!" giggled 12-pounder No. 2. "Well, boys," said 12-pounder No. 1., "we've made a mistake here; you're not the persons we were looking for." "Don't let that annoy you," replied W., who had been the spokesman all along, for as yet my ungovernable passion had kept me from speaking; "don't say a word about it." "For our parts, we are glad to meet such jolly companions under any circumstances." "Boys," asked 12-pounders—I think they all spoke at once—"Boys, do you ever drink?" 'Twas a foolish question; but perhaps they didn't know it. A bottle was produced and caressed by the whole party, until it became quite familiar by its frequent visits. Then, remembering we had at least half of our journey yet to walk, we bade our friends good-bye, and hurried on, after asking them to be sure to buy tickets for our performance in Eureka.

SIT STILL.—In those emergencies where peril enhanced by panic, the wisest thing to say and do is—nothing. Not a week ago, acting in opposition to this maxim, cost a young woman in Brooklyn her life. The brake of a horse car broke on the way down the steep grade of Atlantic Street, at South Ferry. The young woman, crazy with the idea that she must do something—that in action only could safety be found—disregarded all advice, jumped from the car and was killed—killed because she was not wise enough to sit still.

If you are in a street where a mad mob, peaceful or riotous, is rushing onward, step into a doorway or cellarway and keep still till the rush is past. If you are in a theatre, and some fool cries "Fire!" keep still as long as you can in your seat, as there's greater safety. The chances are that the alarm is false, but false or real, the most unwise thing you can do is to add to the numbers of those moving. If you are in a carriage and its horses run away, or in a car that has got beyond control, keep still. Movement only multiplies the dangers that beset you. The waiting game is in nine emergencies out of ten the wining game.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

WORKS OF CHARLES DICKENS. Globe edition. Illustrated from designs by Darley & Gilbert. Bleak House, four Volumes in One. New York: Hurd & Houghton, 459 Broome street, 1867. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

LITTLE DORITT: Four Volumes in One. Globe Edition. New York: Hurd & Houghton, 459 Broome street, 1867. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

THE HERMITAGE, AND OTHER POEMS. By BENJAMIN W. SILL. H. H. Bancroft & Co., San Francisco.

JESSICO'S FIRST PRAYER. By the author of "Fern's Hollow," etc. Boston: Henry Hoyt & Co. San Francisco: C. Beach, No. 32 Montgomery street.

A CRUISE AFTER SANDAL WOOD.

FOR a number of years I had been engaged in running between San Francisco and the different ports in China. I was master and part owner of a fine little bark of about three hundred tons burden. Trade at last becoming rather slack, and the profits small, I held a consultation with my partner as to what was best to be done under the circumstances. Many a plan was proposed, discussed and rejected, but finally it was decided to strike out in altogether a new channel. It was to be a speculation on our part, and an important one, involving as it did every dollar that we both could master.

We were very sanguine as to the ultimate success of our adventure, and, despite the mumbling and doubts of our friends, who did everything in their power to dissuade us, we kept steadily on our course till all the final arrangements were made.

The Pearl was at last ready for sea, with a miscellaneous cargo of highly-colored cloths and calicoes, gandily-trimmed coats, glass beads, hatchets, knives, etc. In the run was stowed, in kegs bound with brass hoops, thirty thousand dollars in specie, with which to make our purchases. I also had a large quantity of goods to be exchanged with the natives for sandal wood and shell.

The Pearl presented an entirely different aspect, when pronounced ready for sea, than when running to the coast of China. Instead of the heavy long-boat, usually carried on deck, and stowed athwart the main hatch, the light but strong and serviceable whale-boats hung from the davits on either quarter. A high rail had been built, along which stanchions for the boarding nettings were placed. Aloft, great alterations had also taken place, and every light sail and kite that I could possibly crowd on to the various stays and yards of the Pearl made quite an addition to her top-hamper and general appearance.

I shipped a crew of blacks, numbering in all seventeen hands, including a boatswain, cook, and a little mulatto boy to wait on the table, and help the cook in his various duties. Two brass swivels were mounted on the poop; and in the cabin, arranged in rosewood racks, were rows of rifles, pistols and cutlasses, and the mizzen-mast was encircled by a number of boarding pikes. The two mates were both fine young men, with whom I had been acquainted for some time, and the voyage promised to be a pleasant one. I had shipped a colored crew, not for any love I had for their dark skins, but because there would naturally be a great deal of boating to do, and white men would soon sink beneath the fatigues and hardships of such a voyage.

I obtained my clearance from the custom-house, bade farewell to my partner and friends, and half an hour afterwards was gliding down the calm waters of the bay, with a gentle breeze, and the officers and crew busy packing on canvas.

As soon as I was clear from the land, I shaped a course for the group of islands known as Solomon's Archipelago, where I was in hopes of driving a brisk trade with the natives, as the whole group abounded in quantities of sandal wood and tortoise-shell, and formed the principal cruising-ground of the sandal wood hunter. The precious wood is brought off by the natives, in sticks of various sizes, than can be easily handled and stowed in the vessel's hold; and for a few yards of cloth, beads, or scraps of old iron, I have often received several tons of wood, which in China I received a handsome price for.

The turtle-shell has to be gathered by the crew, and oft-times it is dangerous as well as exciting sport to land on one of the beautiful desert islands of the South Pacific, where the surf is roaring and tumbling, and it was for this sort of work that I had purchased the two splendid whale-boats which now hung from the davits. Great quantities of the shell are washed upon the beach by the swell, where it remains till picked up by some natives or adventurous boat's crew. It is seldom that a live turtle is caught, unless they come crawling up in the night to deposit their eggs in the sand.

I determined to make my first stopping-place at Hanowah, one of the group of islands. Here the natives were wild and treacherous, and I took every precaution to preserve ourselves from an attack. As soon as I let go anchor, the boarding nettings were triced up, fire-arms loaded, and a watch on deck appointed to keep a guard over the crowd of natives by whom I was surrounded, nearly as soon as the anchor was down.

The canoes that the natives use present a strange appearance to those not acquainted with them. They are very narrow, and would be easily capsized, but for a novel remedy which they make use of. They fasten to one side along the gunwale three arms, each about ten feet long, shaped like a bow, upon which sets a long fore and aft piece, which rests on, and skimms along the water. By means of this contrivance, it is almost impossible to capsize one of them.

A certain number only were allowed on deck at a time, and the trading proceeded rapidly. I remained at the island a week, and, during the time, two chiefs visited me, bringing presents of various kinds of fruit, sandal wood, parrots, etc., while I, in return, gave them each a knife and a string of beads.

My stock of goods was rapidly lowered, and many a good bargain was made. Knives, looking-glasses, iron, tobacco, ect., were disposed of at greatly advantageous terms. For one old regimental coat, covered with tarnished gold lace, I received sandal wood, worth at least one hundred and fifty dollars. Such were the Pacific islands years ago.

As each native got through with trading, he was sent away to make room for others, and in a short time we had a large quantity of the valuable wood on board. The natives looked queerly enough, as they arrayed themselves in the articles purchased from us. Some would have on nothing but a scarlet coat, others a vest, while one in particular made a ludicrous appearance in a cocked hat, with waving plumes, perched on the top of his head, the rest of his body shining like polished ebony in the sun.

From this island, we proceeded to others, which were entirely deserted, and succeeded in finding a considerable quantity of tortoise-shell.

Landing in our whale-boats, which glided safely through the heavy surf, we would wander along the beach, in a short time filling the boats, and then, again, we might search for weeks, without finding scarcely a shell. We lived principally on the delicious fruits which the island abounded. Birds of all kinds existed in great quantities, and the time passed rapidly and pleasantly among these islands, which form by far the pleasantest portion of the globe.

Having exhausted, for the time being, the productions of the group, I sailed for another, where the natives were partially civilized. While on the passage, I noticed that the blacks in the dog-watches continually had their heads together, and many an earnest consultation they appeared to be holding. Whenever I walked forward, the conversation would cease, and I noticed that they eyed me with dark and lowering brows. I could not for the life of me account for this strange alteration in their behavior. They had always, heretofore, been light hearted, careless fellows, happy as the days were long. Whenever a sheet was to be hauled aft, or a yard trimmed, they lightened the work by a song. Now, in place of this, dry, sullen pulls were the order of the day. I questioned the officers closely as to their treatment of the men, and they indignantly denied having spoken crossly to one of them. The food they received was of the best quality, and they had sufficient of it, so of course that could not be the reason; and for hours I puzzled my brain to fathom the cause of their discontent.

Thus for several days did things go on, and, to add to the general discomfort of all on board, a dead calm rested on the waters; not a breath of air stirring, and a long, regular swell made it almost impossible to stand on deck. The boatswain, who was a huge darkie, hailing, I believe, from Baltimore, had of late appeared the foremost in growling, and aiding in spreading a discontented feeling and spirit among the crew. Twice he had given back answers to the second mate, and, as I always invariably supported my officers, right or wrong, I thought it about time to take the matter in hand myself. The magazine containing the powder was directly under my state-room. I never allowed any one to meddle with the contents of the magazine but myself. I loaded three pistols, giving one to each of the officers, and warned them to be well on their guard, for I feared that trouble was brewing.

For three days the calm lasted, the clouds lying around the horizon, without life or motion; but early on the morning of the fourth, they appeared as though endowed with motion, and when the second mate called me, and I took a look around the horizon, a few cat's-paws were ruffling the surface of the water.

"Call all hands, Mr. Brail, to make sail. I will rouse the mate myself."

As the mate appeared on deck, Mr. Brail went forward to hurry up the sluggish and sleeping crew.

"Come, bear a hand, my lads!" he shouted. "Tumble out here, and make sail."

Presently they appeared, grumbling and growling to themselves as they came on deck.

"There, belay that noise there forward, and don't let me hear another word, you black dogs! I'll learn you to be insolent to white men. Bend on to those main-topsail halyards, and hang your weight, every mother's son of you!"

My orders had the desired effect. The yard was nearly up, when the gasket happened to foul around the topsail tie.

"Jump up there, one of you, and clear that gasket!" shouted the second mate.

But not a soul stirred a peg. I saw that a breeze was approaching, in more than one sense of the word, and I grasped the butt of my pistol with a firm hold.

"Do you hear, there?" again shouted Mr. Brail. "Jump up there, I say, and clear that gasket."

"Go and do it yerself. We ain't dogs, to be ordered round by the like of you!" And a low chuckle followed the speech of the boatswain.

With a bound, I leaped in their midst, and, confronting the huge negro, I grasped him by the shirt-collar, and ordered him to go up and clear it himself.

"I'll see you hanged first!" was the reply, as he, by a single movement of his powerful frame, freed himself from my grasp, at the same time drawing his sheath-knife.

"You mutinous scoundrel," and my hand sought my pistol, carefully cocking it, "once more, I say, go up and clear that gasket!"

"I won't!" and he prepared to make a rush at me, knife in hand.

But scarcely did he make a movement, before I drew my pistol and fired full at his head, and the rascal fell at my feet, gasping for breath, in the agonies of death. Once more I turned to the now frightened and trembling crowd of blacks.

"Jump up there, one of you!" And in an instant half a dozen black forms were mounting the rigging.

"Come down, all but one." And, pointing to the dead body of the boatswain, I continued, "Throw that carrion overboard; and don't let me see another black look, nor hear a murmur from one of you, or I will treat you to a dose of the same medicine!" And, turning on my heel, I walked aft.

The officers had no further trouble, and soon after, with all sail set, we continued on our course. Breakfast was announced, and the mate and myself descended to the cabin, to partake of the meal, leaving Mr. Brail in charge of the deck. Taking our accustomed seats at the table, I proceeded to help my first officer to some hash, when I happened to meet the eye of Jack, the yellow boy. On several occasions, I had been pleased with his smartness and agility, and made him several little trifling presents. The boy appeared to take a great fancy to me, and I had told him that if he behaved himself, I would make a man of him.

"Halloo, Jack, what the dence is the matter with you? You are fidgeting around at a great rate, and your eyes are fairly starting out of your head. Come, boy, speak up—what is the matter with you?"

"Oh-o-o! Capen! Massa Capen, the hash is pisened!" And he commenced to cry.

"So, so; that is the game, is it? A fortunate and a narrow escape. Mr. Bruce. This must be looked into. Jack, how do you happen to know that this hash is poisoned?"

"Because, sir," sobbed the boy, "I was sweeping out this ere cabin, when I saw the cook a gwine to the medcum-chist. I asked him what he was a gwine to do, and he told me to shut up, and if I opened my mouth he would kill me. I watched him, and he mixed some white stuff from a bottle in the hash. But I meant to tell ye, Massa Capen. So help me God, I did."

"Very well, Jack; you are a good boy. Now go and tell the cook to come here."

In a few moments that worthy appeared, and, stepping into my state-room, I secreted another pistol in my pocket.

"Cook, your hash is so very nice that I could not resist the temptation of calling you aft for you to help us eat it. Now sit down and eat that plateful."

He looked at me for an instant, and then at the pistol.

"I tank you berry much, capen; but I never partakes of hash—it interferes with my digestin!"

"Eat it, you villain, or I will drive this bullet through your head!"

Tremulous with fear, he fell backward in a fainting-fit. I had him carried on deck, and triced up by his thumbs to the main rigging.

From the boy I learned that a regular plot had been formed to take the vessel, the boatswain and cook being the ring-leaders. All the officers were to have been murdered, and the treasure that was in the run to be divided among all hands, they having found out, through the cook, that a considerable amount was on board. After possession had been obtained, they were going to beach the bark, and take to the boats, representing themselves as shipwrecked whalemen; but the fracas and death of the boatswain had marred their plans. The crew were scarcely to blame; they were led away by the boatswain and cook, and after the whole plot was discovered, they came aft in a body, and promised to do better in future, and begged my pardon, and I had no more trouble with them. I proceeded on my voyage, and finally disposed of my Cargo in China, at an immense profit. I kept the cook on bread and water the rest of the voyage, and heavily ironed. When I dropped anchor in San Francisco, I delivered him over to the proper authorities for punishment.

BE WELL.—Fannie Fern thinks it ought to be considered a disgrace to be sick, confidentially adding: "I am fifty-five, and feel half the time as if I was just made. To be sure, I was born in Maine, where the timber and human race last; but I don't eat pastry, nor candy, nor ice-cream. I don't drink tea—bah! I walk, not ride. I own stout boots, pretty ones, too. I have a water-proof-cloak, and no diamonds. I like a nice bit of beef steak and a glass of ale, and anybody else who wants it may eat pap. I go to bed at 10 and get up at 6. I dash out in the rain, because it feels good on my face. I don't care for my clothes, but I will be well; and after I am buried, I warn you, don't let any fresh air or sunlight down on my coffin, if you don't want me to get up."

THOUGH we travel the world over to find the beautiful, we must carry it with us, or we find it not.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

☞ Use Ellery's Patent India Rubber CEMENT AND PAINT.—It is for all outside surfaces, TIN, IRON, OR METAL ROOFS; Iron however manufactured, Brick and Wooden Buildings, Ship and steamboat Painting; will not rot, peel, blister, or crack. Water-proof coating for cloth roofing on tops of houses, decks of steamboats, tops of stages and cars. Cloth roofs cemented and painted for $9 per 100 square feet. New or old Tin Roofs, in good or bad condition, cemented and painted, guaranted, at $1 to $2 50 per 100 square feet.

EPES & E. H. R. ELLERY,
No. 226 Jackson street.

The Ladies are of one mind in pronouncing BOWMAN'S AMERICAN WASHING COMPOUND the best preparation for washing and cleaning in use. It is acknowledged to be a saving both in money and labor. The Compound softens the dirt, consequently the clothes require not more than one-half the rubbing necessary in washing by the old method; besides all who give it a trial acknowledge that their clothes are made whiter in washing with this Compound, than they were ever known to be by using any other preparation. For washing Woolen Goods and Flannels it cannot be equaled. Calicoes that can be washed with soap, without fading, are washed in the water used for boiling the white clothes. This Compound has been used in the eastern States for the past three years with perfect success. Warranted not to injure the clothes. For sale by all Grocers.

LYNCH & PARSONS, Agents,
Jackson street, near Battery.

Bradley & Rulofson's

MAGNIFICENT ESTABLISHMENT.

Has more room, larger lights, greater facilities, and

PRODUCES FINER PHOTOGRAPHS

Than any other in the City.

F. DIXEY,
Merchant Tailor,

625 WASHINGTON STREET.

Cloths, Cassimeres for Vestings, always on hand and made to order in the most Fashionable Styles.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

GEO. A. PARKER. SAM. B. WATTSON. DAVID CONKLING.

PARKER, WATTSON & CO.,

Importers and Jobbers in

Havana & Domestic Cigars, Tobacco,

ETC.....ETC.....ETC.,

Nos. 306 and 308 Clay street, one door above Front,
SAN FRANCISCO.

BLASTING POWDER.

Price, - - - - $3 00 Per Keg.

ALSO, SPORTING, CANNON, AND MUSKET POWDER, of superior quality.

FUSE AND SHOT always on hand and for sale at the

OFFICE OF THE

CALIFORNIA POWDER WORKS,

No. 318 CALIFORNIA STREET.

JOHN F. LOHSE, Secretary.

SAVE YOUR TEETH.—Do not have them extracted without first consulting a good Dentist. The loss is irreparable, and, in many instances, unnecessary. DR. BEERS, corner of Pine and Kearney streets, makes a specialty of filling the fangs of dead Teeth, and building up broken crowns with Pure Gold—thus restoring them to their original usefulness and beauty.

☞ Call and examine the work. Finest quality of artificial work also manufactured.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

Wholesale & Retail Confectioners,

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the state. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prises. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

PARIS EXPOSITION,
1867.
GLORIOUS NEWS
FOR
THE FLORENCE!

OFFICIAL CATALOGUE JUST RECEIVED, (September 8th) the only copy on this coast—29 days from Loudon. FREE FOR INSPECTION.

THE FLORENCE

RECEIVED THE ONLY PREMIUM awarded to any Sewing Machine (except Button Hole Machine) for sale on the Pacific Coast.

SAMUEL HILL, Agent,
No. 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

D. GHIRARDELLI & CO.'S
Italian Manufactury,

415 and 417 JACKSON ST., SAN FRANCISCO,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PLAIN, SWEET, CINNAMON AND VANILLA CHOCOLATES;
PREPARED COCOA, COCOA PASTE,
CRACKED COCOA, COCOA SHELLS, etc., etc.
PURE GROUND OLD JAVA COFFEE AND COSTA RICA COFFEE;
CHARTRES AND RIO COFFEE;
GREEN COFFEE OF EVERY QUALITY.
CHOICE WINES AND LIQUORS.

N. B.—Ghirardelli's Chocolate is manufactured by steam from Cocoa of the finest quality, imported direct, in excellence and delicacy of flavor, it is superior to any Imported Chocolate.

FREE HOMESTEADS FOR ALL
ON FILING A PETITION.

UNDER THE LAWS OF MEXICO which are now in force in this city, all the inhabitants are entitled to a HOMESTEAD LOT OF LAND, simply on petition. Justice Field has decided, and the Supreme Court of the United States has confirmed that, decision, that the City of San Francisco is a Pueblo of four square leagues of land, and that the citizens thereof are the owners, which vests the right in each citizen to a lot of land for a homestead; and the undersigned have opened an office at 37 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, to enforce those rights, by petition to the Mayor, etc.: and each and every citizen can procure a Free Homestead by calling at their office and signing a petition, which will forthwith vest the right to the lot in question in them, and thereby secure to the petitioner property worth a large sum of money under the existing laws now in force.

BROOKS & MERRITT,
No. 37 New Merchants' Exchange.

N. B.—The Supreme Court of the United States have settled this question in another case, as to the ownership of the Outside Lands. In the case of J. B. Townsend vs. Geo. G. Greeley, December Term, 1866, No. 124, the Court say: "It is, therefore, now the settled law that the municipal lands held by the city of San Francisco, as successors to the former Pueblo existing there, are not held in absolute property, but IN TRUST for its inhabitants."

Therefore, all the inhabitants have to do under this decision, is to ask the city, by petition, for their vested rights, as this is the only way, under the law, that they can proceed to get their property.

E. L. B. BROOKS,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

All legal business transacted in the French and Spanish languages, if desired.

A. PARDINI,

No. 729 WASHINGTON STREET, above the Plaza, San Francisco.

Boots and Shoes Made to Order,

IN THE BEST FRENCH STYLE.

☞ The same, ready made, always on hand.

Carrington's Yeast Powders

ARE THE BEST IN THE MARKET.

Try them if you do not believe it.

I. LANDSBERGER. Sole Agent,
429 Jackson Street.

First Premium

AWARDED BY THE STATE FAIR TO

SILAS SELLECK,

FOR THE BEST PLAIN PHOTOGRAPH.

—ALSO—

SPECIAL PREMIUM

For the Best Cabinet Portraits.

MR. SELLECK is now prepared to execute the very best PHOTOGRAPHS, in all the different styles, at No. 415 Montgomery Street.

N. B.—The best Water Color and India Ink Artist in this city is attached to this Gallery.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
536
In this City,
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be Satisfied the above
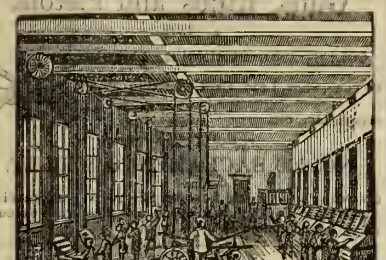
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

STERETT'S PRINTING OFFICE,

No. 532 Clay Street.



Cards, Billheads, Circulars, Books, Briefs, Transcripts, Posters, Bills of Fare Envelopes, Letter and Note Headings, Tickets, Pamphlets, and all Legal Papers printed at short notice, and upon reasonable terms.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Joseph Catania & Co.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FRESH AND SALT

STALL NO. 48 FISH MARKET, Clay Commercial and Leidesdorff Streets.

A large supply of fresh fish always on hand. Shipping, Restaurants, Hotels and Families supplied at short notice, and on the most reasonable terms.

N. B.—Fish sent to any part of the city free.

WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter

Dealer in

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &C., &C.,

735 Market Street.

Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco

Chickering & Sons' Pianos

RECEIVED THE

FIRST PREMIUM,

(Gold Medal,)

At the Paris Exposition.

FURTHERMORE, THE Improvements, Workmanship, and General Superiority of those instruments over all others on exhibition, was so marked an important, the Emperor created Mr. T. E. CHICKERING

KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOR.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

N. GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,

611 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

No Charge for Consultation.

ADOLPH CAMAN, M. D.
HOMŒOPATHIC PHYSICIAN,

ACCOUCHEUR AND SURGEON,

Devotes special attention to the diseases of Women and Children. He takes a professional pride in curing those cases which have baffled the skill of other eminent physicians.

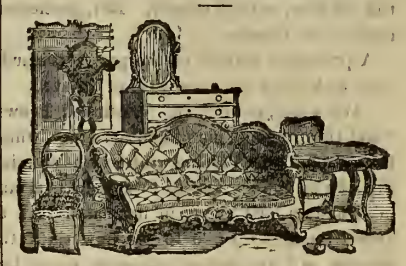
DR. CAMAN would call attention to the beneficial effects of the Homœopathic treatment in all cases of Chronic Diseases, Insanity, Paralysis, all kinds of Spasms, Delirium Tremens, and persons suffering from an unnatural thirst for spirituous liquors.

No. 26 Montgomery Street, opposite the Lick House.

NOTICE.

WE TAKE OCCASION TO INFORM OUR FRIENDS and customers that we have sold our entire stock in warehouse also invoices to arrive to Messrs. N. COLE & CO., 312 and 314 Pine street. The whole forms a most complete and desirable assortment of FURNITURE, and well merits attention before purchasing elsewhere.

J. PIERCE & CO.



FURNITURE.

WE beg leave to call the attention of the public to our warerooms,

Nos. 312 and 314 Pine Street.

Having purchased the entire stock of Messrs. J. Pierce & Co., and in addition to our large invoice from our factory at the East, we are prepared to fill all orders promptly, both wholesale and retail, and call the attention of the public to our salesroom, as containing the most complete assortment of desirable goods on this coast.

N. P. COLE & CO.

ZEITSKA & SHEPPARD,
Merchant Taylors,
NO. 610 CLAY STREET,
Near Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE "GROTTO,"

JOHN DUNCAN. Proprietor.

530 Sacramento street, opposite What Cheer House,
FINE WINES, LIQUORS, ALES AND PORTER,
Wholesale and Retail.
Importer of Wise's Celebrated Irish Whisky.

"OUR OPERA."

CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,

621 WASHINGTON STREET, 621,
SAN FRANCISCO,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

J. CUTBERLET,
CUSTOM
BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

—ALSO—

FRENCH SCREWED BOOTS AND SHOES,

No. 546 Washington Street, near Montgomery Street.

The finest quality of CUSTOM WORK neatly executed. Always on hand other fine work ready made.

JOSEPH FREDERICKS

CARPET AND UPHOLSTERY STORE,
PAPER HANGINGS, ETC.,

123 Kearny St., between Sutter and Post, San Francisco

FAMILIES ARE INVITED TO EXAMINE
OUR VARIED ASSORTMENT

Of the Finest Carpeting in the State. The best of taste displayed in Decoration and the unique Upholstering of Rooms, Halls and Public Buildings, and at prices conforming to the times. Call and examine goods.

Great Reduction

IN PRICES OF

BOOTS AND SHOES.

ON ACCOUNT OF THE WIDENING OF Kearny Street, we are compelled to remove. Before doing so, we will sell at retail our entire stock of boots and shoes at the lowest

WHOLESALE PRICES.

HOLCOMBE & KAST,
Corner Washington and Kearney streets.

F. D. RING,

MANUFACTURER OF

JEWELRY AND SILVER WARE,

No. 540 Market Street, adjoining the Hibernia Bank,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of precious Stones set in the latest style and most approved manner. Watches and Jewelry carefully repaired by experienced workmen.

EXTRAORDINARY FISHING.

"I was once on Lake Winnipisiogee, in the winter, fishing for pickerel," says Brown. "It was awful cold, and the ice was four and a half feet thick. Father was with me, and while I was thrashing my hands to keep 'em warm, I noticed that dad had an allfired hard bite. It was so hard that it jerked the old feller through the hole in the ice, and I thought he was a goner, but just then I remembered that dad was awful fond of rum and tobacco, so I out with a piece of nigger-head, soaks it in rum for a minute, and then baits my hook with the weed, and drops it through the hole what the old gentleman went into, and less than ten minutes, gentlemen, I had a bite, and up I hauls the old man, as fresh as ever. But, gentlemen, he kept the tobacco."

A prolonged whistle on the part of the audience, as though the yarn was not believed.

"It's a fact, gentlemen," continued Brown, "and that reminds me of another story, which I don't mind tellin.' One winter I was crossing the lake on the ice, and, as I was goin' to a raisin', I had an inch augur in my hand. All at once I thought I'd like to see how thick the ice was, so I dropped my carpenter plumb line through the augur hole, and hang me if I didn't have a savage bite afore the lead touched bottom. I pulled up, and landed a seven-pound pickerel."

Another prolonged whistle, and some one asked Brown how a seven-pound fish could get through an augur hole.

"That's somethin' I has nothin' to do with," replied Brown. "All I know is, the fish was caught, and carried home."

DISTILLED WATER.

Mr. Quin, in a report upon the Paris Exhibition, refers to the Wallaroo Mines in South Australia in these words; "Here, perhaps, for the first time in the history of the world, there was a population of some thousands, with all their horses, cattle, sheep, etc., drinking aqua distillara."

A correspondent of the Chemical News, however informs Mr. Quin that in the rainless region of the Pacific coast of South America the entire population of the country, between abont the 18th and 28th parallels of south to north, including the important towns of Caldera, Cobija, Inquique, Pisaga, and several minor ports have for many years derived their supply of potable water from the Pacific, distilled in greater part coal imported from England, and costing above £3 per ton. Not only is a population of many thousand inhabitants principally engaged in the mines in this district, as well as a still larger number of beasts of burden and other animals supplied from this source, but even the locomotive on the Copiapo and Caldera railway, and some steam engines for other purposes, are actnally driven with distilled water. For a distant of thirty to fifty miles inland from the coasts very few natural springs are met with in this rainless desert, and when met with they are seldom sufficiently free from saline matter to be potable.

OUR KITCHEN BATTERIES do more for the comfort and welfare of our people than those furnished with ten-inch guns. A good supply of stoves, ranges, and tinware, particularly Stewart's famous stoves with ten-inch griddle plates if properly used will render a city comfortable and contented and prolong the lives of the inhabitants, while a ten-inch Paixhan gun battery directed against it would fill it with widows and orphans. The man who supplies nations with destructive weapons by many is regarded as an enemy to the human race, while a gentleman like CALEB M. SICKLE, at four hundred and twenty-two Kearny street, who supplies a city with articles that make the operations in its kitchens effective and pleasant, can only be regarded as a public benefactor.—Golden Era.

NOW IS THE TIME—The season of cold weather and storms—when you feel bad—to go to Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, and take one of his Baths, to make you feel good; to cure colds, (the only scientific mode,) coughs, aches, pains, etc.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

Wholesale & Retail Confectioners,

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,

JEWELRY AND ATERIALS.

☞ We have made arraugements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

Removal! Removal!

A. J. PLATE,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

—ALSO—

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS,

Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, etc., etc.

—HAS REMOVED TO—

NO. 510 SACRAMENTO STREET,

Between Sansome and Leidesdorff Streets, San Francisco.
☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

BUCKMAN BROS.,

(Successors to John Myers,)

CAPITOL SALOON,

226 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Opposite the Russ House

Removal.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

Machinist,

Has removed from No. 416 Market street, to No. 10 Stevenson street, next to the corner of First.

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

JOSEPH FREDERICKS

CARPET AND UPHOLSTERY STORE,
PAPER HANGINGS, ETC.,

123 Kearny St., between Sutter and Post, San Francisco

FAMILIES ARE INVITED TO EXAMINE

OUR VARIED ASSORTMENT

Of the Finest Carpeting in the State. The best of taste displayed in Decoration and the unique Upholstering of Rooms, Halls and Public Buildings, and at prices conforming to the times. Call and examine goods.

Great Reduction

IN PRICES OF

BOOTS AND SHOES.

ON ACCOUNT OF THE WIDENING OF Kearny Street, we are compelled to remove. Before doing so, we will sell at retail our entire stock of boots and shoes at the lowest

WHOLESALE PRICES.

HOLCOMBE & KAST,
Corner Washington and Kearney steets.

R. T. HOUSTON,

Merchant Tailor,

No. 414 BUSH STREET,
Between Kearny and Dupont, San Francisco.

Steam Scouring, Cleansing and Repairing neatly executed.

Also—Ladies' Cloth Dresses and Cloaks neatly Cleaned and Pressed, or Mis-Fits altered.

North American Steamship Company

THROUGH TO NEW YORK VIA NICARAGUA.

THROUGH AHEAD OF THE MAIL!

THE NORTH AMERICAN S. S. CO.'S STEAMER

MOSES TAYLOR,

J. H. BLETHEN.....Commander,

Will sail for SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, from MISSION STREET WHARF, at 12 o'clock, M., on

THURSDAY, - - - - - DEC. 5th,

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the Company's new Steamship DAKOTA, 3,000 tons, for NEW YORK.

No expense on the Isthmus—100 lbs. baggage free.
Surgeon on board; medicine and attendance free.
For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, up stairs.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

APOTHECARIES AND CHEMISTS.
Geo S Dickey, Pioneer Apothecary, cor Ellis & Stockton
J H. Cogeshall, N. W. cor Third and Folsom.
Wm. Simpson, 609 Davis st., opposito Oakland Ferry.

ARCHITECTS.
Hoagland & Newsom, s.w. cor Kearny and Sacramento.
McDougall & Marquis, 328 Montgomery street.

ALE, PORTER, AND CIDER.
J. H. Todman & Co., (Johbers,) 511 Front street.

BAKERIES.
Dempsey's Bakery, 127 Fourth street,

BOOTS AND SHOES.
W. H. Hanna, (children's work,) 335 Sutter street.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

BRUSH AND BROOM MANUFACTURERS.
San Francisco Brush Factory, 211 to 217 California st.

CIGARS AND TOBACCO.
J. R. Rines, 154 Second st near Howard.
Lindsey & Clune, Excelsior Store, 156 Stewart street.
M. Rosenshiue, (Wholesale and Retail,) 214 Pacific st.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 608 Montgomery street.

COAL DEALERS.
H. W. Newhauer, all kinds of coal, 121 Sansome street.
S. Klein, formerly Grethood & Co., 209 Sansome street

COACH AND CARRIAGE MATERIALS.
Waterbouae & Lester, (Dealers,) 29 and 31 Battery st.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.
Dell, Crauna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.
Chas. C. Wilson & Co., S. E. corner Clay and Davis sts.
Dorman & Wolf, 426 Davis street.
George Hughes, 410 Davis street.
J. W. Nye & Co., 219 Washington street, corner Cedar.
Thos. Newell, 62 Clay street between Drumm and East.

CONFECTIONERS.
Baldwin & Lawlers, South Park Store 418 Third at.
Ellwood & Ryan, (Fruits, etc.,) 258 Third st.
Mrs. Kain, 617 Mission, near Second.
N. B. Booth & Co., 20 Kearny, near Market.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 645 Clay street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DRY GOODS.
Irving, Landers & Co., No. 4 Third street.
Keane Brothers, 218 Third, bet Howard and Tehama.
M. Waterman, 22 Second street, corner of Stevenson.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Muntgomery street.
S. Mosgrove, 222 Third, bet Howard and Tehama sts.

FAIRBANKS' SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot 120 California street.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Derby & Johnson, northeast cor. Bush and Powell sts.
Flinn & Neall, cor. Third and Tehama.
Fred. Lange, Family Grucer, cor. Powell and Lombard.
Jos. Van Doren, northeast cor. Bush and Mason sts.
Lange & Butt, southwest cor. Bush and Stockton sts.
Seneca Jones, Family Grocer, 105 Third street.
Wellman, Peck & Co., wholesale grocers, 404 Front st.

GUN-SMITHS.
W. Rudolph, Union Gun Store, 216 Pacific street.
Wilson & Evans, 513 Clay street.

H. & L. AXLE-GREASE.
Manufactory 146 Tehama st, and at North Beach.

HAIR DRESSING SALOONS.
Prof. Smith, 114 Market street, opposite Third.

HARDWARE AND CUTLERY.
L. B. Benchley & Co., (American and Foreign,) 3 and 5 Front street.
J. S. Sosaer, 138 Fourth at, bet. Mission and Howard.

HATTERS.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 127 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
Grant & Smith, 26 Murket and 19 Sacramento sts.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.
George Morrow & Co., 21 Clay and 28 Commercial sts.
Wm. H. Nichols, 18 Sacramento, and 17 Commercial.

HOTELS.
Atlantic House, John McManus, 210 and 212 Pacific st.
"Branch," M. O'Neil, 12 Sutter street.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, Droste & Pfefferle, 220 Pacific street.
Empire House, Peter Thompson, 106 Jackson street.
Franklin Hotel, Hugh Curran, cor Sansome & Pacific.
Franklin House, C. Maloney, cor. Br'dway & Sansome.
Golden Gate Hotel, J. Blackmen, 728 Market street.
Mariner's Home, Brown & Chandler, 504 and 506 Davis.
"Oriental," H. Saxtorph & Co., Washington & Drumm.
Sanders' Hotel, J. P. Sanders, 24 Sacramento st.

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER.
Michael English, 414 Pine street.

HARNESS AND SADDLE MANUFACTURERS.
A. B. Bois, 510 Davis street,
D Fennol, 522 Battery street, opposite the Post Office.
H. D. Jameson, Market st opposite Treadwell & Co.

INSURANCE.
Firemen's Fund Ins. cor. California and Sansome.,
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agts. 206 Front, cor. Cal.
North British Mercantile, S. E. cor Sansome & Califor'
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street

LADIES' FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.
S. Summerfield, 20 Second street, and 116 Kearny.
Thomas Collinson, 160 Third, near Howard street.

LIVERY STABLES.
Central Stable, Washburn & Co., 207 and 209 Sutter st.
Gardner & Finch, 211 and 213 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Davis, cor. Mission & Spear sts.

MARBLE WORKERS.
P. Kelly, 12 Fourth street.

MARKETS.
Bennett & Wallace, 151 Third street.
C. Wagner & Co., (Golden Gate Market,) Davis street, corner Clark.
I. Gans, "New York Market," Fourth st, near Market.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd-Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st

MILLINERS.
Miss A. A. Craddock, 4 Virginia Block, Stockton street.

MUSIC TEACHERS.
Prof. J. R. Boullet, Pianist and Vocalist, 1320 Stockton.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibboy, 604, Montgomery street.

PAINT MANUFACTURERS.
Epes & Ellery, dealers in paints, etc, 226 Jackson st.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.
James R. Kelly, 38 California street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
H. Bush, corner Post. Market and Montgomery streets.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
Kohler, Chase & Co., 421 Montgomery street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY, CONTINUED.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

PLUMBERS AND GAS FITTERS.
Chas. Barman, 121 Fourth street, near Minna.

PRINT SELLER AND PUBLISHER.
Thomas H. Lawlor, Second street, near Howard.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, W. Wilson, manager, 640 Market st.
"California Market," Sumner st, next to Cal. Market.
Delmonico's, Young & Maxdell, 45 Second st.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Market, by Hanzo & Besson, 520 Merchant street
The Opera, J. Weiss, 335 Pine street.

SALOONS.
Beck's Saloon, 504 Drumm street, near Pacific.
Blancy & Carroll, "Sample Rooms," 107 Third street.
Carr & McElroy's, opposite San Jose R. R. Depot.
Clement Dixon's Ale Vaults, Nos. 2 & 3, Summer st.
Charley Smith's Saloon, 539 Washington street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Contes & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.
Cleveland's Sample Rooms, 318 Bush, above Montg'y.
"Excelsior," Haase & Co., cor. Drum and Commercial.
Fourth Street Exchange, Chas. F. Slater, 245 Fourth st.
James Gibb, "Cosmopolitan," 617 Merchant street
J. P Lavins' Saloon, northwest cor. Battery & Br'dwy
J. Dillon, "Fourth St. Exchange," cor. Fifth and Mkt.
John B. Holje & Co., 28 Clay street.
King & McCormick, "Rotunda," Market & O'Farrell.
E. H. Murphy's Saloon, cor. Third and Stevenson sts.
Mechanics' Sample Room, C. Diedrichsen, 1st. cor Mrkt
"Munadnock," A. Horstkemper, Drumm & Oregon sts.
Nolan's Exchange, Ball & Racket Court, 732 Howard st.
W. B. Dolan's, 145 Third, corner Hunt street.
Moyer & Quaid's, S. E. corner Market and Fourth sts
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Ring's Saloon, Peter Ring, California st., below Drumm.
Uncle Billy & George, Saloon 707 Davis st.
"Young American," Geo. C. W. Heuer, Stewart & Howard

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Henry Lehnhardt, (dealer in all kinds) 30 cor Tehama

STATIONERS AND BOOKBINDERS.
Jas. E. Damon & Co., 521 and 423 Sansome street.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.
Murphy & Sheldon, (Metal Roofers, etc.) 153 Third st.
Reinzi Hughes, (also Crockery and Glassware) 215 3d.

UMBRELLA AND PARASOL MANUFACTORIES.
C. King & Co., (repairing and fitting) 255 Third st.
John D. Barr, 623 Mission st, near Second.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

WAX FLORIST.
Mrs. M. E. Gerrish, 11 Post street.

WHOLESALE WINE AND LIQUOR DEALERS.
Campbell & Co., 629 Front st., bet Jackson and Pacific.
Henry M. Cutter, Importer, 520 Front street.

WHOLESALE UPHOLSTERERS.
D. N. & E. Walters, 13 Battery street, corner Bush.

WOOD AND COAL YARDS.
Occidental Fuel Depot, Geo. C. Eldridge, 607 Market st

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

C. ROBERTS,

CARRIAGE AND WAGON MAKER,

HORSE

SHOEING

AND

JOBBING

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

Fourth Street, between Howard and Folsom,
San Francisco.

All styles of Carriages, Wagons and Carts made to order and Repaired.

A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

C. MAIN. E. H. WINCHESTER. T. B. HAYES.

Main & Winchester,

Manufacturers and Importers of

Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Collars, Saddlery Ware, etc.

Nos. 214 and 216 Battery Street,
San Francisco.

N. B.—Good assortment Concord Stage Harness constantly on hand.

ADVENTURE WITH A RHINOCEROS.

One fine moonlight night, when snugly ensconced in my "skarm," and contemplating the strange, but picturesque scene before me, my reverie was interrupted by the inharmonious grunting of a black rhinoceros. He was evidently in bad humor, for as he emerged from amongst the trees into more open ground, observed him madly charging anything that he encountered, such as bushes, stones, etc. Even the whitened skulls and skeletons of his own species, lying scattered about on the ground, were attacked with inconceivable fury.

I was much amused at his eccentric pastime; but, owing to the openness of the ground, and the quantity of limestone thereabouts, which made objects more distinct, he was not easy of approach. However, after divesting myself of my shoes and the conspicuous parts of my dress, I managed to crawl—pushing my gun before me—to within a short distance of the snorting beast.

As he was advancing in a direct line toward me I did not like to fire, because one has little chance of killing the rhinoceros while in that position.

Having approached to within a few feet of me, his attention was attracted, and suddenly uttering one of those strange "blowing" noises so peculiar to the beast when alarmed or enraged, he prepared to treat me in similar manner to the stones and skulls he had just so unceremoniously tossed about.

Not a moment was to be lost, and in self-defence I fired at his head. I shall never forget the confusion of the animal on receiving the contents of my gun. Springing nearly perpendicular into the air, he came down again with a thump that seemed to make the earth tremble; then plunging violently forward (in doing which he all but trampled on me,) he ran round the spot for fully five minutes, enveloping every object in a cloud of dust. At last he dashed into the wood, and was hidden from view. Not finding blood on his tracks, I had no reason to suppose he was much hurt.

My notion is, the bullet struck his horn, partially stunning him with its jarring violence. Had my gun missed fire when he charged, it is more than probable I should have been impaled.

PICTURES.—Christmas is coming, and your friends will expect presents. Go to Morse's Gallery, No. 315 Montgomery street, and let him take you in the highest style of the art. He is an accomplished photographer, and very reasonable in his charges. If desired, pictures can be colored by Miss Romanes in the most artistic and natural manner.—Sunday Mercury.

THE SNUG.—"The Snug" has been located one door below Maguire's Opera House, for ten years past. It was established for the convenience of the habituates of the Opera House, and has the reputation of dispensing the best wines and liquors in the city, under the charge of its present proprietor, Mr. Timothy McCarty. Entrances from various parts of the Opera House to the bar have been cut, for the convenience of the public. Mr. McCarty gives his entire attention to his guests, and renders his establishment a "Snug" place by day or night.

BUILDER'S INSURANCE CO.

OFFICE IN THE BUILDING OF THE CALIFORNIA SAVINGS BANK, CALIFORNIA ST., one door from Sansome.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

Builders' Insurance Company,

OFFICE, CALIFORNIA STREET, Nov. 1, 1867.

EDITOR OF THE CALIFORNIAN:—Sir—Permit me to report two months' progress of the BUILDERS' INSURANCE COMPANY.

Total amount received	$44,009 11
Total amount of Losses	22,778 65
Balance in favor of the Company on two months' business	$16,230 56

All which I trust will be satisfactory to my friends, enemies, and the public. Respectfully,

THOMAS MOONEY, PRESIDENT.

Musee des Salons.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street, between California and Pine.

ST. CHARLES RESTAURANT,

At the Hotel of C. Galliand, Nos. 507 and 509 Pine Street, between Kearny and Dupont streets.

BY MME. CAZINTRE.

☞ All who will call at this Restaurant will find an excellent table and prompt attention.

California Coffee and Dining Saloon

Nos. 612 and 614 MONTGOMERY STREET, Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.

J. R. REAGAN, Proprietor.

A Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep much hot en chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

ITALIAN RESTAURANT,

No. 515 Merchant Street,

Between Montgomery and Sansome, San Francisco.

Taglierini, Maccaroni, Risotto and Ravioli, In the Italian Style.

MEALS FIFTY CENTS, OR TO ORDER.

Rooms for private parties up stairs.

MR. GUISEPPE CADENASSO.

LEON DINGEON. F. W. HAUBRICK.

DINGEON & HAUBRICK,

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET.

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties.

NEW RESTAURANT.

MR. SORBIER takes pleasure in informing his friends and customers that he has opened a FIRST-CLASS RESTAURANT under the name of

SORBIER'S RESTAURANT,

at No. 607 SACRAMENTO STREET, above Montgomery, where he will be pleased to see his old friends and the public in general, and where all can be assured that they will be served with the very best the market affords, at most reasonable rates. JOHN E. SORBIER,

Late of the Occidental Restaurant.

F. C. BELDEN,

Of the well-known Family Depot, No. 612 Sacramento street, has opened the

SUMMER STREET RESTAURANT,

at the northeast corner of Spring and Summer Sts.

☞ Meals to order, and by the plate. Wines and Liquors of the best quality.

OCCIDENTAL RESTAURANT,

536 Washington Street, below Montgomery.

GEORGE WITTMAN would inform the public and the former patrons of this

POPULAR RESTAURANT

That he has assumed full charge, and will continue to keep all the delicacies of the season and one of the best lists of WINES, etc., and solicits the continuance of their patronage.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

JOHN WIELAND, Proprietor.

REESE W. GLUYAS. S. E. DUTTON.

GLUYAS & DUTTON,

COUNTING HOUSE STATIONERS,

Fireman's Fund Insurance Company's Building,

No. 227 Sansome Street.....San Francisco.

DICKEY'S

CREME DE LIS

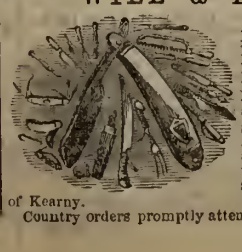
DE CALIFORNIE.

FOR CLEANSING AND PRESERVING THE TEETH Beautifying the Complexion, and removing Freckles, Eruptions, Sunburn, and Tan.

A New Combination, equal to the best French preparations, and free from their poisonous ingredients.

Invented by GEO. S. DICKEY, Chemist, Corner of Market, Stockton, Ellis and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

WILL & FINCK,



EXCELSIOR CUTLERS, LOCK-SMITHS & BELL-HANGERS, Importers and Manufacturers of all kinds of Cutlery. Razors, Shears, and all kinds of Cutlery, ground and repaired—Bell-Hanging and Lock-smithing done in the best manner. 613 Jackson street, fourth door west of Kearny.

Country orders promptly attended to.

COCO-MUNGO SALOON.

J. M. WASHBURN, AGENT.

No. 536 Merchant Street, (Montgomery Block.)

THE BEST OF LIQUORS,

SKILLFULLY CONCOCTED MIXED DRINKS,

AND A FIRST-CLASS HOT LUNCH,

Not inferior to any offered in San Francisco, is furnished daily at the COCO-MUNGO—Clam Chowder, Fish Chowder, Gumbo Soup, Pork Tenderloins, Cape Cod Boned Turkey, Venison, Quail, and all the delicacies of the season, as fast as they are to be found in the market, figure upon the lunch-table of the COCO-MUNGO.

A Reading Room, abundantly supplied with Domestic and Foreign Papers and Periodicals, is one of the features of the COCO-MUNGO.

C. F. HAYWARD,

—DEALER IN—

Harness, Saddles, etc.,

305 BATTERY STREET,

Near Sacramento,

San Francisco.

Architectural Designs

—FURNISHED BY—

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS.

Southwest corner of Sacramento and Kearny Streets, San Francisco.

H. T. GRAVES,

Manfacturor of

WIRE CLOTH, COAL SCREENS, FLOUR SEIVES, QUARTZ SCREENS, for Batteries, Door and Window Screens, for excluding Flies and Mosquitos.

CLOAK, SHAWL, CLOTHING AND BONNET STANDS

Fancy Work for Gardens, and a great variety of

WIRE WORK OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.

Sole Agent for the sale and application of

BROWN'S PATENT AND METALIC WEATHER STRIPS,

For the perfect exclusion of wind, dust, and rain; And for CRAMER'S PATENT WINDOW LIFTING PLATES AND RODS.

Call and examine them at the

CALIFORNIA WIRE WORKS,

412 Clay street, San Francisco.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,

DENTIST,

No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens.

North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.

N. T. WHITCOMB.

Asphaltum for Sale

IN ANY QUANTITY TO SUIT, BY THE

PACIFIC ASPHALTUM COMPANY,

No. 533 Kearny street, corner of Sacramento,

SAN FRANCISCO.

This Asphaltum is the purest to be found in the market, being free from rock and clay, or other impurities.

Sidewalks Laid and Roofing Done at Shortest Notice.

NEUVAL & CO.

MRS. C. COOK,

FIRST PREMIUM HAIR JEWELRY,

519 Montgomery street,

Between Clay and Commercial.....SAN FRANCISCO.

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL	CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS.	CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....	CAPT. W. BROMLEY
" JULIA.....	CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

F. D. RING,

MANUFACTURER OF

JEWELRY AND SILVER WARE,

No. 540 Market Street, adjoining the Hibernia Bank,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of precious Stones set in the latest style and most approved manner. Watches and Jewelry carefully repaired by experienced workmen.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company,

OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

—OFFICE—

S. W. cor. California and Sansome streets.

CAPITAL, $500,000, FULLY PAID IN GOLD COIN.

INSURE MARINE RISKS

Under Open Policies, on Cargoes, Treasure, Freights, Profits, and Commissions.

—ALSO—

ISSUE POLICIES ON TIME, VOYAGE AND HARBOR RISKS ON HULLS.

INSURE AGAINST LOSS BY FIRE

On Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Wares, and other Personal Property.

FIRE, MARINE, HARBOR, AND INLAND TRANSIT RISKS,

On terms as favorable as any other reliable First-Class Company.

Greatest amount taken on any one risk, $50,000. Portione of Risks considered too large, will be re-insured in responsible Companies.

LOSSES PROMPTLY PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!

D. J. STAPLES, President,

CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

HAMBURG, BREMEN, Fire Insurance Company.

CAPITAL, - - - - $1,000,000

MORRIS SPEYER, Agent.

OFFICE—526 Washington Street, a few doors below Montgomery.....San Francisco.

Being no longer governed by the Tariff of the Board of Underwriters, this Company will effect Insurances at as LOW RATES as those of any other responsible Company.

OCCIDENTAL Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, President.

J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.

B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

FIRE INSURANCE.

Manhattan Fire & Marine Insurance

OF NEW YORK.

Incorporated	1821.
Cash capital	$500,000
Surplus	650,000
Total Assets, over	$1,190,000

The above named responsible and well known Company has complied with the law of the State of California, and has deposited $75,000 as additional security for policy holders,

Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, and other property insured against loss or damage by Fire, on the most favorable terms. Also, Insurance on Merchandise, Specie and Freight to or from all parts of the world. Losses promptly adjusted and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., General Agents,

206 Front street, corner of California.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

—OF—

MACCARONI,

VERMICELLI,

PASTE, and

FARINA

First Premium in 1857—1859—1864—1865.

Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co.,

706 SANSOME STREET,

San Francisco.

A STRAY BOY.

A good thing occurred in Oregon, Montgomery county, Ohio, recenlty. The child of Mr. A., a little boy about two or three years old, got out of his yard and wandered away. Of course the family were greatly alarmed, and while the mother visited the neighbors in the search, the father went out on the street, inquiring of everyone he met if they had seen his boy. At length, meeting with G. S. B., who is very fond of a joke, he informed him of his distress, and asked him if he knew of a stray boy anywhere in the neighborhood. B. promptly informed him that a little fellow had just come to Sam F.'s house, a few doors away: and without wating for further information the anxions parent hurried on to F.'s house, and meeting F., he at once inquired if there was a stray boy there. F. said yes.

"Well, I'm sure it must be mine," said A., "for he wandered away a short time ago."

"Well, I don't believe its your's," returned F., "but you can go in and see my wife—she's in bed—and if she consents to your taking the boy away I'll have nothing to say against it."

A. took the hint that the stray boy at F.'s was not the boy who he was hunting, and he went home to find his boy had turned up all right.

A GENIUS IN THE CELLS.—The editor of the Rochester Democrat, having recently visited Auburn prison, is publishing an accounl of what he saw there. He says:

"One of the convicts, more practiced than many of his fellows, and who was looked upon for some time after his incarceration as hardly compos mentis, has invented and made a superior sewing machine, entirely different from any used in the outer world, upon which the prison clothing is made. Near by, a knitting machine of his make is turning out stockings for the prisoners at a rate which made the ladies stare with astonishment as they passed by it. He also made a gun worth $125, and is now at work making locks of his own invention for the new cells. His name is Moody, and he is a nephew of Col. Moody, of Ohio, the celebrated Methodist minister who made such a stir among the rebels during the war. He is confined for grand larceny."

I serenaded Sophia once when she was but a tender lass, and the greeting which I received for my traveling musical convention has never been fully appreciated by me. It was the witching hour of one A. M., when church-yards yawn. Everything was hushed, and stillness reigned profound. I commenced to sing: "I Bring a Little Flower to Thee." Sophia was hanging out of the window, and it was through her solicitation that I endeavored to warble this cussed piece: "I Bring a Little Flower to Thee." Sophia's tyraunical pap stuck his head out of the window, and in a voice of thunder roared: "Well, set it on the door-step, and don't make so much fuss about such a cussed little flower."

NOTICE!

Not Out of Business—Only Removed.

Pioneer Steam Marble Works Com'y

HAVE REMOVED

Their Marble Mantel Warerooms from No. 546 California street to their extensive Steam Factory,

422 and 424 Jackson Street,

Where they keep constantly on band the best and most select stock of

MARBLE MANTELS AND GRATES, HEADSTONES AND MONUMENTS.

Our Steam facilities enable us to sell better work at reduced prices than that manufactured by hand.

422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Between Montgomery and Sansome.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.

The Hat wearing community are invtted to examine the Stock at the above store, and in quality, styte and price,

THEY DEFY COMPETITION!

Their Sock embraces all of the latest "novelties" nnd Standard Styles to be found elsewhere.

"THE" HAT STORE,
647 Washington Street.

SOTOYOME HOTEL,
B. C. WRIGHT, Proprietor, Healdsbur Cal.

Tyler Brothers,

691 Market st., cor. Third,
SAN FRANCISCO,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in SCHOOL BOOKS,
STATIONERY,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PORTFOLIOS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS,
FANCY ARTICLES, Etc.

ESPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we Stamp with Initials
WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS
Engraved, Written or Printed.

JOHN DANIEL,

Marble Works,

421 PINE STREET,

(Between Kearny and Montgomery.)

MANTELS, MONUMENTS, TOMBS, PLUMBERS' SLABS, ETC.,
On hand and manufactured to order.
Orders respectfully solicited.

BOWEN BROS.

GROCERS,
Tea and Wine Merchants,
S. E. cor. Montgo'ry and California,
San Francisco.

Wholesale Store,
204 Front Street.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the Estate of ANTHONY GIFFORD, deceased.

Order to show cause why Order of Sale of Real Estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of Anthony Gifford, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts, expenses and charges of the administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 24th day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a weekly newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 22d, 1867.
T. J. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
nov23-30 dec7-14-21

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the estate of JOHN DE VRIES, deceased.

City and County of San Francisco—ss.

Notice is hereby given that B. B. McAllister, having, on the 20th day of November, 1867, filed in this Court his petition, prnying to be allowed to amend the petition of Charles Ackerman, praying for an order of sale of real estate, filed herein June 12th, 1865, to establish certain facts, which are in brief, to-wit:

That the said real estate was, at the time of filing said petition for the sale thereof, almost wholly unproductive, and produced a monthly rental of eight dollars per month and no more, and for the further particulars, reference is here made to said petition on file in my office; the hearing of the same has been fixed by said Court for MONDAY, the 16th day of December, 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M. of said day, of the December term of 1867, at the Court room thereof, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco; and all persons interested in the said estate, are hereby notified then, and there to appear, and show cause, if any they have, why the said petition should not be granted.

Dated November 20th, 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

E. B. MASTICK & T. B. BISHOP, Esqs., Attorneys for Petitioners. nov23-30 dec7-14

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF H. C. KORF, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of H. C. Korf, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator, at his office and place of transaction of business, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated San Francisco, November 19th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Administrator of the Estate of H. C. Korf, deceased.
nov23-4t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF BENJAMIN OBER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Executrix of the last will of the estate of Benjamin Ober, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executrix, at her place of business, at the law office of Messrs. Clarke & Carpentier, No 606 Washington street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, November 14th, 1867.

JANE E. OBER,
Executrix of the last will of Benjamin Ober, deceased.
H. K. W. CLARKE, Esq., Attorney for Executrix.
nov16-23-30 dec7-14

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street, . Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ANN LEEDOM, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, awarding the care and custody of her daughter Julia to plaintiff, and allowing her to resume her maiden name.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 7th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

[SEAL.] WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.
Geo. W. Tyler, Plaintiff's Attorney. s14-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of WM. D. PALMER, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Samuel L. Palmer, the administrator of the estate of William D. Palmer, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and those persons entitled, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said William D. Palmer, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the ninth day of December, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said William D. Palmer, deceased, and the persons entitled, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said ninth day of December, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 7th, 1867.
A. J. GUNNISON, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
nov9 16 23-30 dec7

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of T. O. HOPKINS, deceased.

All papers and proceedings in the above entitled matter having been transferred to this Court from the Probate Court of Alameda County by reason of the disqualification of the Judge of said Court to act, and among said papers, a petition of A. J. Lowell, Administrator of said estate, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of said estate, that the same has been audited, allowed and confirmed, that all the debts and expenses of administration have been fully paid, that a portion of said estate remains for distribution to the heirs of said deceased, and praying for a distribution to the heirs entitled.

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of the said T. O. Hopkins, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on MONDAY, the 16th day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said T. O. Hopkins, deceased, according to law:

And it is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before said hearing, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 13th, 1867. nov16-23-30 dec7-14

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of WILLIAM LOBB, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brunagim, the Administrator of the Estate of William Lobb, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled.

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said William Lobb, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on WEDNESDAY, the eleventh day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said William Lobb, deceased, according to law:

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said eleventh day of December, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 1st, 1867.
J. T. FINN, Attorney for Petitioner. nov2 5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—IN THE MATTER OF the Estate of EDWARD O'DONNELL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Edward O'Donnell, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said estate of the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, on the southeast corner of Sansome and California streets, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, November 14th, 1867.

CHARLES B. POLHEMUS,
Administrator of the Estate of Edward O'Donnell, deceased. nov16-5w

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

C. ROBERTS,
CARRIAGE AND WAGON MAKER,

HORSE
SHOEING
AND JOBBING

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

Fourth Street, between Howard and Folsom, San Francisco.

All styles of Carriages, Wagons and Carts made to order and Repaired.

A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

C. MAIN. E. H. WINCHESTER. T. R. HATES.

Main & Winchester,

Manufacturers and Importers of
Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Collars, Saddlery Ware, etc.
Nos. 214 and 216 Battery Street, San Francisco.

N.B.—Good assortment Concord Stage Harness constantly on hand.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

—OF—

MACCARONI,
VERMICELLI,
PASTE, and
FARINA

First Premium in 1857—1859—1864—1865.

Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co.,
706 SANSOME STREET,
San Francisco.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,

SANSOME STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE PROOF.

Two Hundred Rooms well Ventilated and Richly Furnished.

Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.

The Exchange Coach, with RED LIGHTS, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel FREE OF CHARGE.

The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully inform the traveling public that the

AMERICAN EXCHANGE

Is now and will continue as it ever has been, the most comfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the city. TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

HORSE JOCKEYING.

The latest equestrian act of which we have heard is recorded of Sam Springalt, a noted horse jockey "Down East," and an eccentric old file who got his bread by making brick. Sam became aware—by that animal magnetism by which dealers in horseflesh always do become aware of such facts—that old Claypit was in want of a horse. So, picking out an animal from his stock, he doctered him up to a fine point of a perfection and drove down to Claypit's brick-yard, just to ask that worthy how much brick it would take for a new stable he thought of building. Of course the conversation finally veered round to horseflesh, and Claypit said, in his drawling way:

"I wouldn't mind buyin' a hoss myself, ef 'twan't I'm so short on't for money jest now."

"That needn't make any difference atween us," said Sam, who knew Claypit to be a sterling old Methodist, whose word was as good as his bond.

"You can pay me along in the Fall, when you burn your last kiln and get ready to settle up."

"That would be a little easier for me," said Claypit, "but then I never gin a note, an' I ain't going to begin now."

"No need of that," said the wily jockey; "you can just write a little agreement to pay me when you burn your last kiln—that'll do just as well."

Claypit finally agreed to these terms, and the horse dealer, depositing the agreement in his pocket-book, drove the horse over to Claypit's stable. In a few days Claypit discovered some points in his purchase that did not add much to its value, and in a week the valuable animal was ignominiously turned out to pasture. The old man made no sign, however, and Sam kept pretty well out of his way until the season of brick-making had passed, then he drove up to Claypit's house, and, rushing in hurriedly, said:

"Mr. C., I'll be obliged if you'll hand me the money for that hoss; I've got a little sum to make out this morning."

"Yass," said old Claypit, slowly, "two hundred dollars, aint it?"

"Exactly," said the jockey, opening his pocket-book and taking out the agreement.

"Guess you're in a hurry, aint yer? 'Pears to me that money aint due jest yet," said the old man, calmly.

"Due? why, of course it is. Here's where you agreed to pay when you'd burned your last kiln, and you've knocked off work more'n a week ago."

"Jess so, jess so," said the old man. "You're a pretty smart feller, Sam, but ef you'll jess throw your eye on that ar paper again, you'll see I agreed to pay for that hoss when I'd burned my last kiln of brick. I ain't going out o' the business jest yet, Samuel, and I'm afraid you'll have to apply to my executors to pay for that hoss."

Sam don't consider his prospects very good for collecting that note, and swears he'd rather trade with the devil than a Methodist deacon.

G. E. T. GLOVE COMPANY,

FACTORY, 526 MERCHANT STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome,

Manufacture all kinds of OIL DRESSED AND INDIAN TANNED GLOVES for Gentlemen, Drivers, Teamsters, Miners and Lumbermen. Also, BUCKSKIN MITTENS, GOLD BAGS, PURSES, etc., in endless variety, and all sewed by hand. All work warranted. The Trade supplied. We warrant one pair of our manufacture to outlast two pairs of Eastern manufacture.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT,

Wholesale Candy Manufacturers,

No. 408 CLAY STREET,

Between Sansome and Battery Sts., San Francisco.

FANCY AND COMMON CANDIES

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Sugar Toys, Figures, Animals, Birds, etc.

Are prepared to receive orders to any extent and in any desired style.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT.

Dr. John T. Crook,

Late of the Pacific Mail service, has established himself in the practice of his profession in this city.

—OFFICE:—

S. W. corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets.

OFFICE HOURS—9 to 10 A. M.; 2 P. M.; 4 to 6 P. M.

AYER'S PILLS

ARE PARTICULARLY ADAPTED to derangements of the Digestive Apparatus, and diseases arising from Impurity of the Blood. A large part of all the complaints that afflict mankind originate in one of these, and consequently these PILLS are found to cure many varieties of Disease. They are sugar-coated, and hence may be taken readily by the most sensitive and delicate persons.

Subjoined are the statements from some eminent physicians, of their effects in their practice:

AS A FAMILY PHYSIC.

From Dr. E. W. Cartwright, of New Orleans—Your Pills are the prince of purges. Their excellent qualities surpass any cathartic we possess. They are mild, but very certain and effectual in their action on the bowels, which makes them invaluable to us in the daily treatment of disease.

FOR JAUNDICE AND ALL LIVER COMPLAINTS.

From Dr. Theodore Bell, of New York City—Not only are your Pills admirably adapted to their purpose as an aperient, but I find their beneficial effects upon the Liver very marked indeed. They have in my practice proved more effectual for the cure of Bilious Complaints than any one remedy I can mention. I sincerely rejoice that we have at length a purgative which is worthy the confidence of the profession and the people.

DYSPEPSIA—INDIGESTION.

From Dr. Henry J. Knox, of St. Louis—The Pills you were kind enough to send me have been all used in my practice, and have satisfied me that they are truly an extraordinary medicine. So peculiarly are they adapted to the diseases of the human system, that they seem to work upon them alone. I have cured some cases of Dyspepsia and Indigestion with them, which had resisted the other remedies we commonly use, indeed I have experimentally found them to be effectual in almost all the complaints for which you recommend them.

FOR HEADACHE—SICK HEADACHE—FOUL STOMACH—PILES—DROPSY—PLETHORA—PARALYSIS—FITS—DYSENTERY—DIARRHŒA—RELAXATION, Etc., Etc.

From Dr. Edward Boyd, Baltimore—Dear Dr. Ayer: I cannot answer you what complaints I have cured with your Pills better than to say all that we ever treat with a purgative medicine. I place great dependence on an effectual cathartic in my daily contest with disease, and believe as I do that your Pills afford us the best we have, I of course value them highly.

☞ Most of the Pills in market contain mercury, which although a valuable remedy in skillful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the dreadful consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substances whatever.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine everywhere.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco.
Wholesale Agents.

$100 00

SAVED in a very Short Time by using

STANDARD SOAP CO.'S

WASHING POWDER.

TRY IT!

Does Not Injure the Clothes. Sold Everywhere.

Belden's Family Depot for Domestic Luxuries.

At this depot are, all should know,
For him who strong or faint is,
Superior grub—for home or club—
And every kind of dainties.
Westphalia hams, fresh oysters, clams,
Constituents of chowder,
Fine breakfast tea, and hominy,
And genuine curry powder.
Oil, mustard, wine, both French and Rhine,
Lard, coffee, ketchup, capers.
Crushed sugar, peas, and Switzer cheese,
And sperm and waxen tapers.
The giblets, pluck, of goose and duck,
Of woodcock, snipe and plovers,
Of partridge, too, and cockatoo—
The last express for lovers!
It seems absurb there scarce a bird—
My rhyme this somewhat ruffles—
But Belden's got in tin or pot,
The LIVER of with TRUFFLES.
Prunes, raisins, rice, preserves and spice,
Gin, whisky, rum and brandy,
Drinks made of malt, and table salt,
Tongues, sausages, and candy.
Above's not all to which I'd call
Particular attention.
Le'vin d'elite, Chatean Lafitte,
And others, I would mention.
Surpassing fine Madeira wine,
St. Julien, port and sherry,
Chateaux Margaux and Veuve Clicquot,
Old apple jack and cherry.
La Rose, Chablis, and Burgundy
Both white, and red and sightly,
Prime Hermitage of ripe old age,
Still, sparkling too and sprightly.
Sauterne, medoc, still sparkling hock,
Johannesberg, Hockheimer,
Then airs and dames (these German names
Would craze an English rhymer!)
Just come and buy, and cease to sigh
For Egypt and its fleshpots;
Ne'er better fare did Pharoh share,
Or any other despots.

ET CETERA

No. 652 Sacramento Street.

R. T. HOUSTON,

Merchant Tailor,

No. 414 BUSH STREET,

Between Kearny and Dupont, San Francisco.

Steam Scouring, Cleansing and Repairing neatly executed.

Also—Ladies' Cloth Dresses and Cloaks neatly Cleaned and Pressed, or Mis-Fits altered.

IRON SHUTTER WORKS,

Established 1849.

John Upstone,

MANUFACTURER OF FIRE-PROOF

Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Balconies, Gratings, Prison Cells, Awnings, Stairs, Iron Fence, etc.,

Corner of California and Drumm Streets, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

Pioneer Iron Shutter Works,

ESTABLISHED 1849.

CALVIN NUTTING,

Manufacturer of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS & SHUTTERS,

STEEL LINED BANK VAULTS,

Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc.

123 Bush street, between Sansome and Battery, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

Pioneer Iron Works,

CORNER OF MARKET AND FREMONT STREETS, San Francisco.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT

Manufacturers of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS, SHUTTERS, BANK VAULTS, PRISON CELLS, BALCONIES, GRATINGS, IRON FENCE, STAIRS, Etc.

BURGLAR PROOF BANK VAULT LOCKS

Constantly on had, a large assortment of Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

BAURHYTE & McAFEE,

Steam Boiler and Sheet Iron WORKS.

Owned and conducted by Practical Boiler Makers.

HIGH AND LOW-PRESSURE BOILERS, STATIONARY AND MARINE.

Howard street, bet. Fremont and Beale, San Francisco.

Having had twenty-two years experience in this business, we feel confident of being able to compete—as to quality of work—with any establishment on the Pacific Coast.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work o all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

MADISON & BURKE'S

REGULAR WEEKLY LIST

OF REAL ESTATE FOR SALE,

SINCE LAST REGULAR ADVERTISEMENT.

We have better opportunities to sell Real Estate than any other office in the city; dealing with so many tenants and landlords, and being so well known throughout the country, we frequently make sales where they would not otherwise have been made. Parties purchasing will find it to their advantage to call, and examine our list, for we have property of all descriptions, and all prices, in various parts of the city. We only desire to make a fair commission, and DEAL ON THE SQUARE with both Seller and Buyer.

HOUSES TO LET.

In all parts of the city, and at all prices, from five dollars a month upwards. Especial attention paid to this branch of our business. Ladies will receive every information. Landlords cannot but see the advantage of placing houses in our charge, as so many persons visit our office for the purpose of getting houses. Besides we have a very large number of tenants, who visit our office to pay rent and then see our list of houses.

RENTS COLLECTED. Large and small. Bad paying and destructive tenants made to move in short time, which is well known to this class of tenants.

MADISON & BURKE,

316 Montgomery street, Between Pine and California.

J. H. MADISON, Late Hoags & Madison. MARTIN J. BURKE, Late Chief of Police.

OFFICE OF CITY LETTER DELIVERY COMPANY.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

AN FRANCISCO

PRIVATE MEDICAL AID.

QUICK CURES AND MODERATE CHARGES.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY,

PRIVATE MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE,

Sacramento Street, below Montgomery, Opposite Pacific Mail Steamship Co's Office, Private Entrance on Leidesdorff Street, San Francisco.

Established expressly to afford the afflicted sound and scientific Medical Aid, in the treatment and cure of all Private and Chronic Diseases, cases of Secrecy, and all Sexual Disorders.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY returns his sincere thanks to his numerous patients for their patronage and would take this opportunity to remind them that he continues to consult at his Institute for the cure of chronic diseases of the Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Digestive and Genito-Urinary Organs, and all Private Diseases, viz: Syphilis in all its forms and stages, Seminal Weakness, and all the horrid consequences of Self-Abuse, Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Nocturnal and Diurnal Emissions, Sexual Debility, Diseases of the Back and Loins, Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, etc.; and he hopes that his long experience and successful practice will continue to insure him a share of public patronage. By his practice of many years in Europe and the United States, he is enabled to apply the most efficient and successful remedies against diseases of all kinds. He uses no mercury, charges moderate, treats his patients in a correct and honorable way, and has references of unquestionable veracity from men of known respectability and high standing in society. All parties consulting him, by letter or otherwise, will receive the best and gentlest treatment, and implicit secrecy.

TO FEMALES.

When a female is in trouble, or afflicted with disease, as weakness of the back and limbs, pain in the head, dimness of sight, loss of muscular power, palpitation of the heart, irritability, nervousness, extreme urinary difficulties, derangement of digestive function, general debility, vaginitis, all disease of the womb, hysteria, sterility, and all other diseases peculiar to females, she should go or write at once to the celebrated female doctor, W. K. DOHERTY, at his Medical Institute, and consult him about her troubles and disease. Irregularities, suppressions, etc., will receive the Doctor's most particular attention. Let no false delicacy prevent, but apply immediately and save yourself from painful suffering and premature death. Ladies whose delicate health or other circumstances prevent an increase in their families, should write or call at DR. DOHERTY'S MEDICAL INSTITUTE, and they will receive every possible relief and help. The Doctor's offices, consisting of a suite of six rooms, are so arranged that he can be consulted without fear of observation.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Patients (male or female) residing in any part of the State, however distant, who may desire the opinion and advice of DR. W. K. DOHERTY on their respective cases, and who think proper to submit a written statement of such, in preference to holding a personal interview, are respectfully assured that their communications will be held most sacred. Dr. Doherty takes this opportunity of observing that all letters are only opened and replied to by himself, and the latter as promptly as possible.

If the case be fully and candidly described, personal communication will be unnecessary, as instructions for diet, regimen, and the general treatment of the case itself, (including the remedies) will be forwarded without delay, and in such a manner as to convey no idea of the purport of the letter or parcel so transmitted.

Consultation, by letter or otherwise, FREE. Permanent cure guaranteed, or no pay. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D.
San Francisco, Cal

SPERMATORRHŒA.

DR. DOHERTY has just published an important pamphlet embodying his own views and experiences in relation to Impotence or Virility, being a short treatise on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, Nervous and Physical Debility consequent on this affection, and other diseases of the Sexual Organs.

This little work contains information of the utmost value to all whether married or single, and will be sent FREE by mail on receipt of Six Cents in Postage stamps for return postage. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D., San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

STEAMSHIPS FOR

NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Brannan-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 18th or 19th is expected to connect with the French Transatlantic Co.'s steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th is expected to connect with English steamer for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America. Through tickets can be obtained.

STEAMERS FOR NOVEMBER.

Nov. 9—CONSTITUTION, Capt. J. M. Caverly, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.

Nov. 18—MONTANA, Capt. E. T. Farnsworth, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Conner.

Nov. 30—GOLDEN CITY, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with ARIZONA, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained of P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamship GREAT REPUBLIC, Capt. S. Doane, will be dispatched on December 4th, from wharf, corner of First and Brannan streets, for YOKOHAMA and HONGKONG; connecting at Yokohama with the steamer COSTA RICA, for SHANGHAI.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

T. B. RODGERS,

CUTLER,

108 Leidesdorff street.

Corner California, adjoining the Pacific Insurance Office, San Francisco.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor.
CARS. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES,.....Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

MR. JOHN McCULLOUGH,
MISS HELEN TRACY,
MRS. SOPHIE EDWIN,
AND THE STAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

Matinee to-day,
NOBODY'S DAUGHTER.

This Evening,.....Novamber 30th,
The dramatization of Miss Braddon's Novel,
NOBODY'S DAUGHTER.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:
Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra.....$1 00
Parquette..... 50 | Upper Circle..... 25

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

Lessees and Managers,
MESSRS. EDWARDS, BATES & VINSON.

Matinee to-day,
UNDER THE GAS LIGHT.

SATURDAY, - - - NOVEMBER 30th,
CHARLES WHEATLEIGH,
In Augustin Daly's great domestic dramatic picture, in five acts, entitled
UNDER THE GASLIGHT:
OR, A TALE OF LOVE AND LIFE IN THESE TIMES
Snorkey, (a New York Messenger).....Chas. Wheatleigh
Ray Trafford, (a New "Blood,".....Henry Edwards
Counsellor Splinter.....Mr. J. H Vinson
Byke, (followed by the police,).....Mr. A Fitzgerald
Peachblossom.....Mrs. C. R. Saunders
Pearl Courtland.....Miss Julia Corcoran
The Popular Favorite,
MRS. F. M. BATES,
Will sustain the character of Rose Courtland.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.
Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats.....One Dollar
Parquet 50 cts | Gallery 25 cts
Doors open at 7 o'clock; to commence at 8.
Box Office open from 10 to 3 o'clock.

Leslie, Raynor & Smith's Minstrels.

Congress Hall, No. 320 Bush Street,

Between Montgomery and Kearny.

Immense Success of the Grand Combination
NEW MINSTREL TROUPE!
Endorsed by the presence of thousands of our First Families.

To-day.....at 2 o'clock,
A GRAND MINSTREL MATINEE.

To-Night the Wonderful Optical Illusion,
THE GHOST!
Vast Audiences Spell Bound and Mystified by the Powerful Effect Produced!
GREAT SENSATION!

A Cloak Room, with Competent Attendants, for Ladies and Children. No Fees or Gratuities to be given to Attendants.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:
Orchestra Chairs and Dress Circle.....75 Cents
a rquet.....50 cents | Upper Circle.....25 cents
Box Office open from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M., where Seats be secured without extra charge.

NOTICE!

Not Out of Business—Only Removed.

Pioneer Steam Marble Works Com'y

HAVE REMOVED

Their Marble Mantel Warerooms from No. 546 California street to their extensive Steam Factory,

422 and 424 Jackson Street,

Where they keep constantly on hand the best and most select stock of
MARBLE MANTELS AND GRATES, HEADSTONES AND MONUMENTS.
Our Steam facilities enable us to sell better work at reduced prices than that manufactured by hand.
422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Between Montgomery and Sansome.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,

SANSOME STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE PROOF.

Two Hundred Rooms well Ventilated and Richly Furnished.

Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.

The Exchange Coach, with Red Lights, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel FREE OF CHARGE.
The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully inform the traveling public that the
AMERICAN EXCHANGE
Is now and will continue as it ever has been, the most comfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the city. TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

G. E. T. GLOVE COMPANY,

FACTORY, 526 MERCHANT STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome,

Manufactnre all kinds of OIL DRESSED AND INDIAN TANNED GLOVES for Gentlemen, Drivers, Teamsters, Miners and Lumbermen. Also, BUCKSKIN MITTENS, GOLD BAGS, PURSES, etc., in endless variety, and all sewed by hand. All work warranted. The Trade supplied. We warrant one pair of our manufacture to outlast two pairs of Eastern manufacture,

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

LIST OF PUBLICATIONS,

1867.

Poems. By Charles Warren Stoddard. "They evince the possession of a fresh and delicate fancy, a nice ear for melody, unaffected love for nature, and a pure purpose."—Bulletin. An elegant 8vo. Illustrated. $3 00.

Outcroppings; Gems from California Poets. A beautiful small quarto; gilt, $1 00.

Confucius and the Chinese Classics; or, Readings in Chinese Literature. Edited and compiled by Rev. A. W. Loomis. The first book printed from stereotype plates in California. "One of the most entertaining volumes issued from the American press for many a day."—Territorial Enterprise. A handsome 12mo. 2 00

Chinese and English Phrase Book; With the Chinese pronunciation indicated in English, Specially adapted for the use of merchants and families. By Benot Lancot. Second edition revised and enlarged. "A Roman & Co. have hit the nail on the head in the publication of this book."—Christian Advocate. 1 00.

In Bonds: A Novel. By Laura Preston. "A novel of more than ordinary elevation of purpose, carefully and effectively wrought out."—Pacific. A triumph in the authorship, and in the printing and publishing line." Times Paper, 1 25 Cloth, 1 75.

Leah's Confessions. An Autobiography. "The Author's pen is fine and powerful. The moral of the novel is, on the whole, good and wholesome." Pacific. A handsome 8vo in paper, 75.

Carrie Carlton's Popular Letter-Writer. "The author has laid the public under a real obligation in this happily concieved and cleaverly-executed manual.—Bulletin. "The Chronicles of Bellear' make a good story, and the love letters and other correspondence therein given are quite natural and appropriate."—Sacramento Union. 16mo. 75.

The Resources of California. By John S. Hittell. A California Prize Book, exclusively Californian in composition and manufacture. A large 12mo. 2 25.

A Youth's History of California, By Lucia Norman. A popular History for all classes of readers, young and old. "The book is a highly meritorious and interesting one."—Round Table. A pretty 12mo. 1 00.

Route to California by the Isthmus of Panáma. A useful and interesting book to every traveler. 50.

Nevada and California Processes of Silver and Gold Extraction. By Guido Kustell. The best practical work on the subject. 8vo., cloth, 5 00.

The Elements of Composition. By Prof. Aug. Layres. 12mo. cloth, 1 00.

Belles Lettres. By Prof. Layres. Second book of the series. "The writer, the lawyer, the minister or the statesman may study these rules and regulations with profit."—Bulletin. 12mo, cloth, 1 00.

The Greek Slave. A story by Ianthe. "A touching tale of Greek suffering under Moslem rule."—Alta. In paper, 75 cents; cloth, 1 00.

Instructions in Gymnastics. By Arthur and Charles Nabl With numerous plates. Quarto, 2 50.

May Wentworth's Fairy Tales from Gold Lands. The scenes of most of these Tales are laid in California, introducing Emperor Norton and other local characters. A handsome 16mo. Illustrated, 1 00.

Legal Titles to Mining Claims and Water Rights in California. By Gregory Yale, (counselor at Law. "The first through discussion of the subject of mining property in the United States, and one much needed."—Sacramento Union. 8vo, sheep, 7 50.

Our publications are for sale by book sellers generally, and sent, post paid, on receipt of price by the publishers. Address, A. ROMAN & CO.,
San Francisco.

M. S. WHITING. F. G. BERRY.

WHITING & BERRY,

DEALERS IN TEAS, WINES
AND SPIRITS,
FOR MEDICINAL
and FAMILY USE.

Apothecaries, Physicians, Invalids and Families supplied, in quantities to suit, Wholesale or Retail, with FINE,
MEDIUM,
or LOW PRICED QUALITIES.
609 Sacramento st., second door above Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.

BIERSTADT'S PAINTING,

'CROSSING THE PLAINS'

NOW ON EXHIBITION AT

209 Montgomery Street.

Admission,.....25 cents.
Season Tickets, $1 00.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.

The Hat wearing community are invited to examine the Stock at the above store, and in quality, style and price,
THEY DEFY COMPETITION!
Their Stock embraces all of the latest "novelties" and Standard Styles to be found elsewhere.
"THE" HAT STORE,
647 Washington Street.

Musée des Salons.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

BOYS'

Pioneer Clothing Store,

CLOSING BUSINESS!!

CLOSING BUSINESS!!!

We offer the entire stock at the following reduced prices:

	Regular Prices.	Present Prices.
Boys' French Cass. Basket Pants	$6 00	$4 00
Boys' Velvet Cass. Ext. Sup. Pants	8 00	5 00
Boys' Cadet Union Suits	8 00	5 00
Boys' Union Sack Overcoats	8 00	5 00
Boys' Petersham Overcoats	14 00	10 00
Boys' Bl'k Castor Beaver Overcoats	16 00	12 00
Boys' Bl'k Esquimaux Beaver Overcoats	18 00	13 00
Boys' French Cloth Frock Coats	18 00	12 00
Boys' Esqtimaux Bever Suits	15 00	12 00
Boys' Fine Esquimaux Beyer Suits	26 00	18 00
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants	2 50	1 50
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants, ex. Fine	3 00	2 25
Youths' CaSsimere Knee Pants, embr'd	4 00	3 00
Youths' Gatibaldi Fancy Suits	7 00	5 00
Youths' Garibaldi Extra Fine Suits	8 00	6 00
Youths' Embroidered Cloth Suits	10 00	5 00
Youths' Black Beaver Suits	10 00	6 00
Youths' Pilot Cloth Overcoats	10 00	7 00
Youths' Chinchilla Overcoats	10 50	8 00
Youths' Union Sack Overcosts	8 00	6 00
Youths' Black Castor Beaver Overcoats	12 00	9 00
Youths' Heavy Black Beaver Garricks	10 00	8 00
Youths' Black Cloth Overcoat (sleeves)	11 00	8 50

500 Men's Esquimaux and Castor Beaver Overcoats,

Forty per cent. less than any other store on this Coast.

100 dozen Men's Star Shirts, $1 50

Astonishing low figures.

Remember, our goods are all Custom-made, from our Broadway store in New York, thirteen years' standing. Everybody must know our goods. Retiring from business, the goods must be sold. Call at LOCKWOOD & CO'S, and examine the great reduction in prices.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
621 Clay Street.

AVERY'S

GREAT

NATIONAL PUMP

AND WELL.

This Pump has proved itself to be the greatest invention of the age. Designed for DEEP WELLS, it will RAISE WATER (500) FIVE HUNDRED FEET; can sink a well 30 to 40 feet in (60) sixty minues.

This Pump is specially adapted to the wants of BREWERS and DISTILLELS, on account of the facilty with which, by its use, casks in the upper stories of their warehouses can be filled from the vats below.

STATE, COUNTY, & TOWN RIGHTS FOR SALE.

Pumps Furnished at Moderate Prices, by

S. P. ROBERTS,
Agent for California and Nevada,
Cars FARNSWORTH & MILNE, Plumbers,
318 Pine street, San Francisco.

Removal.

JOHN G. HODGE & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale Stationers,

Hsvs Removed to
329 and 331 Sansome Street,
Southwest corner of Sacramento.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN
Hay, Grain, and Feed of all kinds.
Hucks & Lambert's Patent AXLE GREASE.
21 Clay street and 28 Commercial street, between Drumm and East, San Francisco.

Turnbull & Smith,
PRINTERS,
522 CLAY ST.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Good Work!—One Price!—Punctuality!

D. BRUCE,

PRINTER,

COMMERCIAL STREET OPPOSITE MINERS' RESTAURANT.

Life Insurance---The Money Drift.

EDITORS CALIFORNIAN—Sirs: I read in yonr issue of the 11th, a very important statistical paper, compiled hy you from the Federal revenne returns, which proves the astounding fact thnt the distant Life Insurance Companies plying in California through "Agents" draw away nearly a milliou dollars per annni.

The drain under this heud as you state it amonnts to:

Year ending 1st August, 1866.....$496,239
Year ending 1st August, 1867.....$877,264

And as we write the drain increases and must be now near a million a year—to be a million and a half next year and so on.

Aud you naturally ask with surprise why this matter bas not been taken in hand by some of our enterprising insurance men, so as to arrest the flight of a moiety at least of this enormons drain?

I think, sirs, your question is well put, and though my hands are full, I am yet willing to step forward and assume some of the responsibility and bear some of the preliminary expenses of forming such a Company.

When you reflect sirs that this million dollars a year is carried over land and sea, thousand upon thousand of miles, to places where it is lent ont by distant Maungers and Directors to their manufacturing and commercial friends arouud them, at Five Per Cent. per annum, while our merchants and manufacturers, who are to compete with these have to pay Fifteen Per Cent. per annum for money, [we supply them with the golden weapons to beat us] you will then conceive the magnitude of the injuries effected by the sapping and mining operations of those distant Insurance Companies. The money which must drain away, day by day, steamer after steamer, from our people, will, if not stopped, impoverish this country quite as much as if it were conquered by a foreign power and held in perpetual tribute. A million a year by compound interest will be ten millions in five years, twenty millions in ten years, forty millions in fifteen years, eighty millions in twenty years, one hundred and sixty millions in twenty-five years, three hundred and twenty millions in thirty years! I will admit that the ordinary percentage of deaths on a business of thirty years will effect a drawback of one-third of the income, which in thirty years we will put at one hundred millions. Notwithstanding this, if we go on at our present scale of draining, we shall in thirty years lose by the insurance operation two hundred millions of dollars! But our drain, if we don't stop it, will not stand at one million a year, it will increase year after year from one million a year to two millions a year, which by my foregoing computation would in thirty years foot up to FOUR HUNDRED MILLIONS! What it would amount to in sixty years I leave to other calculators. In round numbers, I should guess it would come to the fall number of dollars equalling the national debt of the United States.

Now, sirs, I care not what may be said of me by critics or jealous opponents, some of whom cannot see farther than their noses. I announce myself as ready to make an effort to stop this drain, and I hold every man who cooperates with me a benefactor to his adopted country.

Let the capital of a Local Life and Health Insurance Company be one hundred thousand dollars to begin, in shares of one hundred dollars each. I shall cheerfully take the name of cooperators in a book opened this day in the office of the California Building and Savings Bank, California street, for that purpose.

I remain your obedient servant,
THOMAS MOONEY.
Buildings and Savings Bank, California street.
November 12th, 1867.

Removal.

WILLIAM SHERMAN & CO.,

Have this day Removed their Stock of

Clothing & Men's Furnishing Goods,

From Sansome Street to
608 Montgomery street,
(East Side,) North of Clay.
San Francisco, November 22, 1867.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VII., No. 29.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 7, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

Dickens' Novels; George Washington Moon as an Epic Poet; Female Suffrage, by A. G. B. Literary Gleanings: Gossip about Publishers; Clerical Bitterness; Miscellanea. Lion's Mouth: Wicked Mark Twain; An Ill-used Fenian; A Sneer at San Francisco; Patriotic Drinks, etc. Dramatic Affairs, by Touchstone. On the War Path; Around Corners; Recollections of the War—Incidents at Cedar Creek; Advertising Adventures; Interesting Correspondence, by John Quill; The New Comers at Clapp's Corner; A Texas Duel—An Episode in the History of Texas. Poetry: A Dream, by Florence Percy; Morning by the River; If You Want a Kiss, Take It. Paragraphs, etc.

A DREAM.

BY FLORENCE PERCY.

Back again, darling? O, day of delight!
How have I longed for you, morning and night;
Watched for you, pined for you, all the days through,
Craving no boon and no blessing but you;
Plead for you, prayed for you, sought you in vain,
Striving forever to find you again;
Counting all anguish as naught, if I might
Clasp you again as I clasp you to-night!

O, I have sorrowed and suffered so much
Since I last answered your lips' loving touch!
Through the night-watches, in daylight's broad beams,
Anguished by visions and tortured by dreams,—
Dreams so replete with bewildering pain,
Still it is throbbing in heart and in brain,—
O, for I dreamed—keep me close to your side,
Darling, O darling—I dreamed you had died!

Dreamed that I stood by your pillow, and heard
From your pale lips love's half-uttered word;
And by the light of the May morning skies,
Watched your face whiten, and saw your dear eyes
Gazing far into the wonderful Land,—
Felt your fond fingers grow cold in my hand:
"Darling," you whispered; "My darling!" you said,
Faintly, so faintly, and then you were dead!

O, the dark hours when I knelt by your grave,
Calling upon you to love and to save;
Pleading in vain for a sign or a word,
Only to tell me you listened and heard;
Only to say you remembered and knew
How all my soul was in anguish for you;
Bitter, despairing, the tears that I shed,—
Darling, O darling, because you were dead!

O, the black days of your absence, my own!
O, to be left in the wide world alone!
Long, with our little one clasped to my breast,
Wandered I, seeking for refuge and rest;
Yet all the world was so careless and cold,
Vainly I sought for a sheltering fold;
There was no roof and no home for my head,
Darling, O darling, because you were dead!

Yet, in the midst of the darkness and pain,
Darling, I knew I should find you again!
Knew as the rose knew, under the snow,
How the next summer would set them aglow;
So I did always, the dreary days through,
Keep my heart single and sacred to you,
As on the beautiful day we were wed,
Darling, O darling, although you have fled.

O, the great joy of awaking, to know
I did but dream all that torturing woe!
O, the delight that my searching can trace
Nothing of coldness or change in your face!
Still is your forehead unfurrowed and fair,
None of the light is lost out of your hair;
None of the light from your dear eyes is fled;
Darling, O, how could I dream you were dead?

Now you are here, you will always remain,
Never, O, never to leave me again!
How it has vanished, the anguish of years;
Vanished—nay, these are not sorrowful tears;
Happiness only my cheek has impearled,
There is no grieving for me in the world;
Dark clouds may threaten, but I have no fear,
Darling, O darling, because you are here!

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

An Ill-used Fenian.

An American Fenian imprisoned in Kilmainham Jail, in Ireland, writes a harrowing account of his sufferings to the Irishman. He says he has mush for breakfast, which is "of the consistency of gruel made for invalids, and looks more like a fly-stew or a spider fricasee than anything else." He continues:

Dinner is served up at 3 o'clock, and consists of a species of black bread, apparently composed of equal parts of sawdust, bran and turf, well larded, I must say, with baked cockroaches, crickets and other succulent kitchen rangers.

He complains that he is not allowed a penknife with which to clean his nails, and growls savagely at being deprived of his proper allowance of sleep. He says:

We can go to bed at 5 P. M., and must get up at 6 A. M.; but, even if the countless swarms of fleas were to allow time to dream of our Dulcineas far away, there are other amusements to keep us awake. First, I presume, lest we should break our shins over the costly and extensive furniture of our cells, the gas is left burning all night.

We trust that the British Government will give this poor, ill-treated Fenian a knife to clean his nails with, and a packet of flea powder, and will also order the jailer to turn down the gas. We regret to state that the poor Fenian also complains of the literary food furnished to him He pitifully remarks:

With twenty-two out of every twenty-four hours hanging loosely on our hands, we very much feel the want of books to while away the time. The Protestant portion of our little circle are furnished with a pocket Bible and the Book of Common Prayer, while the Catholics have to be content with the "Imitation of Christ," and "The Garden of the Soul." The prison library, like its morning gruel, is of the doubtful and meagre kind. It consists of a few canting tracts, sketches of saintly women who were inspired to marry missionary Shylocks, who went out to India and China to become the self-appointed treasurers of the benighted natives; and histories of the wonderful voyages of the Bible into Spain, Italy, Ireland, and other benighted countries. This is the literary food on which the stomachs of Kilmainham's students are fed.

Under these circumstances we should not wonder if this once bold, but now subjugated Fenian, regrets that he ever left America for the purpose of freeing Ireland from the odious rule of the Saxon.

A Sneer at San Francisco.

Wilkes' Spirit of the Times sneers at San Francisco, because a paragraph announcing that Malibran, Lablache, and a few other artistes, long since dead, were on their way to this city, appeared in the Dramatic Chronicle. The San Francisco people appreciate the joke, and certainly if any one was taken in it was only the Chronicle. Wilkes' Spirit of the Times has the following comment:

SHARPS IN MUSIC.—The people of San Francisco are anxiously waiting the arrival of Malibran and a troupe of people who have been dead as many years as San Francisco has been a city. It is refreshing to find such rare musical taste combined with such extensive art matters in a remote Western city. The people of Lowell once lingered after the falling of the curtain until the manager came out and assured them that the play was ended. But then Lowell makes no pretensions to art.

The Spirit of the Times man had better stick to his horse-talk and prize-fight reporting. There is a good deal of musical taste in San Francisco, and we don't keep a piece like the Black Crook running for two years.

Wicked Mark Twain.

It is just as we feared. Mark Twain was not the sort of man to be sent to the Holy Land. He tries to write in a Christian-like spirit, but as the only Christianity of which he had any experience is that of a Mississippi pilot, (a very inferior article,) it is not to be wondered at that, in his letters to the New York Tribune, he talks in a very irreverent Mississippi manner about sacred things and places. When we heard that Beecher was not going on the vessel which started with the pilgrims for the Holy Land, we felt inclined to telegraph to the managers of the speculation, and beg them to keep Mark Twain off the boat. Beecher might possibly have toned him down a little, but without any religious element to counteract the effects of this reckless joker's influence, we feared that the Holy Land pilgrims would become thoroughly demoralized by this licensed libertine. We will not republish the wicked things that Mark Twain says—we are surprised that the Tribune did not cut out some of them—we are glad, however, that he is back in New York. Mark Twain in the Holy Land was about as misplaced as an Ethiopian minstrel would be in a church choir.

A Baby Fair.

A County Fair in Mississippi offers premiums for the finest male and female child between the ages of three and six, born within its limits.

It is a little arbitrary of the managers of this Mississippi fair to insist on the babies being born within its limits. If babies are continually being born within the limits of this fair, we should imagine that other productions of the country must suffer from neglect.

More Territory.

Poor Mr. Seward is no doubt very much cut up at the refusal of Congress to grant him any more money to buy islands with, but if he can get them for nothing that will be better than paying for them. A telegraphic dispatch brings the intelligence that the people of St. Thomas have voted in favor of annexation to the United States. Seward wanted to buy a West Indian Island. Perhaps he will be able to get St. Thomas for nothing, or perhaps on the other hand John Bull will have a word or two to say about the matter, and will, in spite of the people having voted in favor of annexation to the United States, conclude to stick to St. Thomas.

Since the above was in type, sad news has come from this place. Poor St. Thomas has experienced forty-seven shocks of earthquake on November 20th, and was virtually destroyed. The loss of life was enormous; every business firm on the Island is insolvent. Alas! the same paper which contains the news of the destruction of St. Thomas, publishes the following despatch:

The Governor of St. Thomas has returned from Europe to deliver the Island to the United States. The amount paid for it is $7,500,000.

Seward has made a sorry bargain. There will not be lacking old women who will gravely shake their heads and say it is "a judgment on him." It is certainly rather discouraging to buy an Island, and have it knocked into a cocked hat the day after you have paid for it.

Patriotic Drinks.

Teetotallers, Dashaways, Sons of Temperance, Rechabites et id genus omne, avaunt! Unpatriotic, unsocial men, git! And ye whose noses blossom with the flowers of perpetual gin exalt your horn. If ye will steadfastly pursue the course which ye have commenced, if ye will still persistently drink drops of whisky at intervals of ten minutes, then will the United States be freed from the burden of debt, and the American Eagle, unfettered by base trammels, soar to the empyrean. The San Francisco Times says:

If the present imposition of two dollars a gallon could be collected upon anything like the whole amount of spirits consumed in the United States, this one source would yield enough to pay all the expenses of Government, exclusive of the interest upon the public debt, and the taxes upon productive industry might be entirely swept away.

Let us all take a drink, and thus do as much as possible toward entirely sweeping away the taxes on productive industry.

Manners and Customs of the English.

The English are very queer people. An exchange says:

A butler in an English church, standing on one leg during a hymn, was punched in the back with a hymn book by his mistress who was the wife of a minister, and rebuked for his irreverent posture. Refusing to change it, he was ordered to leave the church, and on his declining, the minister came down and repeated the order; but the butler would not move. He prosecuted the lady for "brawling in church," but the Court cleared her.

We do not know which to admire most, the eccentric butler who insisted on standing on one leg during a hymn, or the minister's wife who "punched him in the back with a hymn book." The minister coming down from the pulpit to make the butler stand on two legs must have presented an edifying spectacle. We fancy that account must be garbled in some manner, and that the butler had some reason for standing on one leg, which does not appear.

"The Pups Will Die."

A most pathetic advertisement appears in the Call of yesterday:

$5 REWARD.—LOST OR STOLEN—On the third instant, a YELLOW SLUT; answers to the name of "Belle;" had pups two weeks ago The above reward will be paid to any person who will leave her at FRANK'S SALOON, corner of Stockton and Pacific streets. Please return her, or else the pups will die.

The Poundmaster himself could not, we should think resist so pitiful an appeal. "Please return her or else the pups will die." Whosoever you are that restrains Belle from returning to her helpless offspring, think of those pups and let her go.

Rude and Simple Legislators.

About the year 1685 the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed a resolution that "no member thereof should come to the House barefoot, or eat his bread and cheese on the steps.

Who dare say that these simple, barefooted bread and cheese munching Legislators did not impose any heavy debt on Pennsylvania. Just as soon as the Legislature began to put on airs and object to its members attending barefooted and eating their bread and cheese on the steps, corruptions began to creep in.

The Quality of Mercy a Little Strained.

Low is certainly a most merciful Governor. Some persons are inclined to think that he has during his term of office strained mercy a little two much. During the last few days of his term he pardoned nineteen criminals, and let loose twelve man-slayers on the community. No doubt Governor Low experienced much satisfaction in performing these acts of mercy. If these manslaughterers and murders kill any more people all that has to be done is to send them to San Quentin and let the next Governor do the merciful and pardon them again.

MORNING BY THE RIVER.

Flow down to the musical sea,
O golden tangle of streams!
Flow down with the odors of morning to me,
Through the beautiful land of my dreams.
I hear the light feet of the hours
In the corridors of the dawn;
And the tremble of stars—her lattice-flowers—
But the curtain of twilight is drawn!

I lie on thy glimmering sands,
With the phantasm of the dew;
I wait for the gleam of her rosy hands,
That kindle her windows anew.
O river of love and delight!
Roll down with the shining hours,
And the morn shall arise from the ruin of night,
And blossom in sunshine and flowers!

Lo! a light at her casement gleams,
Like the torch of a sinking star,
And the odors that haunt forever my dreams
Breathe over the land from afar—
That mix with my dream divine
In the mystical chalice of sleep—
Like the spice of the lotus in antique wine,
A myriad centuries keep.

I drink of the vintage of morn,
From flagons of purple and gold,
And the beautiful raptures within me born
Like the roses of heaven unfold.
O river of love and delight!
Flow on 'neath the radiant skies:
For the morn is abroad, and the world is bright
With the blossoms of Paradise!

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE WAR.

BY JAMES FRANKLIN FITTS.

NO. X.—INCIDENTS AT CEDAR CREEK.

WITHOUT intending it give a detailed plan or discription of this memorable battle, I propose to relate some of its features which impress themselves so strongly upon my mind at the time, that they recur to me now at the mere mention of the name. When that bloody and glorious day was over, every survivor of it had his full share of incidents to relate; and they formed the staple of our camp-fire and picket talk all winter. From these I will glean a few of the most striking, merely premising that they are real episodes which happened to the men who fought that day.

A Single paragraph will tell the general story of the fight sufficiently, so that the connection of these incidents with it may be known. On the morning of October 19th, 1864—a cool, still, misty morning—Sheridan's victorious host was surprised by a sudden and vigorous attack of the enemy, en masse, on its left, and was doubled back upon its centre, and forced from the field. At noon the rebels held the position, and were still pursuing us when the timely arrival of Sheridan from Winchester infused new life and spirit into his beaten army, and under his impetuous leadership the tide of defeat was turned, and the enemy driven in panic far beyond the ground of their attact in the morning, with heavy loss in arms and prisoners, to say nothing of the dead and wounded who littered the way for miles.

I believe no such unexpected thing as this attack ever happened to an army. The enemy had been badly beaten at Winchester, just one month before, chased up the valley to Harrisonburg, which continual punishment and heavy loss, and in fact, disorganized. But no sooner had we begun to fall back from our advanced position, than Early commenced to gathered up his scattered troops, and to unite to them large reinforcements; so that, unknown to us, an army almost as large as our own looked down upon us from Fisher's Hill. It was strange into what security we were lulled by the quiet of the situation, and apparent feebleness of the enemy. Sheridan had cosidered the time a good one to make a brief visit to Washington; and standing to arms before daylight had been discontinued three days before.

A few words about this duty of standing to arms before reveille—one of the most unpleasant and most dreaded things that the soldier is ever called upon to do. The hour just before daylight is considered the most favorable one for an attack, because of the darkness which then prevails, and the light which follows, and affords the best chance of following up an advantage. All good generals understand this, and in well-regulated armies, when in the enemy's country, it is always the rule to stand to arms for at least an hour before reveille. Without drum-beat or call of any kind, save the whispered words of the orderly sergants, each regiment forms its own line, and grimly waits the passing of the time before daylight. We had done this at Cedar Creek until within a few days of the surprise; thirty thousand men had leaned shiveringly on their muskets, morning after morning, in order that the army might be secure, waiting for an attack which it seemed folly to expect. One day we received orders from brigade headquarters to discontinue it, as it was considered entirely useless; and so when the rebel host came down upon us in the thick fog of that morning, they found our army asleep in its tents. There was a blame somewhere, that they were able to approach so near our pickets, en masse, without discovery; but no inquiry was ever ordered, and no one was held responsible for a negligence which resulted in the slaughter and maiming of thousands of brave men.

The attack began on the left. The position of my regiment was very near the center, and the first volley we heard was at least a mile away. My lieutenant and myself occupied a little shelter-tent together, and both of us at that moment were dozing in the light slumber of morning. I was detailed for duty upon a court-martial for that day, and I must have been thinking of it somewhat vaguely when that startling sound broke out upon the stillness.

"What's that, cap?" asked T——, rising to his elbow.

"Some careless regiment of the Eighth Corps cleaning their guns," I said, and dozed again.

There was a moment's silence; then an uproar of scattering shots, another volley, and that unmistakable rebel yell! We sprang up, threw on our clothes, seized our arms, and hurried out. In less than fifteen minutes our brigade was in line of battle, facing to the east, whence the noise proceeded; and here, in the fog and darkness, hardly able to distinguish the faces of the men who stood an arm's length from us, we fought with the surging lines of Early's army which swept up to us, until the brigade had lost more than one-third its numbers in killed and wounded. There were peculiar aspects about that dreadful fight on those hills at Cedar Creek, which I never experienced elsewhere. There was no time, and in some cases, no ground, to unite the regiments into brigades; each one fought in its own camp, as stubbornly as it could, and when overpowered, it joined the tide of retreat. Some of the cannoneers fought their pieces until every man was killed or wounded, and were then made prisoners with them; and many of the drivers in their haste to get the artillery and wagons to the rear, overturned them in the ditches and gullies, where they were made an easy prey. The fighting on this ground was close and desperate. The fog rose between us and the advancing enemy like a wall; we could hear their yells, while not a man of them was visible; but from out that deadly fog bullets whistled and hummed into our ranks, smiting down scores of our best and bravest. It was fearful to see them falling there, as if smitten down by some invisible terror, some lying still in death, and others crawling and limping back to the rear. And into that fog we poured our bullets, and not without effect, as we knew at night by the number of the dead we found in front of this position. When the fight had been prolonged until the enemy had driven everything back on the left of us, and we were in imminent peril of being surrounded, we left this ground and joined in the current of retreat.

The picture presented by that field at eight o'clock, was one which made my heart sink within me. It was by no means a rout; there was discipline and organization there, and every disposition to fight well; and half a dozen lines of regiments, brigades and divisions were trying to unite upon a common ground upon which to fight the battle out; but as the solid columns of the enemy steadily advanced, bearing with irresistible weight upon our left, all organized defence was forced to yield and continually fall back. Further to the rear was a host of stragglers, separated from their regiments, and fugitives, utterly demoralized, and glad to leave the field, all of them making their way to the woods near Newton; while from the very camping-ground out of which we had just been driven, the rebel cannon were thundering upon us. They were firing ricochet, or plunging shot, which is done by slightly elevating the piece, and using only a short charge of powder. My brigade was at this time flat on the ground, behind a fence, perhaps eighty rods from the ridge where three of these guns were in position. We could mark the flash and see the smoke; and almost instantly the heavy ball would drop on the ground before us; then rising again over our heads, would take a wild flight to the rear, crushing down and mangling sometimes four or five men together. Some of them bounded once before passing over us; all, I believe, struck the ground in front of us first, and many of them passed dangerously close over our heads.

During this episode of the fight, I witnessed a display of coolness which ought to be mentioned. One of our officers sat on the grass, cross-legged, smoking his brier-wood with perfect nonchalance; and as he observed some of the men watching the flight of the balls, to know when one was coming dangerously near, he sung out:

"Lie close, men; I'll watch for you." And he did watch, singing out at every discharge, "low ball," or "high ball," as it happened.

"I think those guns could be silenced," he said, addressing the colonel. "You'll allow me to pick three men, "I'll go forward about forty rods, and try it."

The colonel looked at the roaring monsters as though he would much like to have it done; but the enemy was continually menacing our line of retreat, and it was plain to see that such an attempt would be sure to result in capture.

During the disasters of the morning, several incidents occurred which made much amusement afterward. Everybody was exposed to a perfect torrent of musket-balls, the fighting-men, as well as the teamsters, who had never before been within range of a hostile shot. Some of the latter displayed a great deal of pluck and nerve in extricating their teams from the danger they were in. One of them, a man who was driving a wagon loaded with commissary stores across the fields at full gallop, was intercepted by a rebel cavalryman, who commanded him to halt. Without a word, the driver shot him dead, and went on his way. General Emery had a favorite horse, which he called Punch, and which fell dead under him early in the morning, pierced with bullets. The general was soon remounted upon a sorry nag; and his wrath against the slayers of his pet horse broke out in the very confusion of battle. General Birge also lost his horse, and could find nothing better to ride afterward, than a mule from one of the teams. The sight of a brigadier-general commanding a brigade on the battle-field, astride of a mule with great flopping ears, was no doubt ludicrous enough; but it was not remembered in this aspect until the day was over.

At the moment when my regiment yielded the hill where it had fought, and commenced to retire, a spark had in some way got into the cartridge-box of one of the sergeants. One after another, the cartridges exploded, sending out miniature sheets of flame, while the poor fellow writhed and tugged in vain at the straps to get his new Pandora's box detached from him. When the last of them had exploded, he found himself unhurt by this singular accident; but so amusing were his antics that there were some who could not restrain their laughter, although at the very moment the enemy's bullets were working havoc among us.

I must allude briefly to the result of the day. With the arrival of Sheridan, the battle was renewed, our army being now the attacking party, and after a desperate fight of half an hour the enemy gave way in panic, and were pursued by our cavalry and infantry far beyond the ground where we had been surprised in the morning. I hardly think that pursuit was ever equalled in the history of campaigns. General Custar complained that his cavalry could hardly keep pace with the infantry; and such was indeed the fact. The turning of the scale was so unexpected that our men were filled with enthusiasm, and as they rushed after the retreating enemy, it was hard to keep up any line at all. The woods and fields over which we passed, resounded with yells of triumph, and an irregular but incessant fire of musketry upon the fugitives. The rebel cannon occupied their old position upon the hill, and belched out their missiles upon us; but before they could be limbered up and driven off, our cavalry was upon them, cutting down their gunners, and capturing the whole of them. Every few moments a squad of prisoners was brought back; many were taken by the infantry as it swept on; and all of them surrendered with a good grace. "You 'uns does fight first-rate, and you've beat we 'uns this time, sure!" was the inelegant but highly expressive language used by one of them. And so we hastened on, cavalry and infantry, through the woods, over the meadows and hills, and wading the turbid brooks; stretching in a long line which were continually broken by the impetuosity of our advance, cheering and shouting; and passing by hundreds of the victims of the battle, dead, dying and wounded, broken down cannons and wagons, dead horses and mules by the dozen, and such terrible evidences as only speak of a desperate battle.

There was a large stone mansion very near the ground upon which my regiment had fought that morning, which had been used by Sheridan as his headquarters, and which was now turned into a hospital. Captain Wilkinson, of Emery's staff, was sorely wounded in the morning, and lay on the floor of one of the rooms of this house all day, listening amid his pain to the wild rejoicings of the rebels about him. He said that about the middle of the afternoon several soldiers went through the house, and drove from it every wounded prisoner who was able to walk, because, as they said, the Yankees had made a stand, and the prisoners must go to the rear for safety. Wilkinson was left, with a few others, as badly wounded; and for two hours more he lay in bodily and mental pain, thinking drearily of the Libbey, where he supposed he must go. Presently he heard the sound of feet, and one of his brother staff officers entered the room, and hastened to him with expressions of sympathy.

"But I did not know you were a prisoner," said Wilkinson.

"Nor did I," laughed the officer. "Don't you know, my dear fellow, we've whipped them gloriously, and that there is'nt a Johnny within five miles, and that your friends are all about you again?"

He learned the astonishing truth then, for the first time, with such feeling as only those who have been in like situations can realize.

The saddest part of this long, eventful day was the search for our dead and wounded, through our own camps, and in the hollows, and among the bushes near them. The fight had been the hottest in the morning, and within an area of half a mile square many hundreds had fallen. There was no time to send away the badly hurt; they had lain with the dead all day, under the blistering sun, tormented with thirst and the agony of their hurts, while the tide of battle flowed and re-flowed over them. About dark my regiment reoccupied the very ground upon which it had slept on the previous night, and parties were immediately despatched over the field to bring in our wounded. Slowly and tenderly the poor fellows were borne up to the stone mansion from every part of the field, where their wounds were dressed, and where many of them died before morning.

In the sober darkness of the evening I walked out upon the hill where we had fought our fight, and looked around me. Bent and broken muskets, haversacks, canteens, and equipments were there; and there were twenty soldiers sleeping their last sleep, "dead upon the field of battle." Some miserable harpies, who always infest such places, had robbed the poor boys of their uniforms, and as they lay stark and stiff in their white underclothing, they looked like corpses already arrayed for the grave. I bent over them, one by one, and with such emotion as might well have brought tears to sterner eyes than mine, I recognized the faithful and beloved soldiers whom I had learned to treat more as brothers than as subordinates; the gallant fellows who had followed me uncomplainingly over the dusty roads of Louisiana and Virginia for two years, who had fought bravely by my side, and had with me watched through cold, and dark, and weary hours on the picket-line. There was one in particular—a slender, handsome lad, one of the best and most willing soldiers in the regiment, who had been made a corporal over men of twice his years, for his good conduct and ability. I had a special liking for him; and the sight of him lying here dead was inexpressibly sad to me. He was, as I have said, a remarkably handsome boy; and there was now upon his dead face an expression of such beautiful serenity and peace, that I could think of nothing but the rest of heaven while I saw it.

Behind the stone wall which surrounded the house, eighteen bodies of the slain of the regiment were buried in a row, each grave being marked with a pine board, inscribed with the name, company, and regiment.

"Their arms will rust,
And their bones be dust,
But their souls are with the saints, we trust."

Four days after the battle, just as I was riding out from division headquarters, I met the father of this soldier. The news of the battle and of the death of his boy had already reached him in his far Northern home, and he had journeyed down to that Virginia battle-field, to bear home his honored remains.

"Where is Edwin?" he asked, with trembling lips and moistened eye.

I dismounted, and giving my horse to my orderly, passed with him up the hill and behind the stone wall, where I pointed out to him the grave of his son among the eighteen. He knelt by it and bowed his head over it, while his tears fell fast and thick upon the unsodded earth.

"He was all I had," was the touching comment of the bereaved father to me, as I stood silently by. "He was my only boy, and I was building up bright hopes for him, which are all dashed now. All that I have was to have been his; I don't think I had a hope in life beyond him. And now it's all over!"

He was but one of the many fathers, brothers, and even wives and mothers, who came to this battle-field before our army left it, to secure all that was left of their gallant dead; and many times did we visit that hill, and recount the story of that terrible morning to these visitors.

There is one incident above all the others, which will always give to the name of Cedar Creek a deeply mournful significance to me. The lieutenant whom I have mentioned as waking with me at the first alarm that morning, was a noble youth, handsome, vivacious, and full of the enthusiasm of a military career. For eighteen months previous, we had shared the perils and the hardships of the campaigns together, and between us there had sprung up an abiding friendship. More than two years had passed since he had left his young wife and infant child in New York to join the regiment, and his thoughts wandered constantly and fondly back to them. He would read me portions of her letters, breathing the most intense affection for him, and prayers for his safe return to her; and sometimes, when he lay by my side at night, I have heard him stir uneasily in his slumber, and mutter her name. When I was permitted to visit home on a brief leave of absence, just before the Red River campaign, I fulfilled my solemn promise to the lieutenant that I would visit his wife and child, and talk with her of him. To do so, I had to travel by stage sixty miles, to a remote village of the State; but I felt amply repaid in seeing her, in gratifying her heart with what I could tell her of her beloved husband, and in witnessing the deep, fervent devotion which she bore him. She was only a girl in years; and when I held her hand and saw the tears spring to her eyes as I left her, expressing the hope that she would not be long separated from him, I sadly thought of the thousands of other loving young hearts, that must be crushed with sorrow, before the end of the strife.

He had entered the company as first sergeant; before that day at Cedar Creek, his bravery and ability had won him the bar of a first lieutenant, and he was upon that day acting as adjutant of the regiment. Through the defeat of the morning, and the victory of the afternoon, his bearing was one of conspicuous gallantry; and I thought then that he was certain of a captaincy when the roll of honor for this fight came to be made up. In the confusion and rush of the afternoon's chase, I lost sight of him; and after I returned to the company after my visit to the hill, I found that he was still absent. Presently the major came to me, and told me that he had just been informed that the lieutenant was badly wounded, and lay at that moment near the road, toward the left. Calling four of the men, I gave them an old piece of tent-canvass, which I had meant for my shelter that night, and together we traversed the ground between the camp and the road in the darkness, over and over, shouting out his name again and again. We had responses enough; but none from him. There were still many of the wounded lying in obscure spots, whither they had crawled to avoid the heat of the sun, the hoofs of the cavalry, or the artillery-wheels; and ever and anon we heard from out the darkness, repeated answers, such as these:

"For God's sake, come here! I'm dying with thirst!" "Send some of the Thirtieth Massachusetts here to take care of me; my leg is all crushed to pieces!" "Seventh Alabama—don't let me die here!"

We pitied the poor fellows, of both armies, but could do nothing for them now; we were bound to search for our own. But we did not find him that night; and when we returned to camp, sad and heavy-hearted for him, we were compelled to accompany our division to the front, where it was kept on picket that night, and all the following day. Upon the next day after, we returned to our old camp; and here I found a message from the lieutenant. He had been carried back to Newton, seven miles to the rear; and his message urged me to come to him without delay. I needed no urging to do that; my horse was saddled in a minute, and I rode him at a gallop till I reached the long straggling street of Newton. The place had been turned into a hospital; every house held its proportion of the wounded of both armies, and surgeons, stewards and hospital attendants were busy among them. The house in which the lieutenant lay was pointed out to me; and riding up to it, I dismounted, gave my reins to an orderly, and passed in. There was a table in the street, before this house; under it I counted at a glance six legs and arms; and while I was passing by, a poor sufferer, under the influence of chloroform, was laid on the table, and his leg was actually taken off before I had disappeared in the house! I recognized the stout, florid man who stood by it with his dress smeared with blood, his sleeves rolled up, and an array of knives glittering before him, as Surgeon H——, one of the most skillful operators in Sheridan's army; and as I passed him he suspended his horrible work long enough to nod to me and to ask, in accents of assumed gravity, if I wanted some thing done!

Poor T——, my lieutenant, was lying on his back in a comfortable bed, very white, but calm and conscious. I pass over the gratification and pain of both my meeting and parting with him; those are things which I can find no words to describe. He had pressed forward up to the hills with the foremost of our men, just at dusk when an ill-directed charge of grape from one of our own guns, which was rapidly unlimbering and firing every few moments on the pursuit, fell short, one of the shot striking the lieutenant in the thigh. I saw at a glance that it must prove fatal; the bone was hopelessly crushed. It was an hour of awful solemnity; in the very shadow of death as he was, the yearning husband and father strove and struggled with the destroyer, and piteously asked me to say that he would live, that he might again see the sweet faces of his wife and child!

But he never saw them again; I saw him no more, after that painful interview. He died the third day after, and the body was coffined and sent northward. Between Winchester and Martinsburg, the train which carried it was met by an ambulance, in which was the devoted wife, who had hastened down to him at the first intimation of his wound, and came too late to close his dead eyes.

I know not her after history, and whether she be living or dead; but I think that the red stream of war which flowed at Cedar Creek, quenched no nobler nor more loving heart than that which was given to her.

The deepest deposit of guano known is seventy feet. According to Humboldt, a deposit of three centuries would not exceed more than one-third of an inch in thickness. By an easy mathematical calculation it will be seen that at this rate it would take almost countless centuries to form the deepest guano bed. Such a calculation carries us back towards a former geological period, and proves that in past ages a greater number of birds existed.

Pictures must not be too picturesque. Nothing astonishes men like common sense and plain dealing. All great actions have been simple, and all great pictures are.

A smile may be bright while the heart is sad. The rainbow is beautiful in the air, while beneath is the moaning of the sea.

We live amid surfaces, and the art of life is to skate well on them.

BEAUTY IS POWER.

Beauty is power at all times and under all circumstances, whereas every other attribute which sophists may pretend to be power, can lay claim to be such in a very limited sense, and only under certain favorable circumstances. The power of beauty is unconditioned—it is absolute—it is universal. All other power is, at best, but particular. Let us take, for example, the instance already alluded to, as embodied in the dictum, "knowledge is power." Knowledge is power in a debating society, or in an æsthetic tea-room; but what is its power at a ball or in a street row? As Johnson says, "Go into the square and give one man a lecture on morality and the other a shilling, and see which will respect you the most." Bigotry is power at Exeter Hall, and even ignorance is power at a meeting of the Reform Leagues. Has not America had its "Know Nothings;" and was not power their very being's end and aim? But beauty is power everywhere and always. You may see it interrupt a lecturer, disconcert, a preacher, and make an orator forget the thread of his argument. It disturbs the saint at his prayers, the poet at his sonnet, and even the accountant laboring at his sum total. We have not dwelt upon the relative power of ugliness, or even of plainness; firstly, because the subject is disagreeable, or, in other words, because what we should be obliged to say thereon would be painfully true; and secondly, because we think our position is too strong, even on the positive side, to need any corroboration from what may be called negative arguments. We only appeal to the plain people to look into their own hearts, and say if we have exaggerated the power of beauty. They themselves, and they know it, make concessions to the beautiful, which they would never dream of making to their ill-favored fellows in distress. This deference to beauty, this slavish submission to it, may be right or may be wrong, but it is universal. If it is not everybody's nature to practice it, all we can say is, that everybody has caught the habit.

INCREASE OF HUMAN LIFE.

If the progeny of two salmon fishes could go on increasing at the natural rate without being disturbed by extraneous causes, they would soon fill the ocean and all its tributaries. But they are subject to various accidents that keep them from increasing at their natural rate. The same thing may be said of various animals and insects, as some of them are so prolific that, but for the accidents that check their natural increase, they would fill both the air and the earth with their progeny. It is the same, but of course to a much smaller extent, with the human race, and one of the most interesting applications of this subject is to the increase of the population of this earth. We saw a calculation the other day, the result of which was, that from a single married pair it might be calculated in five hundred years there would be four millions and upward of descendants.

The families of men of genius are singularly short lived; indeed, there is a peculiar fineness of susceptibility in the nervous systems of many which marks them as members of a decaying stock. A few families increase for a few generations very rapidly, and rise in influence, because they form a superior stock, until some habit of vice or peculiarity of employment or dissipation injures the race, and renders them inferior and then they decline. Individuals, families, nations, rise to the top through force of constitution, or character, or goodness; flower-like those water-plants which rise to the surface, blossom, and then lie down when their strength is spent, to make way for others. Every true thought in science or in morals is a power which elevates those who possess it. Men are governed by ideas, and those who have the most comprehensive view of life last the longest at the top. Those who have the most of what is required for the times rise most suddenly, even if they do not last.

A Pittsburg paper tells how two thieves met a gentleman walking the streets late at night with a box under his arm, and undertook to show him to a hotel. They relieved him of his box and ran off with it. The gentleman was a naturalist, and the box contained four rattlesnakes. Fancy the thieves' emotions when investigating their prize.

A new use for the tongue is to make it serve as a thief, by licking up diamonds at a jeweler's, the practitioner pretending to be very short-sighted and so bringing the jewels near enough to his face to lick them up.

Money is a very good servant, but a bad master. It may be accused of injustice toward mankind, inasmuch as there are only a few make false money, whereas money makes many men false.

Justice and generosity, rightly blended, constitute a dignified character; but, certainly, so far as a person is more just than generous, or more generous than just, that character is defective.

Perhaps the infant, when he sighs and weeps, hears as in a sea-shell the moan and roar of the ocean of life.

There is a certain decorum even in grief; for excess of sorrow is as foolish as profuse laughter.

LITERARY GLEANINGS.

GOSSIP ABOUT PUBLISHERS—THE HARPERS.

A NEW YORK Correspondent of the Boston Saturday Gazette furnishes that paper with an interesting sketch of some of the great publishing houses of the city, from which he writes. Of the Harpers and their establishment, he says:

The spacious structure on Fraoklin square, with all the machinery of type-setting, stereotyping, printing, folding, stitching, gilding, marbling, binding, lettering, has been described frequently before, and I have no iutention of inflicting it again upon the reader. There is a daily flow of visitors, some concerned only in the practical book-making, others eager to catch a glimpse of the literary features, the authors and editors and critics who carelessly come and go. The firm, one of the largest in the world, is the oldest and most extensive in America. It was founded iu 1816 by James and John Harper. Wesley Harper came in in 1822, and Fletcher Harper in 1826, since which the firm has stood as it stands now. It is not often that four brothers can be united so long, with no break in the rank by death or other cause. Hon. James Harper—Honorable because siuce our Mayor—is abont seventy-three years of age, and there is no youth about the establishment more active thau he. He delights iu a good story, a good listener, a good joke, and no oue can discover a reason why he shouldn't live twenty years yet. Mr. John Harper is about seventy, but not so robust in health as James. He is the negative element in the firm, and commonly wields the veto power. Mr. Wesley Harper is gentlemanly and cordial, comfortiug a disappoiuted author and encouraging a promising one with equal suavity. Mr. Fletcher Harper is the active, aggressive spirit of the firm, but with a vaulting ambition that never o'erleaps itself. It is his spirit that animates and directs the Monthly, Weekly, and Bazaar. Besides the four members of the firm there are numerous sons, making a round dozen in all. The Harpers resemble English firms in the tenacity with which their employees cling to them. There is one gray-haired octogenarian, who has been in their employ fifty years. The foreman of their composing room has been with them forty years: the foreman of the press-room thirty-five years, and there are women in the folding-rooms that have been with them thirty years. Their cashier has also been in their employ thirty-five years. I do not think these facts can readily be equalled in our American experience. I will not trouble the reader with statistics of the business of this firm. They have made fortunes for themselves and for others. As high as forty thousand dollars have been paid in a single year to one author as his copyright profits. Their issues are from ponderous Greek and Latin lexicons down to the last new novel in paper cover, and include every department of literature. They run forty Adams' steam presses and six big cylinder presses. They have the largest press-room, the largest bindery, and the largest engravsng-room in the country, and all are employed solely on their own publications.

CLERICAL BITTERNESS—THE PROHIBITORY LAW.

It is difficult for us out here in California, fully to realize the bitterness of the animositics that have been roused in the discussions on the Prohibitory Law. There are a few influ ential persons in this community, who are in favor of such a law here, bnt not enough to make the question a practical or an exciting one. Io Massachusetts it is quite otherwise, and it is amazing and humiliating to observe what bad passions have been kindled in the contest in regard to the act, and how malignant, even in this age, bigotry can become, when its domination is resisted, and its favorite doctrines assailed. The late Governor, John A. Andrew, is known throughout the United States, for his public services, his honorable character, and his blameless private life. But he was opposed to prohibition, and in the mind of a zealot for total abstinence, no personal virtues or public services can atone for the sin of differing from him in opinion. According to the Boston papers, the Rev. Dr. Miner, of that city, made a shameful assault from his pulpit, upon the memory of this illustrious citizen, on the day succeeding his burial. A Boston journal thus comments upon the circumstance:

Doubtless there are many candid and charitable men who honestly believe io the justice and the policy of the Prohibitory Law; but we would fain hope, for humanity's sake, that there are but few even here, whose hearts have become so malignified by political rancor, as to be patient of such a proceeding as this. To tread softly and reverently about the grave, is the common instinct of manhood; even gentle savages and modest blackguards are apt to do that; and the least that a brave man can do over the foe whom death has smitten, is to be silent. Bnt the uoble man, whose death has just bowed the heart of this community with grief, was in no sort a personal foe to Dr. Miner: he merely differed from him in a question of public policy; and in expressing that difference he was always courteous, temperate and fair. We were aware that Dr. Miner was wont to brow beat and insult the living for honest differeoces of opinioo; but to vituperate and blacken the dead, is a service from which we supposed that even his better nature would recoil. We do assure him that the proper solemnity of the occasion and the sacredness of the great public sorrow might have tied up his tongue, or at least awed away its bitterness, without any impeachment of his zeal for the public good. If he supposes that any good cause is to be furthered by such ungenerous and unnatural acts of hostility, then it may well be thought that bigotry and fanaticism have addled his head, as well as hardened his heart. Grief, however, not anger, is the right feeling for us all to have in view of such an indecency as this minister of the Gospel is said to have committed. And we would not desecrate the memory of John A. Andrew by auy gratuitous harshness of rebuke even against those who have the heart to trample on his new-made grave.

DEAD BOOKS.

Speaking of the class of books that still hold their places on library shelves, but are no longer read, a writer in the London Saturday Review finely says:

People who can go through a country churchyard with an unmoved and stolid unconsciousness must have dull souls. There is something of the same impressiveness or pathos as one stands in the midst of the written memorials of accumulated human effort and labor and genius. The student may sigh as he thinks what toil and hope and intrepid purpose confronts him on the shelves of his own library, where a volume stands for the single monument and relic of the life of a man. A churl may jeer as he reflects how many a man has scorned delights and lived laborious days to leave a volume which few people possess, and none ever thinking of looking into. But one of a higher temper finds this rather a tender thought than an excuse for a scoff. He feels at least that 'tis pity if 'tis true Besides the mere presence of a book on a shelf shows that the effort which it represents has not wholly spent itself. We know not what to speak of though a mere glance at its title on the cover may strike out in a ready mind. Anyhow, it is no more matter for cynical jest than the author's gravestone. The book is dead, so is the man who wrote it, but both in their time may have set some fine forces in motion, which have communicated some continuing impulse all through space. We can never exactly measure out and nicely apportion the energy which either man or book may have released and set in motion. The deadest book of old time is at least as interesting as an old suit of armor; a man has once lived and done his stroke of fighting inside of it. And in books that are not dead, which give us ideas or give us mere pleasure, there is even a certain religiosity. A book is in one sense incorporeal, while in another it is at least as corporeal as a graven image. Its mere presence is suggestive, and reminds us how, here even more than elsewhere, other men labor, and we enter into the fruit of their labor. Nobody feels so deeply the debt which a man owes to the best and wisest of his fellows, dead or living, as the scholar who feels towards his books as towards his more fleshly friends. It is only a sentiment, but it is a very comfortable one, and it is not sterile. It is not a forced paradox to say that a man may sometimes be far more profitably employed in surveying his bookshelves in meditative mood, than if he were to pull this or that volume down and take to reading it; just as two friends may hold sweeter converse in perfect silence together than if they were talking all the time.

MISCELLANEA.

THE New York Review says: "Messrs. Ticknor & Fields, the publishers of Longfellow, have printed a few copies of the translation of Dante, on large paper, in a style, as regards paper and type, which is highly creditable to the New England press. The paper in toned, and of very good quality; and the printing is by Messrs. Welsh, Bigelow & Co., of the University Press, Cambridge, near Boston. It is not every year that either London or Leipzig turns out a book so perfect in all its parts."

A WRITER in the London Fun says, "A new secret society at Vienna is announced. Not for the liberation of Hungary or any other oppressed nationality, however. Its object is the extinction of the trains—not railway trains, but the long trails with which ladies of fashion delight to sweep the streets. Members of the society solemnly swear to tread on, so as to tear, all the trains they meet with. These be strong measures, methinks, and Messieurs the Viennese might surely find a more honorable way of waging war against women—besides their statagem recoils on themselves. They tear the dresses—but the damage has to be repaired out of the pockets of husbands and fathers, who belong to their own sex."

WHITTIER'S winter idyl, "Snow Bound," has found a most fitting dress in the form in which it has just been issued. The publishers have done nothing better in the way of ornamental book-making. The binding, the illustrations, the paper, and the printing are all exquisite and leave nothing to be desired. The drawings for the illustrations, which are forty-one in number, were made by Mr. Harry Fenn, from sketches made by him during a visit to the scene of the poem, and are cordially indorsed by Mr. Whittier for their fidelity. The engraving for the work was done by Mr. A. V. S. Anthony and Mr. W. J. Linton. A vignette portrait of the author adorns the title page, which was drawn upon wood by Mr. W. J. Hennessey, and engraved by Mr. John Andrew. Ticknor & Fields publishers. It can be had at Roman's or Bancroft's.

A London paper says: "Mr. Henry G. Bohn has printed for private and personal circulation, not for sale, a stout "Dictionary of Poetical Quotatioos." It is well done, and is rich in selection, especially from the poets of the middle period, Milton to Akenside. The matter is classified nnder subjects, not uoder words; and the volume meant to be useful rather to the thought-seeker than the word-seeker. Many of the quotations have exact references to the quarters whence they have been drawn; bnt many others have not; and for these Mr. Bohn, with commendable modesty, asks the assistance of his readers."

THE first volume of a work which will possess a thrilling interest for many, Les Mystéres de Constantinople, is announced as ready by a Constantinople paper. We have had Mysteries of London, usque ad nauseam, and Mysteries of Paris too. It is to be hoped that Mysteries of Constantinople will reveal realities and not the mere imaginative pictures of the "literary book-maker."

VISITORS to Algiers have written with a shudder of the brutal and fanatical tricks of the Aissouas, a tribe of savages who exhibit every feat that is most disgnsting to every sense. Some of these people have been actually brought to the civilized city of Paris by a speculator, to chew glass, to devour serpents alive, to tear out their own eyes—in short, to go the whole round of the hideous mummeries which, if we could recollect right, M. Robin exposed in his ingenious confessions.

THE effects of Mrs. Lincoln, which were offered for sale in New York, are thus spoken of by "Jennie Junc:" "With the exception of the lace and camel's hair shawls and a few odd pieces of jewelry, there is nothing that any lady could wear, or which in its present condition would not be a disgrace to a second-hand clothes shop. The dresses, those that have been made up and worn, are crushed, dirty, old-fashioned, and most of them made and trimmed in the worst way."

MR. JOHN D. STOCKTON, late of the New York Tribune, and the author of many able and humorous editorials in that paper, has removed to Philadelphia, to take charge of a penny paper newly started in that city, entitled The Morning Post. Mr. Stockton takes with him the kindest wishes of many friends. Another of the Tribune editors, Mr. Kane O'Donnell, has gone to Mexico, on a special mission for that paper.

THE entire correspondence relating to the attempted foundation of the Mexican Empire and its fall is announced to be published by Duncker & Hamblot, at Leipzig, who also announce three more volumes of the Emperor Maximilian's memoirs and essays.

THE incomplete version of the early English Siege of Jerusalem is fonnd to be part of a poem, The Vengeance of God's Death, by Adam Davie—one of our fourteenth century writers, yet known only by fame.

THE Paris editions of Mr. Tennyson's works, in five volumes, at ten francs, has been lately stated by a shopman of the publishers, Messrs. Reinwald, to be selling at the rate of 5,000 volumes a month.

A MONUMENT, composed of lava stone found on the spot, is about to be erected to the memory of Captain Cook, in Kealakekua Bay, Hawaii, where he was killed.

MESSRS. SCRIBNER, WELFORD & Co. are the New York publishers of "St. Clair of the Isles" and "The Children of the Abbey," in a London Series entitled Notable Novels.

MESSRS. HURD & HOUGHTON republish the delicious old story of Paul and Virginia, by Bernardin de St. Pierre, in a new translation, and with illustrations by Homer.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA will contribute to the November number of Belgravia an article entitled "The Cant of Criticism."

A NEW edition, revised and enlarged, of the Memorials of Thomas Hood, is announced in London.

CHARLES DICKENS has been engaged by Messrs. Ticknor & Fields, to write a story for Our Young Folks.

A NEW translation of Balzac's novels is soon to be made in this country.

JAMES PARTON is said to be incubating on the idea of a weekly newspaper.

NEARLY two hundred newspapers of all kinds are published in New York city.

EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN is soon to publish a new collection of his poems.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES' Guardian Angel will be completed in two more numbers of the Atlantic.

THE United States contains nearly ten thousand somewhat known versifiers, who style themselves poets.

DIXON'S New America has passed to a seventh edition.

MR. E. C. STEDMAN is arranging for publication another collection of his poems.

MISS CAROLINE UNDERHILL, who has already published a collection of poems which were favorably recieved, purposes publishing a volume of poetry.

DR. R. SHELTON MACKENZIE, whose reminiscences of literary men and subjects are more interesting than perhaps those of any one else in the country, is collecting for the press a volume of his miscellaneous writings.

MRS. R. H. STODDARD will soon publish, through Messrs. G. W. Carleton & Co., a new novel of New England life.

MR. GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS is reported, with what truth we do not know, to be writing a novel.

THE REV. ROBERT COLLYER, of Chicago, is said to be similary employed.

MR. GEORGE CATLIN will soon give us My Last Rambles amongst the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and the Andes.

MR. P. FISHE REED'S volume of poems, to be published during the fall, will be entitled Voices of the Wind, and other Poems.

"NO BATHS LIKE DR. BOURNE'S BATHS!" is the universal testimony of all who are competent to judge. Adapted to sick or well. Only institution which excludes all loathesome diseases and improper persons. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

NOBODY'S DAUGHTER was played at Maguire's Opera House until Friday evening, when it was withdrawn to give place to the two act drama of Meg's Diversion, which is now running successfully in London, and made quite a hit when it was produced at Wallack's Theatre, New York. As the CALIFORNIAN goes to press at an early hour, I must defer a criticism of this play until next week. It will be played this afternoon and in the evening, in conjunction with The Carpenter of Rouen.

On Wednesday evening the American Theatre will be opened for a season of six nights of Italian Opera, under the management of Signor Bianchi. Ricci's comic opera, entitled Scaramuccia, will be produced for the first time in California. Signor G. Mancusi will fill the role of "Scaramuccia, poet and manager of the Italian opera in Paris." He will be supported by Mme. Stella Bonheur, Signorina Bellini, Signor Bianchi, Frank Howson, Signor E. Bellini, M. Charles and Mme. Yonkers.

Miss Fanny Young, a burlesque actress and comedienne, from the Australian theatres, arrived this week under engagement to the Opera House management. She will shortly appear in the extravaganza of Rum-ti-foozle.

At the Metropolitan Theatre, Under the Gaslight is drawing immensely; all the seats frequently being secured three days in advance. There is no denying the fact that express scene is an immense sensation, the scene on the wharf is very good and causes much fun, and the drama is so well played troughout that the interest of the audience is not allowed to flag. Charles Wheatleigh plays Snorkey in his usual quiet, intense style. Mrs. F. M. Bates is very good as "Laura Courtland," and gains immense applause. Mrs. C. R. Saunders causes roars of laughter by her inimitable impersonation of the erratic "Peach-blossom." Harry Edwards looks and acts the heavy swell to perfection, and in fact all the characters are well played.

Every night during the week the beautiful Temple of Music has been crowded by the beauty and fashions of the city. The Ghost proved a great hit. It will make its final appearence to night. A new and attractive programme has been prepared for Monday, and startling novelties will be produced in rapid succession. TOUCHSTONE.

A WARNING TO EARLY RISERS.—The recent life of Josiah Quincy has the following good anecdote: "One day, Mr. John Quincy Adams, who was addicted to the same vice of intemperate early rising, with much the same consequences, was visiting my father, who invited him to go into Judge Story's lecture-room, and hear his lecture to his law class. Now Judge Story did not accept the philosophy of his two friends in this particular, and would insist that it was a more excellent way to take out one's allowance of sleep in bed, and be wide awake when out of it—which he himself most assuredly always was. The Judge received the two Presidents gladly, and placed them in the seat of honer, on the dais by his side, fronting the class, and proceeded with his lectmre. It was not lang before, glancing his eye aside to see how his guests were impressed by the doctrine, he saw that they were both of them sound asleep, and he saw that the class saw it, too. Pausing a moment in his swift career of speech, he pointed to the two sleeping figures, and uttered these words of warning: 'Gentlemen, you see before you a melancholy example of the evil effects of early rising!' The shout of laughter with which this judicial obiter dictum was received effectnally aroused the sleepers, and it is to be hoped that they heard and profited by the remainder of the discourse."

EDITORIAL DUTIES.—Mr. Hunt, in his recent volume on the "Fourth Estate," thus sketches the peculiar duties of a journalist: The man who once becomes journalist, must almost bid farewell to mental rest or mental leisure. If he fulfills his duties truthfully, his attention must be ever awake to what is passing in the world, and his whole mind must be devoted to the instant examination, and discussion, and record of current events. He has little time for literary idleness, with such literary labor on his shoulders. He has no days to spend on catalogues, or in dreamy discursive researches in public libraries. He has no months to devote to the exhaustion of any one theme. What he has to deal with must be taken up at moment's notice, be examined, tested and dismissed at once; and thus his mind is ever kept occupied with the mental necessity of the world's passing hour.

WHAT can be more foolish than to think that all this rare fabric of heaven and earth could come by chance when all the skill of art is not able to make an oyster?

THE English champion swimmer has swum a thousand yards in seventeen minutes; this is said to be the fastest time on record.

NEVER waste argument on a man who does not know logic from logwood, which is the case with half the people who love disputation.

AROUND CORNERS.

THE amount of ingenuity displayed by the male lover in approaching the subject he has so much at heart is sometimes surprising; but his object generally out-hints him if she wishes to do so, her natural tact and delicacy lending a subtlety to her remarks which few men can approach. And nature has so happily adjusted the masculine and feminine minds, that the ready self-possession of the latter rises in exact proportion to the sinking of that quality in the former. So that, if a lady does not bring a too bashful lover to the point, the chances are that she does not wish to do so.

A gentleman, whose modesty was too great for his happiness, was one day going through a wood with a lady, to whom he longed but feared to offer his hand and his heart. He had schemed and manœuvered enough for ten diplomatists to draw her away alone from the picnic where they had met, and now he durst not speak out for the life of him. But the silence had become embarrassing, and at last he ventured on a hint:

"Hark!" he cried, snddenly stopping. "Do you hear that bird singing?"

"Yes," replied the lady.

"Do you catch what it says?"

"No, I cannot say that I do."

"Why, it says, 'I love you, I love yon, I love you,' as plainly as possible!"

"Dear me, how odd!" replied she; and they walked on again in silence for a little way.

Presently the lady, in her turn stopped.

"How funny!" said she. "Do you hear what that other bird says?"

"No; what?" asked the man.

"Why, it seems to me to say, 'show it, show it, show it!'"

That landed him.

The warning hint is the most annoying thing in the world, especially to a man of a timid or suspicions nature. And there are men and women in the world who seem to spend their lives at the mast-head, looking out for shoals and rocks; yet never seeing, or, at all events, never giving notice of real dangers, but perpetually insinuating the existence of imaginary ones.

You leave your house, as blythe as a lark, and meet Croker, say. You are about to pass him with a nod, but he stops and seizes you by the arm, and looks anxiously in yonr face.

"You are the man I wanted to see," says Croker. "Do you not bank with Bullion & Co.?"

"Yes," you reply.

"Much of a balance? Excuse the question."

"So, so."

"More than yon would like to lose?"

"Most decidedly!" you exclaim, turning pale.

"Oh! then, it is doubtless all right; you would know as soon as any man. What I heard was all nonsense."

"But what did yon hear, Croker?"

"Oh! nothing, nothing. Good morning."

And the harpy hurries away, having spoiled your comfort and your appetite for the day.

A social sufferer can trace three white-washings, seven disruptions of friendship, four severe illnesses, one terminating fatally, five addled matches, two separations, and one divorce, to warning hints in fifteen years' personal experience.

Not but what a hint is a valuable enough thing occasionally. When the poor scene-shifter at Drury Lane broke both his legs, Sheridan gave him a list of the shareholders who owned the theatre, and suggested a subscription. The poor fellow sent round and collected a handsome sum, applying last of all to Sheridan.

"I hope you will give me something, too."

"I give you something! Why you impudent rascal! did I not give you the hint?" replied Sheridan; and really there was something besides humor in the plea. If he had not contributed the hint, the man would never have got the rest of his subscriptions.

The social snfferer dined last week with a friend who has some very excellent wine, which he has kept so long that now he can hardly bear to part with it. The social sufferer was so old a friend that he ventured on a hint after dinner.

"Brown, old fellow," said he, slyly, "the bottle is empty."

"Is it?" cried Brown, rising with alacrity. "Then perhaps you would like to join Mrs. Brown."

Rogers, the poet, one of the most hospitable men that ever lived, once asked an Irish gentleman to come and stay with him. He came fast enough; but would not go. Weeks and months passed, and still, in spite of innumerable delicate hints, he remained a fixture. At last Rogers, in despair, was obliged to fill his house with invited company, appropriating the Irishman's room; and then he said to him, "My dear——, in spite of your probable arrangements for leaving sooner, I positively cannot part with you before next Saturday. Beyond that date I cannot ask you to remain, as my house will be quite full,"—which is the most courteous way in which one man ever ejected another on record.

To wind up with a generalization, it is really a very stupid thing to suppose that you can correct people's faults or foibles by throwing out hints before them, or talking at them. If they are stupid and don't take, your labor is lost; if they see you drift, they will be more offended than if you had spoken out openly.

But it strikes the social sufferer that he is beginning to prose, and that is a hint to wipe his pen.

THE NEW "BROCADE."—The prize brocade which took all the honors at the Paris Exhibition, is called "Napoleon III." It is a beauty, and copies of it have been ordered by the Queen of Portugal and Viceroy of Egypt, and the Empress of Russia, one for the wedding of the Grand Duchess Olga with the young King of Greece. The ground is white, and it costs one hundred and twenty francs per metre. It is brocaded with butterflies made of miniature flowers. The attennæ of the insects and their wings are perfect paintings, and could bo examined through a microscope. Some are made of gorgeous roses, others of the most diminutive flowrets. All hover in different directions, some meeting, some chasing each other, others settling for rest, and the effect is that of myriads of butterflies wafting the perfumes they bear with them on open clear space.

HORSE meat is decidedly becoming the fashion. Two new horse butcheries have been opened in Paris—one in the Rue Navarin and another in the Rue de Commerce. They have now eighteen shops entirely devoted to tho sale of this new food.

IT is stated that almost all the speculating brokers of Wall street, during the last fifteen years, have been ruined in the business, or have retired on fortunes no larger than they had at first. Some of them have been ruined a great many times.

FORBIDDEN fruit is sweet. It has until lately been a rule in Brussels that wine-shops should close at one o'clock in the morning, and there were many violations of the law. Now the restriction is taken off, and they close at half-past twelve.

BARGAINS IN CLOTHING.—The proprietors of Quincy Hall Clothing Emporium, Montgomery Block, Washington street, announce in our advertising columns that owing to a dissolution of co-partnership they will sell off their immense stock of clothing and gentlemen's furnishing goods for the next twenty days at prices regardless of cost. They wish to turn as much of their stock into cash as possible in the interval, and offer great bargains in clothing. They are selling good white shirts for $1 50; red flannel shirts and drawers at the same price, and other goods in proportion.

THE ship Anna Schmidt, which was destroyed by the Alabama off the coast of South America, had on board a quantity of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for California. Dr. Ayer & Co. now appeal for redress direct to the British Government, as the responsible party in this wicked business, and base their claim for payment and protection on the ground of humanity, as their commodities are wholly for the sick. Their point is well taken and will doubtless be pressed with the pluck and persistency which characterize the operations of these celebrated chemists.—Baltimore Clipper.

AN ESTABLISHED REPUTATION.—There is in every city one restaurant, the fame of which surpasses that of all rival establishments. What Delmonico's is to New York, the Pomme d'Or to Paris, Simpson's to London, Martin's restaurant is to San Francisco. For many years 623 Commercial street has been celebrated for the excellence of its cuisine. Leon Dingeon and F. W. Haubrick understand their business thoroughly, and leave nothing undone which will add to the well-earned reputation of the house

---

GOOD TASTE.—Much money may be spent to little purpose in a house if good taste is lacking. Joseph Fredericks has some of the finest carpeting and paper hangings in the State, and he is celebrated for the taste which he displays in upholstering and fitting up houses. It is worth the while of any one to call at the carpet and upholstery store, 123 Kearny street, between Sutter and Post.

GENUINE.—The market is glutted with an immense amount of trash in the way of groceries, damaged teas, sanded sugar, and half decayed coffee. Such articles are dear at any price. Those who deal with such a firm as Bowen Bros., southeast corner of Montgomery and California streets, can rely upon always getting genuine articles at the lowest market rates.

HOMES FOR THE PEOPLE.—A well-built and tastefully designed house often costs less than a rude unsightly building. Hoagland & Newsom, architects, at the south-west corner of Sacramento and Kearny streets, furnish architectural designs for buildings of every description, and fix the proper sum to be paid for each specification.

WIRE WORKS.—It is astonishing what a number of useful articles are made out of wire. Any one who will pay a visit to H. T. Graves' Wire Work establishment, 412 Clay street, will be amply repaid for his trouble, by inspecting the numerous wire-manufactured articles for sale there.

USEFUL HOLIDAY PRESENTS.—See inventory of dress and dry goods, laces, shawls, cloaks, etc., offered for sale during the Holiday weeks, by the extensive dry good's house of Meagher, Tauffe & Co No articles could be more acceptable as presents to ladies.

THOSE "P. B." SPECTACLES—Muller's, 205 Montgomery street, are a wonder and a puzzle. There's nothing like them for persons whose eyesight is impaired.

A NEW ENTERPRISE.—The Pacific Business College has fitted up class-rooms exclusively for the instruction of young ladies in commercial education. See advertisement.

BOYS.—H. M. Lockwood & Co., No. 624 Clay street, are selling off their large stock of boys' clothing at surprising low prices. They are closing business. See their advertisement on last page of this paper.

IF YOU WANT A KISS, TAKE IT.

THERE'S a jolly Saxon proverb
That is pretty much like this,
That a man is half in Heaven
When he has a woman's kiss;
But there's danger in delaying—
And the sweetness may forsake it;
So I tell you, bashful lover—
If you want a kiss, why take it!

Never let another fellow
Steal a march on you in this;
Never let a laughing maiden
See you spoiling for a kiss;
There's a royal way for kissing,
And the jolly ones who make it,
Have a motto that is winning—
If you want a kiss, why take it!

Any fool may face a cannon,
Any body wear a crown;
But a man must win a woman
If he'd have her for his own.
Would you have the golden apple,
You must find the tree and shake it;
If the thing is worth having,
And you want a kiss, why take it!

Who would burn upon a desert,
With a forest smiling by?
Who would give his sunny summer
For a bleak and wintry sky?
Oh, I tell you there is magic,
And you can not, can not break it;
For the sweetest part of loving
Is to want a kiss, and take it.

A TEXAS DUEL.

AN EPISODE IN THE HISTORY OF TEXAS.

DESPITE the cloud which hangs over the closing days of Sam Houston's life, I have always entertained a strong admiration for the hero of San Jacinto. I am fully conscious of his weaknesses, some of which were quite glaring, but he had a certain puck, a Jacksonian stubbornness, which commanded the respect of even his enemies.

There is an incident of Sam Houston's career which is not generally known, but which brings out as prominently as any act of his, the sterling courage to which I refer, and at the same time brings into notice one of the most extraordinary men of whom I have ever heard—that is, the individual known as Deaf Smith, the Texan Spy, an intimate friend of Sam Houston.

At the time Texas succeeded in establishing her independence the constitution provided that the city of Austin should be the permanent capital, where the public archives were to be kept; but the proviso was inserted, giving the President discretionary power to remove them temporarily to some safe point in case of danger from the inroads of a foreign enemy, or the power of a sudden insurrection.

About two years after the Texan revolution, the warlike Comanches became so daring as to commit several outrages within sight of the capital itself, whereupon Houston considered this condition of matters warranted his availing himself of the provision of the constitution already mentioned. He resided at this time in Washington, on the Brazos, from which place he dispatched a messenger, with an order commanding his subordinate functionaries to send the State records to that place, which he announced to be the seat of government pro tempore. This produced excitement in Austin. The hotel keepers, groceries, boarding-houses and gambling saloons foresaw irretrievable ruin. They gathered together and denounced the proposed "outrage." Gradually the muttering took shape, until, despite the constitutional warranty for the step, it was resolved that the thing should not be done.

A company of armed men were organized, and at their head was placed Colonel Morton, one of the most noted duelists in the Republic. He had achieved quite a fame during the war just closed, and was unquestionably a brave man, and as unprincipled as he was desperate. He was a fellow of no little conceit, and it was with no little pride he took charge of the men, who unanimously called upon him to be their leader. So noted, indeed, was Colonel Morton, that a great many were convinced that when General Houston learned that he headed this determined band, he would hasten to retract his ground and recall the offending command. But they greatly mistook the mettle of the old hero.

Colonel Morton, puffed up with his "brief authority," declared that if the President did succeed in removing the records by the power of overwhelming numbers, he would hunt him down like a wolf, and slay him wherever he found him, whether on the streets or in his bed. He went so far even as to send him a letter to that effect, and here is the identical answer he received:

"If the people of Austin do not send the archives, I shall instantly come and take them, and if Colonel Morton can kill me he is welcome to my ear cap. SAM HOUSTON."

On the reception of this answer the excitement became greater than ever. The guard was doubled around the State House, and picked sentinels were stationed along the road to the capital, the military paraded the streets from morning till night, and a caucus of the ring-leaders was held in the City Hall. Everything threatened a coming storm. Thus matters stood for several days, when the caucus at the City Hall were startled by the sudden arrival of a stranger among them. He did not knock at the door nor attempt to seek admission there, but climbed unnoticed, with the celerity of a monkey, a small oak which grew by the side of the wall, and without a word or warning sprang through a lofty window, and landed in the very room where the astonished caucus were congregated.

The stranger was clad in buckskin, carried a long and heavy rifle in his hand, wore at the bottom of his left suspender an immense bowie-knife, and held in his leathern belt a couple of enormous pistols. He was thin, tall and straight as an arrow, as lithe and supple as a panther, with a swarthy complexion, long jet black hair, a rigid, iron-like countenance, eyes of a glittering blackness, and as piercing as the point of a stilletto. His sudden appearance among them so startled them that they unconsciously grasped their arms.

"Who are you that comes among gentlemen uninvited?" thundered Colonel Morton, staring ferociously at him. The stranger turned his black eyes upon him, but the only answer he made was placing his finger upon his lips.

"Who are you? Speak or I will run you through," shouted Morton, driven to fury by the cool, contemptuous gaze of the other who now took his finger from his lip and laid it on the handle of his knife. The exasperated Colonel now drew his dagger, and was advancing upon the stranger, when several interposed and held him back. "Let him alone, Morton. Don't you see he is crazy?"

At this juncture Judge Webb stepped forward and spoke to the stranger in a kindly, respectful manner. "My good friend, I suppose you have made a mistake. This is a private meeting, where none but members are admitted."

The stranger did not seem to understand the words, but he did the conciliatory manner. His iron features relaxed somewhat, and stepping to a side table where there were writing materials, he took up a pen and rapidly traced the words, "I AM DEAF."

He then held up the paper before the spectators, as a sort of natural apology for his seeming discourtesy. Judge Webb then took up the pen and wrote: "Will you inform us what your business is with this meeting?" The stranger answered this question by handing a letter to the Judge, whose superscription was, "To the citizens of Austin." This seal was broken and it was read aloud:

"Fellow-Citizens:—Though in error, and deceived by the arts of a traitor, I will give you just three more days to decide whether you will surrender the public archives. At the end of that time, you will please let me know your decision.

SAM HOUSTON."

After the letter was read, the deaf man waited a moment or two for a reply, and then turned to leave the hall. At this juncture Col. Morton interposing, beckoned him to the table. The stranger obeyed, when Morton wrote:

"You were brave enough to insult me by your threatening looks ten minutes ago; are you brave enough to give me satisfaction?" The stranger instantly penned the reply: "I am at your service: time, sunset this evening; place, the left bank of the Colorado, opposite Austin; weapons, rifles; distance, one hundred yards. Do not fail to be in time."

The last sentence was not calculated to soothe the feelings of she irated Colonel and he compressed his lips as he read it. The next moment the stranger strodo across the floor and disappeared through the window in the same manner that he had entered.

"Is it possible, Colonel Morton, that you intend to fight that man?" exclaimed Judge Webb "He is a mute if not a maniac. Such a meeting, I fear, will tarnish the lustre of your laurels." "You are mistaken," answered Morton, with a smile; "that mute is a hero whose fame stands in the record of a dozen battles, and nearly as many bloody duels. Beside that, he is a favorite emissary and bosom friend of Honstou. If I have the good fortune to kill him, I think the president will retract his vow against venturing any more on the field of honor."

"You know the man, then? Who is he?" asked several "Deaf Smith."

"Impossible; that cannot be. Deaf Smith was killed at San Jacinto," replied Judge Webb. "There again your honor is mistaken," smiled Morton. "The story is mistaken," smiled Morton. "The story of Smith's death was a mere fiction, gotten up by Houston himself for the purpose of saving the life of his favorite from the vengeance of several Texans, on whose conduct he had acted the part of a spy. I learned the artifice over a year ago."

"Then you are a madman, yourself, Colonel. Deaf Smith was never known to miss his mark. He has been known to bring down ravens in their flight, and has picked off Comanches and Mexicans at the distance of two hundred and fifty yards.

"The thing is settled. I fancy I can do a little of that business myself."

"But for God's sake," persisted Judge Webb, becoming excited, "I don't want you to be murdered."

"Who is going to be murdered?" asked Colonel Morton, as he coolly smoked his cigar and smiled in his usual way.

"Why, you; if you undertake to fight Deaf Smith".

"The thing is all arranged, as I said a moment ago, and I wouldn't back out of it if I were certain of being shot; for what is death to dishonor?"

Toward evening a large crowd assembled at the place of meeting, and so reckless were the people, regarding the mighty issue at stake—a human life, perhaps two—that there were all manner of jokes, and not a few wagers were laid upon the result. At length, as the sun sank below the horizon, the two mortal antagonists appeared on the open space with their long rifles, and took their stations, standing back to back. At the waving of a handkerchief they began pacing off from each other, both stepping as exactly together as if they were keeping time to the tap of a drum. They completed the distance at the same second, when they wheeled so as to face each other.

As they were separated by a goodly distance, as they raised their rifles they paused a moment to make their aim. The pause was long enough for the crowd to glance from one to the other, and note the expression of their faces. Colonel Morton was calm and smiling; but the smile was a murderous one—far more terrible than the severest scowl could be. Deaf Smith, however, was as rigid and passionless as ever. His profile might have been supposed to be cut in stone, so expressionless was it. The former was attired to the finest and most expensive broadcloth, and the other in smoke tinted leather.

The next instant the two rifles exploded simultaneously. Colonel Morton, with a smothered shriek, sprang upward and fell to the ground dead. Deaf Smith stood unmoved, and began reloading his rifle, which being done, he turned and disappeared in the adjoining forest.

Three days afterward, General Houston, accompanied by Deaf Smith and ten other men, made his appearance in Austin, and, without further opposition removed the State papers.

Deaf Smith, as I remarked in another place, was one of the most extraordinary men known in the West. He appeared in Texas at an early period, and resided there until his death, which occurred somewhat over a dozen years ago. He had many ardent friends, but nothing definite was ever learned regarding his early history. Whether he ever acquainted Houston with it or not can never be known, for the old hero never enlightened me, nor any one else, so far as I can learn upon that point.

When Deaf Smith was questioned upon the point, he laid his finger upon his lip, and, if pressed, his black eyes gave such a rebuke that no one cared to question him further. Although deprived of the faculty of hearing, nature, as is often the case, seemed to compensate him, by giving him an eye as keen and as far reaching as an eagle's, and a smell as perfect as a raven's. He could decern Comanches so far off on the prairie that they were invisible to the most experienced rangers, and his friends declared that he could scent an Indian or a Mexican when miles away.

Gifted in this extraordinary manner, it will be seen that he possessed just the qualities to make him a successful spy; and his services to Houston during the Texan war for independence were invaluable. He nearly always went alone, and very rarely failed to obtain the information he desired.

FATE OF THE APOSTLES.—Matthew is supposed to have suffered martyrdom; he was slain in Ethiopia. Mark was dragged through the streets of Alexandria, Egypt, till he expired. Luke was hanged to an olive tree in Greece. John was put into a boiling cauldron at Rome, but escaped death; he died a natural death in Ephesus, Asia. James the Great was beheaded in Jerusalem. James the Less was thrown from a pinnacle and beaten to death. Andrew was crucified, and pounded while dying. Philip was beheaded. Bartholomew was skinned alive. Thomas was run through with a lance. Jude was shot through with arrows. Simon was crucified. Matthias was stoned. Barnabas was stoned to death. Paul was beheaded by the tyrant Nero, at Rome.

DR. PEET has discovered a very curious fact—that deaf persons can feel a drum when beaten. They feel the reverberation as if striking the soles of their feet and passing up to the region of the heart. He has made a curious application of the discovery, having an alphabet which he beats on the drum, and the mutes, with their backs turned, write the word spelled in that way.

THE word "Tariff" comes from the old Moorish fortress of Tarifa, on a promontory at the straits of Gibraltar. The Moors occupying this fortress exacted a duty on all merchandise coming in or going out of the Mediterranean Sea.

IT is asserted that magnets lose almost their entire power in the vicinity of graveyards, and electrical machines are similarly affected under the same circumstances.

THE heart of a coquette, like the tail of a lizard, always grows again after she has lost it.

THE NEW COMERS AT CLAPP'S CORNER.

THE hotel at Clapp's Corner, so every one said, was just the place for children. The low, wide plazza which extended entirely round the house, was prime for playing horse, and the smooth, level lawn, was perfectly charming lor the wee tots who could just toddle alone.

"It's a safe, wholesome, healthy place," said sensible fathers and mothers. So whole families came there every summer, with a rush and filled every room, up to the enrner attics, and I am convinced that at no other place in the world, not even at the orphan asylumns and charity schools, could so many children he found at one time and together.

Through every clink and crack they were peeping, up stairs, down stairs, through every entry they were chasing, and ronnd and round the piazza they were racing; the lawn was as thick with them as a honey-pot with flies, and the noise—it was as good as the Falls of Niagara, all the time.

The sensible mothers smiled at the uproar, and dressed their hoys in roomy pantaloons, so that they might kick up the dust the better, and didn't tell the girls not to get into the dirt, and eoddled their own babies and rode them on a trot horse to "Banbury Cross," an unheard-of number of times, every day; indeed it was hardly worth while to briug the nurses, they took care of the children so little.

As for the sensible fathers they wore linen coats, and told the young folks to "go it," and were always on hand to rig kites, and push swings, and tie knots in broken reins. Clapp's Corner was great for broken reins.

You can imagine, by what I have said, how very free and easy, and jolly everything was. Everybody went in for comfort and a good time, and nohody pretended to he fashionable or put on airs.

There were the Saltonstalls, who had brought up a splendid span of horses and half a dozen ponies (these last for the children), and who were worth a mint. Mrs. Saltonstall was as plain and quiet as could he, though every one knew she might have covered herself with diamonds, if she had wanted to. The Saltonstall children too, were just like the other children; they played hard, got their laces dirty, tore their clothes, with no idea of feeling hetter than their neighhors. The Saltonstall children numbered ten.

Then there were the Calcords with eight children, the oldest only thirteen, who helouged to the very "fast society." Papa Calcord, as all the children in the hotel called him, was a great favorite with all the little folks. He was nearly related to a great English lord, bnt he played with all the babies, and kept them screaming with delight; for he would neigh like a horse, and hray like a donkey, and squeal like a pig, and crow like a rooster.

There were also, the Thalers with two pair of twins; the Ricker family, that counted seven children. all strapping boys; the Morgan family, of seven girls, all solid families, hesides a great many others of the same sort.

So you see, that at Clapp's Corner, there was plenty of money and backbone, hut no fuss and feathers. Folks who wanted to show off and cut a dash never came there. They left this place to Young America and the glory of hahydom.

How the children enjoy it! How fat they grew, how hrown they burnt, how hungry they got! And at meal-times, how they did eat. They handled their knives, and forks, and spoons, in a way that meant husiness. They went into the victuals, or rather the victuals went into them, in a hurry.

One supper-time when they were gobbling away for dear life, as usual, a little girl, a stranger, stole gently through the doorway. She glided down the whole length of the dining-room, and everybody had a good chance to see her.

I don't think there ever was a more lovely, delicate-looking child, than this Madeleine Le Fevre. Her eyes were a soft blue, her hair was a pale gold, and drooped to her shoulders in large, loose curls, and her skin was faintly pink, like the leaves of blushing roses. They all stared at her in wonder.

"Who can she he?" said Mrs. Saltonstall. "Who does she belong to?" For Madeleine was all alone.

Nobody could answer Mrs. Saltonstall, for nobody had ever seen the child hefore.

"She don't look much like us," said Mrs. Thalers, glancing at her two pair of fat twins, and then across at the ten bouncing Saltonstalls, in their uniforms of brown Hollaud. The new-comer had on a wrought India muslin, which must have cost at least a hundred dollars.

The children noticed how daintily she picked at her food, like a little bird, how she only nibbled the corners off her cake, and sipped her milk hy spoonfuls. Not at all like the way they crammed the things into their own mouths. When she had finished, one of the waiters brought her a steaming cup of tea, which she took in her own hands and carried away.

After supper everybody went out on the piazza. Mothers and fathers sat and watched the sunset; the smaller fry hopped and romped hy way of settling what they had just eaten; and the smallest fry of all was walked gently up and down in the arms of their nurses.

All at once, through the hum and murmur of voices, and the merry shouts of the children, a clear, sweet melody arose. It was a sort of evening prayer or hymn, very soothing and softly lulling.

It was a child, evidently, that was singing, and all the piazza hushed into silence at once; and before the entrancing lullby was finished, the babies had fallen fast asleep, with a hroad smile on their dumpling faces.

Then came the buzz of inquiries.

"Who can it be? What child can sing like that?" everybody asked of everyhody else. And one and all answered, "I'm sure, I don't know."

Finally, Mrs. Saltonstall exclaimed, "I have it. It must he the new-comer, the little girl with the India dress."

"Yes, yes, it must be," assented the rest.

By that time, it was dusk, and the children's hed time.

In the middle of the night, Mrs. Saltonstall, who was a light sleeper, was awakened by a stir and moving in the room next to hers. Everything being so quiet, she could plainly hear the murmur of voices, with every lew minutes a slight moan, as of some one in pain.

The night-lamp was burning dimly, on the table, and Mrs. Saltonstall getting out of bed, turned the flame higher, and then opened her watch to see what time of night it really was. It was just twelve, and she was about turning the lamp down again, when there was a low rap on the door.

"Who is it?" she asked, quickly.

"It is I, Madeleine Le Fevre," was the answer; "mamma is so siek, I am frightened, and I saw the light under your door."

Mrs. Saltonstall thrust her feet into a pair of slippers, and wrapping a dressing-gown about her, hasteued to Mrs. Le Fevre's assistance.

She found that lady suffering from an attack of pleurisy, and drawing her breath with difficulty. She was hardly ahle to speak.

"Stay hy her," she said, to Madeleine. "I will he back in a minute."

She was as good as her word, and she brought with her a strip of eloth spread with mustard, which she applied to Mrs. Le Fevre's side. In a little while the lady was easier, and presently sank into a comfortahle sleep.

Then Mrs. Saltonstall arose to go, and Madeleine thanked her, with tears in her eyes, in a voice soft and sweet as musie.

"Was it you we heard singing, just after supper?" asked Mrs. Saltonstall.

"I do not know," answered she, modestly; "mamma wanted me to sing her to sleep, the journey had tired her so, and I sung her a cradle song."

Madeleine was as beautiful in her night-gown, and her curls tueked away under a little white cap, as in her India wrought-muslin.

"If your mother is sick again, call me," said Mrs. Saltonstall, when she went away.

All through the rest of the night she dreamed of little Madeleine's rose-leaf face and soft, sweet voice.

The next night, after supper, the piazza was deserted. Everybody went into tho parlor, for Madeleine sang again at Mrs. Saltonstall's request. Then Madeleine's mother, who was remarkably well, considering, played waltzes, and polkas, and all sorts of dance-tunes, and all the children went to dancing. And alter this there was music and dancing every evening. Sometimes it was kept up pretty late. Madeleine, though dressed elegantly at all times, was dressed anew for the evening in thin, airy tissues, with all sorts of ribbons, and scarfs, and sashes, and ends.

Little by little, the other children followed her lead, till finally the social hops became regular balls. The misses appeared in the parlors in fancy silks and gauze muslins flounced to the waist, and the lads wore patent-leather pumps and white kids. The sensible mothers and fathers shook their heads over it.

"It is not so good for the children," said they, "as the old times, when they went to hed before dark."

But, still, it was a pretty sight, and the young folks were enchanted with it, and the pretty little Madeleine had set it going, and who could cross her? One day Mrs. Le Fevre proposed getting up tableaux for the children. Madeleine clapped her hands.

"O, how beautiful," she cried. "I will be the angel of mercy, mamma, just as I was hefore, and we will have a curtain, and a red light, and a lace screen to make it look softer."

All the other children caught fire at her words, and for the next week, nothing was thought of or talked of or dreamed of, hut the coming tableaux. Little Jennie Saltonstall and Mrs. Thaler's chubby Susie were going to he "Babes in the Wood," all covered over with leaves; "The Village School," had as many as twenty hoys and girls in it, and Mr. Calcord himself had voluntcered to be schoolmaster, while his oldest hopeful, Peyton Calcord, was to he the dunce, and wear the fool's cap; then there was to be "The old woman that lived in a shoe, who had so many children she didn't know what to do."

There was a great deal of fun ahout this last tahleaux. The children gave out, that the carpenter down in the village was building a wooden shoe "as big as a steeple," and half the children in the house were going to he stuffed into it, hesides a great many more to be scrambling up the sides; and Madeleine was to be "the old woman" in cap and spectacles.

The tableau, however, which made tho most talk, was the last one of all. "The angel of Mercy." Madeleine was the angel, and everybody was hunting over the hen-coops for feathers to help make her wings. She was to have one crown on her head, and to hold a second in her hand, and these crowns were to he made of Mrs. Saltonstall's diamonds. The diamonds were what made the talk. They were famous diamonds, a fortune in themselves. Everyhody was surprised she had brought them with her; but she had conceived the idea of Madeleine's wearing them herself.

Well, to cut the matter short, the great night came at last. The audience was almost too hig for the parlors, but somehow everybody squeezed in, and the youthful performers won generous applause.

When the curtain rolled up on the Angel of Mercy, "Oh-h!" said every one, under their hreath; and then there was a dead hush.

Madeleine looked as though she were floating in the air. Her great white wings were outspread, her head was bent forward, and her flaxen curls drooped over her face. She wore a long robe of white, loosely confined about her waist with a girdle of gold, and over her forehead blazed and flashed Mrs. Saltonstall's diamonds.

They crowned her with living light; they shed over her face a radiant halo, that made it truly angelic.

Bending over, as I have already said, she held in her right hand another circlet of Mrs. Saltonstall's priceless gems. Thcse last were raised just ahove the head of a person who lay on the ground, with her eyes closed, as if utterly exhausted.

"Would you ever thiuk that was Mrs. Le Fevre, lying there?" said Laura Saltonstall, in a whisper. "See! her hands look as though they had been scratched with thorns, and her dress is torn, and her face is so pale and weary!"

"How it shines, ma!" said Susie Thalers, hlinking her fat eyes. "What does it mean?"

"Sh-h!" answered her mother; and then, putting her mouth to Susie's ear, "Madeleine's mother is somehody who has had a very hard time, and so Madeleine has come to crown her, and make her a heautiful angel, like herself."

When the curtain rolled down, the ceiling was almost taken off with the clapping, and the floor almost sunk through with the stamping, and of course the "Angel of Mercy" was done again.

After the curtain had rolled down for the second time, folks sat motionless a minute, in a trance of delight; then Mrs. Saltonstall and some of the other ladies started for the dressiug-room.

And now came conlusion and dismay, for Madeleine and her mother were not to be found.

"They have stolen the diamonds and gone!" cried Mrs. Saltonstall.

There was a universal exclamation of horror, but this was the truth.

Mrs. Le Peure had planned it well. She and Madeleine had been all alone in the last tahleau. Not a soul had heen left in the dressing-room, or behind the scenes. Every one had rushed to the front, to see "the Angel of Mercy," and during the minute all had sat spell-bound with its beauty, the two had made good their escape, with Mrs. Saltonstall's diamonds.

Beautiful little Madeleine, with her rose-leaf skin and flute-like voice, was only a thief! It was a pretty hard pill for the jolly folks at Clapp's Corner to swallow, and they made a dreadful firy face over it. And that was all they eould do, for Madeleiue nor her mother was ever seen afterwards.

SENTIMENT AND FACT.—Miss Goodman tells us how the English Sisters of Mercy observed a Romish Chaplain for some months to pass away the time in tending a pet lamb, whieh he led ahout by a scarlet string; and how, in the early morning, he might hc seen gathering the rose-leaves with the dew yet upon them, as a breakfast for the gentle creature. They were quite eoncerned, one morning, at perceiviug the priest about to take his walk unaccompanied by his favorite, and passed, in haste, across the hall to inquire for it; to their great griel he informed them that the lamb was killed. They waited for the particulars of his untimely fate, eoncluding the savage dogs to he guilty; but the most unromantie father went on to say, "I found it in excellent coudition; feeding an an animal on rose-leaves certainly improves the flavor of the meat." Think, says Dr. Boyd, of St. Andrews, of the great author, walking in the summer fields, and saying to his wife, as he looked at the frisky lambs, that they seemed so innocent and happ", he did not wonder that in all ages the lamb had been taken as the emblem of happiness and innocence. Think of the revulsion in his mind when the thoughtful lady replied, after some reflection, "Yes, lamb is very nice, especially with mint sauce!"

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS, J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO,.....SATURDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1867.

DICKENS' NOVELS—GLOBE EDITION.*

IT is not often the case that the books that most charmed us at fifteen, retain their fascination in middle life. We remember the time when there was no poetry for us like Moore's, and no novels like Capt. Marryatt's, and Bulwer's in his earlier style. The prime favorites of that period, seem, for the most part, stale and unprofitable now, and those who fill the shrines that they left vacant, would have failed to interest us then. But to this there are two notable exceptions—Walter Scott, and Dickens. "Old Mortality," and "Nicholas Nickleby," were among the first novels we ever read, and we have recently re-read them, with a great increase of enjoyment. Tempted by the fair large print of the Globe Edition, and our old appetite having been aroused by "Nickleby" taken as a preliminary morsel, we have since devoured "Chuzzlewit," "Dombey and Son," and several other volumes that have been published in this series, and we do not regard the time as wasted. We find Tom Pinch and Mark Tapley, Captain Cuttle, and Toots, more delightful than ever, while we discover manifold beauties, and strokes of genius on almost every page that we have never before appreciated. One thing in Dickens that has specially impressed us, during this recent re-reading, is the amazing breadth and scope of his genius. Thackeray, who has so frequently been compared and contrasted with him, is narrowly restricted in the sphere of his power, and notwithstanding his unapproached pre eminence as a satirist, (unapproached, unless it shall be thought that Anthony Trollope is an exception) cannot challenge comparison with him as a novelist. Thackeray is at home in conventional and artificial life, and can analyze and portray such characters as flourish there with the hand of a master; but Dickens is at home in all nature, on sea or land, in town or country. Thackeray has neither dramatic nor descriptive power. The range of his sympathies and of his insight is narrow; but within that range he is unequalled either for treatment or style. This Shakspearian breadth of power and sympathy in Dickens is illustrated in the immense variety of his creations, each perfectly distinct and individual, and also in the ease with which he moves from the ludicrous to the terrible, from a squalid city scene among the slums of London, to some country village, from those delightful family pictures which abound in his Christmas stories, to others full of the elements of tragedy and terror, such as his descriptions of the Duff Gordon riots in "Barnaby Rudge," of the murderer Sykes seeking refuge on the house-tops from the infuriated mob, or of the rising of the storm in which Steerforth perishes.

Another quality in Dickens, that has impressed us more powerfully than ever during the recent renewal of our acquaintance with his writings, is his thorough originality. To us, he seems by far the most original of all English novelists—certainly the most original since Scott. His entire method and spirit, as well as his style, are his own. He is indebted to no predecessor for his characters, his plots, his ideas of life, society, and human nature, for his peculiar humor, his idiosyncratic style, or even for the least of those exquisite felicities of phrase, that sparkle on almost every page of his novels. It is vain to search in any previous writer of fiction, for such descriptions as those of "little Paul's" decline and death, Carker's flight from Dijon, the murder of Montague Tigg, by Jonas Chuzzlewit, and the subsequent scenes until the arrest of the murderer, or for such characters as Pecksniff, Micawber, Cuttle, Dick Swiveller, Mrs. Gamp, Horace Skimpole, Sam Weller, and a host of other originals, scarcely less noteworthy.

But after all, the noblest characteristic of these writings, is the genuine sentiment of humanity that pervades them all; the wide-ranging human sympathy, the tender, and even loving toleration of frailties that provoke the scorn of the cynic; the gentle dealing with the weaker brothers of the race. In fact, the author seems to take a special delight in delineating characters of the class that combine goodness of heart, with a greater or less degree of mental imbecility, and to regard these creatures of his imagination with peculiar affection. In the hands of most novelists, characters of the intellectual grade of Toots, Smike, and Miss Flite, would be mere butts, or at best objects of scornful pity; but Dickens makes them not only inexpressibly ludicrous, but absolutely loveable. When Toots, after confiding to Captain Cuttle his love for Florence, says, "If you could see my legs when I take off my boots, you'd form some idea of what unrequited affection is," or "If by the sacrifice of all my property, I could get transmigrated into Miss Dombey's dog—I—I really think I should never leave off wagging my tail," the reader feels sympathetic rather than contemptuous, and is moved to admire the lover's devotion and constancy, rather than to despise his mental feebleness. At any rate, it is evident that this is the attitude in which the author designs to present him. Florence herself regards him in sincere good faith, as worthy of her friendship, and treats him uniformly with a consideration and earnest appreciation of his good qualities, that are unmingled with any touch of ridicule.

But we commenced this article with no other intention than that of speaking in the most familiar and informal manner, of the impressions produced in our own mind by the renewal of our acquaintance with these fascinating creations of the genius of the great story teller of the age, after an interval of many years. We had no thought of being betrayed into anything in the shape of criticism or disquisition; and we almost feel like apologizing for these hasty and desultory observations upon a writer whose extraordinary genius has been the theme of the first critics of our day, and whose place at the head of living English novelists is so well settled as to cause such poor acknowledgment of his merits as we have made, to seem superfluous and officious.

* Works of Charles Dickens, Globe Edition. Illustrated from designs by Darley and Gilbert. Dombey and Son; Martin Chuzzlewit; Bleak House; Little Dorrit; Tale of Two Cities. New York: Published by Hurd & Houghton, 459 Broome street, 1867. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

GEO. WASHINGTON MOON AS AN EPIC POET.

WHEN a truculent and remorseless critic, whose sanctum is haunted by the spectres of slaughtered poets and of writers of high and low degree, himself ventures upon the perilous path of authorship, it behooves him to be prepared for the worst. What eye so vigilant in the detection of blemishes, as that of him who has been made to writhe beneath the scalpel of the critic, and whose prayer "O that mine adversary would write a book!" is at last granted? Mr. G. Washington Moon, the author of "The Dean's English," is popularly supposed to have figuratively annihilated Dean Alford, the author of "The Queen's English;" immediately after which feat, in the exhilaration of victory, and eager for a fresh adversary upon whom to exercise his prowess as a grammarian and syllable splitter, Mr. Moon flies across the Atlantic, and pounces upon Mr. Gould's "Good English," which he proceeds to tear to pieces in the spirit of a dyspeptic pedagogue criticising the first attempt at "composition" of a dull urchin in the fourth form. And now Mr. Moon has turned author; has actually essayed to produce an epic poem; has produced it—and O, with what feelings of exultation will Dean Alford peruse it! His adversary has "written a book," and we are sure that the Dean will feel that all his wrongs are amply avenged.

But Mr. Moon's epic, though an utter failure as a poem, is not without its value as an illustration of the perils incurred by grammarians and critics, when they assume the role of the author. "Elijah the Prophet; An Epic Poem," is the title of the work which the bold assailant of Dean Allord and Mr. Gould, has had the hardihood to offer to the world, as if to furnish his enemies an opportunity for what the French call un eclabante revanche. The following specimens of the poem, we take from excerpts which we find in the New York Round Table:

"Elijah, who no sympathy could feel
For Baal's priests, still studied to obtain
Respect for kings. Exemplary in zeal,
And preaching ever by some deed,
He ran before King Ahab's steed—
And flying at its utmost speed—from Carmel to Jezreel."

"God's hand was on the prophet's, and he flew,
As if his feet had wings;
And though long ages have rolled by since then,
That lesson of God's prophet unto men is still divinely true.
Truth changes not with lapse of time!
No; ever as we higher climb
The mount of years, there rings,
Borne upward as on trumpet blast,
This lesson from the mighty past: 'Respect is due to kings.'"

We ought, by the way, to remember that Mr. Moon is under the singular impression that his poem is in the Spenserian stanza in which the "Fairie Queen," and "Childe Harold" are written.

It almost seems impossible that Mr. Moon should have succeeded by arranging his lines so as to produce to the eye a resemblance to the Spenserian stanza, in persuading himself that he was in reality employing that stanza. Yet he does seem to have thus deluded himself. The stanza last quoted is Spenserian to the eye alone. What it really is, will be apparent, when it is properly arranged, thus:

God's hand was on the prophets, and he flew
As if his feet had wings,
And though long ages have rolled by since then,
That lesson of God's prophet unto men
Is still divinely true.
Truth changes not with lapse of time.
No; ever as we higher climb
The mount of years, there rings
Borne upward as on trumpet blast,
This lesson from the mighty past:
Respect is due to Kings.

The following is not only a remarkable specimen of Spenserian verse, but it is quite astounding as an utterance of the epic muse:

Alas,
To think that e'er there should have been days when
A man was far less cared for than an ass!
But there are Ahabs now, as there were then,
Who more for mere dumb brutes care than for their fellow-men.

The Round Table, to which Mr. Moon has been a regular contributor for more than a year, deals very gingerly with "Elijah," and declares that though it "is not a great poem, it bears evidences all over it that it is not its author's best." By what singular process this conclusion is reached, (since it is his only poem, and therefore, to the ordinary apprehension, both his best and his worst,) the reviewer of the Round Table omits to inform us. But the pedagogical style in which our author has handled other writers, and the glaring blemishes by which "Elijah" is disfigured, judging from the extracts given in the Round Table, lead us to anticipate that it will not meet with the same indulgent criticism in less friendly quarters.

THE LAST GRAND JURY.

THE article in the last issue of the Californian, reviewing the report of the Grand Jury for the September Term, has elicited a communication in reply from a member of that body. We spoke of the report in question as exhibiting "some significant illustrations of the lack of real thoroughness that habitually characterizes the investigations of grand juries and boards of visitors, and of the easy reliance placed by them upon the representation of the functionaries upon whose conduct it is their duty to report."

As one of these "illustrations," we alluded to the circumstance that in speaking of the condition of the County Jail, the report, after stating that some prisoners under sentence for petty crimes made complaints in regard to the food or treatment, goes on to say: "The jury, however, became fully satisfied before leaving the jail that the complaints were utterly groundless. The food provided is by contract, and the keepers assured us was generally of good quality."

And upon this, we communicated as follows: "Here, it is assured with simplicity, which however engaging, seems rather out of place in a body performing inquisitorial functions, that the 'assurances of the keepers' furnish a perfectly legitimate and satisfactory species of evidence upon which to decide a point involving the question of their misconduct. It can scarcely be necessary to suggest that if such 'assurances' are to have any weight, visits of examinations to prisons and insane asylums for the purpose of discovering and checking abuses are another formality that may be advantageously dispensed with altogether."

In reply to this criticism, our correspondent says that a prisoner told the jury that he was allowed but eight ounces of bread daily, and not a pound loaf; that the jury then procured a loaf, weighed it, and ascertained that it was a full pound in weight; that this loaf was then exhibited to the complaining prisoner, who admitted that it was of the same size as those served to him. Our correspondent goes on to furnish other details of a similar character, calculated to show that the Grand Jury were more careful and thorough in their investigations than we gave them credit for having been. The communication also alludes to the barbarities practiced at the Industrial School, some of which were exposed in the report, and concludes with a reminder that the directors of that institution have not as yet deigned to take any notice whatever of the grave charges made against them by the Grand Jury, and that it does not appear whether or not the abuses mentioned in the report have been corrected.

The tone of the communication upon which we have been commenting, seems to imply an impression on the part of our correspondent, that we had censured the Grand Jury for the September Term, for the careless and inefficient manner in which they discharged their duties. Such an impression, if it exists, is entirely erroneous. On the contrary, we gave that body credit for exhibiting a greater degree of zeal and energy than had been generally characteristic of their predecessors. Such language as the following, occurring at the close of our article, is assuredly not the language of censure: "The Grand Inquest for the September term, seems to have been animated by a highly commendable spirit in its investigations. Its members seem to have been humane, zealous, and fearless men, with no disposition to 'whitewash' any one, and with no hesitation about exposing such abuses as they discovered." It is true, we added that in our opinion, such inquisitorial bodies can never become the terror to evil doers which they were designed to be, without a larger measure of that sagacity which is mingled with suspicion, than seems to have characterized the last Grand Inquest. But this is an opinion which there is nothing in the communication of our correspondent to change or modify.

Frank Bret Harte is about to bring out a small volume of his poems as a Christmas book, under the title of The Lost Galleon, and Other Tales. It is to be elegantly illustrated, and will be ready in time for the holidays.

[For the Californian.]

FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

It is a matter for congratulation to both the friends and enemies of Female Suffrage, that the bold and aggressive action of its advocates has at length resulted in bringing the question into something like a distinct shape. For a long time the idea underlying this question, like an ill-built fire, has been smouldering under the mass of other social and political doctrines, only bursting forth occasionally in a flame of vehement and ill-timed protest, to be as suddenly smothered with ridicule and contempt.

For a considerable period it seemed to number among its advocates only the philosophers and the fools; and as the latter of course made the most noise, it came to be regarded as a matter germane to them alone, and worthy of support from no other class. It is even now associated in the popular mind with spiritualism, free-love, and other crazy heresies; and the phrase "Woman's Rights," the very mention of which ought to call into our cheeks the blush of shame that it should ever have been necessary to invent it, has acquired by association a signification little short of contemptible. But fanaticism being essentially progressive, and progress being truth, it frequently happens that a great truth is first seen—dimly and distortedly indeed, by the very class who have the most erroneous notions of its worth and its bearings on social problems, and who are least capable of bringing it clearly into the view of others. Their misdirected zeal calls down ridicule, not on themselves alone, but on the real truth, whose skirts they have seized. But the cant of fanaticism is limited in its influence to that class whose opinions either for the right or the wrong, have least weight; and the calm, dispassionate and abstruse reasonings of the teachers of ethics, are addressed to a very limited audience of mere scholars—men of thought rather than of action, whose influence, more powerful, indeed, than that of many other classes, requires a long time for its full effect. It seems somewhat surprising, therefore, that the doctrine under consideration, having its dual origin thus at the two extremes of the intellectual system, should have made such assured progress toward the centre—the great heart of society. It can scarcely be explained on any other hypothesis than that it was somehow in accord with a strong but previously unexpressed feeling pervading society, and needing only an opportunity to be heard. This feeling I believe to be a vague consciousness that with all our boasted civilization and our gallantry, there is something essentially wrong in the condition of woman among us. The whole question is a new one; indeed its advocacy with anything like consistency and definiteness of opinion and purpose, is a thing of the present decade. Like all reformatory ideas it has had, and still has to encounter popular misapprehension, and consequent ridicule and contempt. The worshipers of The Great Established have assailed it with their usual weapons, and with the usual result. But this creature of a day already numbers among its earnest supporters many of the best men and much of the keenest intelligence of the age. It would naturally be expected that among a people like ours, whose restless activity is constantly hewing out new models of thought—who are perhaps more nearly free from the tyranny of precedent than any other, an idea at once novel and progressive would secure its greatest growth and acquire its maximum influence. But with female suffrage such has not been the case; in England the principle has obtained a wider recognition than here. The pressing importance of other national questions has operated here to prevent the agitation of this. But beyond this there is a still greater cause for the difference in its advocacy in England by the powerful intellect of Mr. John Stuart Mill, who carried it boldly into the halls of Parliament, and compelled his more timid fellow-members to treat it with something of the consideration it deserves. Had the cause such an advocate here, we might reasonably hope soon to see it commanding greater attention than at present it seems likely to receive. Meantime, however, its open espousal by such men as Chief Justice Chase, Wendell Phillips, Judge Underwood, Senator Wade, George Wm. Curtis, and Henry Ward Beecher, is having its effect, and we may hope at no distant day to see it brought squarely to a decision in the only practical manner known to our system, viz.: incorporated into the platform of one of our great political parties. Pending this it is to be hoped that both its enemies may be heard from, that there may be intelligent action when the time arrives.

A. G. B.

The lecture of the Hon. Thomas Fitch, on "The Coming Empire," delivered at Mechanics' Hall, on Thursday evening, was well attended. In rhetorical brilliancy and oratorical power, the lecture has not for many years been equalled in San Francisco.

Opposition via Panama.—The North American Steamship Company will despatch the America for Panama on Saturday, December 14th, to connect with the Santiago on the Atlantic side. The Nicaragua line will be kept up as usual.

An eating establishment in London recently had on its bill of fare "roast lion."

ON THE WAR-PATH.

THE EDITORIAL EXCURSION TO THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS—WE SEND A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT—AFFECTING INCIDENTS OF HIS DEPARTURE.

THERE is a happy mingling of humor and satire in the following little sketch, which we copy from the "Fat Contributor's Column," in the Cincinnati Times:

It was an affecting scene on Saturday afternoon, when our correspondent took his departure from the Times office for Chicago, to "join the innumerable caravan" of editors who leave to day for the Rocky Mountains. The somewhat too ostentatious welcome which the red denizens of the Plains are in the habit of extending to their pale face brothers who visit them, renders it not altogether certain that we shall ever see our correspondent again—at least not with his scalp on; hence the mournful and touching solicitude with which we saw him take his departure. He had been eager to go for some time, and had said that nothing would give him such inexpressible delight as to meet a dozen or two of those infernal redskins, single handed, and wipe them out—those were his words, "wipe them out!"

He has been seen in the back office fiercely wielding a hatchet that "Dan" uses to break up coal with, and hacking away at bags of waste paper as though he was tomahawking imaginary foes. One day he was observed before a glass trying the effects of yellow ochre and Venetian red upon his face, and several times he has startled all the inmates of the building, by what Carlyle would call "well authenticated" war whoops. Once he stole up behind a telegraph boy, as he was leaving the office, and made a fierce but ineffectual attempt to scalp him with the poker, and it was no unusual thing to see him practicing a war dance down in the alley. "Eb's" blood was up, and it seemed that our Indian difficulties were soon to receive at his hands a swift and sanguinary solution.

But when the period arrived for him to start on his bloody mission, he showed signs of weakening in his resolutions. He expressed doubt about the excursion amounting to much, and offered to give way if any other member of the establishment wanted to go. No one desired to embrace the proffered opportunity, and so he began the somewhat mournful task of preparing to depart. He had changed his tactics entirely, throwing away a case knife that he had sharpened in one of his sanguinary intervals for scalping purposes, and laying in a large stock of wampum, beads, return balls, dancing jacks, marbles, wire puzzles, toy bugles, photograph albums, and other trinkets calculated to please the childish and untutored mind of the savage, hoping thereby to propitiate them if captured, or ransom his scalp, to be sent home by Adams Express, if that essential article should become the red man's prey.

When he appeared at the office to bid us a final adieu, he presented a striking appearance. In order to deceive the savages into the belief that he was "one of 'em," he had encased his feet in moccasins, and wore leather leggings laced up with strips of raw buffalo hide. Around his shoulders he wore an Indian blanket from the battle-field of Shiloh, he had streaked his face a little, and had tied up a few thin hairs on the top of his head with a red ribbon, with a little bunch of feathers woven in that wore a drooping aspect. He attempted to look cheerful and smile, but it was a ghastly effort.

Our business manager gave him a letter of introduction to "Spotted Tail," which he is to present in case he is captured and brought before that noted chief. It was prepared, at the dictation of the departing correspondent himself, and assured variegated narrative, otherwise "Spotted Tail," that while as an individual his sympathies had ever been with the red man, and he had persistently burned at the wrongs that had been heaped upon his race by the ever aggressive whites, as an editor he had often paid a high tribute to the noble savage, and advocated the utmost leniency and consideration in treating with them—and the greatest possible frequency in standing treat. In case that nothing but the scalp could satisfy him, "Spotted Tail" was enjoined to perform the operation as tenderly as possible, and not disturb his back hair, with the assurance that the favor would be reciprocated whenever opportunity offered. Being too old and tough for stake, we are in no fear of his being led to it.

In presenting the letter, the business manager made a little speech, urging him not to falter on the war path, but to worthily represent the Times office in any emergency that may offer. Some stamped envelopes were given him in which to send home any scalps that he might be able to secure along the route. He bore up under the address until he was urged to leave us a lock of his top hair, when, suddenly overcome by the terrible significance of the suggestion, he clutched convulsively at his scalp, sat down upon his carpet-bag and burst into an uncontrolable flood of tears.

There wasn't a dry eye in the office. At length he rose to his feet, wiped away the tears with a piece of red calico that he had intended as one of his presents, and gave a hysterical whoop to show that he wasn't entirely subdued by the horrors of his situation. We painted his face again, where the paint had been washed away by the briny flood, and he prepared to depart.

Some kind hand had filled his pouch with parched corn, his powder flask with corn that would parch almost any thing, and supplied him with a bow and arrow, which in feeble abstraction he asked if it "had been loaded."

To more fully conform to the Indian style, he drops his real name during his great Indian invasion, and calls himself "All-Day-With-Him." He thinks this will have its effect upon the savage mind. In parting with the leading editor, he urged him to advocate conciliation towards the red men.

He required assistance to help him into the hack that was waiting to carry him to the depot. The back was handsomely decorated with bead work, gorgeous Indian blankets, turkey feathers, tin tomahawks, etc., etc. The driver, a Milesian gentleman, who had been dressed up in Injun toggery for the occasion, but whose short clay pipe detracted somewhat from the dignity of the character, mounted his seat, our correspondent, too full for utterance, waved a silent adieu, and away they drove to the depot, the depressing influence of the scene being enlivened a little by wild whoops from a lot of assembled newsboys.

He painted his face likean Injun
And silently stole away.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Leyton Hall. By Mark Lemon, editor of London Punch, and author of "Loved at Last," "Wait For the End," etc. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Brothers. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

Paul and Virginia. By J. H. B. Bernadon De St. Pierre, with illustrations by Augusta Hoppin. New York: Published by Hurd & Houghton, 459 Broome street. 1866. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

The Hermitage. And Other Poems. By Edward Rowland Sill. San Francisco: H. H. Bancroft & Co. 1868.

"Jessica's First Prayer."—We have received from the publisher, Henry Hoyt, 9 Cornhill, Boston, through Chillin Beach, 34 Montgomery street, a book entitled "Jessica's First Prayer," by the author of "Fern's Hollow." It is one of the Sunday School series of juvenile religious works. "Jessica's First Prayer" is one of the most charming juvenile books we have ever read. The characters of Jessica, and Daniel the coffee-stand keeper, are drawn by no inexperienced hand. We know of no book which we can more cordially recommend as a holiday present than "Jessica's First Prayer." It is entirely free from the sickly sentimentality and mock religion which too often disfigure religious works written for children.

"The Esquimaux," is the title of a monthly periodical published at Port Clarence, R. A. and Plover Bay, E. S., by John J. Harrington, during the years 1866 and 1867. Its contributors consisted of the members of the expedition under Col. Bulkley, for the purpose of connecting the two continents by telegraph via the Amoor River and Behrings Straits. At the earnest solicitation of many who witnessed the inception and close of the work, it has been presented to the public in its present elegant and attractive form. Considering the circumstances under which it was produced, it is a highly creditable publication, and must possess a peculiar interest for all who were connected with the expedition, and their friends.

The Musical Monthly.—We have received the Musical Monthly for December 1st, published by Mr. Gray, 609 and 613 Clay street. It contains two pages of original music: "The Bridal Veil Schottische," by Geo. T. Evans. The editor is enthusiastic in his praise of Miss. Dingeon, who had a complimentary concert given her at Platt's Hall on the 20th ult. He does not believe in faint phrase. He says:

For M'dlle Dingeon we have hardly anything but praise. Hers is the sweetest voice we have yet heard on the Pacific Coast: Young and fresh, and delightfully pure. The weakness which it shows in certain passages is, we believe, wholly due to youth, and for this complaint the cure is, alas! inevitable. M'dlle Dingeon has had the advantage of considerable training in Europe; but, her voice is her own.

Luck.—We believe in luck; believe in lucky stars. Some people are always lucky—never fail to get a drawing-ticket in a lottery—are always finding something—never lose anything. From infancy to old age, everything goes right. The lucky boy wins all his playmates' marbles—never gets thrashed at school, although the ring-leader of every plot, while his innocent playfellows get all the birching—has the prettiest girl for a sweetheart—never gets the measels—never stubs his toes—gets all the rewards of merit—the girls bring him "goodies"—the boys lend him their skates and sleds and jackknives, and forget to ask for 'em again—never tore his trowsers—never had to do chores—never had to sleep alone. When a man, never got euchred—never paid any tax—never sat on a jury—never was asked to "subscribe"—never was called upon to make a speech—never wrote for the newspapers—in a word, he's one of those lucky dogs you occasionally meet, with whom luck is so natural that if he were to fall and break his neck, he'd not die.

People seldom improve when they have no other model but themselves to copy after.

ADVERTISING ADVENTURES.

FEELING that a lack of profitable employment kept many of my young friends in the way of that celebrated Satanic personage who "always finds something for idle hands to do," I sent five dollars to some philosopher in Maine who was willing to communicate a method of making an easy livelihood to all young men of enterprising habits possessed of a V. Back came a book by return of post. The volume was labelled "Typographia." On opening it a slip of paper was found inserted between the title page and the blank leaves, and on the slip was written :

"You can be either a type-setter, a proof-reader, or a foreman, by reading this book. It contains all the necessary information. You only require a little practice, which you can gain by hiring yourself out for a year or two to any respectable printer. E. E."

This was nearly as good as the advice to a seeker after a fortune who sent money to an advertiser in Hartford, Connecticut, and received the advice "to peddle cigars, half Havana and half home-made, as I did, and be always ready to pick up a stray chicken."

My curiosity was next exercised by an advertisement setting forth that for one dollar the likeness of my "future wife or husband" would be sent. I consulted with half a-dozen bachelor friends on the subject, and we unanimously resolved to invest one dollar each for the immense privilege of seeing the individuals who were to be our partners in this "vale of tears," and who were to double our blessedness by sharing our singularities. It was understood that each was to exhibit the likeness of his predicted bride for the inspection of the company, be she fair or unfair. In due time I received a carte de visite through the post office. It bore on its face the representation of a female form, got up in the height of the latest fashion, regardless of expense. A splendid ostrich feather crowned what, from its magnificence and my ignorance, I will venture to designate an "empire" hat. A velvet cloak trimmed with lace was surmounted with a superb fur cape. A robe of black silk was ornamented with numerous devices that might have found their origin in the brains of a kaleidoscope. A foot, or scarce half a foot, peeped out from under a white skirt, revealed by the dress being slightly raised. One tiny tightly gloved hand was just visible. The face—but there was the trouble, it was a back view—and it might as well have been taken from a dry goodsmans' "dummy" as from the human form divine, so far as the "likeness" conveyed any idea to my mind. This was keeping the word of promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope with a vengeance. I felt inclined to tear the thing up, but, remembering my promise to my friends, I forebore. I found afterward that we were all served alike. We have this consolation, however, that our wives are to be fashionably dressed ; that is, if the present fashion miraculously continues till we are married.

I saw, lately, a paragraph intimating that to an anxious inquirer the advertiser of a receipt for the prevention of the freezing of cisterns or wells had answered with this twenty-five cents worth of advice :

"Take your cistern and well into the house on cold nights and keep up a good fire."

Cheeky enough, but no worse than the advice I paid a dollar for to an advertiser, who offered a remedy for frost-bitten feet and chapped hands, and which advice was embraced in three words, almost Shaksperean—"Go to Cuba!"

But both were excelled by the individual who in late war times offered for five dollars to show any one "a certain and infallible method of escaping the draft," and whose panacea was, "Commit suicide."

I need not say that, for the outlay of untold postage currency and postage stamps, I have received no advice whatever —the advertisers of important information having wisely considered that it was a needless expense trying to enlighten me —and that often I have been invited to invest in lotteries, and petroleum companies, and in the manufacturing of unhallowed articles militating against health and morals. Some of my house-hunting friends inform me that they have been victimized in small sums by advertisers who have offered information of leases for sale, and by pretended real estate agents who have demanded a bonus in advance.

The following curious adventure will serve as a caution, and will also do to wind up with :

A friend of mine in some freak of idleness answered an advertisement which required the small sum of three dollars for information by which any one could easily acquire a fortune. My friend is a simple-looking youth, and a very good living illustration of the deceptiveness of appearances. Shortly after he had written the letter to the bestower of fortunes, he was waited on at his lodgings by a neatly-dressed young man, who produced my friend's note, and asked if he had written it. Affirmatively answered, the stranger began to look cautiously around the room, and going to the door opened it suddenly, looked out into the hall, closed the door, and then with a knowing smile came up to my friend and asked if he was a good judge of money. "Tolerable," was the reply.

"Then look at these," said the stranger, producing a lot of fifty-cent currency stamps. My friend examined them, and saw nothing wrong. The stranger then began his tale to unfold. He would furnish any amount of fifty-cent stamps at twenty-five cents. Whew ! The murder was out. My friend was startled. What should he do? Call the police or kick the fellow out ?

To gain time for reflection, some questions were asked. Suddenly there were footsteps in the hall, and a slovenly dressed man rushed into the room, closed the door, and with a sardonic smile, seized the trembling vender of counterfeit currency by the coat collar, and in a tragical whisper hissed : "Caught at last—you're wanted !" and then to my friend, "I arrest you as an accomplice ! I would give a hundred dollars if I were in your place to get out of this affair !" My friend was astonished. In a moment, however, he regained his self-possession. Making a bound for the window, he opened it and shouted "Police !" The strangers, on hearing the talismanic word, made a rush for the door and the street. The rascals went, but no police came. The "queer" was left behind, and proved to be mighty queer "queer." It was so like the genuine that a broker declared it to be, and took it for good money, and my friend made some fifty dollars by the operation. Still, that kind of accident does not happen often enough to make the answering of swindling advertisements profitable business.

INTERESTING CORESPONDENCE.

BY JOHN QUILL.

I MET my friend Mr. Wilkens down in the front parlor of the hotel at Old Castle one evening last week. He was engaged in reading letters from his two boys, one of whom is at boarding-school, and the other visiting his aunt in the country in company with his mother. Wilkens is anxious to see his offsprings in print, so I send them to you. They are models of style.

LETTER FROM HOLOFERES MONTGOMERY WILKENS.

BIRCHWOOD ACADEMY, Sept. 20th.

DEAR POP :—I am getting along first-rate at the school and I like it very much, all except Whacks, the assistant—"Old Beeswax," we call him, and we are down on him like a pilledriver, all us boys, for he's ignorant. Why he's so ignorant he don't know the black board from a dark night, no, he don't ; and Bill Ferguson he put a torpedor under each leg of Old Beesey's chair yesterday, and when he sat down (you see, he sets down like he had ballasts in him), why the torpedors they exploded, and liked to blowed him through the roof. Golly, but wasen't he scared ! He looked at the almanac to make sure that it wasen't the 4th of July, and then he came down, looking mad, and licked Bill like blazes. But Bill said he diden't care a cent, and the next time he would sprinkle gunpowder in his hair, and burst his old frontis-piece off of him.

Dr. Goggles, he's a nice enough old feller, only he will set and chew gum drops right before us boys and never say "take some," once.

He wares green specs, and Bill Ferguson, he called him "old four eyes" one day, which the doctor, he heard Bill say it, and he nailed him and dragged him up to the desk, and then he gave us a lecture, and said there was once a boy he knew, and he was about Bills size, who insulted a grey headed old man, and called him wicked names, and the next day—the very morning— that boy's mother died of inflammatory rheumatism, and his sister broke out with bunions.

Bill, he cried while the doctor held him by the shirt collur, but he winked at the boys as he came away, and wrote on a piece of paper, and threw it over to me, that he thought the doctor was a "blower" and that he daresent hit a boy of his size.

I want some new books very much, about ten of them, and they will cost eight dollars. Please send the money for them. Don't send the books, for the doctor likes us to buy them here.

I don't want any money for taffy or marbles for I don't care about them ; but be sure not to send anything but the money for the books.

I am in good health. I was taken sick last week, and had a sore eye for a few days, but it is now well.

We was a playing mumbley-peg out on the grass, and Bill Ferguson, he grabbed my knife. I told him he better give up that knife or I would tell you, and get you to lick him when you came down, and he said he could lick you and a dozen like you, and then he dared me to knock a chip off his shoulder.

And Jake McGinnis, he pushed me against him, and that knocked the chip off, and Bill, he struck me over the nose three or four times, and then said he'd "bust me over the snoot" if I didn't dry up, for I couldn't help crying, and I was taken sick and couldn't go to school all that day.

And the doctor, he locked Bill up in the garret, but he didn't care, for he climb out on the roof, and was chasing around after Tom cats, up and down, almost all the morning, and pulling plaster out of the chimney to throw at people on the street.

Give my love to all at home, and don't forget the money for books.

Bill is about fourteen ; do you think he can lick you ?

Please send the money and believe me,

Your affectionate son,

H. M. WILKENS.

P. S.—Don't forget to send the money for the books.

LETTER FROM BUCEAHALUS ALEXANDER WILKENS.

IN THE COUNTRY, Sept. 21st, 1867.

MY DEAR FATHER :—Mo and William Henry are having a first-rate time, and I write to you these few lines to say that we are well, and so is mother. She and Aunt Samantha, they will spat, you know, and yesterday mother told Aunt Samantha that she had fished for you when she was a girl, but couldn't get you. Aunt Samantha said, she wouldn't marry such a bald-headed bushwhacker as you are, if you were worth a million.

Then mother she said she "couldn't," and Aunt Samantha said she "could," and mother went at her with the rolling-pin, and for a few minutes the fur flew, I tell you.

William Henry and I thought it would be a good chance to go for the preserves in the pantry, and so we did, but mother came in and caught us, and whipped us like the nation.

She's getting rather rough on us, I think. Can't you come down and help us over the stony places ?

Uncle John, he took us to the circus last night, where there was a boy about my size, who threw summer sets on a horse. Say, pop, may I quit going to school and join a circus ?

And William Henry he came home, and went out and tried to skin the cat in the barn, but he got over and couldn't get back, and he fell down and scared one of the horses so that he kicked his leg through the partition and broke it, and scared a hen off of thirteen eggs she was setting on, so that she wouldn't come back, besides knocking down a scythe blade that fell on a cow, and cut her so that she bled to death.

Didn't uncle John get up and howl over that? Well he did.

But William Henry said you'd pay for the damage, and we went fishing to get out of the way, but we didn't ketch much excepting a few catties, and while I was looking over the side of the boat William Henry kept a rocking it, and it upset and we both got wet, but a man hauled us out and we went home, but mother liked to have flogged the hide off us.

I wish you would come down here as soon as ever you can. Don't mind Aunt Samantha, she's nothing but a wall eyed old teapot, anyhow, and William Henry says he bets her teeth are false.

So we are enjoying ourselves very much, and we spend our time hunting for birds, and so on, and last week I got a fair crack at one and I shied a stone, and it slipped and hit six bottles of new ketchup that were standing on a table outside the kitchen door, and glanced over and hit the servant girl on the jaw, which swelled up like she had a half a brick in her mouth.

You never see such a face ; but I couldn't help it, and mother she spanked me like mad.

If you can come down as soon as convenient I will be very glad.

We are very well, excepting William Henry, and he has a slight attack of dog-bite—rush of dog to the leg, the doctor called it. You see the Mulloneys, over on the next farm, they have an orchard, and William Henry he went for his apples, but Mulley, you know, he was watching him behind a tree, and just as he got one leg over, the bull-terrier it clinched its teeth into his leg, and hung on just like as if he growed there and had never been used to any thing else. William Henry had his pants torn, and mother she made him go to bed without any supper, but he let a string out of the window, and I tied a basket full of gingerbread I found in the cellar on to it, and then I told mother that I wanted to go to bed, too, and William Henry and I had a bully time off of that gingerbread you just bet.

But mother comes it too severe on us, so can't you come down ?

I am Your affectionate son,

B. A. WILKENS.

Mr. Wilkens stated that he sympathized deeply with the boys, but wouldn't go down. "For," said he "what's the use of my going down along with that woman just to make myself miserable, and to loose the only chance I've got to have a little peace and quiet? What's the use, I say ? and by George, I won't go, not if I know myself, and I think I do.

EVERYBODY knows the story of Gunter, the ice cream man and pastrycook. He was mounted on a runaway horse with the King's hounds, and excused himself for riding against Alvanley, by saying, "O, my lord, I can't hold him ; he's so hot !" "Ice him, Gunter—ice him !" was the consoling rejoinder.

I HAVE HAD A 'GROVER AND BAKER' family machine in use for the past ten years, and from its use have received the most entire satisfaction. It has never been out of order, and runs as well to day as when purchased. I consider it a very excellent machine for all kinds of family work.

COOSE BAY, May 20, 1867. P. FLANAGAN.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

☞ Use Ellery's Patent India Rubber Cement and Paint.—It is for all outside surfaces, TIN, IRON, OR METAL ROOFS; Iron however manufactured, Brick and Wooden Buildings, Ship and steamboat Painting; will not rot, peel, blister, or crack. Water-proof coating for cloth roofing on tops of houses, decks of steamboats, tops of stages and cars. Cloth roofs cemented and painted for $9 per 100 square feet. New or old Tin Roofs, in good or bad condition, cemented and painted, guaranted, at $1 to $2 50 per 100 square feet.

EPES & E. H. R. ELLERY,
No. 226 Jackson street.

The Ladies are of one mind in pronouncing BOWMAN'S AMERICAN WASHING COMPOUND the best preparation for washing and cleaning in use. It is acknowledged to be a saving both in money and labor. The Compound softens the dirt, consequently the clothes require not more than one-half the rubbing necessary in washing by the old method; besides all who give it a trial acknowledge that their clothes are made whiter in washing with this Compound, than they were ever known to be by using any other preparation. For washing Woolen Goods and Flannels it cannot be equaled. Calicoes that can be washed with soap, without fading, are washed in the water used for boiling the white clothes. This Compound has been used in the eastern States for the past three years with perfect success. Warranted not to injure the clothes. For sale by all Grocers.

LYNCH & PARSONS, Agents,
Jackson street, near Battery.

Bradley & Rulofson's

MAGNIFICENT ESTABLISHMENT.

Has more room, larger lights, greater facilities, and

PRODUCES FINER PHOTOGRAPHS

Than any other in the City.

F. DIXEY,
Merchant Tailor,

625 WASHINGTON STREET,

Cloths, Cassimeres for Vestings, always on hand and made to order in the most Fashionable Styles.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Removal.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,
Machinist,

Has removed from No. 416 Market street, to No. 10 Stevenson street, next to the corner of First.

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines; Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

JOSEPH FREDERICKS

CARPET AND UPHOLSTERY STORE,
PAPER HANGINGS, ETC.,

133 Kearny St., between Sutter and Post, San Francisco

FAMILIES ARE INVITED TO EXAMINE

OUR VARIED ASSORTMENT

Of the Finest Carpeting in the State. The best of taste displayed in Decoration and the unique Upholstering of Rooms, Halls and Public Buildings, and at prices conforming to the times. Call and examine goods.

Removal! Removal!

A. J. PLATE,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

—ALSO—

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS,

Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, etc., etc.

—HAS REMOVED TO—

NO. 510 SACRAMENTO STREET,

Between Sansome and Leidosdorff Streets, San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware.
Main street, Petaluma

PARIS EXPOSITION,
1867.
GLORIOUS NEWS
FOR
THE FLORENCE!

OFFICIAL CATALOGUE JUST RECEIVED, (September 8th) the only copy on this coast—29 days from Loudon. FREE FOR INSPECTION.

THE FLORENCE

RECEIVED THE ONLY PREMIUM awarded to any Sewing Machine (except Button Hole Machine) for sale on the Pacific Coast.

SAMUEL HILL, Agent,
No. 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

D. GHIRARDELLI & CO.'S
Italian Manufactury,

415 and 417 JACKSON ST., SAN FRANCISCO,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PLAIN, SWEET, CINNAMON AND VANILLA CHOCOLATES;

PREPARED COCOA, COCOA PASTE,
CRACKED COCOA, COCOA SHELLS, etc., etc.

PURE GROUND OLD JAVA COFFEE AND COSTA RICA COFFEE;

CHARTRES AND RIO COFFEE;
GREEN COFFEE OF EVERY QUALITY.
CHOICE WINES AND LIQUORS.

N. B.—Ghirardelli's Chocolate is manufactured by steam from Cocoa of the finest quality, imported direct. In excellence and delicacy of flavor, it is superior to any Imported Chocolate.

FREE HOMESTEADS FOR ALL
ON FILING A PETITION.

UNDER THE LAWS OF MEXICO which are now in force in this city, all the inhabitants are entitled to a HOMESTEAD LOT OF LAND, simply on petition. Justice Field has decided, and the Supreme Court of the United States has confirmed that decision, that the City of San Francisco is a Pueblo of four square leagues of land, and that the citizens thereof are the owners, which vests the right in each citizen to a lot of land for a homestead, and the undersigned have opened an office at 37 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, to enforce those rights, by petition to the Mayor, etc.: and each and every citizen can procure a Free Homestead by calling at their office and signing a petition, which will forthwith vest the right to the lot in question in them, and thereby secure to the petitioner property worth a large sum of money under the existing laws now in force.

BROOKS & MERRITT,
No. 37 New Merchants' Exchange.

N. B.—The Supreme Court of the United States have settled this question in another case, as to the ownership of the Outside Lands. In the case of J. B. Townsend vs. Geo. G. Greeley, December Term, 1866, No. 124, the Court say: "It is, therefore, now the settled law that the municipal lands held by the city of San Francisco, as successors to the former Pueblo existing there, are not held in absolute property, but IN TRUST for its inhabitants."

Therefore, all the inhabitants have to do under this decision, is to ask the city, by petition, for their vested rights, as this is the only way, under the law, that they can proceed to get their property.

E. L. B. BROOKS,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

All legal business transacted in the French and Spanish languages, if desired.

Carrington's Yeast Powders

ARE THE BEST IN THE MARKET.

Try them if you do not believe it.

I. LANDSBERGER, Sole Agent,
429 Jackson Street.

First Premium

AWARDED BY THE STATE FAIR TO

SILAS SELLECK,

FOR THE BEST PLAIN PHOTOGRAPH.

—ALSO—

SPECIAL PREMIUM

For the Best Cabinet Portraits.

MR. SELLECK is now prepared to execute the very best PHOTOGRAPHS, in all the different styles, at No. 415 Montgomery Street.

N. B.—The best Water Color and India Ink Artist in this city is attached to this Gallery.

GEO. A. PARKER. SAM. B. WATTSON. DAVID CONKLING.

PARKER, WATTSON & CO.,

Importers and Jobbers in

Havana & Domestic Cigars, Tobacco,

ETC.....ETC.....ETC.,

Nos. 306 and 308 Clay street, one door above Front,
SAN FRANCISCO.

SOTOYOME HOTEL,
B. C. WRIGHT, Proprietor, Healdsburg, Cal.

STERETT'S PRINTING OFFICE,

No. 533 Clay Street.

Cards, Billheads, Circulars, Books, Briefs, Transcripts, Posters, Bills of Fare Envelopes, Letter and Note Headings, Tickets, Pamphlets, and all Legal Papers printed at short notice, and upon reasonable terms.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Joseph Catania & Co.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FRESH AND SALT

STALL NO. 48 FISH MARKET, Clay Commercial and Leidesdorff Streets.

A large supply of fresh fish always on hand. Shipping, Restaurants, Hotels and Families supplied at short notice, and on the most reasonable terms.

N. B.—Fish sent to any part of the city free.

SAVE YOUR TEETH.—Do not have them extracted without first consulting a good Dentist. The loss is irreparable, and, in many instances, unnecessary. DR. BEERS, corner of Pine and Kearney streets, makes a specialty of filling the fangs of dead Teeth, and building up broken crowns with Pure Gold—thus restoring them to their original usefulness and beauty.

☞ Call and examine the work. Finest quality of artificial work also manufactured.

C. MAIN. E. H. WINCHESTER. T. R. HAYES.

Main & Winchester,

Manufacturers and Importers of Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Collars, Saddlery Ware, etc.

Nos. 214 and 216 Battery Street,
San Francisco.

N. B.—Good assortment Concord Stage Harness constantly on hand.

A. FOLSOM,

Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

C. ROBERTS,

CARRIAGE AND WAGON MAKER,

HORSE

SHOEING

AND

JOBBING

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

Fourth Street, between Howard and Folsom, San Francisco.

All styles of Carriages, Wagons and Carts made to order and Repaired.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of

C A R R I A G E S.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

☞ Now Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

No Charge for Consultation.

ADOLPH CAMAN, M. D.
HOMŒOPATHIC PHYSICIAN,

ACCOUCHEUR AND SURGEON,

Devotes special attention to the diseases of Women and Children. He takes a professional pride in curing those cases which have baffled the skill of other eminent physicians.

DR. CAMAN would call attention to the beneficial effects of the Homœopathic treatment in all cases of Chronic Diseases, Insanity, Paralysis, all kinds of Spasms, Delirium Tremens, and persons suffering from an unnatural thirst for spirituous liquors.

No. 26 Montgomery Street, opposite the Lick House.

NOTICE.

WE TAKE OCCASION TO INFORM OUR FRIENDS and customers that we have sold our entire stock in warehouse also invoices to arrive to Messrs. N. COLE & CO., 312 and 314 Pine steeet. The whole forms a most complete and desirable assortment of FURNITURE, and well merits attention before purchasing elsewhere.

J. PIERCE & CO.

FURNITURE.

WE beg leave to call the attention of the public to our warerooms,

Nos. 312 and 314 Pine Street.

Having purchased the entire stock of Messrs. J. Pierce & Co., and in addition to our large invoice from our factory at the East, we are prepared to fill all orders promptly, both wholesale and retail, and call the attention of the public to our salesroom, as containing the most complete assortment of desirable goods on this coast.

N. P. COLE & CO.

ZEITSKA & SHEPPARD,

Merchant Taylors,

NO. 610 CLAY STREET,

Near Montgomery,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Chickering & Sons' Pianos

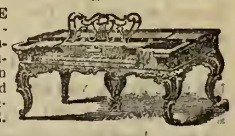
RECEIVED THE

FIRST PREMIUM,

(Gold Medal,)

At the Paris Exposition.

FURTHERMORE, THE Improvements, Workmanship, and General Superiority of those instruments over all others on exhibition, was so marked an important, the Emperor created Mr. T. E. CHICKERING



KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOR.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

WM WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter

Dealer in

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &C., &C.,

735 Market Street.

Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco

THE "GROTTO,"

JOHN DUNCAN. Proprietor.

530 Sacramento street, opposite What Cheer House,

FINE WINES, LIQUORS, ALES AND PORTER,

Wholesale and Retail.

Importer of Wise's Celebrated Irish Whisky.

"OUR OPERA."

CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,

621 WASHINGTON STREET, 621,
SAN FRANCISCO,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

J. CUTBERLET,

CUSTOM

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

—ALSO—

FRENCH SCREWED BOOTS AND SHOES,

No. 546 Washington Street, near Montgomery Street.

The finest quality of CUSTOM WORK neatly executed. Always on hand other fine work ready made.

N. GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

TWO SIXES AND A SEVEN WON HIM.

Many years ago there lived in the not over classic neighborhood of Dock Square an old fellow who was called by the boys Gen H——. He kept a "gin-mill and a pop-shop,', and was, altogether, what is known as a hard case.

One morning he addressed a crowd of loungers thus:

"Boys, I had a queer dream last night—a most 'stornary dream—fact."

"Well, General, what was it? What did yon dream?'

"Well, boys, I dreamed I died."

"No! did you? Well," said the crowd in a breath, "where did you go?"

"Went to Heaven."

"O come, now, General, that's a little too much, you know; that could not be, you know."

"Fact, boys, for all that—I went to Heaven."

"But how did you get in, General?"

"Well, that's the queer part on it; I'll tell yon how. You see when I got over there I asked what place it was, and somebody looked over the wall and asked me what I wanted, and I said I wanted to come inside. Then he said he was St. Peter, and that was the gate of Heaven, and I told him that was just where I wanted to get to. He asked me some questions, and was just going to let me in, when, just my tarnal luck, along come the devil, and he hollered out to Peter that I belonged to him, and hadn't any business inside. Of cousre, I couldn't say nothing, hut I felt awful scary. Well, right away, Peter he came outside, and says he: 'Satan, what claim have yon on this soul?' 'Why, says the devil, 'he is my man; he's been selling rum and shaking props down in Boston more than twenty years.' 'I admit that,' says Peter, 'hut didn't he always sell good liquor?" 'Well, yes, I am bound to admit that he did,' said Satan. 'Did he ever cheat at prop-shaking?' 'Not that I can prove.' 'Well, then,' says the Saint, 'yon can't have him on that.' I began to feel better, boys, when the devil says he, 'but he sold rum on Sundays.' Peter looked sharp at me, and asked if that was so. I daren't lie, so I said, 'Yes, hut I always paid the largest snbscription of any man in the parish to the minister's salary.'

"'Well, says Peter to Satan, 'that alters the case again, you see.' With that the devil got a little riled, and says he, 'I can't bother all day about him; suppose we raffle for him. 'Agreed,' said Peter, and they threw me down and sot on me, and Satan got the first throw, and he threw three sixes! Ah, didn't I feel myself a goner when I felt him wriggle his tail; for he thought, and I knew, that three sixes couldn't he beat, and says he, 'Peter, I've got him.' 'Hold on,' says he, 'I haven't had my throw yet.' And he took the box and shook and shook, although I couldn't see the use of it, and as I am a livin' sinner yet, he threw two sixes and a seven! The devil jumped up quick, and putting off, says he, 'Peter, it ain't of no sort of use—if yon are going to come them miracles on me yon can have him!' So, you see, boys, I did get in, but it took a miracle to do it!

A GERMAN in Chicago married a Norwegian bride on Friday. He knows no word of the dialect of his wife, and she knows nothing of the dialect of her hnsband. There's a chance for peace in the family for a while anyhow.

OUR KITCHEN BATTERIES do more for the comfort and welfare of our people than those furnished with ten-inch guns. A good supply of stoves, ranges, and tinware, particularly Stewart's famous stoves with ten-inch griddle plates if properly used will render a city comfortable and contented and prolong the lives of the inhabitauts, while a ten-inch Paixhan gun battery directed against it would fill it with widows and orphans. The man who supplies nations with destructive weapons by many is regarded as an enemy to the human race, while a gentleman like CALEB M. SICKLER, at four hundred and twenty-two Kearny street, who supplies a city with articles that make the operations in its kitchens effective and pleasant. can only be regarded as a public benefactor.—Golden Era.

NOW IS THE TIME—The season of cold weather and storms—when yon feel bad—to go to Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, and take one of his Baths, to make yon feel good; to cnre colds, (the only scientific mode,) coughs, aches, pains, etc.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S
LIST OF PUBLICATIONS, 1867.

Poems. By Charles Warren Stoddard. "They evince the possession of a fresh and delicate fancy, a nice ear for meolody, nnaffected love for nature, and a pure purpose."—Bulletin. An elegant 8vo. Illustrated. $3 00.

Outcroppings; Gems from California Poets. A beautiful small quarto; gilt, $1 00.

Confucius and the Chinese Classics; or, Readings in Chinese Literature. Edited and compiled by Rev. A. W. Loomis. The first book printed from stereotype plates in California. "One of the most entertaining volumes issued from the American press for many a day."—Territorial Enterprise. A handsome 12mo. 2 00

Chinese and English Phrase Book; With the Chinese pronnnciation indicated in English, Specially adapted for the use of merchants and families. By Benot Lancot. Second edition revised aud enlarged. "A Roman & Co. have hit the nail on the head in the publication of this book."—Christian Advocate. 1 00.

In Bonds; A Novel. By Laura Preston. "A novel of more than ordinary elevation of purpose, carefully and effectively wrought ont."—Pacific. A trimmph in the authorship, aud in the printing and publishing line." Times Paper, 1 25 Cloth, 1 75.

Leah's Confessions. An Autobiography. "The Anthor's pen is fine and powerful. The moral of the novel is, on the whole, good and wholesome." Pacific. A handsome 8vo in paper, 75.

Carrie Carlton's Popular Letter-Writer. "The author has laid the public nnder a real obligation in this happily conceived and cleaverly-executed manual.—Bulletin. "'The Chronicles of Belleair' make a good story, and the love letters and other correspondence therein given are quite natnral and appropriate."—Sacramento Union. 16mo. 75.

The Resonrces of California. By John S. Hittell. A California Prize Book, exclusively Californian in composition and manufacture. A large 12mo. 2 25.

A Youth's History of California, By Lucia Normnn. A popnlar History for all classes of readers, young and old. "The book is a highly meritorions and interestiug one."—Round Table. A pretty 12mo. 1 00.

Route to California by the Isthmus of Panama. A useful aud interesting book to every traveler. 50.

Nevada and California Processes of Silver and Gold Extraction. By Gnido Kustell. The best practical work on the subject. 8vo., cloth, 5 00.

The Elements of Composition. By Prof. Ang. Layres. 12mo. cloth, 1 00.

Belles Lettres. By Prof. Layres. Second book of the series. "The writer, the lawyer, the minister or the statesman may study these rules and regulations with profit."—Bulletin. 12mo, cloth, 1 00.

The Greek Slave. A story by Ianthe. "A touching tale of Greek snffering nnder Moslem rule." —Alta. In paper, 75 cents; cloth, 1 00.

Instructions in Gymnastics. By Arthur and Charles Nahl With nnmerons plates. Quarto, 2 50.

May Wentworth's Fairy Tales from Gold Lands. The scenes of most of these Tales are laid in California, introdncing Emperor Norton and other local characters. A handsome 16mo. Illustrated, 1 00.

Legal Titles to Mining Claims and Water Rights in California. By Gregory Yale, (counselor at Law. "The first through discussion of the subject of mining property in the United States, and one mnch needed."—Sacramento Union. 8vo, sheep, 7 50.

Our publications are for sale by book sellers generally, and sent, post paid, on receipt of price by the publishers. Address, A. ROMAN & CO., San Francisco.

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,

JEWELRY AND ATERIALS.

☞We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,

DENTIST,

No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens. North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.
N. T. WHITCOMB.

Removal.

WILLIAM SHERMAN & CO.,
Have this day Removed their Stock of
Clothing & Men's Furnishing Goods,
From Sansome Street to
608 Montgomery street,
(East Side,) North of Clay.
San Francisco, November 22, 1867.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

APOTHECARIES AND CHEMISTS.
J. H. Cogeshall, N. W. cor Third and Folsom.
Geo S Dickey, Pioneer Apothecary, cor Ellis & Stockton
Dr. T. B. Kelly, 503 Davis, corner of Jackson street.
Wm. Simpson, 609 Davis st., opposite Oakland Ferry.

ARCHITECTS.
Hoagland & Newsom, s.w. cor Kearoy and Sacramento.
McDougall & Marquis, 328 Montgomery street.

ALE, PORTER, AND CIDER.
J. H. Todman & Co., (Jobbers,) 511 Front street.
Maguire & Co. Hibernia Bottling Establishm't 40 Front.

BAKERIES.
Dempsey's Bakery, 127 Fourth street,
Robt. Zundel, Fancy Cake and Confectionery, 16 4th st

BOARDING HOUSES.
Mechanics' Exchange, Slaven & Delhantz, 111 Front st.
New England House, J. Schleicher, 205 Sansome st.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
S. Ambroise, sign of the red shoe, 29 Fonrth st.
John Mason, 5 Second st. near Market.
Lake & Co. (m'f'trs Jaqau Paste Blacking) 504 Market.
Justin Macarthy, (Boot maker,) 427 Fourth at ur Silver.
Joseph Rosenblum, 29 Third st.
Jacob Wattell, 559 Market st.
W. H. Hanna, (children's work,) 335 Sutter street.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

BOWLING SALOONS.
Occidental, Cameron & Goodwin, Market opp. Second.

BRUSH AND BROOM MANUFACTURERS.
California Brush Factory, 1009 Stockton, near Jackson.
San Francisco Brush Factory, 211 to 217 California st.

CIGARS AND TOBACCO.
J. R. Ojeitz, 312 Third st, near Folsom.
W. Prielatch, 144 Third st.
J. R. Rines, 154 Second st near Howard.
Lindsey & Clune, Excelsior Store, 156 Stewart street.
M. Rosenshiue, (Wholesale and Retail,) 214 Pacific st.

CLOTHINO.
Mrs. C. Cryer, (Children's Clothing,) 26 Fourth st.
H. Levy, 54 Fourth street, near Mission.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 608 Montgomery street.

COAL DEALERS.
H. W. Newhauer, all kinds of coal, 121 Sansome street.
S. Klein, formerly Greenhood & Co, 209 Sansome street

COACH AND CARRIAGE MATERIALS.
Waterhouse & Lester, (Dealers,) 29 and 31 Battery st.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.
Dell, Cnnna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street

CONFECTIONERS.
Baldwin & Lawlers, South Park Store 418 Third st.
N. B. Booth & Co., 20 Kearny, near Market.
Ellwood & Ryan, (Fruits, etc.,) 258 Third st.
Mrs. Kain, 617 Mission, near Secoud.
J. Vogeley & Bro. 46 Second st.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 646 Clay street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DRESS AND CLOAK MAKERS.
Mrs. Taylor & Mrs. Jones 258 First, near Folsom.
Mme. Weller, 129 Second st.

DRY GOODS.
Irving, Landers & Co., No. 4 Third street.
Keane Brothers. 218 Third, bet Howard and Tehama.
M. Waterman, 22 Second street, corner of Stevenson.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co.. 9 Montgomery street.
S. Mosgrove, 222 Third, bet Howard and Tehama sts.

FAIRBANKS' SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot 120 California street.

DRIED FISH.
Torello Kiezole, corner Fourth and Brannan sts.

FURNITURE AND BEDDING.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Regan, 29 Second st.
Jacob Schreiber, 121 and 123 Sansome, bet. Pine & Bush
G. Scherer, (Crockery and Glassware,) 20 Fonrth st.

GROCERS.
N. Bruns, northwest corner Third and Berry sts.
M. Farron, 523 Fourth st, corner Welsh.
Derby & Johnson, northeast cor. Bush and Powell sts.
Flinn & Neall, cor. Third and Tehama.
Fred. Lange, Family Grocer, cor. Powell and Lombard.
Jos. Van Doren, northeast cor. Bush and Masuu sts.
Lange & Butt, southwest cor. Bush and Stockton sts.
Bernard Raffly, 219 Second, cor Tehama.
Hermon Scnulit, corner Third and Harrison.
Seneca Jones, Family Grocer, 105 Third street.
Wellman, Peck & Co., wholesale grocers, 404 Froot st.

GUN-SMITHS.
W. Rudolph, Union Gun Store, 216 Pacific street.
Wilson & Evans, 513 Clay street.

H. & L. AXLE-GREASE.
Manufactory 146 Tehama st, and at North Beach.

HAIR DRESSINO SALOONS.
Prof. Smith, 114 Market street, opposite Third.

HARDWARE AND CUTLERY.
L. B. Benchley & Co., (American and Foreign,) 3 and 5 Front street.
J. S. Sesser, 138 Fourth st, bet. Mission and Howard.

HATTERS.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
Grant & Smith, 26 Market and 19 Sacramento sts.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.
George Morrow & Co., 21 Clay and 28 Commercial sts
Wm. H. Nichols, 18 Sacramento, and 17 Commercial.

HOTELS.
Atlantic House, John McManus, 210 and 212 Pacific st.
"Branch," M. O'Neil, 12 Sutter street.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, Droste & Pfefferle, 220 Pacific street.
Empire House, Peter Thompson, 106 Jackson street.
Franklin Hotel, Hugh Curran, cor Sansome & Pacific.
Franklin House, C. Maloney, cor. Br'dway & Sansome.
Golden Gate Hotel, J. Blackmun, 728 Market street.
Mariner's Home, Brown & Chandler, 504 and 506 Davis.
"Oriental," H. Saxtorph & Co., Washington & Drumm.
Sanders' Hotel, J. P. Sanders, 24 Sacramento st.

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER.
Michael English, 414 Pine street.

HARNESS AND SADDLE MANUFACTURERS.
A. B. Bois, 510 Davis street.
M. G. Conway, 721 Market bet. Third & Fourth sts.
D. Fennel, 522 Battery street, opposite the Post Office.
H. D. Jameson, Market st opposite Treadwell & Co.
Mead & Son, 557 Market, opp. Sansome.
H. Weaver, 671 Market, bet. Second and Third.

INSURANCE.
Firemen's Fund Ins. cor. California and Sansome.
Manhattan, R. B. Swaiu & Co., Agets, 206 Front, cor. Cal.
North British Mercantile, S. E. cor Sansome & Califor'
Occidentalins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
People's Insurance Co., N. E. cor. Montgomery & Pine.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LADIES' FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.
S. Summerfield, 20 Second street, and 116 Kearny.
Thomas Collinson, 160 Third, near Howard street.

LIVERY STABLES.
Central Stable, Washburn & Co., 207 and 209 Sutter st.
Gardner & Finch, 211 and 213 Pine street.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY, CONTINUED.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Davis, cor. Mission & Spear sts.

MARBLE WORKERS.
Zeglio & Moore, 783½ Market, bet. Third and Fourth.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
R. Phillip, 518 Market, near Metropolitan Market.
John Straub, 351 Third st.

MARKETS.
Bennett & Wallace, 151 Third street.
J. Hertz & Co. 107 Second, near Mission.
F. J. Stelling, San Jose Market, 154 First st.
I. Gans, "New York Market," Fourth st, near Market.
C. Wagner & Co., (Golden Gate,) 512 Davis street.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

MILLINERS.
Miss A. A. Craddock, 4 Virginia Block, Stockton street.
Mrs. Cowles, 122 Third st.

MUSIC TEACHERS.
Prof. J. R. Boullet, Pianist and Vocalist, 1320 Stockton.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PAINT MANUFACTURERS.
Epes & Ellery, dealers in paints, etc, 226 Jackson st.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.
James R. Kelly, 38 California street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
H. Bush, corner Post, Market and Montgomery streets.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
Kohler, Chase & Co., 421 Montgomery street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

PLUMBERS AND GAS FITTERS.
Chas. Barman, 121 Fonrth street, near Minna.

PRINT SELLER AND PUBLISHER.
Thomas H Lawlor, Second street, near Howard.

PRODUCE COMMISSION MERCHANTS.
Dorman & Wolf, 426 Davis street.
George Hughes, 410 Davis street.
Johnson & Harmon, 412 Davis street near Washington.
J. W. Nye & Co., 219 Washington street, corner Cedar.
Thos. Newell, 62 Clay street between Drumm and East.
Chas. C. Wilson & Co., S E. corner Clay and Davis sts.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, W. Wilson, manager, 640 Market st.
"California Market," Summer st, next to Cal. Market.
Delmonico's, Young & Mandell, 45 Second st.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Market, by Hanzo & Besson, 520 Merchant street
The Opera, J. Weiss, 335 Pine street.

SALOONS.
Beck's Saloon, 504 Drumm street, near Pacific.
Blancy & Carroll, "Sample Rooms," 107 Third street.
Brevoort Exchange, Barrington & Werner, 44 Fourth.
John Burns, Bonhoat Exchange, Berry st, near Third.
Carr & McElroy's, opposite San Jose R. R. Depot.
Clement Dixon's Ale Vaults, Nos. 2 & 3, Summer st.
Charley Smith's Saloon, 539 Washington street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street
Cleveland's Sample Rooms, 318 Bush, above Montg'y.
W. B. Dolan's, 145 Third, corner Hunt street.
Donahue & Phelan, 321 Second st.
Evans' Saloon, Long Bridge, corner Berry and Third.
"Excelsior," Haase & Co., cor. Drum and Commercial.
Fitch & Little, fancy liquors, Summer st. near the Mark
Fourth Street Exchange, Chas. F. Sluter, 245 Fourth st.
James Gibb, "Cosmopolitan," 617 Merchant street
German Hall, Ed. Angelli, Propr., 18 Sansome st.
Headquarters, Decoli & McLean, Fourth, cor Townsend.
J. P. Lavins' Saloon, northwest cor. Battery & Br'dway
J. Dillon, "Fourth st. Exchange," cor. Fourth and Mkt.
John B. Holje & Co., 28 Clay street.
King & McCormick, "Rotunda," Market & O'Farrell.
A. Leppert, New Corner, corner Fourth and Berry.
Mechanics' Sample Room, C. Diedrichsen, 1st. cor Mrkt
"Monadnock," A. Horstkemper, Drumm & Oregon sts.
Nolan's Exchange, Ball & Racket Court, 732 Howard st.
Meyer & Quaid's, S. E. corner Market and Fourth sts
A. Phister & Co. (Punches) cor Leidesdorff and Halleck.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Ring's Saloon, Peter Ring, California st., below Drumm.
Squarza's, A. Bona, Prop'r, 120 Leidesdorff st.
Uncle Billy & George, Saloon 707 Davis st.
Union Saloon, C. H Cordes, Market, below Fremont.
"Young American," Geo. C. W Heuer, Stewart & Howard

SAWING, PLANING AND MOULDING MILLS.
D. A. Macdonald & Co. corner Market and Beale sts.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Henry Lehnhardt, (dealer in all kinds) 3d cor Tehama

SHIPWRIGHTS, CAULKERS AND SPAR-MAKERS.
Coombs & Taylor, 109 Market street.

SODA AND MIXERAL WATERS.
Empire Soda Works, corner Third and Harrison.

STATIONERS AND BOOKBINDERS.
Jas. E. Damon & Co., 421 and 423 Sansoms street.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
M. J. Blackman, 302 Third street, near Folsom.
Reinzi Hughes, (also Crockery and Glassware) 215 3d.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.
Murphy & Sheldon, (Metal Roofers, etc.) 153 Third st.

UMBRELLA AND PARASOL MANUFACTORIES.
C. King & Co., (repairing and fitting) 255 Third st.
John D. Barr, 623 Mission st, near Secuud.

UNDERTAKERS.
Craig & Yung, 705 Market st., one door west of Third.

VARIETY STORE.
D. Michael & Co., 348 Third street.
Edward Dunn, 502 Third st eet.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

WAX FLORIST.
Mrs. M. E. Gerrish, 11 Post street.

WHOLESALE WINE AND LIQUOR DEALERS.
Campbell & Co., 629 Front st., bet Jackson and Pacific.
Henry M. Cutter, Importer, 520 Front street.

WHOLESALE UPHOLSTERERS.
D. N. & E. Walters, 13 Battery street, corner Bush.

WOOD AND COAL YARDS.
Patrick Byrne, S. W. corner Perry and Fourth sts.
Edward Flanagan, Agt. Cuose Bay Coal Co. 606 Battery.
Occidental Fuel Depot, Geo. C. Eldrigde, 607 Market st

JOHN DANIEL,
Marble Works,
421 PINE STREET,
(Between Kearny and Montgomery.)

MANTELS, MONUMENTS, TOMBS, PLUMBERS' SLABS, ETC.,
On hand and manufactured to order.
Orders respectfully solicited.

THE ESSENCE OF OPERA;
OR, ALMANZOR AND IMOGEN:
An Opera in Three Acts.

SUBJECT OF THE OPERA.

A brave young prince a young Princess adores; A combat kills him, but a good restores.

PROLOUGE.

A Musician.—People, appear, approach, advance!

To Singers.

You that can sing, the chorus bear!

To Dancers.

You that can turn your toes out, dance! Let's celebrate this faithful pair.

ACT I.

Imogen.—My love!

Almanzor.—My soul;

Both.—At length, we then unite!

People, sing, dance, and show us your delight!

Chorus.—Let's sing, and dance, and show 'em our delight.

ACT II.

Imogen.—O love!

[A noise of war. The Prince appears, pursued by his enemies. Combat. The Princes faints. The Prince is mortally wounded.]

Almazor.—Alas!

Imogen.—Ah, what!

Almazor.—I die!

Imogen Ah me!

People, sing, dance, and show your misery!

Chorous.—Let's sing, and dance, and show our misery.

ACT III.

Pallas descends in a cloud to Almanzor and speaks.

Pallas.—Almanzor, live!

Imogen.—Oh, bliss!

Almanzor.—What do I see!

Trio.—People, sing, dance, and hail this prodigy!

[Curtain falls.]

As an original expression of heavy grief, we doubt if anything more touching has been read than the following, of a crushed heart in Star City, Nevada. Mrs.——, of that place, an eccentric old lady, recently rushed into the room of a relative, and without waiting for the usual salutations, said: "Well, John's dead!" "Dead! Is it possible?" "Yes; dead! Died last night! Want you all to come to the funeral. The Masons and Odd Fellows are going to turn out, and we shall have a beautiful time." Deaths being of a rare occurance in the settlement, of course everybody went to the funeral. Next day somebody remarked to the old lady that there was a large turn-out. "Yes, indeed there was," she replied, "but I didn't enjoy myself as well as I have at some funerals, the horses cut up so."

A MODERN Amazon, on her way to a convention, asked for a seat in a crowded car. An old gentleman, with keen eyes, inquired: "Be you one of the women righters?" "I be!" answered the undaunted heroine. "Do you believe that a woman has the same rights as a man?" "I do!" (emphatically.) "Well, then, stand up and enjoy 'em like a man!"

A YOUNG Englishman of wealth and culture, recently fell in love with a squaw in Omaha, Kansas, and married her. The next day she got drunk and turned somersaults in the street. The young Englishman of wealth and culture, at last accounts, was seeking for a divorce, on the ground of incompatibility of tastes.

PICTURES.—Christmas is coming, and your friends will expect presents. Go to Morse's Gallery, No. 315 Montgomery street, and let him take you in the highest style of the art. He is an accomplished photographer, and very reasonable in his charges. If desired, pictures can be colored by Miss Romanes in the most artistic and natural manner.—Sunday Mercury.

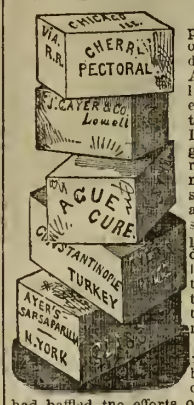
THE SNUG.—"The Snug" has been located one door below Maguire's Opera House, for ten years past. It was established for the convenience of the habituates of the Opera House, and has the reputation of dispensing the best wines and liquors in the city, under the charge of its present proprietor, Mr. Timothy McCarty. Entrances from various parts of the Opera House to the bar have been cut, for the convenience of the public. Mr. McCarty gives his entire attention to his guests, and renders his establishment a "Snug" place by day or night.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma

BUILDER'S INSURANCE CO.
OFFICE IN THE BUILDING OF THE CALIFORNIA SAVINGS BANK, CALIFORNIA ST., one door from Sansome.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL



Is a soothing expectorant, prepared to meet the urgent need of a safe and reliable cure for diseases of the throat and lungs. A trial of many years has established the fact, that it is more efficacious in pulmonary affections, than any other remedy. Its efficacy has now become so generally known, that it is justly regarded in many countries as a medicine of indispensable necessity. In Great Britain, France, and Germany, where medical science has reached its highest perfection, it is prescribed in domestic practice, and constantly used in the armies, in hospitals and other public institutions, where it is regarded by the attending physicians as the most speedy and agreeable remedy that can be employed.—Scarcely any neighborhood can be found where well known cases of diseased lungs, which had baffled the efforts of the most skillful and experienced doctors, have been permanently cured by it. These results are the most convincing proofs of the superior curative properties of this preparation; and to them the authors point with peculiar satisfaction. While it is most powerful against confirmed diseases, it is extremely gentle as a medicine in infancy and youth, being quite harmless to even the youngest, when administered judiciously.

This health restorer accomplishes even more by prevention than cure. If taken in season, it heals all irritations of the throat and lungs, whether arising from Colds or Coughs, or from other causes, and thus prevent that long train of painful and incurable diseases, which would arise from the neglect of them. Hence no family should be without it. Influenza, Croup, Hoarseness, Whooping Cough, Pleurisy, Incipient Consumption, and other affections of the breathing organs, give way before this pre-eminent combination of medical virtues.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine everywhere.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco.
Wholesale Agents.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
STEAMSHIPS FOR
NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,
WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Brannan-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 18th or 19th is expected to connect with the French Transatlantic Co.'s steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th is expected to connect with English steamer for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America. Through tickets can be obtained.

STEAMERS FOR DECEMBER.

Dec. 10—SACRAMENTO, Capt. W. H. Parker, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.
Dec. 19—CONSTITUTION, Capt. J. M. Caverly, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Connor.
Dec. 30—MONTANA, Capt. E. T. Farnsworth, connecting with ARIZONA, Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained of P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamship GREAT REPUBLIC, Capt. S. Doane, will be dispatched on December 4th, from wharf, corner of First and Brannan streets, for YOKOHAMA and HONGKONG; connecting at Yokohama with the steamer COSTA RICA, for SHANGHAI.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

M. S. WHITING. F. G. BERRY.

WHITING & BERRY,
DEALERS IN TEAS, WINES
AND SPIRITS,
FOR MEDICINAL
and FAMILY USE.

Apothecaries, Physicians, Invalids and Families supplied, in quantities to suit, Wholesale or Retail, with FINE,
MEDIUM,
or LOW PRICED QUALITIES.

609 Sacramento st., second door above Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT,
Wholesale Candy Manufacturers,
No. 408 CLAY STREET,
Between Sansome and Battery Sts., San Francisco.
FANCY AND COMMON CANDIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
Sugar Toys, Figures, Animals, Birds, etc.
Are prepared to receive orders to any extent and in any desired style.
BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT.

ST. CHARLES RESTAURANT,

At the Hotel of C. Galliand, Nos. 507 and 509 Pine Street, between Kearny and Dupont streets.

BY MME. CAZINTRE.

All who will call at this Restaurant will find an excellent table and prompt attention.

California Coffee and Dining Saloon.

Nos. 612 and 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.
J. R. REAGAN, Proprietor.

A Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot en chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

ITALIAN RESTAURANT,
No. 515 Merchant Street,
Between Montgomery and Sansome, San Francisco.

Taglierini, Maccaroni, Risotto and Ravioli, In the Italian Style.
MEALS FIFTY CENTS, OR TO ORDER.
Rooms for private parties up stairs.
MR. GUISEPPE CADENASSO.

LEON DINGEON. F. W. HAUBRICK.

DINGEON & HAUBRICK,
MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,
623 COMMERCIAL STREET.

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties.

NEW RESTAURANT.

MR. SORBIER takes pleasure in informing his friends and customers that he has opened a FIRST-CLASS RESTAURANT under the name of
SORBIER'S RESTAURANT,
at No. 607 SACRAMENTO STREET, above Montgomery, where he will be pleased to see his old friends and the public in general, and where all can be assured that they will be served with the very best the market affords, at most reasonable rates. JOHN E. SORBIER,
Late of the Occidental Restaurant.

F. C. BELDEN,
Of the well-known Family Depot, No. 612 Sacramento street, has opened the

SUMMER STREET RESTAURANT,
at the northeast corner of Spring and Summer Sts.
Meals to order, and by the plate. Wines and Liquors of the best quality.

OCCIDENTAL RESTAURANT,
536 Washington Street, below Montgomery.

GEORGE WITTMAN would inform the public and the former patrons of this POPULAR RESTAURANT
That he has assumed full charge, and will continue to keep all the delicacies of the season and one of the best lists of WINES, etc., and solicits the continuance of their patronage.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
JOHN WIELAND,
Proprietor.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,
SANSOME STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
FIRE PROOF.
Two Hundred Rooms well Ventilated and Richly Furnished.
Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.
The Exchange Coach, with RED LIGHTS, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel FREE OF CHARGE.
The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully inform the traveling public that the
AMERICAN EXCHANGE
Is now and will continue as it ever has been, the most comfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the State. TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.
STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

F. D. RING,
MANUFACTURER OF
JEWELRY AND SILVER WARE,
No. 540 Market Street, adjoining the Hibernia Bank,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of precious Stones set in the latest style and most approved manner. Watches and Jewelry carefully repaired by experienced workmen.

COCO-MUNGO SALOON.
J. M. WASHBURN, AGENT.
No. 536 Merchant Street, (Montgomery Block.)
THE BEST OF LIQUORS,
SKILLFULLY CONCOCTED MIXED DRINKS,
AND A FIRST-CLASS HOT LUNCH,
Not inferior to any offered in San Francisco, is furnished daily at the COCO-MUNGO—Clam Chowder, Fish Chowder, Gumbo Soup, Pork Tenderloins, Cape Cod Boned Turkey, Venison, Quail, and all the delicacies of the season, as fast as they are to be found in the market, figure upon the lunch-table of the COCO-MUNGO.

A Reading Room, abundantly supplied with Domestic and Foreign Papers and Periodicals, is one of the features of the COCO-MUNGO.

C. F. HAYWARD,
—DEALER IN—
Harness, Saddles, etc.,
305 BATTERY STREET,
Near Sacramento,
San Francisco.

Architectural Designs
—FURNISHED BY—
HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,
ARCHITECTS,
Southwest corner of Sacramento and Kearny Streets,
San Francisco.

H. T. GRAVES,
Manfacturer of
WIRE CLOTH, COAL SCREENS, FLOUR SEIVES, QUARTZ SCREENS, for Batteries, Door and Window Screens, for excluding Flies and Mosquitos.
CLOAK, SHAWL, CLOTHING AND BONNET STANDS
Fancy Work for Gardens, and a great variety of
WIRE WORK OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.
Sole Agent for the sale and application of
BROWN'S PATENT AND METALIC WEATHER STRIPS,
For the perfect exclusion of wind, dust, and rain;
And for CRAMER'S PATENT WINDOW LIFTING PLATES AND RODS.
Call and examine them at the
CALIFORNIA WIRE WORKS,
412 Clay street, San Francisco.

BOWEN BROS.
GROCERS,
Tea and Wine Merchants,
S. E. cor. Montg'ry and California,
San Francisco.
Wholesale Store,
204 Front Street.

BUCKMAN BROS.,
(Successors to John Myers,)
CAPITOL SALOON,
226 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Opposite the Russ House

R. T. HOUSTON,
Merchant Tailor,
No. 414 BUSH STREET,
Between Kearny and Dupont, San Francisco.
Steam Scouring, Cleansing and Repairing neatly executed.
Also—Ladies' Cloth Dresses and Cloaks neatly Cleaned and Pressed, or Mis-Fits altered.

G. F. T. GLOVE COMPANY.
FACTORY, 526 MERCHANT STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome,

Manufacture all kinds of OIL DRESSED AND INDIAN TANNED GLOVES for Gentlemen, Drivers, Teamsters, Miners and Lumbermen. Also, BUCKSKIN MITTENS, GOLD BAGS, PURSES, etc., in endless variety, and all sewed by hand. All work warranted. The Trade supplied. We warrant one pair of our manufacture to outlast two pairs of Eastern manufacture,

Musée des Salons.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

A colored witness was examined in Washington City Court to prove the identity of a white man the other day. District Attorney—"Did you see the man?" "Yes, sir, I seed him!" "Was he a white man?" "Dont know sir" "Do you tell me you saw the man and can't say wether he was a white or black?" "Yes, sir, I seed him bnt dare's so many white fellers callin' themselves 'niggers' round here, I can't tell one from tod'er!" Witness dismissed—explanation satisfactory.

A HATTER in Keokuk is as wise as the good Vicar of Wakefield in regard of the great family picture. He employed a blacksmith of that city to make him a huge sheet-iron hat for a sign. On completing the giant hat, it was found impossible to get it out without tearing down the shop—the door and window being to small too allow it egress.

IT would really seem that the ancients did surpass their descendants in the perfection of their arts. A fire and burglar proof safe, which has been subjected to a volcanic eruption has been discovered in Pompeii, its contents uninjured. It very much resembles modern safes.

"WHAT do you call this?" said Mr. Jones Smith, gently tapping his breakfast with his fork. "Call it?" snarled the landlady, "what do you call it?" "Well, really, Mrs. Brown, "I dont know. There is not hair enough in it for mortar, but there is entirely to much if it is intended for hash!"

A LADY out with her little girl and boy bought him a rubber balloon, which escaped him and flew up in the air. The girl seeing the tears in his eyes, said: "Never mind, Neddy, when you die and go to heaven, you'll dit it,"

THERE's our grandmother, says a contemporary, a striking instance why women should vote. She's paid taxes on a dog for the last ten years, and now declares she won't stand it any longer—she'll either vote or kill the dog!

"I SAY, Jones, how is it that your wife dresses so magnificently, and you always appear out at the elbows?" "You see, Thompson, my wife dresses according to the 'Gazette of Fashion," and I dress according to my ledger."

A YOUNG lady of Philadelphia is up before the courts for stealing—not pocket-handkerchiefs—but piano fortes by hiring them, paying for a month's hire, and then moving away. It is a cheap way of forming a collection.

JOHN DANIEL,

Marble Works,

421 PINE STREET,

(Between Kearny and Montgomery.)

MANTELS, MONUMENTS, TOMBS, PLUMBERS' SLABS, ETC.,

On hand and manufactured to order.

Orders respectfully solicited.

BOWEN BROS.

GROCERS,

Tea and Wine Merchants,

S. E. cor. Montgo'ry and California,

San Francisco.

Wholesale Store,

204 Front Street.

BUCKMAN BROS.,

(Successors to John Myers,)

CAPITOL SALOON,

226 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Opposite the Russ House

R. T. HOUSTON,

Merchant Tailor,

No. 414 BUSH STREET,

Between Kearny and Dupont, San Francisco.

Steam Scouring, Cleansing and Repairing neatly executed.

Also—Ladies' Cloth Dresses and Cloaks neatly Cleaned and Pressed, or Mis-Fits altered.

DICKEY'S

CREME DE LIS

DE CALIFORNIE.

FOR CLEANSING AND PRESERVING THE TEETH Beautifying the Complexion, and removing Freckles, Eruptions, Sunburn, and Tan.

A New Combination, equal to the best French preparations, and free from their poisonous ingredients.

Invented by GEO. S. DICKEY, Chemist, Corner of Market, Stockton, Ellis and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company,

OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

—OFFICE—

S. W. cor. California and Sansome streets.

CAPITAL, $500,000, FULLY PAID IN GOLD COIN.

INSURE MARINE RISKS

Under Open Policies, on Cargoes, Treasure, Freights, Profits, and Commissions.

—ALSO—

ISSUE POLICIES ON TIME, VOYAGE AND HARBOR RISKS ON HULLS.

INSURE AGAINST LOSS BY FIRE

On Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Warce, and other Personal Property.

FIRE, MARINE, HARBOR, AND INLAND TRANSIT RISKS,

On terms as favorable as any other reliable First-Class Company.

Greatest amount taken on any one risk, $50,000. Portions of Risks considered too large, will be re-insured in responsible Companies.

LOSSES PROMPTLY PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!

D. J. STAPLES, President,

CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

HAMBURG—BREMEN,

Fire Insurance Company.

CAPITAL, - - - - $1,000,000

MORRIS SPEYER, Agent.

OFFICE—526 Washington Street, a few doors below Montgomery.....San Francisco.

Being no longer governed by the Tariff of the Board of Underwriters, this Company will effect Insurances at as LOW RATES as those of any other responsible Company.

OCCIDENTAL

Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.

J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.

B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

FIRE INSURANCE.

Manhattan Fire & Marine Insurance

OF NEW YORK.

Incorporated	1821.
Cash capital	$500,000
Surplus	650,000
Total Assets, over	$1,190,000

The above named responsible and well known Company has complied with the law of the State of California, and has deposited $75,000 as additional security for policy holders,

Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, and other property insured against loss or damage by Fire, on the most favorable terms. Also, insurance on Merchandise, Specie and Freight to or from all parts of the world. Losses promptly adjusted and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., General Agents,

206 Front street, corner of California.

Removal.

WILLIAM SHERMAN & CO.,

Have this day Removed their Stock of

Clothing & Men's Furnishing Goods,

From Sansome Street to

608 Montgomery street,

(East Side,) North of Clay.

San Francisco, November 22, 1867.

Asphaltum for Sale

IN ANY QUANTITY TO SUIT, BY THE

PACIFIC ASPHALTUM COMPANY,

No. 533 Kearny street, corner of Sacramento,

SAN FRANCISCO.

This Asphaltum is the purest to be found in the market, being free from rock and clay, or other impurities.

Sidewalks Laid and Roofing Done at Shortest Notice.

NEUVAL & CO.

M. S. WHITING. F. G. BERRY.

WHITING & BERRY,

DEALERS IN

TEAS,

WINES

AND

SPIRITS,

FOR MEDICINAL

and FAMILY USE.

Apothecaries, Physicians, Invalids and Families supplied, in quantities to suit, Wholesale or Retail, with

FINE,

MEDIUM,

or LOW PRICED QUALITIES.

609 Sacramento st., second door above Montgomery,

SAN FRANCISCO.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ANTHONY GIFFORD, deceased.

Order to show cause why Order of Sale of Real Estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of Anthony Gifford, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts, expenses and charges of the administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 24th day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published nt least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a weekly newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 22d, 1867.

T. J. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.

nov23-30 dec7-14-21

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JOHN DE VRIES, deceased.

City and County of San Francisco—ss.

Notice is hereby given that B. B. McAllister, having, on the 20th day of November, 1867, filed in this Court his petition, praying to be allowed to amend the petition of Charles Ackerman, praying for an order of sale of real estate, filed herein June 12th, 1865, to establish certain facts, which are in brief, to-wit:

That the said real estate was, at the time of filing said petition for the sale thereof, almost wholly unproductive, and produced a monthly rental of eight dollars per month and no more, and for the further particulars, reference is here made to said petition on file in my office; the hearing of the same has been fixed by said Court for MONDAY, the 16th day of December, 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M. of said day, of the December term of 1867, at the Court room thereof, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco; and all persons interested in the said estate, are hereby notified then, and there to appear, and show cause, if any they have, why the said petition should not be granted.

Dated November 20th, 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

E. B. MASTICK & T. B. BISHOP, Esqs., Attorneys for Petitioners. nov23-30 dec7-14

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF H. C. KORF, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of H. C. Korf, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator, at his office and place of transaction of business, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated San Francisco, November 19th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Administrator of the Estate of H. C. Korf, deceased.

nov23-4t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF BENJAMIN OBER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Executrix of the last will of the estate of Benjamin Ober, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executrix, at her place of business, at the law office of Messrs. Clarke & Carpentier, No 606 Washington street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, November 14th, 1867.

JANE E OBER,

Executrix of the last will of Benjamin Ober, deceased.

H. K. W. CLARKE, Esq., Attorney for Executrix.

nov16 23-30 dec7-14

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, Petaluma.

EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ANN LEEDOM, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, awarding the care and custody of her daughter Julia to plaintiff, and allowing her to resume her maiden name.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 7th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

[SEAL.] WM LOEWY, Clerk,

By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.

Geo. W. Tyler, Plaintiff's Attorney. s14-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of WM. D. PALMER, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Samuel L. Palmer, the administrator of the estate of William D. Palmer, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and those persons entitled, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said William D. Palmer, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the ninth day of December, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said William D. Palmer, deceased, and the persons entitled, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said ninth day of December, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 7th, 1867.

A. J. GUNNISON, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.

nov9 16 23 30 dec7

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of T. O. HOPKINS, deceased.

All papers and proceedings in the above entitled matter having been transferred to this Court from the Probate Court of Alameda County by reason of the disqualification of the Judge of said Court to act, and among said papers, a petition of A. J. Lowell, Administrator of said estate, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of said estate, that the same has been audited, allowed and confirmed, that all the debts and expenses of administration have been fully paid, that a portion of said estate remains for distribution to the heirs of said deceased, and praying for a distribution to the heirs entitled.

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of the said T. O. Hopkins, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on MONDAY, the 16th day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said T. O. Hopkins, deceased, according to law:

And it is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before said hearing, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 13th, 1867. nov16-23 30 dec7-14

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of WILLIAM LOBB, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator of the Estate of William Lobb, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled.

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said William Lobb, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on WEDNESDAY, the eleventh day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said William Lobb, deceased, according to law:

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said eleventh day of December, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 1st, 1867.

J. T. FINN, Attorney for Petitioner. nov2 5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—IN THE MATTER OF the Estate of EDWARD O'DONNELL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Edward O'Donnell, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said estate of the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, on the southeast corner of Sansome and California streets, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, November 14th, 1867.

CHARLES B. POLHEMUS,

Administrator of the Estate of Edward O'Donnell, deceased. nov16-5w

A certain bricklayer of Charleston has a "manhood" working for him in the capacity of hod-carrier, who is in the habit of going to sleep on the brick pile. The other day, working on the second story of a house, he yelled, 'More mort,' several times, if not oftener, and not hearing from the manhood, looked down and saw him sound asleep with the hod for a pillow. Yelling at him unsuccessfully, until hoarse, he adopted the novel expedient of throwing a brick on his head. The ruse succeeded. The darkey waked up, saying, "D—n dese miskeeters! Dey won't luff a fellow sleep."

THE only grocer in Hastings, Michigan, that persists in the selling of intoxicating beverages, has fixed a sort of wheel lettered with the initials of the liquors desired, as B for brandy, W for whiskey, and so on ad infinitum. The drinker places his tumbler upon the letter of the drink he desires— not forgetting to place the money there also—then turns the wheel. It goes behind the screen, is filled, rolls on its journey round to the drinker, and no one is seen to sell, or take pay, and thus the law is evaded.

A WAG, strolling with a friend through a country churchyard, called attention to a grave, the stone on which had no name nor inscription on it. "This," said H—, "is the grave of the notorious gambler, Mr. R—. You observe that there is no name recorded on the tombstone, but I think I could suggest an appropriate epitaph." "What would you suggest?" inquired his friend. "Waiting for the last trump!" was the reply.

A YOUNG man in New Haven, the other day, rushed into a drug store, and, in great alarm, asked the clerk if benzine was poisonous. "No, said the clerk, "why?" "Because," said the fellow, "father went to the closet to take down the gin bottle, and by mistake took several swallows before he knew it." "He is all right," replied the clerk. "The only difference between benzine and modern gin is the smell."

A Providence boy, five years of age, having stolen a can of milk, his mother took him to task, with moral suasion, and wound up her discourse by exclaiming: "What in the world were you going to do with the milk anyhow?" "I was going to steal a little dog to drink it," was the crushing reply.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,

SANSOME STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE PROOF.

Two Hundred Rooms well Ventilated and Richly Furnished.

Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.

The Exchange Coach, with RED LIGHTS, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel FREE OF CHARGE.

The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully inform the traveling public that the

AMERICAN EXCHANGE

Is now and will continue as it ever has been, the most comfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the state. TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT,

Wholesale Candy Manufacturers,

No. 408 CLAY STREET,

Between Sansome and Battery Sts., San Francisco.

FANCY AND COMMON CANDIES

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Sugar Toys, Figures, Animals, Birds, etc.

Are prepared to receive orders to any extent and in any desired style.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT.

G. E. T. GLOVE COMPANY,

FACTORY, 526 MERCHANT STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome,

Manufacture all kinds of OIL DRESSED AND INDIAN TANNED GLOVES for Gentlemen, Drivers, Teamsters, Miners and Lumbermen. Also, BUCKSKIN MITTENS, GOLD BAGS, PURSES, etc., in endless variety, and all sewed by hand. All work warranted. The Trade supplied. We warrant one pair of our manufacture to outlast two pairs of Eastern manufacture,

Musee des Salons.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street, between California and Pine.

Belden's Family Depot for Domestic Luxuries

AT this depot are, all should know,
For him who strong or faint is,
Superior grub—for home or club—
And every kind of dainties.
Westphalia hams, fresh oysters, clams,
Constituents of chowder,
Fine breakfast tea, and hominy,
And genuine curry powder.
Oil, mustard, wine, both French and Rhine,
Lard, coffee, ketchup, capers.
Crushed sugar, peas, and Switzer cheese,
And sperm and waxen tapers.
The giblets, pluck, of goose and duck,
Of woodcock, snipe and plovers,
Of partridge, too, and cockatoo—
The last express for lovers!
It seems absurb there scarce a bird—
My rhyme this somewhat ruffles—
But Belden's got in tin or pot,
The LIVER of with TRUFFLES.
Prunes, raisins, rice, preserves and spice,
Gin, whisky, rum and brandy,
Drinks made of malt, and table salt,
Tongues, sausages, and candy.
Above's not all to which I'd call
Particular attention.
Le vin d'elite, Chateau Lafitte,
And others, I would mention.
Surpassing fine Madeira wine,
St. Julien, port and sherry,
Chateaux Margaux and Veuve Clicquot,
Old apple jack and cherry.
La Rose, Chablis, and Burgundy
Both white, and red and sightly,
Prime Hermitage of ripe old age,
Still, sparkling too and sprightly.
Santerne, medoc, still sparkling hock,
Johannesberg, Hockheimer,
Then sirs and dames (these German names
Would craze an English rhymer!)
Just come and buy, and cease to sigh
For Egypt and its fleshpots;
Ne'er better fare did Pharoh share,
Or any other despots.

ET CETERA

No. 652 Sacramento Street.

$100 00

SAVED in a very Short Time by using

STANDARD SOAP CO.'S

WASHING POWDER.

TRY IT!

Does Not Injurn the Clothes. Sold Everywhere.

NOTICE!

Not Out of Business—Only Removed.

Pioneer Steam Marble Works Com'y

HAVE REMOVED

Their Marble Mantel Warerooms from No. 546 California street to their extensive Steam Factory,

422 and 424 Jackson Street,

Where they keep constantly on hand the best and most select stock of

MARBLE MANTELS AND GRATES, HEADSTONES AND MONUMENTS.

Our Steam facilitins enable us to sell better work at reduced prices than that manufactured by hand.

422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Between Montgomery and Sansome.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

Wholesale & Retail Confectioners,

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the state. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prises. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

WILL & FINCK,

EXCELSIOR CUTLERS, LOCK-SMITHS & BELL-HANGERS, Importers and Manufacturers of all kinds of Cutlery Razors, Shears, and all kinds of Cutlery, ground and repaired — Bell Hanging and Locksmithing done in the best manner. 613 Jackson street, fourth door west of Kearny.

Country orders promptly attended to.

T. B. RODGERS,

CUTLER,

108 Leidesdorff street.

Corner California, adjoining the Pacific Insurance Office, San Francisco.

Dr. John T. Crook,

Late of the Pacific Mail service, has established himself in the practice of his profession in this city.

—OFFICE:—

S. W. corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets.

OFFICE HOURS—9 to 10 A. M.; 2 P. M.; 4 to 6 P. M.

REESE W. GLUYAS. S. E. DUTTON.

GLUYAS & DUTTON,

COUNTING HOUSE STATIONERS,

Fireman's Fund Insurance Company's Building,
No. 227 Sansome Street.....San Francisco.

Pioneer Iron Shutter Works,

ESTABLISHED 1849.

CALVIN NUTTING,

Manufacturer of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS & SHUTTERS,

STEEL LINED BANK VAULTS,

Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc.

123 Bush street, between Sansome and Battery, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

Pioneer Iron Works,

CORNER OF MARKET AND FREMONT STREETS, San Francisco.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT

Manufacturers of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS, SHUTTERS, BANK VAULTS, PRISON CELLS, BALCONIES, GRATINGS, IRON FENCE, STAIRS, Etc.

BURGLAR PROOF BANK VAULT LOCKS

Constantly on hand, a large assortment of Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

BAURHYTE & McAFEE,

Steam Boiler and Sheet Iron WORKS.

Owned and conducted by Practical Boiler Makers.

HIGH AND LOW-PRESSURE BOILERS, STATIONARY AND MARINE.

Howard street, bet. Fremont and Beale, San Francisco.

Having had twenty-two years experience in this business, we feel confident of being able to compete—as to quality of work—with any establishment on the Pacific Coast.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

GALLAGHER WEED & CO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

AN FRANCISCO

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

—OF—

MACCARONI,
VERMICELLI,
PASTE, and
FARINA

First Premium in 1857—1859—1864—1865.

Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co.,

706 SANSOME STREET,

San Francisco.

Removal.

JOHN G. HODGE & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale Stationers,

Have Removed to

329 and 331 Sansome Street,

Southwest corner of Sacramento.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

Hay, Grain, and Feed of all kinds.

Hucks & Lambert's Patent AXLE GREASE.

21 Clay street and 28 Commercial street, between Drumm and East, San Francisco.

MRS. C. COOK,

FIRST PREMIUM HAIR JEWELRY,

519 Montgomery street,

Between Clay and Commercial.....SAN FRANCISCO.

AVERY'S

GREAT

NATIONAL PUMP

AND WELL.

This Pump has proved itself to be the greatest invention of the age. Designed for DEEP WELLS, it will RAISE WATER (500) FIVE HUNDRED FEET; can sink a well 30 to 40 feet in (50) sixty minues.

This Pump is specially adapted to the wants of BREWERS and DISTILLELS, on account of the facility with which, by its use, casks in the upper stories of their warehouses can be filled from the vats below.

STATE, COUNTY, & TOWN RIGHTS FOR SALE.

Pumps Furnished at Moderate Prices, by

S. P. ROBERTS,

Agent for California and Nevada,

Care FARNSWORTH & MILNE, Plumbers,

318 Pine street, San Francisco.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.

The Hat wearing community are invited to examine the Stock at the above store, and in quality, style and price,

THEY DEFY COMPETITION!

Their Stock embraces all of the latest "novelties" and Standard Styles to be found elsewhere.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.

PRIVATE MEDICAL AID.

QUICK CURES AND MODERATE CHARGES.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY,

PRIVATE MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE,

Sacramento Street, below Montgomery, Opposite Pacific Mail Steamship Co's Office, Private Entrance on Leidesdorff Street, San Francisco.

Established expressly to afford the afflicted sound and scientific Medical Aid, in the treatment and cure of all Private and Chronic Diseases, cases of Secrecy, and all Sexual Disorders.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY returns his sincere thanks to his numerous patients for their patronage and would take this opportunity to remind them that he continues to consult at his Institute for the cure of chronic diseases of the Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Digestive and Genito-Urinary Organs, and all Private Diseases, viz: Syphilis in all its forms and stages, Seminal Weakness, and all the horrid consequences of Self-Abuse, Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Nocturnal and Diurnal Emissions, Sexual Debility, Diseases of the Back and Loins, Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, etc.; and he hopes that his long experience and successful practice will continue to insure him a share of public patronage. By his practice of many years in Europe and the United States, he is enabled to apply the most efficient and successful remedies against diseases of all kinds. He uses no mercury, charges moderate, treats his patients in a correct and honorable way, and has references of unquestionable veracity from men of known respectability and high standing in society. All parties consulting him, by letter or otherwise, will receive the best and gentlest treatment, and implicit secresy.

TO FEMALES.

When a female is in trouble, or afflicted with disease, as weakness of the back and limbs, pain in the head, dimness of sight, loss of muscular power, palpitation of the heart, irritability, nervousness, extreme urinary difficulties, derangement of digestive function, general debility, vaginitis, all disease of the womb, hysteria, sterility, and all other diseases peculiar to females, she should go or write at once to the celebrated female doctor, W. K. DOHERTY, at his Medical Institute, and consult him about her troubles and disease. Irregularities, suppressions, etc., will receive the Doctor's most particular attention. Let no false delicacy prevent, but apply immediately and save yourself from painful suffering and premature death. Ladies whose delicate health or other circumstances prevent an increase in their families, should write or call at DR. DOHERTY'S MEDICAL INSTITUTE, and they will receive every possible relief and help. The Doctor's offices, consisting of a suite of six rooms, are so arranged that he can be consulted without fear of observation.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Patients (male or female) residing in any part of the State, however distant, who may desire the opinion and advice of DR. W. K. DOHERTY in their respective cases, and who think proper to submit a written statement of such, in preference to holding a personal interview, are respectfully assured that their communications will be held most sacred. Dr. Doherty takes this opportunity of observing that all letters are only opened and replied to by himself, and the latter as promptly as possible.

If the case be fully and candidly described, personal communication will be unnecessary, as instructions for diet, regimen, and the general treatment of the case itself, (including the remedies) will be forwarded without delay, and in such a manner as to convey no idea of the purport of the letter or parcel so transmitted.

Consultation, by letter or otherwise, FREE. Permanent cure guaranteed, or no pay. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D.
San Francisco, Cal

SPERMATORRHŒA.

DR. DOHERTY has just published no important pamphlet embodying his own views and experiences in relation to Impotence or Virility, being a short treatise on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, Nervous and Physical Debility consequent on this affection, and other diseases of the Sexual Organs

This little work contains information of the utmost value to all whether married or single, and will be sent FREE by mail on receipt of Six Cents in Postage stamps for return postage. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D., San Francisco, Cal.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor.
CHAS. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

MR. JOHN McCULLOUGH,
MRS. SOPHIE EDWIN,
AND THE STAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

Matinee to-day,
MEG'S DIVERSION.

This Evening.....December 7th,
The Wallackian Success,
MEG'S DIVERSION,
And the Romantic Drama of
CARPENTER OF ROUEN.

The beautiful and accomplished Artiste, FANNY YOUNG, has arrived, and will shortly appear at this Theatre.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:
Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra.....$1 00
Parquette..... 50 | Upper Circle..... 25

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

Lessees and Managers,
MESSRS. EDWARDS, BATES & VINSON.

This Afternoon and EVening,....Dec. 7th,
Augustin Daly's Original and Thrilling Drama of
UNDER THE GASLIGHT!
With the popular artist,
MR. CHARLES WHEATLEIGH.
In his celebrated impersonation of Snorkey,
Assisted by
MRS. F. M. BATES,
And the Entire Strength of the Company.

This extraordinary production will be presented
☞ EVERY EVENING TILL FURTHER NOTICE. ☜
THE RAILWAY TRAIN
Has been universally pronounced to be the GREATEST EFFECT ever witnessed on the Stage.
Box Office open at 10 o'clock A. M.
N. B.—An Early Application for Seats is necessary to prevent disappointment, as they are already secured several dars in advance.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.
Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats.....One Dollar
Parquet 50 cts | Gallery 25 cts
Doors open at 7 o'clock; to commence at 8.

Leslie, Raynor & Smith's Minstrels.

Temple of Music, 320 Bush Street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.

Immense Success of the Grand Combination
NEW MINSTREL TROUPE!
Endorsed by the presence of thousands of our First Families.

To-day.....at 2 o'clock,
A GRAND MINSTREL MATINEE.

To-Night the Wonderful Optical Illusion,
THE GHOST!
Vast Audiences Spell Bound and Mystified by the Powerful Effect Produced!
GREAT SENSATION!

PRICES OF ADMISSION:
Orchestra Chairs and Dress Circle.....75 Cents
Parquet.....50 cents | Upper Circle.....25 cents
Box Office open from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M., where Seats can be secured without extra charge.

BIERSTADT'S PAINTING,

'CROSSING THE PLAINS'

NOW ON EXHIBITION AT

209 Montgomery Street.

Admission,.....25 cents.
Season Tickets, $1 00.

DICKEY'S

CREME DE LIS

DE CALIFORNIE.

THE FASHIONABLE WHITE WASH FOR BEAUTIFYING THE COMPLEXION.

A NEW COMBINATION, equal to the best French preparations, and free from their poisonous ingredients.

GEO. S. DICKEY, Chemist,
Cornor of Market, Stocktou, Ellis and Fourth streets,
San Francisco.

H. BATTEL'S
SAMPLE ROOMS,

411 SANSOME STREET,
Between Commercial and Sacramento streets.

H. BATTEL BEGS TO INFORM HIS FRIENDS AND the public that he has opened the above hall as a first-class Refreshment Saloon, where they can always be sure to find the very best

WINES, LIQUORS, AND HAVANA CIGARS
in the Market.
Hot Lunch served daily from 10 to 2 o'clock.

SPECIAL NOTICE!

GREAT REDUCTION IN
DRY GOODS
FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.
9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
WILL OFFER ON
Monday, - - December 2d,
THE FOLLOWING DESCRIBED GOODS
AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

1000 Foulard de Laine Dresses;
1500 Empress Cloth Dresses;
1200 Poplin Dresses;
3000 Print Dresses;
500 Pieces of French Merinos;
300 Pieces Alpacas;
Empress Plaids,
Real Scotch Plaids,
Ottoman Velours,
Winseys,
Linseys.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
RETAIL STORE,
No. 9 Montgomery street.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,
No. 107 Battery Street, near Pine Street.

BRIDAL SILKS!
RICH LACES!
EVENING SILKS!
CHRISTMAS
and NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.,
9 Montgomery Street,

Have received an unparalleled and choice assortment of the following described Goods suitable for

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS!

Bridal and Evening Silks;
Chantilly and Point Lace Shawls;
Black and Colored Silks;
Chene and Droge Silks;
Velvet and Silk Cloaks;
Indian Shawls;
Irish and French Poplins;
Point and Applique Lace Handkerchiefs;
Embroidered and Plain Handkerchiefs;
Irish and French Poplins;
Point de Venice Lace Collars;
French and English Hosiery;
Barnsley Napkins and Cloths;
Chantilly Flounces and Capes;
Cashmere Shawls;
Lama Lace Shawls;

GLOVES, BEST MAKE.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.'S
RETAL STORE:
No. 9 Montgomery street.

WHOLESALE STORE:
No. 107 Battery street.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

BOYS'

Pioneer Clothing Store,

CLOSING BUSINESS!!

CLOSING BUSINESS!!!

We offer the entire stock at the following reduced prices:

	Regular Prices.	Present Prices.
Boys' French Cass. Basket Pants	$6 00	$4 00
Boys' Velvet Cass. Ext. Sup. Pants	8 00	5 00
Boys' Cadet Union Suits	8 00	5 00
Boys' Union Sack Overcoats	8 00	6 00
Boys' Petersham Overcoats	14 00	10 00
Boys' Bl'k Castor Beaver Overcoats	16 00	12 00
Boys' Bl'k Esquimaux Beaver Overcoats	18 00	13 00
Boys' French Cloth Frock Coats	18 00	12 00
Boys' Esqtimaux Bever Suits	15 00	12 00
Boys' Fine Esquimaux Bever Suits	26 00	18 00
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants	2 50	1 50
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants, ex. Fine	3 00	2 25
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants, embr'd	4 00	3 00
Youths' Gatibaldi Fancy Suits	7 00	5 00
Youths' Garibaldi Extra Fine Suits	8 00	6 00
Youths' Embroidered Cloth Suits	10 00	5 00
Youths' Black Beaver Suits	10 00	6 00
Youths' Pilot Cloth Overcoats	10 00	7 00
Youths' Chinchilla Overcoats	10 50	8 00
Youths' Union Sack Overcosts	8 00	6 00
Youths' Black Castor Beaver Overcoats	12 00	9 00
Youths' Heavy Black Beaver Garricks	10 00	8 00
Youths' Black Cloth Overcoat (sleeves)	11 00	8 50

500 Men's Esquimaux and Castor Beaver Overcoats,
Forty per cent. less than any other store on this Coast.
100 dozen Men's Star Shirts, $1 50
Astonishing low figures.

Remember, our goods are all Custom-made, from our Broadway store in New York, thirteen years' standing. Everybody must know our goods. Retiring from business, the goods must he sold. Call at LOCKWOOD & CO'S, and examine the great reduction in prices.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
624 Clay Street.

Administrator's Sale of Real Estate.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT, IN PURSUance of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, made on the 26th day of November, A. D. 1867, in the matter of the Estate of JUSTIN VICTOR SUBERVIELLE, deceased, the undersigned, the Administrator of the Estate of said deceased, will sell at private sale, to the highest bidder, for cash, gold coin of the United States, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on

WEDNESDAY, THE 8TH DAY OF JANUARY, A.D. 1868,

at 12 o'clock, M., at the office of W. C. Burnett, Esquire, the attorney of said Administrator, No 606 Washington street in the said City and County, all the right, title, interest and estate of the said Justin Victor Suberville, at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has by operation of law or otherwise, acquired other than, or in addition to that of the said deceased at the time of his death, in and to all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows, to wit:

I.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of King street, 114 feet 7 inches northeasterly from the northeast corner of Fifth and King streets, thence running northeasterly along said line of King street 91 feet 8 inches; thence northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet; thence southwesterly and parallel with King street 91 feet 8 inches, and thence southeasterly 120 feet, to the point of commencement.

II.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of King street 343 feet 9 inches northeasterly from the northeasterly corner of Fifth and King streets, thence running northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet; thence northeasterly and parallel with King street 22 feet 11 inches; thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet, to King street, and thence southwesterly on the northwesterly line of King street 22 feet 11 inches, to the point of commencement.

III.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of Townsend street 137½ feet northeasterly from the northeasterly corner of Fifth and Townsend streets, thence running northeasterly aloug said line of Townsend street 45 feet 10 in hes; thence northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet; thence westerly and parallel with Townsend street 45 feet 10 inches, and thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet, to the point of commencement.

IV.—Commencing on the southeasterly line of Berry street, 229 feet 2 inches southwesterly from the southwesterly corner of Fifth and Berry streets, thence running southwesterly aloug said line of Berry street 45 feet 10 inches; thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet; thence northeasterly and parallel with Berry street 45 feet 10 inches, and thence northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street, 137½ feet, to the point of commencement.

V.—Commencing at the northeasterly corner of California and Mason streets, thence running easterly along the northerly line of California street 34 feet 4½ inches; thence northerly and parallel with Mason street 68 feet 9 inches; thence westerly and parallel with California street 34 feet 4½ inches to Mason street, and thence southerly along the easterly line of Mason street 68 feet 9 inches, to the point of commencement.

That offers and bids will be received, on such sale, on and from MONDAY, the 30th day of December, A. D. 1867, until and at 12 o'clock, M., on the 8th day of January, A. D. 1868 by said Administrator, at the said office of W. C. Burnett, Esquire, in said city and county.

Terms and Conditions of Sale: Cash, gold coin of the United States; ten per cent of the purchase money to ho paid to the Administrator, on the day of sale, the balance on confirmation of sale by said Probate Court: deeds and stamps at expense of purchasers.

LUCAS PONTON DE ARCE,
Administrator of the Estate of Justin Victor Subervielle, deceased.
W. C. BURNETT, Attorney for Administrator. Office 606 Washington street. d7-4t

NO HUMBUG! NO HUMBUG!

POSITIVE DISSOLUTION OF COPARTNERSHIP.

The Copartnership of the Proprietors of

QUINCY HALL

CLOTHING

EMPORIUM

Will positively be dissolved on or before the

FIRST OF JANUARY, 1868,

In consequence of which, we offer our Entire Stock until then at

PRICES REGARDLESS OF COST!

Good quality of White Shirts for.....$1 50
Good Red Flannel Undershirts and Drawers for....$1 50

ALL OTHER GOODS PROPORTIONATELY LOW.

Now is your time to secure BARGAINS
AT
545, 547, & 549 Washington street.

Turnbull & Smith,
PRINTERS,
522 CLAY ST.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Good Work!—One Price!—Punctuality!

D. BRUCE,

PRINTER,

COMMERCIAL STREET OPPOSITE MINERS' RESTAURANT.

New Opposition Line via Panama.

The North American Steamship Company will dispatch the elegant and commodious Steamship

AMERICA,
(3000 Tons,)
EDWARD WAKEMAN.....Commander,

For PANAMA, from Mission Street Wharf, at 12 o'clock noon, on

SATURDAY, - - - - - DEC. 14th, 1867,

Connecting, via Panama Railroad, at Aspinwall with the Company's new and splendid Steamship SANTIAGO, 3,000 Tons, for NEW YORK.

One hundred pounds Baggage free.
Surgeon on board; medicine and attendance free.
The Company will continue their Line via Nicaragua.
For further information apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco

Notice.

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE,

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, POST STREET.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

THE PROPRIETORS OF THIS POPULAR INSTITUtion have much pleasure in announcing that in consequence of the growing interest taken by American ladies in mercantile pursuits, they have at the solicitation of many heads of families, fitted up class rooms exclusively for young ladies, that they may have all the advantages of a commercial education, and be fitted to act in the capacity of clerks or book-keepers. Experience in this matter in the Eastern States and on the Continent, shows that with a little careful training, they can be qualified to fill with efficiency all the lighter departments of trade, where there is a wide range for the exercise of their talents.

A. DE LEO DE LAGUNA, Principal,
JAMES VINSONHALER, President.

Asphaltum for Sale

IN ANY QUANTITY TO SUIT, BY THE

PACIFIC ASPHALTUM COMPANY,

No. 533 Kearny street, corner of Sacramento,
SAN FRANCISCO.

This Asphaltum is the purest to be found in the market, being free from rock and clay, or other impurities.

Sidewalks Laid and Roofing Done at Shortest Notice.

NEUVAL & CO.

The California

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VII., No. 30. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 14, 1867. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

The Alaska Duels—their secret history; The "Manifestations" in Stockton; Brunettes and Blondes; Female Suffrage, by A. G. B.; A prowl through Shanghai, by Forbes Maitland; Dramatic Affairs, by Touchstone; Literary Gleanings; Public Reading in New York; Social Homage of Wealth. etc.; Near to Thee, a poem by W. A. Kendall; "Lion's Mouth;" The tale of a Black Cat; Tower of Babel; "Let Dogs delight to bark and bite;" A Fat-Witted Jester, etc; A Kangaroo Drive; Recollections of the War; Incidents in the Shenandoah Valley; A Lover's Quandary; Mrs. Wilkins' Club, by John Quill; Getting into the Opera without Pay; Poetry, Paragraphs, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"The gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I will aggravato my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingalo." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

"A Fat-Witted Jester."

The Dramatic Chronicle of Tuesday last published an editorial, over a column in length, under this heading. The fat-witted jester is, the writer says, "the official jester of THE CALIFORNIAN, whose weekly (or weakly) roar in the 'Lion's Mouth' of that paper, has degenerated into a spiritless echo." The writer says that this fat-witted jester (meaning us) "not only perpetrates pointless jokes himself, but he is so intellectually purblind that he blunders over other people's jokes where the point is as obvious as a church steeple to a man with his wits about him." We are afraid that the writer of this amazing editorial is rather a lean-witted jester, or he would not make such a poverty-stricken pun as "weekly (or weakly)" and think it funny. He would not, unless very lean-witted, repeat what has been said a dozen times before, by newspaper writers whom the Lion's roar has made nervous—that shockingly worn out 'joke' about the 'ass in the lion's skin.'" The especial reason which the heavy editor of the Chronicle advances, for calling us a "fat-witted jester" is as follows: Signor Maucusi sold the proprietor of the Chronicle by sending him a paragraph stating that "Benjamin Lumley, late of Her Majesty's Theatre," had engaged Malibran, Gindetta Grisi, Rubini Lablache, Ellsler, Cerito, Taglioni, and other renowned artistes, for a season in San Francisco."

Wilkes' Spirit of the Times, taking occasion to sneer at the ignorance of the San Francisco musical public on account of the publication of this paragraph, we said in our last "Lion's Mouth," "The public of San Francisco appreciated the joke, and certainly if any one was taken in it was only the Chronicle." Therefore—because we have not faith in the Chronicle man's knowledge of operatic and dramatic affairs, and believe it perfectly possible that he never heard of Benjamin Lumley et al—we are a fat-witted jester incapable of seeing a joke. We must confess to our inability to see the Chronicle's part of the joke in the instance in question, except it be that of the victim.

A Needless Apology.

The Alta of Tuesday last publishes the following:

ERRATUM.—In the Alta law report yesterday morning an error was made in the title of a divorce suit in the Fifteenth District Court. Instead of "William B. Clark vs. California Clark," it should read William P. Clark vs. Calfurnia Clark.

Oh, bah! What's the use of apologizing for such a mistake as that! Isn't "California" a darned sight more sensible, respectable, handsome-looking and in every way desirable a name than "Calfurnia." We expect her name is "California," after all, and that her father had a habit of mispronouncing it "Calfurnia," and when she was christened the clergyman misunderstood him. At all events it wasn't worth while correcting it. Such a name as "Calfurnia" should receive no protection. "Calphurnia," the name of the wife of Julius Cæsar, who was, or should have been, above suspicion, sounds well enough, but "Calfurnia," with an f, as we said before, is not half as good a name as California. Why couldn't Fitz Smythe leave well enough alone?

A Singing Mouse

The Bulletin says that a gentleman in the Pioneer building has caught a singing mouse. "He was surprised to hear the little prisoner utter a peculiar and pleasing whistling noise not unlike the feeble chirpings of a canary bird, and determined to preserve it. The mouse resembles other mice in every particular save that of its remarkable vocal powers." Peculiar and pleasing! Oh yes! The explanation of the phenomenon of a singing mouse was given to the world many years ago. The poor little beast has a frightful pain in its stomach, chronic disease of the bronchial tube, partial paralysis of the pneumogastric nerve, and is suffering from general debility. If the gentleman in the Pioneer building 'preserves' that mouse long, it must be in spirits,

"Let Dogs Delight to Bark and Bite" etc.

We do not know whether the Board of Education recommend the reading of the hymns of the admirable Doctor Watts in the public schools. Perhaps some of them, whether this be the case or not, remember one of these moral poetic effusions, which while impressing on the infant mind, the policy of allowing dogs to bark and bite, since they were created with a desire to do so, and also advising them not to interfere with the bears and lions who growl and fight for 'its their nature to. Perhaps they read that verse and no more. The next runs thus:

"But children you should never let
Your angry passions rise,
Your little hands were never made
To scratch each others eyes."

The moral inculcated is one which should be pondered on by members of the Board of Education, equally as much as by the children for whose education they provide. Birds in their little nests agree, and 'tis a dreadful sight when members of the Board of Education quarrel as they did in their chamber on Tuesday last, abuse one another and nearly fight. Of course it was hard for those who were newly elected to see the members, whose successors they were, occupying their seats even for the short time intervening between the assembling of the Board and the presentation of their credentials. Mr. Holt wanted his seat at once, and Mr. Graves, according to the Bulletin's report, "got up in an excited manner, and taking his overcoat and hat, remarked: 'If that is the decision I have no further occasion to remain here. I will not remain in the face of such an insult.'" And out he walked. Altogether Mr. Holt in his anxiety to take his seat as a member of the Board of Education kicked up a jolly row, and the Board of Education for a short time resembled a school without a school-master.

Very Kind.

San Francisco judges are not made of such stern stuff that they will follow the letter of the law at no matter what expense to the feelings of others The other day a young man was robbed of his money at a game of cards, by a man of the name of Ranson, Ranson being arrested, wished to settle the matter by refunding the money. The Call says:

"He was anxious to get out of the difficulty, and the victim was, like Barkis, "willin." He was anxious to go home, and begged the Court to let him take the money. It was finally determined to permit the matter to be compromised, and the young man received his money, purchased his ticket, and started on the steamer for the East."

This was very kind of judge Rix. He was very considerate towards the young man from the country, but we have heard "compromising the matter" expressed in other words viz: "Comounding a felony." Now compounding a felony is an offense against the law, therefore we will stick to the first expression "the matter was compromised."

Use Up the Dead Dogs.

The correspondent of the St. Louis Democrat was recently invited to a dog feast given by the Indian chief, "Spotted Tail." He says:

There were all kinds of wild meat spread out, and the most delicious of them all was the dog meat.

In the centre of the circle were two dogs, of a dropsical appearance, the hair merely cut lose, and roasted entire, intestines and all. Over this excellent, delicate food was poured the gravy dog's grease. The exquisite dripping had been collected in bone dishes. The dogs appeared plump and young, and all seemed to pay especial attention to the young pups, which was to them what dessert is to the civilized whites.

Any one who has attended a lou-hou in the Sandwich Islands knows how delicious the poe dog (a dog fed entirely on the taro root pounded into a past) is. If all the dogs in San Francisco are to be slaughtered at the expense to the city of somewhere about $1,200 a year, they might be put to some practical use. A large number of nations on the European continent now eat horses; let us eat our dogs, or make the Pound Master eat all he kills.

The Tower of Babel.

An English author and compiler asserts that he has made one of the most important discoveries of the present age, namely, that of demonstrating the identity of the great Pyramid of Egypt with the ancient biblical Tower of Babel. We don't believe he can prove any thing of the kind. The Tower of Babel was never finished, and the great Pyramid of Egypt is. There is no doubt but that this pyramid was built by the Israelites when in captivity in Egypt, as a close examination of it shows the exact part of it on which they were at work when Pharoah cut off their supply of straw. The bricks at the base, microscopically examined, show a large quantity of straw in their composition, but up higher they are made without any at all, the stubble which the Israelites were compelled to gather having been all used up. The English author had better tell some more probable yarn. Our story is true.

The Tale of a Black Cat.

In Pittsburgh lives a lady named Mrs. Carr. One of the neighbors of Mrs. Carr had a child who was afflicted with the croup, and in consequence was barking like a dog. Mrs. Carr bought a black cat and took from it three drops of blood which she administered to the child. The neighbors mobbed the old lady for witchcraft; she was rescued by the authorities and produced twenty witnesses to testify that the child recovered the instant it had swallowed the essence of black cat. There are many children in San Francisco afflicted with croup, the rainy season is coming on, and their number will increase. If the publication of this remarkable cure leads to the destruction of the black cat who, in the immediate vicinity of our dwelling, renders night hideous, then have we not written in vain. Shall infants die of croup when a little cat's blood would save them? Forbid it Heaven! Bleed the cats, black cats, white cats, tabby cats, tortoiseshell cats, any cats, and save the babies!

A KANGAROO DRIVE.

A PICTURE OF AUSTRALIAN SETTLER LIFE.

HECTOR McDIARMID was a tall, gaunt, red-bearded old Scot. He had been many years in Australia. Of the perils which made up the everyday life of the pioneer-squatter he had had his share. Possessed of vast personal strength, and a constitution utterly unassailable by the extremes of heat or cold, hunger or thirst, he had staked life against the many hazards of the bush, and risen a winner—a winner of the broad flats and rich forests of Ballandra, and the great herds which fed over them Simple as a child, kind as a woman, and fearing nothing upon earth—such was old Hector McDiarmid.

In all the pleasant west country was no pleasanter place than Ballandra. You staid a week, a month, a year, as you pleased. If you shot, there was abundance of game, guns and dogs. If you rode, there was every conceivable variety of horse. You might read, you might boat, you might write, or you might do nothing at all. In all of which employments and recreations you felt from the first hour that you had not only the concurrence of your host, but his warmest approbation.

McDiarmid was rich beyond his wants or cares. Unmarried, and with no thought of marriage, he was never so happy as when he had half-a dozen of the younger men of the district (pretending to help him to muster cattle), the effervescene of whose spirits he enjoyed deeply. Old as he was, his feats of strength, when we coaxed him to exhibit, were marvelous. His eyes was still as true and his nerve as steady as in the days when his rifle more than once saved his life. And when he would tell us—for he spoke very charily of deeds which went to make a large share of the legendary lore of the district—his "owre true tale" often made us grave enough.

"Well, ye disrespectful dogs, I'll tell you my idea: it's a grand one. I'm just going clean mad about those kangaroos that are eating me up completely. That's no new's, ye'll say. Eh, but it's got beyond a joke I'm not pushed for a thousand or two, I may say without boasting; but were I the poor man I once was, looking to my fat cattle to meet my bills or else lose the bonny hard-won station, where would I be now? Many a time in years past have I spared the poor furry brutes, when Brau and Barefoot and Fingal had their muzzels buried in their flanks, for surely I trusted that all forest things would disappear before civilization. All history is our warrant for wild beasties, ay, and all aboriginal craters, fading away before the great Anglo-Saxon. But there the brutes abide, every one of them eating as much grass as two sheep, forbye what they trample and spoil. There are thousands of great big kangaroos on the run, if there's one, this minute. They've increased like rabbits of late years, and the old run is now, what no man ever saw it before, short of grass."

Here the old man paused, with an expression of ruefulness almost ludicrous. It was certain that the enormous flock of kangaroo had consumed the herbage so completely which formed the food of the herds of cattle that these valuable and highly-bred animals were, though not starving, so much reduced in condition as to be little more than half their former value.

The veranda looked out on a shaven lawn, which was much loved by our host. It was entirely of English grasses, and the careful superintendence of it formed a great part of the old man's employment. Even in this fiery season it was comparatively green, and afforded a grateful relief to the eye.

As he spoke, a dozen tall, dusky, upright forms sailed over the high rail-fence which bounded the garden. Some fell to munching Mac's dogstail and cocksfoot in the degraded position to "all fours," sacrificing uprightness to appetite. Others "sat up" erect., and crossing their sinewy arms or forelegs across their chests, looked about them, "as natural as a white man." One huge brute, towering a couple of feet above his companions, showed his lighter-colored fur, about sixty yards from us, clearly in the starlight.

"Saw ye ever the like of that?" groaned Mac. "It's the blessing of Provideace they'll no want iato a man's bedroom, for they'll no be kept oot. Am I any kind of kin to you Pharaoh, think ye, that a plague of these hrutes has come against me? What say ye, lads?"

Leaviag us to deliherate upon this view of the qnestion, he slipped quietly into a dressing-room, and reappeared with a long, heavy rifle, pretty well known in these parts, and lettiag drive without more ado, dowu came the "old man" kangaroo with a thud like a buffalo. The rest of the marauders retreated, with a silence and celerity as wouderful as their approach. We saw them top the high rail-fence, with the same gravity, the same stately stride, the same enormous bound, looking in the half light like a steeple-chase of ghouls. There remained "oae old man," however, a solemn fact. He lay dead under a choice young pine, and measnred ten feet from the head to the end of the tail.

"Noo, laddies, ye've ocular proof of my woes aad oppression," recommeaced Mac. "My life's a burden to me. I've tried dogs. I've twenty deer-hounds that can pull down anythiag from a bandicoot to a wild bull. But what ol that? The puir brutes are cut and gashed and ripped till there's hardly hide on them to hold stitches. And they're wearied out till they'll hardly rise to follow the everlastiag vermin."

"Don't you shoot a lot of them?" put in Jack Barton, in a soothiag tone of voice. "I should think a fellow in a week might make a goodish bag, eh?"

"Shoot them? I believe they breed much faster than rabbits, and then they're like the crows; they misdoot the auld iron, and just gae hop, hop, hopping fifty yards out of range. Well, we maun die fechting. I'll no give in. And now, ye'll have my idea. We'll have a 'finchel' as they call it in the Highlands—that is, a grand 'drive.' We'll get all the neighbors, strangers, friends, foes aud acquaintances, and then we'll see how many of the villains we can drive into the bran new yard that the Yankee trapper bodies have just finished. They're douce-like chiels, and I've promised them all the skins for their trouble."

The proposition was received with delight by every man of us; and next day we organized our plan in detail. We wrote hard till lunch—invitations, of course. We also sent au advertisement to the local thunderer, the Ballandra Standard, announcing the "Kangaroo Drive" for a certain day.

Every one came, and brought some one else. The proverbial hospitality of Ballandra attracted some, the sport more. Besides, it was the idle time of the year. The harvest was threshed, the sheep were shorn, the calves branded, the fat cattle not started. Like England at Christmas, Canada in a frost, India in "the rains," and Swan River all the year round, there was little or nothing to do. So every one for miles round about adopted the notion of a week's sport with cheerful promptitnde and a clear conscience.

Affirmative answers began to pour in. All the neighbors—McTavish, Sedley, Jones, Lecroix, and the rest—they would all come. It was "the thing" to help a neighbor. Besides, they might want the smart riders and good horses of Ballandra in a day of need. All the stockmen, we heard by word of month, were coming from the Moyne to Glenelg; partly for the fun, for which they did not care much, partly for the grog, for which they cared a great deal. All the boys made it clear that none of them would stay away. It was a glorious excnse for leaving home, and for showing off one's horse. It proffered unlimited galloping, yelling and bloodshed, singularly combined in the cause of duty. Even the doctor thought he would probably look in, "casualties might occur." In fine farmers, bankers, drapers, butchers, bakers' black fellows—every one who could get a horse or a holiday, came to our mighty hunt.

Our host made stupendous preparations for the company. Two bullocks were killed; a good shot was told off with O'Donnell to beat the river and lagoona, and strings of wild ducks, pigeons and a couple of noble wild turkeys, speedily adorned the larder. Impromptu stabling was devised; levies were made upon adjoining establishments for table necessaries and bedding; all the available hacks were got in for remount service; and after a week's incessant activity we rested, satisfied that either everything was done or that nothing more could be done—which came to the same thing.

On Monday the guests began to arrive: in the forenoon principally those who lived close to Ballandra—that is, from ten to thirty miles. Also boys in great numbers, nervously anxious not to be too late. In the afternoon the procession was continuous of hacks, dog-carts, buggies, mail-phætons, etc., as people preferred to ride or drive. By sundown the house was full; the kitchen and men's huts crowded: the lawn in front of the house, and the green before the "huts," all studded with every variety of man and boy possible under the existing laws of species. Most of the gentry lounged about the veranda or sat on the lawn, now as dry as a deal table. The small farmers, stockmen, and "people" generally sat upon lences, or logs, or carts, and smoked and chaffed unconstrainedly.

McDiarmid sounded the reveille at the first streak of dawn, say about 3:30 A. M. He was also good enough to notify that every one not dressing immediately would be left behind. The boys and many of the inexperienced were thereby goaded into an excited and comfortless style of dressiag. But we ol the ancient habitnés of Ballaadra knew better. We knew that Mrs. Teviot, the honsekeeper, could not have her cold rounds aad hot steaks, her wild-turkey hash aad deviled drumsticks, her jam, honey, fresh butter, eggs, and short-cake and porridge, marshaled at any such supernatural hours. So we of the committee and a dozen or two more "old hands" strolled quietly down to the calm cool river, lying bright in the crimson dawa light, and had a welcome dip.

The water was deliciously cool, but the air was so mild and warm that we sat on the rock or lounged about after comiag out, watching the blue and white cranes, the golden-burnished ibis, the pelicaas aad the spoonbills, as they fished in the shallows, or stood—principally on one leg—in dignified repose. So we lounged and trifled till, in a wave of billowy gold and purple, the "glorious sun rpist;" and then the woods woke up with warble and chatter, the stockmen shook themselves, lit their pipes, and were dressed for the day. Whips began to riag, running in the horses for the paddock. Business becoming imminent, we betook ourselves to our simple appareliag in earnest, and about an hour after sunrise we sat down to a breakfast that yet lives in dreams.

Before breakfast we had heard a few whips "going," and a rolling thunder of galloping hoofs which we knew to be the troop of riding horses which had been collected from all parts of the great horse-paddock, and "run in" to the horse yard—a spacious railed enclosure, with smaller yards abutting on to it. Therefore, directly the after-breakfast pipe was finished, every man shouldered his bridle and took his way down to the horse-yard.

Here was the commencement of the day's exciting duties. Every one had a bridle, by which he desired to connect himself with a horse. There were about one hundred and fifty horses in the yard—blacks, browns, bays, grays—all colors, values, sizes, ages, from Mr. Hollymount's Mameluke, up to fourteen stone with any hounds in Britain, to Dicky Wilder's Timor pony; from the doctor's venerable chestnut, quiet and sagacious enough almost to pay a medical visit on his own account, to Frank Smasher's black colt, backed the day before yesterday.

It is commonly believed that the Australian horse runs up to the colonist, who simply signifies his desire by whistling. This is not precisely true. Those horses which are quiet generally make some effort at evasion, unless when hobbled or lowered in spirit by traveling. The horses which are young, nervous, or vicious, bolt about the yard in utter disregard to the owner's feelings and dignity, and are only cornered with the help of numbers and forced to submit. When a great number are mixed together they excite one another to rebellion, and complicate confusion in every way.

Thus this morning we had before our embarrassed view a chaos of heads and tails—principally the latter for the first twenty minutes—every man trying, like hunting-men at a hand-gate, to get out of the scrape himself, regardless of his friends.

Cries of "Hang that colt of yours, Jones; he's run over the top of me: you're always riding a colt!" "Brown, why on earth did you bring that kicking mare of yours here?" "Wilson, lend us a hand with the filly; she won't take a minute." "Mr. Robinson may I venture to ask respectfully if you are on friendly terms acquainted with that white-legged chestnut, against whose hind-legs you brushed this moment? That horse, sir, is Mr. Leech's Cannibal; he has killed two men, and for private reasons, has just missed the chance of killing a third!"

Mr. Robinson goes and sits on the rails to recover himself.

At length all the horses were caught, and in much shorter time than might be expected. Anon we are all mounted and away, the younger men and boys "lashing" their horses over the great gum-tree logs, which, offering jumps suited to all comers, lay thinly scattered over the great flat which fringed the river.

Between the operation of the heat and the competitive energies of the cattle-herds, and the flocks of kangaroo, the vast natural meadow was, as one of the stockmen feelingly observed, "as bare of grass as the palm of your hand," while another gravely professed his belief, "that you could hunt a flea across it with a stock-whip."

Few of the depredators were visible at this hour of the day on the flat, though the night would see it thickly dotted with their dark, quaint forms; now they were lying in groups at the bases of the white and red gum-trees of the forest which we were just entering. The well-bred short-horns of the Ballandra herd soon began to meet our eyes in "mobs" or droves, and their manifest low condition drew forth angry comments from the squatters and their retainers.

The yard, which was to hold our game, could they be induced to enter it, was a large enclosure of split timber, with saplings and branches placed vertically against the rails, so as to augment the appearance of height and solidity.

A kangaroo can jump to a remarkable height, so that extraordinary fencing is needed. This, however, was but the strong room, as it were—the final prison, which, entered, "left hope behind." Longer enclosures, called "lanes," led in circuitous fashion to this oubliette. Exteading from these again were the "wings"—long lines of fencing, gradually closing in toward these lanes, and far apart—indeed out of sight—at their extremeties.

Captain O'Donnell divided us into companies, and with military decision and brevity gave us our instructions and routes.

Partly from McDiarmid's direction, and partly from a pretty accurate knowledge of the run, acquired in his numerous shooting excursions over it, he despatched one party after another to all points of the compass.

An active young neighbor was told off in command of a party to beat the Ettrick plain. "Cold Morning," a tame aboriginal, of hound-like qualities, led another band to rouse the long-tails out of the "green gully." Every creek, gully, flat and range, had a few well-known bushmen allotted to it, who were accompanied by a proportion of volunteers.

The general order was to keep wide and quiet till we got near the wings, and then to rush there and go "like steam."

Turning our horses' heads different ways, we soon lost sight of all but our immediate adherents. By this time the sun was not to be denied. It was of a lurid copper-color, and the air was of misty haze, fairly tremulous with the heat. Trees were plentiful, but shade was there none. Yet the horses bounded on, and the men were in high spirits and full of vigor.

Our costume was light to a fault. A shirt, trowsers and boots were the whole equipment of the stockmen and farmers.

But all honor to the genial Australian climate. Hot it was, yet the heated air was dry and fresh, and lacked the dreadful subtlety of the tropics.

Through the broad glades of the southern forest we held our way merrily. Now over wide flats like brown billiard tables; now under giant white barked weird encalypti; sometimes over piles of lava and scoria, through the clefts of which the grass grew broad and green in the early summer. We scared the wood-duck from the dry lakes, and the turkeys from the burnt grass. Clouds of paroquets flashed around us like clusters of winged emeralds and rubies—as onward and onward still we rode, until we had made the circuit of the run, and commenced to concentrate the forces of the "finchel."

Large flocks of the kangaroo had, from time to time, risen from their noonday camps, and fled before us.

As we now began to view our fellow hunters, we had in sight a continuous stream of terrified animals, hurrying before us to a common centre; the larger males—the "old men," as they are called—towered above the flying bucks, flying does and joeys, the half-grown bucks, does, and young ones. The wallaby, a smaller variety, and bearing the same analogy to its larger confrere, the forester, as the rabbit does to the hare—might be seen scuttling along in the melee—joining perforce with the main troop, and sometimes making vain attempts to double back; attempts which generally landed them in the midst of the army of dogs in the rear, where they were instantly snapped up and disappeared.

We were now close to the edge of the wings. The spectacle was remarkable. The long line of horsemen, at tolerably equal distances, were closing on the flying host of fur-clad, two-legged creatures, hopping and bounding frantically before them.

As they approached the eastern wing a larger proportion of the horsemen spread themselves in that direction, keeping behind them, and forming a continuous line with the end of the fence. The western side was comparatively open, so as to permit that flank of the body of game to extend itself easily. The leading kangaroo, so guided, ran up what appeared to be an unconnected fence. The pace now became better. Up to the leaders, fearing no evil and doubtless hoping for a turn to the right and general escape. Not so. The western wing is now sighted. The opening between the two wings is not more than five hundred yards, and rapidly narrows. At a wave from the captain's hand fifty eager riders spur across, and every five yards from fence to fence is filled by a horseman. If they do not turn and "break" now they are lost.

The moment has arrived, Mac gives the equivalent order to "Up Guards and at them?" and taking old Bushranger by the head, races desperately up to their tales. The younger portion of the company had been ready and more than willing for an hour back,

The wild centaurs of lads picked up their nags, and all but jumped on the backs of the crowded and frantic animals. All who could ride, and all who could not, delivered themselves over to the delirium of the moment.

The long heavy whips of the stockmen rose and fell like a forest of flails, while their reports rang like musketry. The dogs, sternly repressed up to this moment, barked and worried like demons. The rear of the mass pressed madly on the leading animals, which, with a fence on either side, and all Gehenna "maddening in the rear," had no choice but to go forward.

Up the fast closing straight running they flew, with the speed of a dream. Another half mile is gained, and the vast herd is approaching the fatal enclosure. But the vanguard, whose delicate instinct has been dominated temporarily only scents the coming evil, and slackening pace, falls back on the main body.

Tremendous confusion is created. By the concussion, dozens of the younger animals are knocked over by the weight and impetus of the older ones. The whole herd are now mingled in one whirlwind of dust. The front, jammed by the rear, in vain try to charge back. Every one who has had the privilege of attending cattle musters recognizes this as the turning moment of the contest. If the herd "breaks," or turns its flank outward, a thousand horse would not stop them, and the day's work is thrown away.

"Stick to them, my lads," shouts Captain Blake, double-thonging with a hunting-whip like a maniac.

"Back up, for dear life," roars old Mack, with his features glowing with excitement and wrath, as he waves his broad-leafed hat, and shies it desperately amid the host.

These exertions were barely needed by any but the town-bred and inexperienced members of the hunt. Every old hand and every bush-bred lad was going it like an Irish sergeant at a forlorn hope. Their yells and cries were redoubled. The dogs raged with demoniac energy. The trained horses of the stockmen bit and kicked as they turned heads or tails alternately to the foe. None broke the line. The rear was forced bodily on to the front rank, which, confused and overpowered, once more took to the open.

After a short distance rattled over at a fair hunting pace, lo l a turn to the right appears leading back toward the route by which they had entered. Down the lane they go like a whirlwind, followed by the whole herd; and after passing down a lane, turning still more in the line of the escaped route, debouch into a large enclosure having no outlet whatever. It is the strong yard. For one moment the whole line of horsemen "blocks" the passage by which they had entered. Another—and two men simultaneously pull sliding lines, and a wall of canvas eight feet high stands between them and the other world.

Now there are great breath-takings, loosenings of girths, and general return to the realms of common sense. Apologies are made to any one who has got in the way, and been sworn at in the hurry of business. Now recommences the reign of chaff among the stockmen, too busy for conversation of late.

Now that we had got the kangaroo, the next question was: What were we to do with them? The duty of the historian becomes painful. They were all to be killed! Yes, dreadful as it sounds—butchered in cold blood. There was nothing else for it. We have our tenderness like other people, and hate needless cruelty. But the lives of these animals represented an annual loss of a couple of thousands a year, at least; and sheep and cattle, and the wellfare of Christian men, women, and children thereon depending, must be preferred to that of brutes, however directly inoffensive.

Mac and his squatter friend, and the stockmen, were thinking more of the despoiled pastures and diminished reputation of Ballandra, than of abstract questions of humanitarianism. So arming themselves with heavy sticks they entered the yard. Then every one else adopted a weapon, and hasted to the slaughter—one or two had got hold of swords; some had heavy-handled hunting-whips—one an Indian hogspear. The boys rushed to the prey. Then the slaughter commenced. Every one was rather excited by the chase, so after the first few moments every one went in savagely enough. The kangaroo is easily killed by a blow on the head; if, with an "old man" at bay, you have nerve enough to stand still for his rush (for at such a time he charges like a wild bull), and to strike him fair between the ears, he will fall as if shot. So the sticks were the favorite weapons.

Mac led the way, striking down right and left with a great oak sapling. The stockmen, who occasionally had some practice in killing calves on nearly as large a scale, and in the same fashion, were decidedly the most efficient macropicides, though all the laymen assisted manfully.

After all, killing a kangaroo, like many other arts and accomplishments, is not so easy as it looks. He is an agile beast, and if elderly, fierce. So when the youthful townsmen essayed this cheap form of heroism, they were occasonally deceived. But the greater number of the trapped creatures were huddled together too confused and terrified for further flight and resistance; but one flying buck, like the solitary Mameluke at the citadel of Cairo, dared the impossible, and took the canvas-wall fair.

The long, long summer day was nearly done—the tireless sun was lingering to his rest behind the far blue range in red golden glories—the air was cool as we rode soberly home to Ballandra, dusty, tired, hungry, and blood-stained. Yet, was the feeling not unpleasant as we let our horses go in the horse-paddock, knowing that a season of well-earned rest and delectation awaited us? Happy the man who, when the hour arrives, doubts not of appetite or the meal that is to satisfy it.

As we came up, each man bearing his saddle and bridle, old Mrs. Teviot greeted us with looks of astonishment and a mountain of towels, foreboding of the cool swim in the quartz-pebbled river, which was de rigueur after such a day.

"Eh l gudesake, look at the laddies l Just fearsome l And did ye kill a' the puir beasties? Weel-a-weel, it's sair work shedding the bluid o' sae mony o' the Lord's creatures. But ye gentlemen ken a'boot it, nae doot; it's no for me to judge. Puir Maister McDairmid's sair fashed and disjeckit like. He just canna sleep at nicht. Nae doot we maun live in the land and multiply, and we canna live for thae landloupin' thieves o' kangaroo. Noo, dinna swim a' the nicht, for the denner's a' but waitin' on ye."

In dozens we pitched ourselves off the tall rock, one after the other like school-boys, into the deep, cool river reach. now fast shadowing over in the long twilight. Who swims not, loses a pleasure of the choicest, in all lands where the sun shines strongly.

We came up cooled and freshened to the inmost nerve, and before dinner proceeded to comfort the inner gentleman with deep draughts of the well-cooled and delicate Yering.

And the dinner! But let us respect the sacred reserves of that immortal meal. None but men like us who had ridden and toiled, pure from the base compromise of lunch, could have performed such a feat as was then performed.

Those of our friends who were new to brush life asked themselves sternly why they did not so toil and so enjoy, daily, continually? Why, this was life—life to the very finger tips! It was a new revelation! Henceforth they would live in the wilderness, exist on horseback, and be demi-gods.

The night wore on, all violet-blue and silver-starred. Tales were told; songs were sung. Long we sat and gossiped, and lay about on the lawn's dewless grass far into the kind cool night. No fears had we in our al fresco indulgence. No viewless fear lurked in the flower-scented air, or to low, faint sigh of the river oaks. Why go to bed? why go at all? Had sleep fairer dreams than these? It was Aidenn, would it but last—lotus-land; and we world-worn wayfarers, dreaming on the bank of the lulling water, in a land of changeless summer.

So wore the night. The next day saw the departure of all save a few friends, who staid to keep Mac company. But for years after among the chronicles of the West the memory will be fresh of the jests and adventures, the hospitality and the good-fellowship of the great Ballandra kangoroo drive.

HOW WE GOT INTO THE OPERA WITHOUT PAYING.

ONE of the things we liked best while stationed at Cremona was to get a short leave of absence to go to Piadenza; and that fair city well deserved its name, for it was, in truth, a city of pleasures and delights. My first visit there really arose from my having nothing else to do.

One evening the opera was, for some reason or other, closed at Cremona, and we found the cafe somewhat dull. The captain second in command lived in the same quarters as myself; I had given up my rooms to our servants, and we shared everything together.

"What shall we do? Come, let us go home," he said to me. I consented, for I saw he had something in his head, and as we walked together, he asked, "Wert thou ever in Piacenza, Englishmau?" I replied in the negative. "So?" he answered, and then told me that there was an opera there, and that he would go to Piadenza, and be back in time for morning parade. It was then seven P. M., and there were twenty-five good miles to ride and the same distance to return, but the idea of the adventure charmed me, and in less than ten minutes we were in our saddles, preparing for une nuit blanche. My friend knew the road well, and after a little more than two hours and a half of hard galloping we entered the city, stabled our horses, which, contrary to our fears, were not too much knocked up to take kindly to their food, and finding the principal cafe empty, we turned our steps at once to the opera. At the door we discovered to mutual discomfiture that we had neither of us so much as a single kreutzer in our pockets, and could not, of course, obtain seats. We walked round the building, trusting to light on some of our comrades, and while doing so perceived a small door, which we pushed open. It led apparently to the lower regions, and we determined to explore a little. We groped our way cautiously along several damp, dark passages, always descending somewhat, until at length we became aware that we were under the stage, for at a distance we could see a light and a pair of legs, which we felt sure belonged to the prompter, while above we heard the crash of music and the applause of the audience. They were performing the opera of "Robert Devereux." Just then I stumbled, and came with a dreadful clanking of sword and spur to the ground. We stood silently for a little, but by the profound quiet around us, and the sound of the singers' voices, and the answering murmur of the spectators, we concluded that we were alone in this subterranean region. "Stay, Englander," said my friend. "I know exactly where we are now, and there is a passage by which we could enter the pit easily if only the attention of every one could be diverted for the moment. An idea comes to me which we will quickly execute. Draw thy sword and follow me softly.

We proceeded cautionsly until we arrived at the aforesaid pair of legs, on each side of which we arranged ourselves; then my friend pricked the leg nearest to him gently with his sword point, which produced from above a curious yell, not at all in harmony with the music. I caught a glimpse of an arm descending on the opposite side, and to counteract the movement, I also, with the utmost delicacy pricked the leg next to me. This caused another screech and a tremendous scuffling as of many feet rushing to and fro over the boards. Now or never, we thought, and immediately applied our swords' points to both legs at the same instant. The prompter uttered an unearthly scream, greatly resembling that of a wild-cat; the legs flew upward out of the reach of our persecution; the tumult above redoubled, and we hastily decamped, ran along the passage which communicated with the pit, with which my friend was acquainted, and having entered perfectly unnoticed in the excitement that ensued, we walked with an innocent and unconcerned air to the place reserved for the officers. We could not help being diverted with the scene that presented itself. The whole theatre was in a state of excitement and uproar such as only those who know the easily-moved, impetuous, effervescent nature of the Italians can understand.

The orchestra was dumb; at least half of the people from the pit and lower boxes had leaped upon the stage; the actors. every employé about the place, and all the ladies of the corps de ballet, in full costume, had likewise rushed thither. In the middle of them the prompter was hopping about with both his hands applied to the calves of his legs; every one was gesticulating, shouting, and asking what was the matter Some imagined the man was attacked by a sudden fit of madness and would have laid violent hands on him, and to elude their kindly grasp he crouched, dived, and darted here and there in the oddest conceivable way, screaming out as he did so that il diavolo was below, and calling on all the saints to aid and help him.

When comparative calm was restored a rigid search was made below, but, of course, nothing was discovered; his legs were stripped and carefully examined in presence of the gendarmes, but as there were neither wounds nor blond, and only one little scratch, which, I beg to say, was not on the leg which fate had given into my care, the assault was generally supposed to have been made by some playful kitten which had endeavored to ascend to the upper regions by using the prompter's legs for a ladder, and no further inquiry was made.

That night we supped joyously with our brother officers, but mindful of the consequences which we had formerly sustained by babbling tongues, we kept our little adventure rigidly to ourselves, and long before break of dawn we were on our horses, riding hard to reach Cremona before morning parade. The general and his wife had been present at the performance in question. He was good enough freqnently to invite me to dine at his house, and has more than once asked me if I ever saw anything more extraordinary than the prompter's debut.

"He shot on to the stage like an arrow from a bow, and made as much confusion among us as a bomb-shell," he said. To which I replied that I never had seen anything like it before, but I never told who strung the bow which sent that ponderous arrow.

ACTING IN GOOD FAITH.—A lawyer who had figured with some distinction in the national assemblies of the republic of France, recounts in the following terms his debut: "I was young and unsuspecting," said he, "when I pleaded my first cause. It was that of a peasant charged with stealing a watch. The papers in the case, the insufficiency of the evidence, and, above all, the air of the accused—which was that of a good man—had convinced me of the innocence of my client. I pleaded with all the warmth of soul which could be inspired by this strong faith, and acquitted the peasant. Once free he cast his arms around me.

"'Oh, monsieur,' said he, 'you spoke well. My children shall be taught to bless you. There is one more service you must do for me.'

"'What is it?'

"'Dig up the watch for me.'

"'Dig up the watch for you?'

"'Certainly. You understand that they still keep their eyes on me; whilst you, in your promenade, can dig it up with your little cane, and return it to me.'

"'Miserable wretch l Then you are guilty?'

"'What l didn't you know it? If I hadn't been guilty I should have dispensed with your services, and been my own lawyer.'"

ABYSSINIA is now the Mecca of wandering English newspaper correspondents. It is said that the publishers prefer darked-skinned men, and that none of the correspondents lately tried to change his color with tincture of iodine. Thus transformed, he took a quiet walk in the sunshine, and was rather surprised to find himself photographically tattoed with an exact reflex of the trees and flowers around him.

BRAVE actions are the substance of life, and good sayings the ornament of it.

A BALL struck a little boy in the eye last week. Strange to say, the bawl immediately came out of his mouth

LITERARY GLEANINGS.

PUBLIC READINGS IN NEW YORK—MRS. YELVERTON.

Though the New York critics differ widely in their estimate of the talents and skill of the "Honorable Mrs. Yelverton," as a reader, there seems to be little doubt that she has secured at least, a pecuniary success. The lady prefaced her career by sending the following curious letter to the New York Herald, which proves her to be either a singularly romantic and unsophisticated person, or one who is disposed to ace herself in the most confidential relations with the pub-. without too much regard for the conventional notions of icacy :

To the Editor of the Herald.—I notice, in a recent aber of the New York Herald that, in accordance with the ctice of ancient and modern authors, I am about to give .dings from my own writings. I must ask you kindly to rect the error, and try to explain that the 'Yelverton cor-spondence' alluded to is nothing more nor less than the love ters written to my husband, Major Yelverton, prior and osequent to our ill-starred marriage. They were written by the silvery moonbeams that lit the shores of the classic Mediterranean, for one beloved eye alone, or by the still more mystic shores of the Bosphorus, in sight of the very tower where Hero pined until Leander breasted the treacherous wave. They were the first outburst of a young heart, believing, with earnest faith, in all that is beautiful in God's creation—the first bloom of the plum, the first perfume of the bud, which aftertime destroys. Whatever their merits as literary productions, whatever their interest as emotional effusions I do not enquire. To me they are the only relics of 'love's young dream,' and now that the heart is broken and the object they were addressed to—dead to me—a nameless wander, unknown, uncared for. These letters are the sepulchre or funeral urn which contain the ashes of all that ever was, of all that ever can be, and it would seem like a desecration to me to expose them for the criticism or amusement of the public. True, they have been brought before the astonished gaze of bewigged lawyers to interpret or misinterpret, to the best or worst of their ability, according to the side they were engaged in. True, that two judges on the bench have been moved to tears in quoting them. True it is that most people have an invincible curiosity about love letters, for the reason given by the brilliant French poet :

Qui que tu sois voici ton maitre
Il est, il fut, ou il doit etre.

Those who have not been in love wish to ascertain precisely what it is like ; those who have wish to renew, if only for a moment, the pleasant delusions. I shall be most happy to contribute to these Elysian dreams by rendering, to the best of my ability, the loves of Héloise and Abelard, or n'importe qui, but I must respect the green turf now growing over the grave of my own. I am, sir, yours truly,

Threesa Yelverton.

Albemarle Hotel, Oct. 21, 1867."

ARTHUR SKETCHLEY.

In regard to the merits and the success of this English humorist, as a reader or lecturer, the New York papers and correspondents are by no means agreed. Satanella, the Call's correspondent pronounces him a failure, and says he has drawn none but scanty houses. The Tribune praises him, and speaks of his houses as " fair, and increasing," while the weekly papers differ toto coelo in their critcism. We suspect that his humor is too essentially English in its character, and its vein too thin, to delight New York audiences, who would soon tire of Mrs. Brown and her eccentricities of dialect. Here is a specimen of his peculiar style, from " Mrs. Brown's Budget :"

We was livin' down Stepney way then, as is a place as I'm partial to myself thro' bein' fond of anything of the sea as long as I aint on the top of it, for of all the sensations as ever I did feel it's them qualms as the briny ocean throws up, as is like the shadder of death a comin' over you, with no relief, and frightened ont of my wits to 'old the bason thro, a-remem'berin' what 'appened to 'Melia Emmins, as pitched for-'ard with her face in it on the deck that slippery through them waves a-washin' over it, as cut thro' her carroty artery, and must 'ave bled to death if a sailor 'adn't kep' his thum' on it by the 'our together till regular sewed up, as you can see the marks on to this day tho' a thrivin' woman and mother of three a'ready.

Well, as I was a-sayin', we lived out Stepney way, and my 'Liza wasn't born nor thought on, as the sayin' is, and Joe, the youngest, as is five years old nor'er, and Jane, as was eldest she did use to be a deal with her Aunt Barnes, as I always considered spiled'er ; but Brown said as my 'auds was full, and so they was thro' 'avin three down with measles, and buried two in screamin' convulsions.

I shall never forget one evenin' as Brown were ont, and mo a-eatin' lonely, for I'd put Joe to bed, and couldn't 'elp a frettin' over them two as was gone, tho' goodness knows I'm sure they're ont of a wicked world—though the world's good enough, it's the people as is in it, as Mrs. Barwell did use to say, as was a good unss, and one as I'd trust my life along with' tho' rayther too fond of 'er bit of 'ot supper, as made 'er a 'eavy sleeper, and frightened me nearly to death once a-thinkin' as she'd overlaid Joe, as caused us to part with words atween us, for it's a thing as I don't 'old with any but mother 'avin any a infant to sleep with them—tho' not always safe then, for Mrs. Portlock's daughter she woke up and her child black in the face, as they said was fits, tho' my opinion as she bein' a stout woman was the cause her-ell, as I was a-sayin', I was a settin' between the lights, sayin' is, when a tap came to the door as opened into tichen, thro' there bein' no passage. I goes to open it, here stood Mrs. Overton, as lived three doors up, a like a ghost for whiteness.

ay, " Whatever is it ?" for she give me sich a turn.

o says, " Oh," she says, " do come in ; for," she says, " I do believe Overton is a killin' our Sam, he's 'ittin' 'im that wiolent."

Well, I 'nrries in with 'er, and there sure enough was Overton, the wuss for liquor, a-'amerin' away at the washus door, where the boy 'had been, and bolted 'isself in thro' fear.

Just as we got in the door give way, and in rushes Overton like a wild beast broke loose.

I was in pretty quick, and it's well as I were, for he'd got a coal 'ammer as he'd broke the door with, and was just a goin' to bring it down on that boys 'ead as were a-crouchin' behind the copper, when I 'eld on to his arm, a-sayin,' " Are you mad ?"

" No," he says, " I'm not, but I'll beat his brains out," and swore frightful.

" No," I says, " you won't."

He says, " Let go," and makes a blow at me.

I says, " Never."

He was a little man, as luck would 'ave it, so I jest ketched 'old of 'is neck-'ankercher, an' give it such a jerk as pretty nigh chocked 'im, an' give him a violent shove into a corner, where I 'eld him till the boy got away.

Etc., etc., all which would be voted " slow" by those who relish a more varied and rollicking kind of " fun."

NEW YORK SOCIETY—THE " NEW RICH."

The New York Round Table, in a somewhat sensational article, declares that " our most luxurious and ostentatious families," and thousands of the seemingly wealthy have been reduced by the great losses which have of late fallen upon almost all branches of trade, to a position where nothing but the most desperate spirits, postponements and accommodations, " preserve them from the appearance, as well as the reality of beggary." The writer adds :

We must risk the imputation of envy by confessing that we are a little tired of seeing so many beggars on horseback. The sight of these hordes of gilded dunces, these regiments of illiterate and coarse-minded millionaries with their coffers crammed to bursting by luck and rascality, becomes in time something distasteful. One's sense of congruity, indurated as it may be by hard use, is fretted and outraged by seeing these clowns and their mates swaggering in stately houses they know not how to live in, rolling in coaches whereon their place, if any, should be behind, lavishing their gold or its verdant non-representative in ridiculous excess, so hoping to make up for deficiencies of which they are uneasily conscious without being modester for the knowledge. Too much of New York society these few years past has resembled nothing so much as a gigantic performance of the farce of High Life Below Stairs. It will be a relief to hear the tinkle of the bell and to see the green curtain.

SOCIAL HOMAGE TO WEALTH.

The writer does not go so far as to insist that all the wealthier society of the metropolis has become vulgarized. He says :

There is culture, refinement, sound thought here, womanly delicacy and manly chivalry here ; but they are overslaughed, as the politicians say, put ont of sight and made to count for nothing by the mess of tawdry rubbish which surrounds and oppresses them. Therefore we do mean not to imply, but directly to assert that the tendency has been strongly in the direction described in our question ; that the homage paid to mere riches to the neglect of other standards of, or title to, social distinction has paved the way to results of which it is difficult to say whether they are more pitiable or ridiculous. Education and refinement has already been practically excluded in this country from their legitimate political influence ; the disposition of late has been to apply the same principle to society. The passion for money has become so universal that it has begotten a reverence for those who succeed in getting it that is almost equally so. A social tone has thus been generated so selfish and base, so depressing to all noble and delicate aspiration, so stimulating and congenial to all that is contemptible and sordid that one longs at times for something more substantial than the lash of the satirist wherewith to do it justice. We know what are the natural gravitations of a commercial and democratic community, and how easy and mistaken it may be to censure individuals for the product of principle, but in this matter we do not blame the masses alone for tabooing brains and culture, and setting up a golden calf in their place. The professional people who are not in trade at all, the clergy, the bar, even journalists have lent themselves to the same ignoble process. It has in it, in truth, something of contagion as well as of hallucination, so that people who are within the vortex become blinded in a manner to what goes on there.

THE AMERICAN LANGUAGE.

The Monitor of last week, had an editorial article, expressing the belief that the English language as used in this country was rapidly becoming " Americanized," that is, was taking on distinctive features which would in time make it a new tongue. That journal, with true Celtic detestation of everything that is English, seemed to think this result a highly desirable one. A writer in the October number of Blackwood, in an article entitled " Inroads upon English," takes a more reasonable view of the innovations which are being introduced in the United States, and seems to think it probable that most of these new words and idioms that are adopted here, and admitted into literature, will also be admitted in England, while at the same time we are on our part continually borrowing new words and new expressions from current English literature of the lighter sort, so that there is not likely to be any such wide divergence between the speeches of the two people, as to result in two distinct languages. The essayist of Blackwood, says, among other things :

The United States, in throwing off the political restraints that, in the days before the declaration of independence, attached them to the mother-country, threw off the restains of fashionable English as spoken at home ; and as the population was from year to year increased by immigration, mostly of persons without education, who brought with them the local words of the English counties, and of the sister kingdoms of Scotland and of Ireland, the language received a constant accession from this source. Thus, although the influence of English literature has been great in America, it has not been great enough to keep American writers within the customary limits of the language as spoken and written in the Old World. Such a result would neither have been natural nor desirable ; and the vast number of words, obsolete or provincial with us, that were carried to America generations ago—that have cropped up amongst them—and that, when met with in American writers, come back upon us unfamiliarly, or are no longer recognised, are a clean gain to the language. These words and phrases have often received, but very unjustly, the name of Americanisms, many of them being not only pure Anglicisms, but made English forevermore in the pages of Spenser, Shakspeare, and Ben Johnson. There are, however, two other classes of words which are daily growing up amongst our American cousins, and passing not only into colloquial, but into literary use, which more properly deserve to be called Americanisms, inasmuch as they are racy and of the soil, and are produced and generated by circumstances out of the reach of European and English experience, and descriptive of things, and modes of life and thought, not existent among ourselves. Some of these words are pure inventions ; some are perversions and caricatures, more or less grotesque, of pre-existing words or phrases ; some are affectations that happen to hit the fancy of the vulgar, in a country where the vulgar form a much larger majority of the people than elsewhere.

Among the words ordinarily classed as "Americanisms," but which are in fact old English words, which having become obsolete, and even forgotten at home, were revived in America, are "platform," "rile," "splurge," "squelch," "squirm," and others. "Platform," is used by Shakspeare and Hooker. "Splurge," is pronounced to be an old Northumbrian word. "Squelch" occurs in the old ballad of "St. George and the Dragon." "Squirm" is also an old English word, though long disused. All these words, together with "slick," "sag," "sliver," "stent," "wilt," and others, against which Mr. Barblett and the purists have solemnly warned us, as "vulgarisms." "Americanisms," etc., the writer in Blackwood thinks "are worthy of the favor of English writers and speakers." Many of them can certainly boast an illustrious English ancestry, and their respectability being thus viudicated, it is to be presumed that they will in future receive more courteous treatment at the hands of the Boston literati, or of that elegant and fastidious class of them, whom some malicious wag has christened the "Tuckermanites."

SUPERFLUOUS NASTINESS.

From the same source, we heve the following additional bill of indictment :

"Americans are, for their sins, pretty much under the necessity, whenever they stir from their homes, of foregoing decency and comfort until they return thither. That portion of the community which knows what is due to the proprieties and is quite willing, whenever their observance rests with other people, to pay for them, has no opportunity to do anything of the kind. On the contrary, however great one's solicitude for the simple privilege of immunity from disgust, no precaution short of total isolation from American life can preveut his having thrust upon his observation at every turn things that must raise the gorge of anybody not thoroughly pachydermatous. Most of the little details which go to make up the total of everyday lives have somehow been moulded by the tastes of that Great Unwashed whose presence in the world we acknowledge to be useful and necessary, but with whom and with their manners and customs there is no reason why we should be forced into terms of intimacy.

Yet in this country all men, and in some degree most women, have this intamacy inevitably thrust upon them. It is impossible to escape being overwhelmed by it. Wherever you may be in public, whether eating, sleeping, moving, or resting, nastiness of some kind is almost certainly about you. In the arrangements of even the better class of our ordinary eating-houses a total indifference to it is the prevailng characteristic. The salt and the butter are, as a rule, unaccompanied by salt-spoon or butter-knife, and one's stomach is turned, if not by the condition in which he finds them, at seeing his vis-á-vis invaded them with a knife used in that manner of the country which is described in Martin Chuzzlewit."

Elegant Professional Rooms.—The parlors, and ladies' and gentlemen's operating dental rooms of Dr. Jessup, over Tucker's new store, corner of Montgomery and Post Streets, are fitted in magnificent style, and are said to be the finest rooms in America for the purposes for which they are designed.

A Noble Present.—In passing along Montgomery Street you can catch through the long vista of Roman's store a glimpse of Bateman's Mount Shasta, which is pronounced to be the best landscape ever painted in California. The painting is for sale. What a magnificent Christmas present it would make !

New Fringe, Cord, Button, and Trimming Manufactory. Mr. M. Ettinger, who has been for the last eight years foreman at the manufactory of Mrs. Norcross, has established a manufactory of the above articles at 125 Kearney Street, between Post and Sutter. Nothing tends more to our permanent welfare than the building up of home manufactories.

Pure Coal Oil never explodes, and is much cheaper in the end than the low-priced article mixed with benzine. John B. Owens' "Standard Kerosene," sold at his store, No. 10 Third street, is the pure article, non-explosive, free from smell, burns longer than other brands, and consequently is cheaper. Try it.

Boys' Clothing.—Holiday presents can be bought at less than cost at H. M. Lockwood & Co's, 624 Clay Street. They are closing up business.

The People of San Francisco are at last beginning to realize the fact that the cold and stormy day is the very time for taking Dr. Bourne's Baths, and they are acting accordingly. The foolish notion that they are "weakening," and that there is danger of "taking cold," is nearly exploded. Dr. Bourne's Baths are different from all others —remember that. No. 10, Masonic Temple, Post street.

[For the Californian.]

A PROWL THROUGH THE NATIVE AND "FOREIGN" CITIES OF SHANGHAI.

BY FORBES MAITLAND.

LOTS of people have heard and read of Shanghai; how few understand what it actually is! I did not—I thought it must be the most magnificent and celestial place imaginable. I firmly believe the Chinese have really deceived more confiding Christians with regard to their cities than any people in the whole universe. I will give you just a glance at the much talked-of city of Shanghai, the residence of the "Toutai," the highest Manderin (Governor) of the province in which Shanghai is situated. Shanghai is one of the much-talked-of "open ports." Any number of San Franciscans have heard and read of Shanghai—and a few have seen it—that is to say in the condition it is in at the present day. But few, however, in this city know much about Shanghai as it was in 1859–60; I will therefore endeavor to give a slight glance at the interior of the native city, as I found it on my arrival there in 1859, just previous to the war in the northern portion of China.

After having done the polite to the friends to whom I had letters of introduction, my brother, along with his chums, invited me to visit the "City," and promised they would show me the lions. I at first objected, on account of being rather used up, and proposed to inspect the menagerie the next day. (In my innocence—poor boy! I misunderstood the word 'lions'—I was only a youngster at the time.) My big brother whispered in my ear that it was not a menagerie, but a Joss house, and lots of other funny things he and his friends wished to show me. What a Joss house and the "funny things" were I had no more idea of than I had of the "lions;" however, having implicit confidence in my big brother, I thought I might just as well go through it one day as another, so off we started.

We got into chairs, at least so they called them—I thought they resembled very much the cases in which patent mangles are generally shipped. The only difference was that the Shanghai mangle cases were nicely covered with blue cloth and had lots of fringe round the tops, two long poles and four coolies attached. My brother and friends got into their cases all right, and of course I was not going to show the white feather, (although I felt very much inclined to do so,) so in I popped, and a good deal I would have given if I could have popped out again, but no use; the "coolies" had started. Such a jolting and a "hie-hoing" (the cry of the chair coolies as they convey a fare,) I never heard. There I was, poor, miserable soul, cooped up in the infernal case, praying to Confucius, or any other man, that the bottom of the chair might fall out, and let me walk. Of course it was only for the dignity of the arrangement I remained in the confounded thing at all. The prayer was barely formed in my mind, when down I came—well, not exactly on my feet, but nearly so; when I recovered my presence of mind, I found my prayer had been granted, and I was once more on terra firma. The Coolies, however, not heeding the smash, kept going ahead, leaving me, poor devil! lying in a nice, clean little duck puddle, much to the amusement of a lot of Chinese washerwomen. In a few minutes, however, my chair (!) returned to pick up its load; in I got, that is to say, I got in all standing, as the bottom had entirely caved in. However, as dignity is everything in China, I was determined, at least, to have a covering over my head, if I had to go at a double-quick. It must have been very funny, indeed, to outsiders (no fun to the insider, however,) to see the chair, with two bearers, going at a double trot, and my poor feet and ankles just visible beneath the fringe, trotting along.

At last, praise be to Confucius, we arrived at the East Gate where the other chairs had halted. My brother looked in astonishment when he perceived the state in which I arrived, and asked, "Why, Forbes, where on earth have you been?" "Flat on my back," I replied, in the most malignant and sullen manner. "Flat on your back! how did that happen?" "Happen? why the bottom of that thing which you call a chair, went in, and I was left in a most degrading position, in a dirty duck puddle, being laughed at by a score of Chinese washerwomen. I would not have thought so much of the duck puddle, but to have to keep up my dignity by getting into a bottomless chair, and having to go at a double-quick to keep up with those confounded Chinamen, through all sorts of Chinese filth, is a little too severe a joke." "Oh, never mind, old boy," my fraternal relative remarked in the most cool manner, "it will all come out in the washing." Pretty consolation for a young man, one mass of mud from head to foot. In this cleanly condition I got into a chair (one with a good strong bottom this time) for a "prowl" through Shanghai, to see the "lions."

The first object that attracts the eye of a stranger entering Shanghai, or indeed any Chinese walled city, is what in San Franciscan parlance, might be called the "Home Guard." What a guard! Half a dozen miserable looking, half clad, unwashed Celestials. The lazaroni of Naples are perfect swells both as regards their cleanliness and costume, when compared with the "Home Guard" at the East Gate of Shanghai.

Off at last, and, that at a good round trot. The first place to be visited was the City Prison, and the cells of those condemned to linger out their miserable existence in closely barred iron cages. I can assure you it is no joke getting there, having to traverse the worst locality of the city. A succession of filthy alleys, none wider than six feet, the verandas of the filthy shanties within a few inches of meeting overhead, thus precluding all possibility of the slightest breath of air reaching the alley. I was in bodily fear of the shanties toppling over. They seemed to be hanging by, as the Scotch say, the "breers o' the een." What I had seen of misery and filth on our way hither was nothing when compared with what met my gaze on leaving the chair in front of one of the largest cages (there are fifty in all.) Inside a cage about five feet high were six—well I suppose I must call them human beings, but really they had little resemblance to anything human. They were manacled by the ancles two and two; some with a few rags on, some in a state of nudity, all in the most beastly state of filth; many having been inside the cage for three years, and a few for five. Our guide informed us one had actually been confined in this horrible prison for over eight years, and this without any allowance of water, or having the services of a barber. Their hair and beard was in most cases matted together with dirt, while their bodies were covered with the most disgusting sores. In one of the cells we actually found the corpse of one in a state of semi-decomposition, still manacled to the living prisoner, and this our guide informed us was a frequent occurrence. In some cases the miserable wretch would remain manacled to his dead companion for a week. These prisoners have no rations supplied them by government, being entirely dependent on the charity of passers-by for food and water. They never of course leave the cage alive.

The Hall of Justice; (the Hall of Injustice would be a much more appropriate name) not much to be seen here; an old grey-haired, bloated aristocrat of a Manderin sitting in "full fig" behind a small table, with one can of black paint and another of red in front of him; in his hand he held a small paint brush, with which he marked on the forehead the insignia of condemnation and acquittal; red being the sign of condemnation, and the black acquittal. The red was the winning color the day I was there. Out of fifty (they are brought in batches of fifty) only one got the black mark—the forty-nine were condemned in less than half an hour. (What a saving of time if Judge Rix could get through his cases with like dispatch!) Forty-nine human beings condemned to imprisonment for life, and the whole business finished in less than half an hour! It would rather astonish and disgust a San Francisco lawyer to have a choice and complicated murder case disposed of in three minutes. The characters over the Justice Hall I am sure, if interpreted, must mean "Time is money."

Our destination now was the Execution Ground, which is situated in the more aristocratic district of the "Tea Gardens." Our route to this part of the city was certainly more cleanly, so far as the road was concerned; the horrible stench was if anything increased, and compelled one to be continually applying the tips of his fingers to the olfactory organ; in fact by the time we arrived at our destination, my nasal organ resembled a stale plum. Such an effect had the severe compressing on my once good and decent Roman nose. At last we came to a halt. I looked out and found we were at the gate of the grounds. Execution Grounds indeed! That wretchedly dirty yard looked like a hog-pen—a filthier place I never saw. It was ancle deep with a mixture of thin mud, pools of blood and decayed straw. Hanging by their tails over the door of the guard-house, were about a dozen ghastly heads, while the trunks lay exposed to the scorching sun about twenty feet off. On enquiring of the guide why the bodies had not been removed, he quietly remarked, "Oh, those few were only beheaded yesterday; they never remove less than fifty at a time." I had seen sufficient of the Execution Grounds.

We next started for the "Tea Gardens." The alleys (there are no streets in a Chinese city—not even in Pekin) leading towards this portion of the city were a decided improvement on anything we had as yet passed through. In a very short time we had reached the outside portion of the pleasure grounds.

I really think this is the greatest of all great swindles, perpetrated by the Celestials—"Tea Gardens" forsooth! duck puddles, I should say. I expected to see verdure-clad lawns with magnificent shrubberies; fancy my disgust when I found the so much-talked-of "Tea Gardens" were composed of a stagnant frog-pond, a few artificial bridges, one or two decent "Tea Houses," (got up in the mud and bamboo style) and one decent duck swimming, evidently to his or her disgust, amongst last years' frog-spawn. This was a little too much for even my good nature to stand, after hearing the place lauded to the skies. The continual talk was "wait till we get to the 'Tea Gardens.'" (I forgot by the way to mention there were two small frogs in company with the duck, and they seemed quite fatigued with the efforts they had made to get out.) The Tea Garden swindle was more than mortal man could stand, and I at once made up my mind to continue my "prowl" at a later date. That is to say, after getting climatized to being swindled into the belief that there was anything magnificent about a Celestial city.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

MAGUIRE'S Opera House has been closed the whole of the week. Scenic and decorative artists and stage carpenters have been engaged in tearing everything to pieces and thoroughly renovating the theatre, in order to add eclat to the first appearance of the burlesque and comedy actress Miss Fanny Young, and the production of the extravaganza of Rum-ti-foozle. This actress, of whose beauty and talent we have heard much, will make her first appearance before the San Francisco public on Monday, as "Polly Marigold," in the comedy of Our Village, and in Rum-ti-foozel. A number of new sensational effects which have been purchased in New York by Mr. Thos. Maguire, expressly for this theatre, will be presented under the experienced supervision of Messrs. Stackhouse & Torrence. New scenery has been painted by William Burbury, the talented scenic artiste whose productions since his engagement at the Opera House have caused such general admiration. These pieces will be produced under the stage direction of Harry Jackson. A season of comedy and burlesque will, I think, suit the public taste at present, and if Miss Fanny Young prove successful, as I have every reason to believe she will, cause the Opera House to be crowded nightly.

At the Metropolitan Theatre, Under the Gaslight has drawn crowded houses all through the week. This piece runs like an express train but draws a larger number of people. Every one is bound to see it. Arrivals from the country are now numerous, and there is no telling when the management will be able to withdraw it and produce another sensation, which they have already in a forward state of preparation.

The business at Leslie, Raynor & Smith's Temple, has been during the week, as indeed it has been ever since the opening of the establishment, very good. New acts are constantly introduced. "The Ghost," instead of frightening people away from its vicinity as these supernatural visitants are generally supposed to do, has drawn thousands to look at it, and will, in consequence of its continued popularity appear for a few nights more during the coming week. The usual matinee will be given to-day when children may see "The Ghost," and a splendid programme will be performed this evening. The latter end of next week the burlesque opera of The Bohemian Girl will be produced. Miss Emma Howson has been engaged, and will make her first appearance at the Temple of Music in this burlesque. This will give a pleasing variety to the entertainment. Miss Emma Howson is a very general favorite, and will appear to as good advantage, no doubt, in the burlesque as she does in the original.

I must acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to be present at the second full dress party of the Occidental Theatricals at Turn Verein Hall, on December 17th, when The Merchant of Venice will be performed, with Geo. M. Ciprico, the manager of the association, in the character of "Shylock." The last entertainment given by the Occidental Theatricals was a very pleasant affair, and I have no doubt that this will be equally so. A dance concludes the evening's amusement

TOUCHSTONE.

THE VERY THING.—Ellery's Patent India Rubber Paint will exclude all rain or dampness from the houses on which it is applied; and is now coming into general use. The Rubber Cement is first applied, either to wood, brick or metal, making all tight, and then a coat of paint, of any color required, follows. The process preserves the buildings, and the effect excellent. We call attention to the fine house of C. V. Stuart, Esq., on Capp street near Sixteenth, as a sample of work on wood, and to 611 Pine street for work on brick. For roofs see hundreds of houses in town. The office and manufactory of Ellery's Patent Paint is in the iron building, corner of Buttery and Jackson streets.

PRESERVED COFFEE—That is, coffee condensed in the form of paste, and put up in cakes, the same as chocolate, is now manufactured in this city by a process recently patented, and is really an article worthy the attention of housekeepers. None but the best Juva Coffee is used, and a trial of the "preserved coffee" has convinced us that the strength and flavor of the berry is fully preserved by this process, and that it will produce a finer flavored cup of coffee than can be obtained in any other way. Frank Silver & Co. No. 10 Stevenson street, are the manufacturers.

HAYNES & LAWTON announce in our advertising columns a list of goods most suitable for Holiday Presents, such as Bohemian glassware, statuary, vases, etc. This firm is one of the largest and oldest established in the city, and has always been noted for its fine and extensive stock of glass and crockery ware.

SICK PEOPLE have guaranteed cures in almost all cases, for a reasonable stipulated fee, if so agreed, because no medicines are used, nor bleeding, blistering, nor plastering, by Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

HOLIDAY BOOKS.—A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery Street, is now displaying a splendid assortment of Holiday Books, Photograph Albums, and books for juveniles, for Christmas and New Year's presents.

EXPERIENCE, (more than twenty-five years,) knowledge, and skill combined, enable Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, to offer great inducements to the sick, who should see him before undertaking to be drugged, bled, blistered, and plastered. *

CAKES, Confectionary and Cream for the Holiday tables. Procure them from Cammot's new Restaurant and Ice Cream Saloon, Nos. 57 and 59 Third Street, near Mission, and you will be sure to be served with the best articles in these lines.

AID FOR THE WEAK SIGHTED.—The beautiful Brazilian pebble spectacles manufactured by C. Muller, at 205 Montgomery street, are of great assistance to the weak sighted, and are the most comfortable known.

DRIFTING.

A LARK'S song rippled in the air,
With liquid thrill that smote the dawn,
He hastened down the dewy lawn
And found the morning breezes fair;

And half the anchor-cable in
And half the sails were loosed, and full
Of salty winds! with steady pull
He bade the frothing eddies spin

And whirl about his dripping oar,
As on he sped and joined the bark;
Then from the deck he leaned to mark
The wondrous beauty of the shore.

They seemed as falling scales, his tears,
From blinded eyes, that would not see
How comfort in that home could be,
Though comfort kept him all his years.

High on the yard a sailor sang:
"O! dusky love beyond the sea!
O! dusky love that longs for me"—
"And thee," the mocking echoes rang.

"There is a glory in the gale—
An idle dream will suit the calm,
And talk of leafy thatch and palm—
Shall fill the watch with song and tale.

"Lo! yonder is the star that guides
The mariner; we lift our hands
About the world in many lands;
For what are winds and what are tides,

"But spirits luring us abroad?
Rise fragrant isles before our eyes—
A pyre for passion's sacrifice,
Where pleasure is our only god!"

* * * * *

A hundred thrilling songs of larks
A hundred blooming dawns may greet,
But who shall stay the wanderer's feet,
And call his spirit from the dark?

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE WAR.

BY JAMES FRANKLIN FITTS.

NO. XI.—INCIDENTS IN THE SHENANDOAH—A RE-UNION.

THE night of October 19th, 1864, will always be held in my memory as one of the severest trials that soldiers could well be subjected to. From early morning until sunset, we had been fighting, retreating and pursuing, and when the victory was assured at the close of the day, every man felt as if he must either sleep or die. But our division had hardly chewed its hard-tack, when an order came for it to go out beyond Strasburg, and picket the front. There was some grumbling, of course—a soldier must be allowed that privilege—and the wearied men, some of them with hardly strength enough left to bear a musket or stand upright, fell into rank again, and the division moved slowly and painfully out to the front. The march, for a part of the way, was across the battle-field, still thick with the bodies of the slain; then we struck the highway, and followed it straight to Strasburg. There was an incessant thump, thump of hoofs on the hard road, as squads of our cavalry returned, bringing more prisoners and more cannon. We met them every half mile, and exchanged greetings with them. The road was a litter of dead horses, wrecked wagons, and artillery, and the streets of Strasburg were so blocked by the debris that our division was delayed in making its way through. Turning off to the west of the town, it halted on the summit of a high ridge, while the advanced pickets were sent out from it. There were very few officers present with my regiment, for the havoc of battle and the hardships of the campaign had dealt sorely with us, of late. The regiment was advanced to the outposts, and I was put in command of the front line of pickets.

There have been nights of this kind of duty which I remember very pleasantly; but neither of them was that awful night of suffering. They were in Louisiana, where, in the grateful cool of the night, we could lie on the wide prairie, or at the edge of forest, and watch sleeplessly, with no sense of discomfort, thinking, the while, of home, and friends on whom those stars shone with equal light. But Louisiana and Virginia are wide apart, with many parallels of latitude between, and picketing in October in the latter State is something that tries the mettle of old soldiers.

Our line on this night ran from the Shenandoah, on the left, in a crescent, around the skirts of the town, passing along two or three of the streets, then over a wide, deep ravine, then across the highway, and thence, for half a mile, over a rolling plane at the base of the ridge where the reserve lay, and along an old railroad track to the woods. It was two hours before I got it well posted and instructed; and then another was consumed in retracing my steps and enforcing watchfulness upon the men.

"Don't forget to-night," I repeated again and again to each group, and to each solitary sentinel, "how we were surprised this morning, and almost routed, for want of good picketing. Let us be wakeful to-night, if we never are again."

By twelve o'clock I had completed my round, and, returning to the central post, whither I had directed instant intelligence to be sent me of anything unusual, I wrapped myself in my poncho, and telling the sergeant to waken me if anything happened, I tried to sleep. I believe I was never more thoroughly fatigued in my whole life; and I was probably no worse off than every man of Sheridan's infantry that night. For twelve hours we had fought, marched—often on the double quick—and struggled through bushes, through brambles, and across streams, in pursuit of the enemy; and my whole physical nature cried out for rest. I had still another tour to make before morning, and I thought half an hour's nap would be most refreshing.

As well might I have tried to sleep on the coast of Labrador. The day had been mild and sunny, and with the golden atmosphere of autumn just touched with cool; the night had come, dark and obscure, with hardly a star to be seen, and with bitter, biting cold. There was no wind nor storm; it was a sharp, benumbing air, which seemed to make the blood congeal in our veins, and caused every man exposed to it acute suffering. About midnight, we could feel the frost in the air, and in the morning we saw it, lying thick all over the ground. I tried to sleep, but was not able to lose my consciousness for three minutes. The cold pierced me like a sharp arrow, and I lay shivering in my overcoat and poncho.

"Lay these blankets over him, Joe," I heard one of the men say. And Joe approached me to do it; but I sat up and declined them.

"No, boys, I don't mean to sleep to-night; none of us must. It is two o'clock, and I must go to the rounds again."

Two or three stars were twinkling in the heavens by this time, and I could see the occasional gleam of a bayonet here and there, at different parts of the line. The soldiers near me were walking about, swinging their arms and stamping their feet to promote the sluggish circulation. They said very little, though once I caught some sarcastic pleasantry about the delights of the soldiers' life, and the atrocity of this great American Revolution, which compelled men to sit up nights long after respectable people were abed. From the road, and off towards Fisher's Hill, there was an almost incessant thumping of horses' feet, which told us that our cavalry were having no rest for their feet that night, but must still keep up the chase. Far out on the summit of the hill, and high up the sides of the mountain to the left, the bright watch-fires of the cavalry twinkled through the night; and much nearer, from many of the houses of Strasburg, lights were shining, which told that the stern events of the day had made work for the inhabitants of the place. Unable to rest, and willing to make an effort to banish the cold in the activity of another visit to the line, I took a corporal with me, and started out again. There was little fear that there could be either attack or surprise that night; for Early's beaten army had fled over this ground before dark, and our cavalry were all in front of us. But we made assurance doubly sure, and watched with sleepless eyes. I found the men all vigilant, and about the first glimmer of dawn went back to the reserve to report; but before this, there was an incident occurred in Strasburg which I must relate.

I had finished my tour of the line, and was returning through the street towards the highway. No vision of Artic experience which I am able to conjure up, even with the assistance of Dr. Kane's voyages, can equal the discomforts of that hour. The cold enveloped me like a mantle, pierced me like a lance, and made my teeth chatter in my jaws. The corporal walked at my elbow, and I could feel him tremble and shake. The reader will understand, of course, that fires on the picket-line were prohibited, and that there seemed to be nothing for us but to wait till the sun was up, when we might thaw out our poor frost-bound bodies.

"Are you cold, corporal?" I inquired.

"I'm not sure; I think so," he replied, grimly, with his teeth rattling so that he could hardly utter the words.

We had reached a house on the corner of two streets, near the great ravine I have spoken of. The blinds were drawn close; but a warm ray of light poured out through a chink in one of the shutters, cheerfully suggestive of light and heat within. The temptation was an overcoming one; there seemed to be nothing in the situation to forbid our passing a few minutes within the doors of this house, and I said to the corporal:

"Let us go in here. We will get warm in five minutes, and go back to the front."

Within that house there was being enacted a scene of one of the pleasantest romances that the war has created. In my battlings and wanderings with our armies over the South, I have seen enough of romance in real life following in the bloody track of war, but generally of a sad and tragic nature, such as makes even soldiers sigh for the necessities of their profession. Women and children fleeing from their dwellings by the light of the blazing roofs, or sitting down in sad uncertainty of the fate of some dear object who was fighting upon one side or the other, were sights to which we had grown accustomed. There was little enough, God knows, to relieve the horrors of this war, which was bound to be one of horrors, spite of the disposition of all good men to alleviate its atrocities; but occasionally a glimpse of something better fell across the red record, and our wearied eyes were refreshed with such an incident as that which I saw in the old wooden house on the street-corner at Strasburg.

When the war began, there lived in Strasburg a man whom we call Taylor, who immediately espoused the Southern cause. He enlisted in the rebel army among the earliest, and was killed in the fight at Fort Republic, in 1862. He left behind him a wife and one daughter, Laura Taylor, a pretty and intelligent girl of twenty. Unlike most of the families of this town, there had been a division in this one upon the subject of the war. Laura and her mother were from the first ardent Unionists, and grieved long and bitterly over the adherence of their father and husband to the cause of rebellion. After his death, they continued as loyal as ever, and hopeful for the triumph of the Union arms. How they lived during the war, or how three-fourths of the people of this valley lived, I am unable to tell. The operations of both armies covered it again and again, and both armies drew on it so largely for subsistence that it would hardly seem that enough could have been left to keep the people in the scantiest manner. But in some way, the Taylors lived with the rest; and that they endured their share of suffering before the end of the military occupation of the valley, their story will show.

During the previous August, after much marching and strategizing through the valley, Early's army was in position near Strasburg, his advanced pickets covering it, and Sheridan was upon the almost identical ground where the battle of Cedar Creek was afterwards fought. A battle was imminent, in fact, reconnoitered and skirmished for two days; and then Sheridan fell back to the Opequan, and thence again to Harper's Ferry. The infantry had nothing to do with the sporadic fighting that took place around Strasburg at this time, and I lay, with the others, most of the time in the shade, glad of a chance to rest, after our long, hot marches. It was with an indifference that must have been rather provoking to the cavalry that we watched them pouring out in squadrons towards the front, although the chances seemed then decidedly good that the infantry would be moving after them before nightfall, to take part in a battle they might bring on.

In the cavalry which skirmished in front of us at that time, there were some of the most skillful and audacious of Sheridan's scouts. They went in this way by his orders, and were prepared to brave any hazard to obtain information of the enemy. When at night their reports were brought to the general, they always placed him in possession of information which was of the utmost value.

One of these men was a corporal of a Michigan regiment. He was a daring, dashing fellow, and rode a horse and handled a sabre second to none in his corps. As a scout, he was one of the most expert and successful, and he had for a month been attached to the general's headquarters. There was a kind of rivalry among these men, which led them to take the most incredible risks and chances; and it was said that this one, whom I will call Raymond, was not behind the most daring. One of his most remarkable adventures was that which first introduced him to the Taylors. He was one of a regiment which, in one of these reconnoissances, encountered a large force of rebel cavalry near the bridge which crosses Cedar Creek, a mile and a half north of Strasburg.

After a lively exchange of carbine shots, both parties charged together, and became intermingled in a wild melee of hand-to hand encounters. Corporal Raymond was doing valiant work with his sabre, cutting, thrusting and parrying right and left, when his horse received a pistol-shot in the body. From that instant the rebel cavalry ungovernable, and, greatly against his own wishes, Raymond was carried out of the fight. The horse took the bit in his teeth, and sprang away in a mad gallop down the road towards the town. Could he have checked his horse, he would probably have halted and surrendered at their call, as there seemed nothing else to do, under the circumstances. But the horse had the mastery. Raymond bent down over his neck, and heard the whistle of musket-balls all about him, one passing through the top of his cap; and so he sped along the street while the people ran to the doors and windows to see him pass. He had reached the outskirts of the town on the south side, when the horse fell dead beneath him, pitching him with the force of the fall over his head. Raymond fell, half stunned, before the open door of a house, on the steps of which was a handsome girl who had been called to the door by the noise. He was somewhat stunned, but not so much so as to forget his danger. He took a resolution on the spot to do a very bold thing—a thing which he could not have done nine times in ten in Strasburg without ensuring his capture; but which in this instance served him admirably. He rushed into the house without a word, to get himself out of sight, and then explained to the surprised girl, and to the elderly lady he found there, that he was a Union soldier, trying to escape from the rebels, and begged them to hide him. They complied, without hesitation or objection. The young lady took him into the darkest room of a very dark cellar, and there concealed him in an empty pork-barrel. There is not much romance about that, but there is truth; and I presume that Raymond never stopped to inquire of himself whether he had better accept such refuge.

In fifteen minutes, a squad of rebel cavalry rode down the street after the fugitive, and of course stopped by the door where the dead horse lay. Both ladies stoutly denied that the Yankee was in their house. They said that when his horse fell, he had run for the woods west of the town. None of the rebels happened to know that the ladies were secret adherents of the Union cause, and therefore were satisfied with a short search. They sent a man into the house, who looked through the chambers and closets, while Mrs. Taylor and Laura indignantly protested against the suspicion that they would harbor a Yankee; and then satisfied himself by going to the bottom of the cellar-stairs, and firing his pistol among the barrels. The squad then rode off to the woods, to search for the fugitive; and Laura hastened to the cellar and lifted the cover. Raymond was cool, but a little nervous, as well he might be. The pistol-ball had passed through the barrel which concealed him, without his being hit!

Laura was shrewd enough to foresee that the Confederates would soon return for a more thorough search; and, taking Raymond up into a dark garret-loft, she concealed him under a pile of rags which were to have made a carpet for the front room. In less than an hour the troopers returned, declaring with loud and angry oaths that the Yankee was within a few rods of the spot where his dead horse lay, and that they would find him. Dividing into parties of two, they proceeded to search every house in that part of the town. The Taylors' was subjected to the most rigid scrutiny. Beds were shaken up, curtains pulled down, and all the barrels in the cellar tipped over; and had not the garret-loft entirely escaped the vigilance of the serchers, there can be little doubt that this history would have been one of imprisonment in Richmond, rather than of love in Strasburg. As it was, the Confederate soldiers went off without their captive, and Laura soon ascended to the garret, and had a long talk with Raymond. He was rather hungry, by this time, and she brought up his dinner; and he was fortunate enough to have a paper of tea in his pocket, with the gift of which he rejoiced the heart of Mrs. Taylor. Before he had talked with Laura ten minutes, Raymond had gained from his fair preserver an item of news of the utmost importance, which made him resolve upon the spot that he would return to the Union lines that night, at the risk of his head. The news was (and he knew that it had not reached General Sheridan) that a large division of the rebel army had been detached to the Luray Valley, and that it was expected to reach the rear of the Union army by way of Front Royal, and attack it at the same time with a front attack. Laura had learned it from some words which she overheard from a general officer and his aid, who stopped at the house the day before, to refresh themselves.

"Now I must get back to-night," Raymond said, decidedly. "Sheridan must know of this before he sleeps—and I guess he won't sleep much after he knows it. How can you help me?"

Laura thought a moment, went below and conferred with her mother, and then came back and informed Raymond that there was one of her father's cast-off butternut suits in the house, which might help him through the lines.

"The very thing!" Raymond cried, clapping his hands. "With that on, I'm as good as back again. However, it may be well not to leave till night."

He did not leave till night. I think the conclusion will warrant me in saying that Laura did not wish him to leave till night. He talked with her much about the war and the armies that day, hiding all the time in the garret, and was not long in discovering that her hopes and sympathies were all on his side of the struggle. What more they talked of, I do not know, and will not pretend to guess. I might record a belief that Corporal Raymond fell in love with her black eyes, and began to entertain feelings towards his benefactress which were not exactly those of mere gratitude, and that Laura found it no hard matter to take an interest in the handsome young scout; but these are only conjectures, and not worth half as much as the facts which I can tell.

Raymond waited till night, and then donned his gray uniform, and, bidding farewell to his kind friends, and promising to see them again, he left the house. He arrived at Sheridan's headquarters at eleven o'clock, in charge of a guard from the pickets, who brought him in as a prisoner. He had succeeded, after some remarkable adventures, in eluding the rebel pickets, and then came as fast as possible into our lines To shorten this part of the story as much as possible, he succeeded in coaxing the officer of the picket, who of course knew nothing of his real character, to send him direct to the provost marshal at Sheridan's headquarters; and half an hour after he reached them, the orderlies were flying to every part of the great army in hot haste, with orders for a movement toward Winchester at one o'clock.

I remember that morning well, when we were roused up in the darkness, the mud and the chilling rain, to plod back over the road which we had but a few hours before advanced over. Perhaps if I knew then what Corporal Raymond had just told General Sheridan, I should have been much better satisfied.

In some way, the prescnce of Raymond in Mrs. Taylor's house was discovered by the rebels, and both Mrs. Taylor and Laura were treated with much harshness. A guard was kept in the house for several weeks, and their little substance was consumed by roving parties of soldiers who ascertained that the house was under the ban, and made themselves much at home there. It was finally determined to confiscate their little property, and send them outside the lines; but the battle of Winchester came on just then, and Strasburg came under the shelter of the flag. Corporal Raymond was not slow in renewing his acquaintance with the Taylors, and through his agency a liberal supply of army rations was issued them for the fidelity to the cause and its soldiers.

For the next month, our army covered Strasburg all the time, and Raymond visited continually at the house. During this time, the old lady died, and Laura was left alone, without relatives, and with few friends. Raymond assured her that the war in the Valley was at an end, and as his term of service would expire in a few months, urged her to go to Winchester or Martinsburg, and wait for him, as they had agreed to be married when he was discharged. She was about to comply, when the movements of the armies interposed, and placed her again in the rebel lines. Sheridan fell back from Harrisonburg, through Strasburg and beyond, and encamped near Middletown. The enemy were on Fisher's Hill, and Strasburg, between the two, was debatable ground. Raymond would have executed his project then, but his duty kept him at headquarters, and he waited the next turn of events, chafing under the restraint. Then came the battle of Cedar Creek, with its disasters and its successes. Raymond was one of the foremost of Custer's cavalry, and with a score of companions rode down and captured a piece of artillery in the streets of Strasburg. He had stopped beside it a moment, when a shot struck him in the side. Where it could have been fired from is a mystery, to this day. It is most likely that it came from one of the houses. With the assistance of a comrade, and thinking himself mortally hurt, he rode over to the Taylor house, and was carried in with the blood streaming from his wound. The meeting between him and Laura was heart-rending. She threw herself upon the bed beside him, crying, amid her tears, that she would kill herself if he died, and distracting herself with fear. Before night, a surgeon came to the house and examined the wound. It was not serious, he said; the corporal would live. He was only weak from loss of blood. That there was joy in those two hearts over his words, we may be sure.

And this brings me to myself and the other corporal, standing outside this house in the bitter cold of early morning of October 20th. We went in, and warmed our poor benumbed bodies by the fire that roared up the wide chimney; and there we saw Raymond and Laura. I guessed part of the story at the time, and learned the balance afterward from those who knew it. It is enough to add that Laura accompanied her wounded soldier back to the hospital at Winchester; that she nursed him there all winter, and that when he was well enough to travel, she went with him to Michigan. He calls her Laura yet; the other name she has abandoned.

MRS. WILKINS' CLUB.

BY JOHN QUILL.

"BUT, Mr. Wilkins, you don't understand what——"

"Now don't talk to me any more on that subject. I'm sick of hearing you cackle. I tell you I don't approve of that club, and I don't want you to belong to it. Do you hear me? I say you shan't belong to it. Do you hear me? I say you shan't belong to it. I won't have you going down there and exposing family secrets, and letting all the women around town know what a ridiculous old chucklehead I've got for a wife—"

"Mr. Wilkins, I'll——"

"And undertaking to preach women's rights to a lot of pigeon-toed, fluffy old girls, each of whom has been trying all her life to get a habeas corpus on some single man or other, but never found any who had such bloody bad taste as to have her. I say I won't have it; it's perfectly ridiculous for a woman like you, who has about as much idea about writing an essay as a spoiled oyster has of thorough-bass, to undertake to read a paper on 'Woman's Mission.' In my opinion, women had better be missionaries at home, and try to convert victuals into dinners, than be going around reading documents like that you've been writing, about three miles long."

"Wilkin's, that's no such thing, and——"

"Three miles long, on a subject you don't know anything at all about. I'd like to know what sense there is in covering three or four million sheets of paper with your ideas, even if you had any? I suppose you'll be wanting me next to hire a dray to haul your manuscript around to the club room, but I give you fair warning. I ain't a going to do it, not if I know myself, and I think I do."

"You don't expect these old women to set it out while you read the whole of that, do you? Why, you must be crazy! You seem to forget that human beings don't often live more than three-score and ten years, and it'll take you that long to get half through, and they a sleeping all the time. You'd better take around a demijohn of Hoffman's anodyne, and be done with it."

"Wilkins, you talk like a——"

"I'd just like to know what you want to vote for, any how. In my opinion you'd better de-vote your attention to your family. A pretty looking spectacle you'll make going to the polls and getting into plug musses, and having your eyes blacked and your nose bloodied, and your ridiculous bonnet smashed over your eyes, and making stump speeches; not but what you'd do well on the stump speech. You've got an extra gift that way."

"Wilkins, you must be crazy."

"And wandering the streets in processions, carrying a torchlight, and coming home greasy about four o'clock in the morning, smelling of coal oil. By George, I say, I won't have it. If you havn't any respect for yourself, you shall have for your children and me. You shall, by George."

"You know I don't intend to——"

"I expect nothing else next but you'll be wanting to be boss of this shanty, and be putting on airs, and trying to wear the trowsers. But you shan't wear mine. If you go fooling around with my dry goods you'll get yourself into trouble, mind I tell you. I don't want you a straddling about in my clothes, let me tell you. I don't meddle with your petticoats, and one thing another, do I? and I give you notice, I want you to let my things alone."

"But Wilk——"

"Let them alone, and be decent. You needn't go around bragging and thinking I'm proud of you. I'm mortified half to death about your outrageous behavior. You're enough to aggravate a plaster of Paris angel, you are. Why don't you try to be genteel, and go down and practice on the front door-steps with a bar of soap and a scrubbing brush, instead of howling around this town about woman's rights, and making a perfectly absurd old jackass of yourself? Why don't you be of some use in the world, like Smith's wife, who had her leg cut off last week by accident, but instead of sitting down and yelping and bellowing over it, she gave it to Smith to have knife-handles and buttons made out of the bone? Why don't you do like her, and try to live for some purpose, hey?"

"What an awful story, Wilk——"

"I expect nothing else but you'll be sporting a high hat next, and trying to part your hair behind; what you've got left of it, at least."

"Wilkins, I'll scratch——"

"But I don't care how much bigger fool you make of yourself, only you're just polluting the minds of my offspring and teaching them to walk in the road to ruin. It's too outrageous for anything. There's Breckinridge Augustus has been and saved up and bought a high hat, and he staggers around under it looking more like some old clothes pin with an iron pot hung on it than like the child of respectable parents. There's more hat than there is boy, and the first thing you know he'll shut up in it like a telescope, and very likely smother to death, and all owing of your ridiculous tomfoolery and neglect of your own offspring."

"Wilkins, that is ridiculous."

"I say it's shameful that you should set such an example to your children, and stuff such ideas into Holofernes Montgomery's head, that he's doing his all fired best to grow a moustache, until its drawing all the strength out of his scalp, and his head's getting bald, and he has rubbed his upper lip with forcing-salve until it's swelled up about the size of a five cent loaf of bread, so that his nose looks like a hole in his face, and the boy's constitution is undermined for life. It's perfectly outrageous."

"You know that ain't so, Mr. Wilk—"

"And I've made up my mind not to stand it any longer, for you've even spoiled Mary Jane so that she tried to shave herself with my razor, and it slipped, and would have cut her innocent throat if you hadn't taken the edge off hacking at your abominable corns and bunions and so on. And she's got so stuck up that she has a boy to carry her books to school for her, and the little scoundrel thinks he is in love with her and spends his missionary money buying apples for her, and robs the poor, inoffensive heathen in a distant land, and prepares himself for a felon's grave, and all because you neglect your children and join clubs, and associate with strong minded old hags, and read essays a million miles long, and want to vote, and behave yourself like the regular slab-sided long-necked, scraggy old heifer that you are. I say——"

"Take that now, and if you come back here again I'll be the death of you," said Mrs. Wilkins, as a dull thud was heard, evidently proceeding from the contact of Wilkins' physical frame with the floor. In fact, Mrs. Wilkins had kicked him out of bed.

But they made it up again, for I heard Wilkins abusing his wife in the morning for starching his pocket handkerchief, so that he rubbed all the skin off his nose.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO,.....SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1867.

THE "MANIFESTATIONS" IN STOCKTON.

THE Stockton Gazette has recently furnished an account of certain "spirit manifestations" occurring in the city at the head of the slough, which seems eminently calculated to stagger unbelievers in the table-tipping faith. According to the Gazette a family in Stockton has been subjected to the most extraordinary spiritistic persecution of which we have any authentic record since the period of the Salem witchcraft. In what respect the persecuted family were sinners above others, we are not apprised. But according to the account in the Gazette they were the victims of special annoyances. The children of the family are said to have occupied an inner room which was only accessible by passing through the apartments of their parents. And yet, night after night they were drenched with buckets of water poured upon them by unseen hands. The parents and their neighbors, we are told, watched night after night in the children's room, and notwithstanding their presence, the water-throwing performance was repeated. Now we are firm believers in the proposition that spiritism is a humbug or a delusion. We believe that nearly all the pretended discoveries in the line of mesmerism since the days of Benjamin Franklin under the names of "biology," "psychology" "phreno-magnetism," "hypnotism" and spiritism, partake essentially of the character of charlatanism. They are only different names for the same thing; and all that there is of spiritism, that is not jugglery or imposture, is mesmerism. It is well enough for the Spiritist papers to promulgate such vulgar miracles as this of the throwing of dirty water at Stockton. But the miracle will not be repeated in the presence of unbelievers, who are men of science. The Stockton spirits will not throw the dirty water in the presence of Drs. Cole and Rowell. The difficulty about the spiritistic miracles is that they are only exhibited to the ignorant or to believers. Possibly Galileo did not see the four moons of Jupiter, and if he had failed to see them again, or to make others see them, the presumption would have been that he was mistaken. The modern spiritistic manifestations come under the head of experimental science. The Spiritists themselves declare that they take place under a law of nature. Yet they insist upon certain "conditions" without which the manifestations cannot take place. And what are the conditions? Credulity, or a credulous disposition on the part of the investigator. Darkness, when the cabinet and rope-tying tricks are performed. Mrs. Foye objects to any person acting on her committees who is a pronounced disbeliever in spiritism. What propounder of a scientific theory ever made a similar objection? The facts is, that all the spiritist miracles are wrought either in the presence of a few believers, or in the dark, or before persons who are not qualified to investigate phenomena requiring philosophical and scientific attainments for their elucidation. In the absence of real knowledge on any subject sham knowledge is sure to assert itself. Before astronomy became a science, we had astrology with its "houses of life" and its "houses of danger," while venerable, white-bearded imposters cast horoscopes, and spoke of all the worlds that are visible from this comparatively insignificant planet, as though they had no use or importance except for the purpose of telling fortunes. Before chemistry developed itself into its grand proportions, alchemy filled the world with its idiotic jargon about the philosopher's stone, and the elixir of life. And in like manner, until psychology shall have investigated the "phenomena" of table-tippers and the unfortunate hypochondriacs called "mediums," Spiritism will have its multitude of dupes.

INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.—The Sixth Industrial Exhibition, under the auspices of the Mechanics' Institute, will be held in the month of August, 1868. The committee have petitioned for the use of Union Square, promising to erect a suitable and ornamental building thereon. The next Industrial Fair will doubtless be the most magnificent exposition ever held on the Pacific coast, and all parties desirous of exhibiting articles should make early application to the Executive Committee. The address of the Committee can be found in our advertising columns.

"THE GOLDEN CITY."—We last week inadvertently neglected to notice this new Sunday paper, published and edited by Messrs G. B. Densmore, J McDonough Foard, and J. B Foard. The paper presents a handsome typographical appearance, and the two numbers issued bear evidence of ability and industry in the editorial department. We wish our new neighbor every success.

[For the Californian.]

NEAR TO THEE.

Oh, were my soul as high as Jove,
My limbs, like Sampson's, lithe and strong;
And were my heart as full of fire
As an unprinted passion song,
Still heart and soul to thee would bow
As rapturously then as now.

Nearer and nearer I would lean
Toward thine eyes of changeful hue,
To catch the import of the thoughts
That flash their melting centres through;
And back in flame would shoot from mine
An answer written out of rhyme.

And nearer yet, and nearer yet,
However pure, and good, and bright,
Unto thy presence I would cling
In honeymoons of full delight!
And in the waning ashen year
Thy snowy breast should be my bier.

San Francisco, Dec. 9, 1867. W. A. KENDALL.

BRUNETTES AND BLONDES.

AFTER a long triumph of blonde locks and the "golden hair" so much in favor with the poets and popular novelists, a reaction is setting in, and "raven locks" are beginning to assert their claims. "Dark hair," says the New York Evening Gazette, "is coming in. And that is not the worst of it; dark complexions are coming in also, and dark eyes which is the worst of all. The hair is in a measure under the control of its owner. It may be powdered when gray hair is in fashion, it may be colored when auburn locks are the mode, it may be dyed when jetty ringlets are demanded by the powers that be in the fashionable world.

The complexion, too, is, in a measure, subject to the will of its possessor. Many of our belles are being sadly disappointed, however, at the fact that the sun and the north wind decline to assist them as readily as they had expected in their effort to accommodate their faces to the fashion. We see very many fair faces in our streets in spite of the size, or rather no size, of the bonnets, and the pinning of the veil behind the chignon. Fair complexions are more substantial than we had supposed--very provoking to the ladies isn't it? We think, however, with perseverance in the good cause, a fashionable brown may be obtained by the fairest American girl that kneels at the shrine of fashion. We trust that nature, with her zephyrs will do her best for the ladies, for what nature does not do art certainly will do.

But the blue eyes which pass us in the street, are very sad eyes now, for their unfortunate owners are in despair. Neither nature nor art affords them the slightest consolation. Their eyes are blue, and they will be blue in spite of their fondest wishes. They look upon the dark eyed brunettes who pass them with sorrow, if not, indeed, with envy. They can imitate their hair, and their faces; but the saucy sparkle of their black eyes cannot be imitated by the softer brilliancy of the blues. The blues must retire into the corners of the drawing-room, creep into recesses and conservatories, until the reign of the brilliant blacks is at an end. Ah, well, we gladly follow them into the recesses and the bay windows—we admire their softer luster; if the blushes which belong to them are forbidden by the bronze which nature or art may give to the complexion we will let the eyes, however, have the floor now and the diamonds will flash in the gaslight instead of the pearls.

STRATMAN'S HOLIDAY PICTORIALS.—The Major always comes out brilliantly with Almanacs and illustrated publications about Holiday times. We have received his budget for the present season, consisting of Stratman's Holiday Pictorial, a beautifully illustrated mammoth newspaper. Stratman's Illustrated California Almanac for 1868, containing 64 pages of valuable reading matter and illustrations. Frank Leslie's Illustrated Almanac for 1868, for which he is special agent for this coast; and S. Zickel's Illustrirter Familien Kalender, for 1868. The last being printed throughout in choice German, we have quietly laid it aside for our Tentonic brother of the German Democrat.

OPERATIC CONCERT.—On Tuesday evening, December 17th, W. H. Blake will give his second operatic concert at Dashaway Hall, when selections from many favorite operas will be sung by 26 colored artistes. Mr. Blake's first concert was very successful, and all who were present on that occasion, will, we should think, be glad to hear these really fine singers again.

ANOTOMICAL MUSEUM.—Much that is wonderful, pleasing and instructive may be seen at this museum. Many a young man has, at this institution, gained knowledge which proved of value to him in all his future life.

BIERSTADT'S PAINTING.—Of course everyone intends to see Bierstadt's great picture, "Crossing the Plains," now on exhibition at 209 Montgomery street. It is worthy of one or two inspections.

The new legal advertisements will be found on the twelfth page of to-day's paper.

THE ALASKA DUELS—THEIR SECRET HISTORY.

DUEL NUMBER I.

POSSIBLY some of my readers may remember seeing certain vague paragraphs floating about in the newspapers in relation to a series of duels alleged to have taken place at New Archangel, between Americans and Russians, on the occasion of the taking formal possession of our new territory at the North. Something of the sort was published in the New York Herald, and also in several journals in this city, but no names or particulars were given, and afterwards, writers for the press seem to have arrived at the conclusion that the story was a hoax, and made it the subject of jocose and playful allusion. This was natural enough, since after the return to this port of the steamer that carried the expedition under Gen. Davis to New Archangel, the reporters and other civilians who had accompanied the expedition maintained a mysterious silence on the subject, or at least a silence that would have seemed mysterious to those who believed that there was any foundation for the rumors in question.

Nevertheless, the original reports were true to this extent, that no sooner did the expedition reach its destination, and the members of it set foot upon the soil of Alaska, than a belligerent, not to say bloodthirsty disposition seemed to be suddenly developed among soldiers and civilians alike; gentlemen who had hitherto been noted for quiet and inoffensive deportment became aggressive, overbearing and quarrelsome; persons who had maintained the most friendly relations during the entire trip from San Francisco, fell into violent altercations; in short, a singular and inexplicable "fighting fever" broke out, apparently without cause or reason, which led to numerous challenges to mortal combat, that must have resulted fatally (such was the fury that inspired the hostile parties) had it not been for the humane efforts of a certain gentleman accompanying the expedition as a member of the press, who not being himself infected by the mad contagion, was indefatigable in his exertions as a peace-maker. But though, thanks to the interposition of this pacific minded gentleman, none of the long series of hostile meetings that were at one time or another on the tapis during the period of the John L. Stephens' stay at Sitka, ever came to mortal arbitrament, all of them having been compromised or arranged without bloodshed, and on terms perfectly honorable to the parties concerned; still the "secret history" of those affairs, which has not heretofore been given to the world, for reasons that will appear in the sequel, will prove no less interesting on that account. Indeed, I am fully persuaded that the appreciative reader will derive far more enjoyment from the perusal of a straightforward and faithful narrative of the facts in relation to these bloodless "Alaska Duels," than they could have afforded, had their terminations been of a tragical character.

During the voyage from San Francisco to Sitka, the utmost harmony and good feeling prevailed among the passengers, military and civil. Never was a better humored and more jovial company than assembled nightly in the cabins of the Stephens for social enjoyment. With the exception of some slight indications of a latent jealousy existing between the infantry officers, and those belonging to the artillery service, nothing whatever occurred to foreshadow the strange outburst of ferocity that ensued as soon as this pleasant and friendly company began to breathe the air of Alaska.

But I must pass rapidly over all preliminary matters and hasten to what the lawyers call the res gestæ. Among the gentlemen who accompanied the expedition as "representatives of the press," was Dr. Adonis, who went on behalf of the New York Herald. The Doctor's name, though an unusual one, is singularly appropriate, as all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance will readily acknowledge. His tall and elegantly moulded figure, his ingenuous yet ardent countenance, and above all his abundant auburn hair, which he parts in the middle and wears in those long hyacinthine curls which in vulgar parlance are sometimes designated "corkscrew ringlets," combine to impart to his appearance as a whole, something strikingly suggestive of the beautiful youth for whom the enamored Venus pined in vain. But in justice to the Doctor, we must here observe that however strong a personal resemblance he bears to the youth in whom the goddess found so backward a wooer, he by no means possesses the coldness of temperament which enabled the young hero of classic story to resist all the blandishments of the Paphian Queen. So far indeed is this from being the case, that it was his excessive gallantry and the irresistible charm which he experienced in female society, that were the original cause of all the trials (and it will be seen that they were neither few nor light) he was destined to pass through in Alaska. During the trip, the Doctor contributed his full share to the entertainment of that jovial company. None were gayer or more exhuberant in spirit than he. He overflowed with jest and anecdote, and abounded with inexhaustible narratives of the perilous adventures and hair-breadth escapes he had experienced in various parts of the world, and particularly during his residence in Salt Lake, where he adopted the faith of Brigham, and cultivated the friendship of the neglected wives of divers of the Saints, but not without incurring risks such as even the most alluring smiles of the Mormon houris could tempt none but men of reckless daring to encounter.

But the limited amount of space placed at my disposal admonishes me of the necessity of making a long story short. On the arrival of the Stephens at Sitka, a number of the civilians established themselves on shore. Among these was Harry Baker, well known to old Californians as a shrewd and zealous Republican politician. Baker, who had accompanied the expedition as an agent for a Fur Company in San Francisco, become an inmate of a Russian family in the town, where he was occasionally visited by his friends who still remained on board the steamer. On one occasion, Dr. Adonis accompanied a party of officers on a visit of this sort, and was introduced to a fair young Russian, the daughter of Baker's hostess. Under the influence of the double intoxication produced by female charms and the generous wines dispensed with lavish hospitality, the gallant Doctor became exhilirated to such an unusual degree, that he began to make desperate love to the young lady. The circumstance that she seemed not at all displeased by his attentions probably aroused the jealousy of the less favored gentleman of the party who could not boast of the same personal attractions, and suggested the idea of the audacious practical joke which they afterwards carried out with such complete success. Before the evening was over, the Doctor, under the combined influences of love and wine became so bewildered, that he took the young lady aside and proposed marriage, an overture which in all probability she was only prevented from accepting by the circumstance that she could not understand a word of the language in which it was made. After assisting the enamored Doctor on board, and putting him to bed, his companions retired to a state-room and there arranged the details of a shameful conspiracy against their unsuspecting victim. The result of these midnight machinations was, that early the next morning, before the Doctor was out of his bed, half a dozen of the conspirators made their appearance in his state-room and commenced condoling with him with every demonstration of sympathy, on the score of his terrible behavior on the proceeding evening. The astonished Doctor, was perfectly oblivious as to all that had occurred, and had only a hazy recollection of having visited "Harry Baker," at a gorgeous palace somewhere in the city, of being introduced to a "Russian Princess with golden locks," of "drinking delicious wine out of golden goblets," and of being taken back to the steamer by "a team of reindeers, driven by the golden-haired princess" in person. Mystified and alarmed by the demeanor and the hints of his visitors, he tremblingly inquired "what he had done." "Done!" returns the first conspirator in a tone of amazement and horror, "Is it possible, Doctor, that you have forgotten the way in which you insulted that Russian lady at Baker's house? Why Doctor, I'm afraid you must really have been farther gone than I thought." "Good Heavens Doctor," exclaims the second conspirator, "are you so utterly oblivious? Don't you remember when you seized the young lady and embraced her, and when her brother drew a pistol and leveled it at your head, and Baker knocked it out of his hands just in time to save your life?" No, the doctor remembered none of these things, and for the very sufficient reason that they never occurred. But though he did not remember them, he had no doubt whatever in regard to their authenticity. He was a man of a simple and unsophisticated nature, and never for a moment suspected the conspiracy that had been organized aginst him. And so he was told that while under the influence of liquor he had grossly insulted a Russian lady who was connected with the "first families of Alaska;" that the young lady's brother, a Russian officer, was in a state of the most fearful excitement in regard to the matter and had sworn to have "the heart's blood" of the villian who had dared to treat his sister disrespectfully. A third conspirator, endowed with those rare imaginative powers which enable the man of genius to adorn the sober facts of history with the pleasing embellishments of fiction, narrated to the unhappy doctor the full particulars of his guilt. He had compromised himself in the grossest manner. He had insulted the young Russian lady in ways which it was not possible to particularize. The conspirators hinted at things too outrageous to be plainly specified; and the unsophisticated and unsuspicious Doctor believed it all. Mr, Kincaid, the popular purser of the Stephens, had been induced to enter into the plot, and he assisted in promoting the mystification. In short, the Doctor was assured that he had given mortal offence to the brother of the golden-haired Russian damsel, and that said brother was on his track with the fixed and relentless purpose of taking his life. Baker being gifted with the imagination of a poet, embellished the prosaic outline of the Doctor's offences with a number of rhetorical frills, assuring that gentleman, that he had, while under the influence of wine, taken the high-born Russian damsel upon his lap, and conducted himself toward her, more as though she were a Jackson street lager beer slinger, than the daughtor of one of the "first families of Sitka." While this remarkable scene was being enacted in the Doctor's state-room, a strange and portentous noise was heard without. Baker and the others rushing out to ascertain the cause of the disturbance, returned with the alarming intelligence that the brother of the insulted lady had come on board in search of the guilty party. The avenging brother was described by purser Kincaid, of the Stephens, as a ferocious looking Russian of colossal form, six and a half feet high, with an enormous red beard, and armed to the teeth. It took six of the conspirators to personate this imaginary Russian; and for more than half an hour they stamped, stormed and rampaged around the deck of the steamer, while their confederates kept running to the Doctor's state-room, informing him of his imminent peril, and advising him to keep quiet and not to stir out lest he should encounter the bloody-minded avenger. The Doctor, notwithstanding his dauntless courage and his insensibility to fear, was so overwhelmed with remorse in the contemplation of his imaginary offence that he remained all day in his state-room, never venturing to set his foot outside of the door. The next morning Baker and Kincaid with their confederates, carried out the plot they had devised, by inducing a Russian who had been appointed Adjutant to General Davis to indite a challenge addressed to the Doctor, demanding satisfaction for the insult offered to his sister. Kincaid and Baker having procured this document, it was sent to the state-room of Adonis, to whom, being written in Russian, it was all Greek. The unsuspecting Doctor at once surmised the character of the communication, and being acquainted with the Adjutant who had written it, repaired to him to procure a translation. The Adjutant, being already duly posted, kept his own counsel, and faithfully translated the cartel which he had composed. It read literally as follows:

To the Unknown Physician, called Dr. Adonis—SIR: On the last evening you did heavily insult the young lady Olga, my sister. Wherefore, and for which reason I now have the honor of calling upon you to render to me that satisfaction which the case demands. As a citizen of the brave American nationality you will not think it becoming to deny me the courtesies of a man of honor. If you will name a friend upon whom my own friend Mr. Herz Roffski, may confer, I will be happy to confirm to you the assurances of my distinguished consideration.

With due respect,
K. TRETIKOFF.

Dr. Adonis, upon the receipt of this cartel, consulted with several of his supposed friends, who were in fact enlisted in the conspiracy against him. These gentlemen advised him that it was incumbent upon him as an American citizen to uphold the honor of the Stars and Stripes, and not to "take water for any blood-thirsty Russian." The Doctor, however, being convinced by the representations of the persons who were present on the evening of the Baker entertainment, that he had been guilty of conduct unbecoming a gentleman, addressed to his imaginary antagonist, the mythical Tretikoff, the following apology:

NEW ARCHANGEL, October 27th, 1867,
Sunday Afternoon, half-past three o'clock.

In reply to Mr. Tretikoff—SIR: I am deeply heart-wounded to find myself charged with insulting your family, as your note of this morning informs me.

You will please consider my honor pledged with the fact that no insult was intended, and that I most sincerely regret having caused you and your family pain by my conduct towards you and them.

I fully, freely and frankly make this apology, and trust it will be received with forgiveness.

Should you look at it in another light, my life is at your service, and I will be honored by meeting you at any appointed place, you choosing weapons.

My friend, Lieut. Charles H. Egan will further conduct this affair.

Your true friend,
DR. ADONIS.

This apology being intercepted by the conspirators, of whom the Doctor's second, Lieutenant Egan was one, Harry Baker, who officiated as the "friend" of the mythical Tretikoff, represented that his principal was quite implacable, and that nothing but blood would satisfy him. In this condition of affairs, Egan advised his principal that it was incumbent upon him as an American citizen and a man of honor, to grant his ferocious antagonist the meeting he demanded. The chivalrous Docter thereupon screwed his courage to the sticking point, and authorized his friend, Lieutenant Egan, to arrange the preliminaries of the encounter, the particulars of which will appear in the next issue of the CALIFORNIAN.

[For the Californian]

FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

II.

IN a short article in last week's issue of THE CALIFORNIAN, I endeavored in a necessarily incomplete and general way to indicate the present state of the question of female suffrage. It is my present purpose to answer some of the most common objections put forth by its opponents.

The first of these is that woman is totally unfit to take part in matters so much beyond her proper sphere. Overlooking the petitio principii involved in this argument as usually given, and as here reproduced, we will proceed to examine it. The objection is in one sense well taken. By habit and education, woman is, doubtless, at present in some degree unqualified to understand matters, the study of which has hitherto been to her not only impossible but useless. She has been debarred from acquiring political, or in fact almost any other kind of knowledge, by the simple but effective process of confining her intellect to the round of petty duties, which are popularly denominated her "sphere." Even in those things in which we recognize her right to a voice and an influence—in literature, the arts and sciences—female education is pretty nearly synonymous with no education, nor is this the result of choice on her part; although under such a regime it could hardly be expected that she should have any very positive aspirations. If a man of education will take the trouble—and the risk— covertly to catechise a woman of average acquirements, he will probably be astonished at her deficiencies; but his surprise will be in an inverse ratio to his knowledge of her opportunities. Not only is woman excluded from all our leading colleges and universities, and from our scientific schools, but the culture she is allowed to acquire is of the wretched quality, dispensed by boarding-schools and female seminaries,—a culture which cultivates nothing—an education which educates no one. Possessed thus of, but the faintest rudiments of knowledge beneath a mass of merely superficial "accomplishments," she enters into her "sphere." If of the higher class, she gossips, embroiders and lolls herself through life; if of the lower, she accomplishes the same end by dint of washing, scrubbing and cooking. Her babies and her visitors are about her only society; and though the former are usually a source of delight. and the latter of annoyance, neither are particularly well calculated to give her broad views or mental culture. Society seems to have decided that the mission of man is to do, that of woman simply to be. We submmit, but still protest that if she is only to be, she ought at least to be something which we can admire as well as love. Disfranchised by law—disqualified by education, restrained by the tyranny of opinion from even the discussion of political affairs, it is hardly to be expected that woman shall know much of state or governmental policy.

Among those who most strenuously oppose female suffrage on the ground of female incapacity, are frequently found the most earnest supporters of negro suffrage, despite the acknowledged present incapacity of the negro. I admit that this is nearly argumentum ad hominem but it may serve to show that a great part of the opposition ostensibly on the ground specified, is, simply, on no such ground at all; for a like argument would be fatal to one of the most cherished schemes of those who use it.

But it is also asserted that the disability is not the result of defective education, but lies in the essential nature of the female mind. Let those who assert prove. The onus probandi rests with them. When they will show us a nation where woman has for a few generations enjoyed equal social and political privileges with man, and is still inferior in mental capacity, we must perforce believe. Until then we may reasonably doubt.

It is difficult to combat a belief the grounds for which have never been clearly stated. There seems to be in the popular mind a strong but undefined idea, that it is indelicate and unfeminine for woman to meddle with politics. (It will be observed that this argument owes much of its force to the use of the word "meddle.") As hinted above, however, the grounds for this belief are never clearly given. If there is anything essentially bad in the nature of politics; if the intrigues, dishonesty, and charlatanry for which politicians are in-famous, are a necessary part of the system and its essential concomitants; if noisy and disgraceful ward-meetings and drunken rowdyism at the polls are its legitimate fruits; if, in short, all its present evils are inseparable from it and integral parts of it—then indeed it would be indelicate and scandalous for a lady to have anything to do with it. But in that case it is equally indelicate and scandalous for a gentleman to engage in it. But one of the strongest arguments in favor of female suffrage is, that it will make politics both decent and respectable. At present it is neither, and much of the intellect and culture of the land will have nothing to do with it. This of course lowers the average of political and legislative intelligence, and throws power into the hands of the ignorant and the dishonest, to the detriment of every interest of the nation.

To illustrate the good influence which we claim that woman would have on politics, I will cite a familiar instance of her influences in social life. Let an intelligent stranger from a country where theatres are unknown, have the misfortune to enter one of the melodeons of this city during an evening's performance. He listens disgusted to the vile language of the stage, and shrinks from contact with the rabble who fill the auditorium. While shocked by every sound and blushing at every sight, it is suggested to him that the attendance of ladies at theatres would work a reform. How horrified would he be at the bare thought of exposing his wife, his sister or his daughter to the corruptions of a theatre. Now, with this den, let him contrast a theatre which women habitually attend. Not only is there no rowdyism in the audience, but the stage freed from indecencies has become an agency not only of amusement, but instruction. Superior actors are engaged—decorous plays are represented—respectable and intelligent audiences attend. The application is evident. The theatre is the arena of politics—the actors are the servants of the people—the play is the state policy—the audience the voters, and you, gentle reader, are the poor stranger in the melodeon, standing horrified at the thought suggested by the crazy fanatic with his wild scheme of theatrical reform.

There still remain a few popular objections to be met, the consideration of which I must defer until next week.

Dec., 1867. A. G. B.

MODERN COURTSHIP.

The sunlight is red on the river,
The woods are exceedingly brown;
And I with my trotter and buggy,
Am waiting to take thee to town.

For the beautiful summer is over;
You've killed it with wonderful grace,
You traveled on shape or on figure,
I run it entirely on face.

I have flirted with all the young women,
You've flirted with all of the men;
We smashed the whole party between us,
Let's at each other again.

I'm too good, as you know, for all others,
And you are ahead of the crowd;
Let us hitch and display to our victims
A couple amazingly loud.

And if thou wilt be true on the land, love,
As I have been true by the sea,
Then hully for thee, my own love,
Heart's dearest, oh hully for thee!

A LOVER'S QUANDARY.

THE Count de St. C—n was not rich, that is, being Count de St. C—n. Had he not been descended from a noble family, allied to all the best families of France, and admitted to all the best society of the Faubourg St. Germain, he would have been considered very well off. As it was, he had enough to give him a charming little apartment, a valet de chambre, a cabriole, with a fine horse and a little tiger, who, by dint of a little condescension on the part of the horse, contrived, standing on the pavement, to hold it by the bridle.

Monsieur le Comte de St. C—n paid all his tailor's bills, had a stall at the Italiens, a place in the omnibus box au grand opera, was a member of the jockey club, withal, was handsome, witty, good-tempered and refined.

Monsieur le Comte de St. C—n was lying on his sofa in his own apartment, smoking and thinking, when one of his friends, Ernest de V. entered the room.

"What are you doing, Anatole?" said Ernest, "you look quite serious."

"I am trying to solve a problem."

"Mathematical?"

"No; metaphysical."

"Let me solve it for you—two heads are better than one."

"Two hearts, probably; this is a problem of the heart."

As he spoke, the Count de St. C—n took from two envelopes, on the table beside him, two locks of hair.

"Look at these," said he, to Ernest.

Ernest took them in his hand and twisted them round his finger. Both locks of hair were long, fine and glossy; both were within a shade or two nearly of the same color.

"Well," said he, after a short panse, "they are both beautiful—which is the one?"

"That is precisely my problem. I'm in love with two women, and for the life of me I can't tell which I love best."

"The devil! Which loves you?"

"Both."

"Which is the prettiest?"

"I can't tell."

"Which do you see oftener?"

"Both every day."

"Do you want to decide, or have you determined to remain as you are?"

"The uncertainity in which I am at present, positively makes me nervous."

"Well, then, go and see them both to-day, and determine this evening which has made the deepest impression on you."

"I shall do as you say, Earnest and to-morrow you shall know the result."

About an hour later the Count entered a large mansion in the Faubourg St. Germain and, passing through a whole file of servants, was at last announced at the door of the Countess' boudoir, who was just then in the act of receiving the farewell compliments of a very noble and very ancient duke and duchess.

Turning to the Count, she made him a formal courtesy, whilst Monsieur de St. C—n responded by a most respectful bow.

But scarcely was the last compliment exchanged, and the door closed behind the ancient couple, than M. de St. C—n threw his hat and came on the sofa, and Mme. la Comtesse Adeline de R——rushed into his arms.

"Do you love me still?" asked she in a whisper, looking up at her lover.

"No," said he.

"You say no, but you look yes," said Adeline; "let me say that I am not home to any one."

At the end of about two hours the Count passed out of the boudoir, descended the stairs, and stood for an instant in the street.

"It is almost useless I should go and see Francine. I am sure now it is the Countess I love best."

But as he finished uttering this thought to himself, he mechanically took the street which led to the Champs Elysees. Here, without any one to announce him, he sprang up two flights of stairs, and, pushing open a door, entered a pretty room, which, without any appearance of magnificence, gave an impression from its extreme neatness of elegance and refinement. Scarcely did he appear at the door before a young girl, the very type of the Parisian grisette, rushed up to him, and, throwing her arms around his neck, exclaimed:

"Dearest Anatole, how late you are?"

It was very late that night when the Count returned home, on his table he found a large bouquet of flowers, and a little note from the Countess:

I send you the bouquet I had at the Italiens last night, and before I sleep I must tell you that I am yours. ADELINE.

Anatole sighed, and taking out a small red silk purse Francine had given him that evening, he went to bed.

"Well," exclaimed Ernest on entering next morning, "which is it, the Countess or grisette?"

"Both!"

"Which loves you best?"

"Both the same."

"Now," exclaimed Ernest, "I will settle the matter for you. Here are pen and paper and ink, write as I dictate;

My dearest love, I am obliged to leave Paris immediately. I shall be back again in a month.

"That's done."

"Now copy it; good, here are two envelopes, one for the Countess, the other for Francine." Ernest then rang the bell, and desired that the letters should be delivered at once.

"Your master is going to Fontainebleau with me to-day. Pack up his things for a month's absence, and bring them to him there to-morrow."

The Count obeyed his friend like a child, and within an hour had departed with Earnest. The next day his valet arrived, and brought him two letters. Both Francine and the Countess had been to Anatole's house, and both had written to him. The letters, excepting that one was better written than the other, were almost fac similies of each other.

Exiled from Paris for a month, the Count had wandered from chateau to chateau, until, tired of his friends, he had taken the railroad and gone to Brussels, Ernest being obliged to return to Paris. In Brussels, where there is a sort of echo of Parisian life, he contrived to amuse himself. He was terribly weary when he arrived there; but, thanks to his great name, he soon got introduced to the court, and to the best society, where his good looks, his manners, and the fact of his being a Parisian, made him quite a lion.

At length the month expired; he was in Paris eight hours afterwards.

His first visit was to the Countess.

Adeline blushed when she saw him, but recovering herself she assumed an air of dignity, and received him as though he had been a mere visitor. The Count, terribly piqued, began to feel that he loved the Countess best.

"Adeline," said he, "I have been away only one month, has that been long enough for you to forget me?"

"You forgot me; not a line nor a word."

"It was to try you."

"To try me? Did you doubt my love, Anatole?"

"I could scarcely believe I could inspire you, so courted and so beautiful, with a lasting passion."

"If that was all, your trial was well thought of. I love you more than ever. I have refused the best alliance in France for your sake. I love you better than all else in the world."

Towards evening the count went to Neuilly. He pushed open the door, Francine was sitting calmly at work; she was thin and pale.

As soon as she perceived Anatole she rushed into his arms and burst into tears.

"Oh, Anatole, I hoped never to see you again."

"My dear child, I wrote to you."

"But once; and I am only a grisette, so far beneath you; I thought you had forgotten me."

"Never! I returned yesterday, and I am here to-day. But how thin and pale you are."

"I have been ill. Oh, Anatole, I could not live without your love; and I have lost an uncle; I am in black, that makes me look so pale."

"Your uncle; I never heard of him."

"Nor I, till I heard of his death, and that he had left me his fortune."

"To you? I am so glad, Francine."

"Four hundred thousand francs, Anatole; we are rich now, for what is mine is yours."

Anatole, on his return home at twelve o'clock that evening, sat down, and, burying his face in his hands, there he sat till daylight. At last, getting up with unwonted energy, he rang the bell. The valet, half dressed and half awake, entered.

"Have you unpacked the trunks, Henri?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Comte."

"Pack them up again, we are going back to Brussels by the next train.

A few days later Ernest received a letter from his friend; it contained the two locks of hair. The letter ran thus, and was dated Brussels:

I have the pleasure of announcing to you, my dear friend, my marriage with Mlle. Gertrude Rosalia de Vandervele. She is the daughter of a nobleman whose ancestors were much distinguished by the Emperor Charles the Fifth. She is eighteen, goes to mass every day, and has two millions to her dowry, besides all sorts of estates from uncles and aunts in perspective. To you, Ernest, I confide the care of returning the two locks of hair. Dear Francine, dear Adeline, I know not to this hour which I loved the best, nor could I ever have decided. One would always have reminded me of the other. Mlle. Gertrude will remind me of neither, as you will say when you see her. ANATOLE DE C.

SONG.

O roses! for the flush of youth,
And laurel for the perfect prime;
But pluck an ivy branch for me
Grown all before my time.

O violets! for the graves of youth,
And bay for those dead in their prime;
Give me the withered leaves I choose
Before in the old time. C. G. ROSETTE.

We have always a suspicion of sonorous sentences. The full shell sounds little, showing by that little how much is within.

To QUARREL with those who have a high reputation for probity and goodness is to have all the world take side against us.

A FRIEND asks: "Why are a fashionable young lady's brains like a speckled trout?" Answer: "Because they love to sport under a waterfall."

A THOUGHTLESS word may excite a world of thought.

DECEMBER SERENADE.

One, by the stroke of the clock!
The time drags heavy and slow:
And I wake from dreams as full of thee
As the clouds are full of snow,
From dreams as white with thee, my dove,
As the clouds are white with snow.

I call the all sweet names,
Song-lark, lily, and rose,
And I only hear the night-fowl's cry,
And the wind as it beats and blows,
And the moan of the river under the hill
Freezing as it flows.

One, by the stroke of the clock!
The night will never go by!
My love, thou hast grown as cold
As the gray cloud up in the sky!
Yet come, and snow thyself in my arms,
And chill me till I die. ALICE CARY.

HOMLEY GIRLS.—The editor of the Cleveland Herald, having been tolerably profuse in his compliments to the pretty girls of Cleveland, has been requested to say a good thing in behalf of the homely ones, and he does it thus:

First. The homely girls of Cleveland are in a hopeless minority, but they mean well.

Second. They go to church every Sunday and are fond of their meals. They had rather have their meals regularly than a new bonnet.

Third. They understand their business, and wear No. 16 gaiters.

Fourth. They are bright, intelligent, devoid of low jealousy, fond of music, dance at Garrett's Hall as though it was the chief aim of life, and always go in when it rains.

Fifth. They always thank the gentlemen for giving them seats in the street cars; never flirt with the boys—because its out of their line—and keep out of the fire.

Sixth. They never have half a dozen young sprigs keeping company with them.

Seventh. They wash their own handkerchiefs, iron their own collars, and darn their own stockings.

Eighth. They never wear waterfalls that weigh over one hundred and fifty pounds, and have neither "rats" nor other animals in their hair.

Ninth. They don't call the young bloods, and other trash, "perfectly splendid."

Tenth. They never eat between meals.

Eleventh. They are all going to get married.

Twelfth. They will all marry well.

Thirteenth. Their children will be bright and shining lights in the world.

Fourteenth. They won't keep hired girls till their husbands can afford them.

Fifteenth. They sleep under mosquito bars when convenient.

Sixteenth. They can make coffee and nut cakes and can do chamberwork.

Seventeenth. They are O K.

Eighteenth. They are homely, but oh Jerusalem!

Nineteenth. They know they are homely.

Twentieth. They perspire when the thermometer is at 94 in the shade, and wear gored waists.

Twenty-first. Young gentlemen don't squeeze them by the hand, and they like pea-nuts.

SPANISH WOMEN.—Both in Madrid and Barcelona French dressmakers find plenty of employment, for Paris fashions are as strictly followed by Spanish senoras as they are by the elegantes of that city from whence emanate, among other things, the laws for women's dress, so scrupulously adhered to by the fair sex of all civilized nations. In personal appearance, as a rule, Spanish women are very attractive; their features are not strictly handsome, nor are their figures faultless, but there is so much piquancy of expression in their faces, and their movements are so full of easy grace and elegance that the real tangible gifts of beauty are not missed, and an impression of charm is usually left on those foreigners who mix among the higher grades of Spanish society. And notwithstanding the presence of these French modistes, a certain international mixture may be detected in the toilette of Spanish belles. The inevitable mantilla of the banks of Manzanares may be seen draping a dress arranged by ingenious fingers imported from the Faubourg Montmartre. But this mixture of foreign with indiginous fashions is confined to the larger towns; it would be difficult to find a single example of it in any village on the other side of the Pyrenees.

A LONG-LIVED law suit has just come to a close in Albany. It was begun in 1827, involved a right of dower, and the property in debate increased twenty five times its value since the commencement of the litigation. The Albany Argus says with reference to the case, that "forty years at law seems an unhappy destiny for a suitor, but there is at least this poor consolation, that the end of the case has at length arrived, unless forsooth, some infatuated party determine to try another venture upon the vast ocean of the law!"

I HAVE used a "Grover & Baker's Sewing Machine" for a long time, and the longer I use it the better I like it; would part with any article of furniture in the house sooner than my Sewing Machine; would advise any one who is in want of a Sewing Machine to examine Grover & Baker's before purchasing any other. MRS. E. DANFORTH.

Benicia, Aug. 1st, 1867.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACADEMY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

☞ Use Ellery's Patent India Rubber Cement AND PAINT.—It is for all outside surfaces, TIN, IRON, OR METAL ROOFS; Iron however manufactured, Brick and Wooden Buildings, Ship and steamboat Painting; will not rot, peel, blister, or crack. Water-proof coating for cloth roofing on tops of houses, decks of steamboats, tops of stages and cars. Cloth roofs cemented and painted for $9 per 100 square feet. New or old Tin Roofs, in good or bad condition, cemented and painted, guaranted, at $1 to $2 50 per 100 square feet.

EPES & E. H. R. ELLERY,
No. 226 Jackson street.

The Ladies are of one mind in pronouncing BOWMAN'S AMERICAN WASHING COMPOUND the best preparation for washing and cleaning in use. It is acknowledged to be a saving both in money and labor. The Compound softens the dirt, consequently the clothes require not more than one-half the rubbing necessary in washing by the old method: besides all who give it a trial acknowledge that their clothes are made whiter in washing with this Compound, than they were ever known to be by using any other preparation. For washing Woolen Goods and Flannels it cannot be equaled. Calicoes that can be washed with soap, without fading, are washed in the water used for boiling the white clothes. This Compound has been used in the eastern States for the past three years with perfect success. Warranted not to injure the clothes. For sale by all Grocers.

LYNCH & PARSONS, Agents,
Jackson street, near Battery.

F. DIXEY,
Merchant Tailor,

625 WASHINGTON STREET.

Cloths, Cassimeres for Vestings, always on hand and made to order in the most Fashionable Styles.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Removal.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,
Machinist,

Has removed from No. 416 Market street, to No. 10 Stevenson street, next to the corner of First.

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

JOSEPH FREDERICKS
CARPET AND UPHOLSTERY STORE,
PAPER HANGINGS, ETC.,

123 Kearny St., between Sutter and Post, San Francisco

FAMILIES ARE INVITED TO EXAMINE
OUR VARIED ASSORTMENT

Of the Finest Carpeting in the State. The best of taste displayed in Decoration and the unique Upholstering of Rooms, Halls and Public Buildings, and at prices conforming to the times. Call and examine goods.

Carrington's Yeast Powders

ARE THE BEST IN THE MARKET.

Try them if you do not believe it.

I. LANDSBERGER, Sole Agent,
429 Jackson Street.

Removal! Removal!

A. J. PLATE,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

—ALSO—

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS,

Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, etc., etc.

—HAS REMOVED TO—

NO. 510 SACRAMENTO STREET,

Between Sansome and Leidesdorff Streets, San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

PARIS EXPOSITION,
1867.
GLORIOUS NEWS
FOR
THE FLORENCE!

OFFICIAL CATALOGUE JUST RECEIVED, (September 8th) the only copy on this coast—29 days from London. FREE FOR INSPECTION.

THE FLORENCE

RECEIVED THE ONLY PREMIUM awarded to any Sewing Machine (except Button Hole Machine) for sale on the Pacific Coast.

SAMUEL HILL, Agent,
No. 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

D. GHIRARDELLI & CO.'S
Italian Manufactury,

415 and 417 JACKSON ST., SAN FRANCISCO,
Manufacturers and Dealers in

PLAIN, SWEET, CINNAMON AND VANILLA CHOCOLATES;
PREPARED COCOA, COCOA PASTE,
CRACKED COCOA, COCOA SHELLS, etc., etc.
PURE GROUND OLD JAVA COFFEE AND COSTA RICA COFFEE;
CHARTRES AND RIO COFFEE;
GREEN COFFEE OF EVERY QUALITY.
CHOICE WINES AND LIQUORS.

N. B.—Ghirardelli's Chocolate is manufactured by steam from Cocoa of the finest quality, imported direct, in excellence and delicacy of flavor, it is superior to any Imported Chocolate.

FREE HOMESTEADS FOR ALL
ON FILING A PETITION.

UNDER THE LAWS OF MEXICO which are now in force in this city, all the inhabitants are entitled to a HOMESTEAD LOT OF LAND, simply on petition. Justice Field has decided, and the Supreme Court of the United States has confirmed that decision, that the City of San Francisco is a Pueblo of four square leagues of land, and that the citizens thereof are the owners, which vests the right in each citizen to a lot of land for a homestead, and the undersigned have opened an office at 37 MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, to enforce those rights, by petition to the Mayor, etc.; and each and every citizen can procure a Free Homestead by calling at their office and signing a petition, which will forthwith vest the right to the lot in question in them, and thereby secure to the petitioner property worth a large sum of money under the existing laws now in force.

BROOKS & MERRITT,
No. 37 New Merchants' Exchange.

N. B.—The Supreme Court of the United States have settled this question in another case, as to the ownership of the Outside Lands. In the case of J. B. Townsend vs. Geo. G. Greeley, December Term, 1866, No. 124, the Court say: "It is, therefore, now the settled law that the municipal lands held by the city of San Francisco, as successors to the former Pueblo existing there, are not held in absolute property, but IN TRUST for its inhabitants."

Therefore, all the inhabitants have to do under this decision, is to ask the city, by petition, for their vested rights, as this is the only way, under the law, that they can proceed to get their property.

E. L. B. BROOKS,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

All legal business transacted in the French and Spanish languages, if desired.

M. S. WHITING. F. G. BERRY.

WHITING & BERRY,

DEALERS IN

TEAS, WINES
AND SPIRITS,
FOR MEDICINAL
and FAMILY USE.

Apothecaries, Physicians, Invalids and Families supplied, in quantities to suit, Wholesale or Retail, with

FINE,
MEDIUM,
or LOW PRICED QUALITIES.

609 Sacramento st., second door above Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petalnma

SOTOYOME HOTEL,
B. C. WRIGHT, Proprietor, Healdsbur Cal.

STERETT'S PRINTING OFFICE,
No. 533 Clay Street.

Cards, Billheads, Circulars, Books, Briefs, Transcripts, Posters, Bills of Fare Envelopes, Letter and Note Headings, Tickets, Pamphlets, and all Legal Papers printed at short notice, and upon reasonable terms.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Joseph Catania & Co.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FRESH AND SALT

STALL NO. 48 FISH MARKET, Clay Commercial and Leidesdorff Streets.

A large supply of fresh fish always on hand. Shipping, Restaurants, Hotels and Families supplied at short notice, and on the most reasonable terms.

N. B.—Fish sent to any part of the city free.

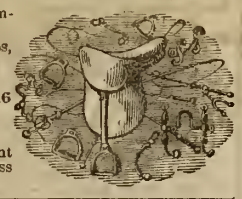
SAVE YOUR TEETH.—Do not have them extracted without first consulting a good Dentist. The loss is irreparable, and, in many instances, unnecessary. DR. BEERS, corner of Pine and Kearney streets, makes a specialty of filling the fangs of dead Teeth, and building up broken crowns with Pure Gold—thus restoring them to their original usefulness and beauty.

☞ Call and examine the work. Finest quality of artificial work also manufactured.

O. MAIN. E. H. WINCHESTER. T. R. HAYES.

Main & Winchester,

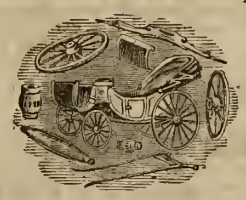
Manufacturers and Importers of Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Collars, Saddlery Ware, etc.



Nos. 214 and 216 Battery Street,
San Francisco.

N. B.—Good assortment Concord Stage Harness constantly on hand.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

C. ROBERTS,
CARRIAGE AND WAGON MAKER,
HORSE
SHOEING
AND JOBBING

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

Fourth Street, between Howard and Folsom,
San Francisco.

All styles of Carriages, Wagons and Carts made to order and Repaired.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

No Charge for Consultation.

ADOLPH CAMAN, M. D.
HOMŒOPATHIC PHYSICIAN,
ACCOUCHEUR AND SURGEON,

Devotes special attention to the diseases of Women and Children. He takes a professional pride in curing those cases which have baffled the skill of other eminent physicians.

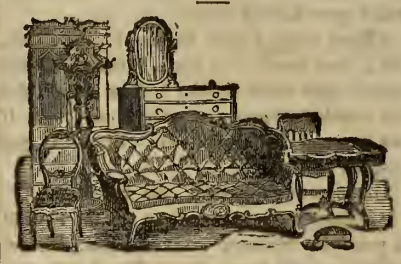
DR. CAMAN would call attention to the beneficial effects of the Homœopathic treatment in all cases of Chronic Diseases, Insanity, Paralysis, all kinds of Spasms, Delirium Tremens, and persons suffering from an unnatural thirst for spirituous liquors.

No. 26 Montgomery Street, opposite the Lick House.

NOTICE.

WE TAKE OCCASION TO INFORM OUR FRIENDS and customers that we have sold our entire stock in warehouse also invoices to arrive to Messrs. N. COLE & CO., 312 and 314 Pine steeet. The whole forma a most complete and desirable assortment of FURNITURE, and well merits attention before purchasing elsewhere.

J. PIERCE & CO.



FURNITURE.

WE beg leave to call the attention of the public to our warerooms,

Nos. 312 and 314 Pine Street.

Having purchased the entire stock of Messrs. J. Pierce & Co., and in addition to our large invoice from our factory at the East, we are prepared to fill all orders promptly, both wholesale and retail, and call the attention of the public to our salesroom, as containing the most complete assortment of desirable goods on this coast. N. P. COLE & CO.

ZEITSKA & SHEPPARD,
Merchant Taylors,
NO. 610 CLAY STREET,
Near Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Chickering & Sons' Pianos

RECEIVED THE
FIRST PREMIUM,
(Gold Medal,)
At the Paris Exposition.

FURTHERMORE, THE Improvements, Workmanship, and General Superiority of those instruments over all others on exhibition, was so marked an important, the Emperor created Mr. T. E. CHICKERING

KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOR.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

WM WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &C., &C.,
735 Market Street.
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco

THE "GROTTO,"
JOHN DUNCAN. Proprietor.
530 Sacramento street, opposite What Cheer House,
FINE WINES, LIQUORS, ALES AND PORTER,
Wholesale and Retail.
Importer of Wise's Celebrated Irish Whisky.

"OUR OPERA."
CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,
621 WASHINGTON STREET, 621,
SAN FRANCISCO,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

J. CUTBERLET,
CUSTOM
BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

—ALSO—

FRENCH SCREWED BOOTS AND SHOES,
No. 546 Washington Street, near Montgomery Street.

The finest quality of CUSTOM WORK neatly executed. Always on hand other fine work ready made.

N. GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

HOW HOPKINS WAS INDUCED.

"My country calls me," Gifted Hopkins said Susan Posey, "and I am preparing to obey her summons. I if I can pass the medical examination, which it is possible I may, though I fear my constitution may be thought too weak, and if no obstacle impedes me, I think of marching in the ranks of the Oxbow Invincibles. If I go, Susan, and if I fall, will you remember me—as one who—cherished the tenderest—sentiments— towards you—and who had looked forward to the time when—when—"

His eyes told the rest. He loved!

Susan forgot all the rules of reserve to which she had been trained. What were cold conventionalities at such a moment?

"Never! never!" she said, throwing her arms about his neck and mingling her tears with his, which were flowing freely.

"Your country does not need your sword, but it does need—your pen. Your poems will inspire—our soldiers—the Oxbow Invincibles will march to victory, singing your song. If you go—and if you—fall—Oh, Gifted—I—yes I—shall die too!"

His love was returned. He was blest!

"Susan," he said, "my own Susan, I yield to your own wishes at every sacrifice. Henceforth they will be my law. Yes, I will stay and encourage my brave countrymen to go forward to the bloody field. My voice shall urge them on to the battle-ground. I will give my dearest breath to stimulate their ardor—O Susan! My own, own Susan."—Holmes' Guardian Angel.

OUR KITCHEN BATTERIES do more for the comfort and welfare of our people than those furnished with ten-inch guns. A good supply of stoves, ranges, and tinware, particularly Stewart's famous stoves with ten-inch griddle plates if properly used will render a city comfortable and contented and prolong the lives of the inhabitants, while a ten-inch Paixhan gun battery directed against it would fill it with widows and orphans. The man who supplies nations with destructive weapons by many is regarded as an enemy to the human race, while a gentleman like CALEB M. SICKLER, at four hundred and twenty-two Kearny street, who supplies a city with articles that make the operations in its kitchens effective and pleasant. can only be regarded as a public benefactor.—Golden Era.

NOW IS THE TIME—The season of cold weather and storms—when you feel bad—to go to Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, and take one of his Baths, to make you feel good; to cure colds, (the only scientific mode,) coughs, aches, pains, etc.

CAMMET'S

LADIES' AND GENTLEMEN'S

Coffee and Ice Cream Saloon,

Nos. 57 and 59 Third street, near Mission.

HOUSE OPEN ALL NIGHT.

$1,000,000 IN WATCHES!

FOR SALE ON THE POPULAR

ONE PRICE PLAN.

GIVING EVERY PATRON A

Handsome and Reliable Watch!

For the Low Price of Ten Dollars,

Without Regard to Value!

And not to be paid for unless perfectly satisfactory:

100 Solid Gold Hunting Watches	$250 to	$1,000
100 Magic Cased Gold Watches	200 to	500
100 Ladies Watches, enameled	100 to	300
200 Gold Hunting Chronometer Watches	250 to	300
200 Gold Hunting English Levers	200 to	250
300 Gold Hunting Duplex Watches	150 to	200
300 Gold Hunting American Watches	100 to	250
500 Silver Hunting Levers	50 to	150
500 Silver Hunting Duplexes	75 to	250
500 Gold Ladies Watches	50 to	250
1,000 Gold Hunting Lepines	50 to	75
1,000 Miscellaneous Silver Watches	50 to	100
2,500 Hunting Silver Watches	25 to	50
5,000 Assorted Watches, all kinds	10 to	75

☞ Every patron obtains a Watch by this arrangement, costing but $10, while it may be worth $1,000. No partiality shown.

We wish to immediately dispose of the above magnificent Stock. Certificates naming the articles, are placed in sealed envelopes, and well mixed. Holders are entitled to the articles named on their certificates upon payment of Ten Dollars, whether it be a Watch worth $1,000 or one worth less. The return of any of our certificates entitles you to the article named thereon upon payment, irrespective of its worth, and as no article valued less than $10 is named on any certificate, it will at once be seen that this is

No Lottery, but a straightforward legitimate transaction, which may be participated in by the most fastidious!

A single certificate will be sent by mail, post paid, upon receipt of 25 cents, five for $1, eleven for $2, thirty-three and an elegant premium for $5, sixty six and more valuable premium for $10, one hundred and most superb Watch for $15. To agents, or those wishing employment this is a rare opportunity. It is a legitimately conducted business, duly authorized by the Government, and open to the most careful scrutiny. TRY US!

WRIGHT, BRO., & Co., Importers,
161 Broadway, New York.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

LIST OF PUBLICATIONS, 1867.

Poems. By Charles Warren Stoddard. "They evince the possession of a fresh and delicate fancy, a nice ear for melody, unaffected love for nature, and a pure purpose."—Bulletin. An elegant 8vo. Illustrated. $3 00.

Outcroppings; Gems from California Poets. A beautiful small quarto; gilt, $1 00.

Confucius and the Chinese Classics; or, Readings in Chinese Literature. Edited and compiled by Rev. A. W. Loomis. The first book printed from stereotype plates in California. "One of the most entertaining volumes issued from the American press for many a day."—Territorial Enterprise. A handsome 12mo. 2 00

Chinese and English Phrase Book; With the Chinese pronunciation indicated in English, Specially adapted for the use of merchants and families. By Benot Lancot. Second edition revised and enlarged. "A Roman & Co. have hit the nail on the head in the publication of this book."—Christian Advocate. 1 00.

In Bonds: A Novel. By Laura Preston. "A novel of more than ordinary elevation of purpose, carefully and effectively wrought out."—Pacific. A triumph in the authorship, and in the printing and publishing line." Times Paper, 1 25 Cloth, 1 75.

Leah's Confessions. An Autobiography. "The Author's pen is fine and powerful. The moral of the novel is, on the whole, good and wholesome." Pacific. A handsome 8vo in paper, 75.

Carrie Carlton's Popular Letter-Writer. "The author has laid the public under a real obligation in this happily conceived and cleverly-executed manual.—Bulletin. "'The Chronicles of Bellear' make a good story, and the love letters and other correspondence therein given are quite natural and appropriate."—Sacramento Union. 16mo. 75.

The Resources of California. By John S. Hittell. A California Prize Book, exclusively Californian in composition and manufacture. A large 12mo. 2 25.

A Youth's History of California, By Lucia Norman. A popular History for all classes of readers, young and old. "The book is a highly meritorious and interesting one."—Round Table. A pretty 12mo. 1 00.

Route to California by the Isthmus of Panama. A useful and interesting book to every traveler. 50.

Nevada and California Processes of Silver and Gold Extraction. By Guido Kustell. The best practical work on the subject. 8vo., cloth, 5 00.

The Elements of Composition. By Prof. Ang. Layres. 12mo. cloth, 1 00.

Belles Lettres. By Prof. Layres. Second book of the series. "The writer, the lawyer, the minister or the statesman may study these rules and regulations with profit."—Bulletin. 12mo, cloth, 1 00.

The Greek Slave. A story by Ianthe. "A touching tale of Greek suffering under Moslem rule."—Alta. In paper, 75 cents; cloth, 1 00.

Instructions in Gymnastics. By Arthur and Charles Nahl With numerous plates. Quarto, 2 50.

May Wentworth's Fairy Tales from Gold Lands. The scenes of most of these Tales are laid in California, introducing Emperor Norton and other local characters. A handsome 16mo. Illustrated, 1 00.

Legal Titles to Mining Claims and Water Rights in California. By Gregory Yale, (counselor at Law. "The first through discussion of the subject of mining property in the United States, and one much needed."—Sacramento Union. 8vo, sheep, 7 50.

Our publications are for sale by booksellers generally, and sent, post paid, on receipt of price by the publishers. Address, A. ROMAN & CO.,
San Francisco.

JOHN DANIEL,

Marble Works,

421 PINE STREET,

(Between Kearny and Montgomery.)

MANTELS, MONUMENTS, TOMBS, PLUMBERS' SLABS, ETC.,

On hand and manufactured to order.

Orders respectfully solicited.

H. T. GRAVES,

Manfacturer of

WIRE CLOTH, COAL SCREENS, FLOUR SEIVES, QUARTZ SCREENS, for Batteries, Door and Window Screens, for excluding Flies and Mosquitos.

CLOAK, SHAWL, CLOTHING AND BONNET STANDS

Fancy Work for Gardens, and a great variety of

WIRE WORK OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.

Sole Agent for the sale and application of

BROWN'S PATENT AND METALIC WEATHER STRIPS,

For the perfect exclusion of wind, dust, and rain;

☞ Aud for CRAMER'S PATENT WINDOW LIFTING PLATES AND RODS.

Call and examine them at the

CALIFORNIA WIRE WORKS,
412 Clay street, San Francisco.

R. T. HOUSTON,

Merchant Tailor,

No. 414 BUSH STREET,
Between Kearny and Dupont, San Francisco.

Steam Scouring, Cleansing and Repairing neatly executed.

Also—Ladies' Cloth Dresses and Cloaks neatly Cleaned and Pressed, or Mis-Fits altered.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

APOTHECARIES AND CHEMISTS.
J. H. Cogeshall, N. W. cor Third and Folsom.
Geo S Dickey, Pioneer Apothecary, cor Ellis & Stockton
Dr. T. B. Kelly, 503 Davis, corner of Jackson street.
Wm. Simpson, 609 Davis st., opposite Oakland Ferry.

ARCHITECTS.
Hoagland & Newsom, s.w. cor Kearny and Sacramento.
McDougall & Marquis, 328 Montgomery street.

ALE, PORTER, AND CIDER.
J. H. Todman & Co., (Jobbers,) 511 Front street.
Maguire & Co. Hibernia Bottling Establishm't 40 First.

BAKERIES.
Dempsey's Bakery, 127 Fourth street,
Robt. Zundel, Fancy Cake and Confectionery, 16 4th st

BOARDING HOUSES.
Mechanics' Exchange, Swaven & Delbnnty, 111 First st.
New England House, J. Schleicher, 205 Sansome st.

BOOKBINDER
H. C. Bateman, 227 Kearby, bet. Sutter and Bush sts.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
S. Ambroise, sign of the red shoe, 29 Fourth st.
John Mason, 5 Second st. near Market.
Lake & Co. (m'f'trs Japan Paste Blacking) 504 Market.
Justin Macarthy, (Boot maker,) 427 Fourth st nr Silver.
Joseph Rosenblum, 29 Third st.
Jacob Wattell, 559 Market st.
W. H. Hanna, (children's work,) 335 Sutter street.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

BOWLING SALOONS.
Occidental, Cameron & Goodwin, Market opp. Second.

BRUSH AND BROOM MANUFACTURERS.
California Brush Factory, 1009 Stockton, near Jackson.
San Francisco Brush Factory, 211 to 217 California st.

CIGARS AND TOBACCO.
J. R. Ojeltz, 312 Third st, near Folsom.
W. Priehatch, 144 Third st.
J. R. Rines, 154 Second st near Howard.
Kuhn & Lopez, 401 Kearny, southwest corner Pine.
Lindsey & Clune, Excelsior Store, 156 Stewart street.
M. Rosenshine, (Wholesale and Retail,) 214 Pacific st.

CLOTHING.
Mrs. C. Cryer, (Children's Clothing,) 26 Fourth st.
H. Levy, 54 Fourth street, near Mission.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
Mrs. Ezekiel, (Ladies' Clothing,) 403 Kearny st.
Meyerstein & Lowenberg. N. W. cor Bush and Kearny.
William Shorman, 608 Montgomery street.

COAL DEALERS.
H. W. Newbauer, all kinds of coal, 121 Sansome street.
S. Klein, formerly Greehood & Co., 209 Sansome street.

COACH AND CARRIAGE MATERIALS.
Waterhouse & Lester, (Dealers,) 29 and 31 Battery st.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.

CONFECTIONERS.
Baldwin & Lawlers, South Park Store, 418 Third st.
J. F. Donnelly, 112 Kearny st. near Sutter.
Ellwood & Ryan, (Fruits, etc.,) 258 Third st.
Mrs. Kain, 617 Mission, near Second.
J. Vogeley & Bro. 46 Second st.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 645 Clay street;
Dr. A. B. Campbell, 17 Third st.
Dr. Heald, S. W. cor. Montgomery and Bush sts.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DRESS AND CLOAK MAKERS.
Mrs. Taylor & Mrs. Jones 258 First, near Folsom.
Mme. Weller, 129 Second st.

DRY GOODS.
Irving, Landers & Co., No. 4 Third street.
Keane Brothers, 218 Third, bet Howard and Tehama.
M. Waterman, 22 Second street, corner of Stevenson.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
S. Mosgrove, 222 Third, bet Howard and Tehama sts.

FAIRBANKS' SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot 120 California street.

DRIED FISH.
Torello Kiezole, corner Fourth and Brannan sts.

FRINGE, CORD, AND TRIMMING FACTORY.
M. Ettinger, 125 Kearny st., bet. Post and Sutter.

FURNITURE AND BEDDING.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Regan, 29 Second st.
Jacob Schreiber, 121 and 123 Sansome, bet. Pine & Bush
G. Scheier, (Crockery and Glassware,) 20 Fourth st.

GROCERS.
N. Bruns, northwest corner Third and Berry sts.
M. Farrou, 523 Fourth st, corner Welsh.
Derby & Johnson, northeast cor. Bush and Powell sts.
Flinn & Neall, cor. Third and Tehama.
Fred. Lange, Family Grocer, cor. Powell and Lombard.
Jos. Van Doren, northeast cor. Bush and Mason sts.
Bernard Railly, 219 Second, cor Tehama.
Hermon Schuldt, corner Third and Harrison.
Seneca Jones, Family Grocer, 105 Third street.
Wellman, Peck & Co., wholesale grocers, 404 Front st.

GUN-SMITHS.
W. Rudolph, Union Gun Store, 216 Pacific street.
Wilson & Evans, 513 Clay street.

H. & L. AXLE-GREASE.
Manufactory 146 Tehama st, and at North Beach.

HAIR DRESSING SALOONS.
Anthens & Fleischman, 329 Kearny, near Bush st.

HARDWARE AND CUTLERY.
L. B. Benchley & Co., (American and Foreign,) 3 and 5 Front street.
J. S. Sesser, 138 Fourth st, bet. Mission and Howard.

HATTERS.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.
Nickerson & Co., 35 Kearny, below Post.

HAY AND GRAIN.
Grant & Smith, 26 Market and 19 Sacramento sts.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.
George Morrow & Co., 21 Clay and 28 Commercial sts
Wm. H. Nichols, 18 Sacramento, and 17 Commercial.

HOTELS.
Atlantic House, John McManus, 210 and 212 Pacific st.
"Branch," M. O'Neil, 12 Sutter street.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, Droste & Pfefferle, 220 Pacific street.
Empire House, Peter Thompson, 106 Jackson street.
Franklin Hotel, Hugh Curran, cor Sansome & Pacific.
Franklin House, C. Maloney, cor. Br'dway & Sansome.
Golden Gate Hotel, J. Blackmun, 728 Market street.
Mariner's House, Brown & Chandler, 504 and 506 Davis.
"Oriental," H. Saxtorph & Co., Washington & Drumm.
Sanders' Hotel, J. P. Sanders, 24 Sacramento st.

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER.
Michael English, 414 Pine street.

HARNESS AND SADDLE MANUFACTURERS.
A. B. Bois, 510 Davis street,
M. G. Conway, 721 Market bet. Third & Fourth sts.
D. Fennel, 522 Battery street, opposite the Post Office.
H. D. Jameson, Market st. opposite Treadwell & Co.
Mead & Son, 557 Market, opp. Sansome.
H. Weaver, 671 Market, bet. Second and Third.

INSURANCE.
Firemen's Fund Ins. cor. California and Sansomo.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agents, 206 Front, cor. Cal.
North British Mercantile, S. E. cor Sansome & Califor'
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
People's Insurance Co., N. E. cor. Montgomery & Pine.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY, CONTINUED.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, AND FANCY GOODS.
Jackson & Spaulding, 65 Third st. near Mission.

LADIES' FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.
Thomas Collinson, 160 Third, near Howard street.

LIVERY STABLES.
Central Stable, Washburn & Co., 207 and 209 Sutter st.
Gardner & Finch, 211 and 213 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Davis, cor. Mission & Spear sts.

MARBLE WORKERS.
Zeglio & Moore, 783½ Market, bet. Third and Fourth.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
B. Curran, 109 Kearny above Post.
R. Phillip, 518 Market, near Metropolitan Market.
John Straub, 351 Third st.

MARKETS.
Bennett & Wallace, 151 Third street.
J. Hertz & Co. 107 Second, near Mission.
F. J. Stelling, San Jose Market, 154 First st.
I. Gans, "New York Market," Fourth st, near Market.
C. Wagner & Co., (Golden Gate,) 512 Davis street.

MEERSCHAUM PIPE MANUFACTURERS.
Chas. Koblman, 507 Kearny, near Sacramento st.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd-Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

MILLINERS.
Mrs. Cowles, 122 Third st.

MUSIC TEACHERS.
Prof. J. R. Boullet, Pianist and Vocalist, 1320 Stockton.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PAINT MANUFACTURERS.
Epes & Ellery, dealers in paints, etc, 226 Jackson st.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.
James R. Kelly, 38 California street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
H. Bush, corner Post, Market and Montgomery streets.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
Kohler, Chase & Co., 421 Montgomery street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st

PLUMBERS AND GAS FITTERS.
Chas. Barman, 121 Fourth street, near Minna.

PRINT SELLER AND PUBLISHER.
Thomas H. Lawlor, Second street, near Howard:

PRODUCE COMMISSION MERCHANTS.
Dorman & Wolf, 426 Davis street.
George Hughes, 410 Davis street.
Johnson & Harmon, 412 Davis street near Washington.
J. W. Nye & Co., 219 Washington street, corner Cedar.
Thos. Newell, 62 Clay street between Drumm and East.
S. C. Wilson & Co., S. E. corner Clay and Davis sts.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, W. Wilson, manager, 640 Market st.
"California Market," Summer st, next to Cal. Market.
Cammet's, 57 and 59 Third, near Mission st.
Delmonico's, Young & Mandell, 45 Second st.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
J. A. Miley & Perrin, Ladies' Restaurant, 521 Kearny.
New York Bakery, G. S. Hall & Co, 628 Kearny near Clay
Market, by Hanzo & Besson, 520 Merchant street
The Opera, J. Weiss, 335 Pine street.

SALOONS.
Beck's Saloon, 504 Drumm street, near Pacific.
Blancy & Carroll, "Sample Rooms," 107 Third street.
Brevoort Exchange, Barrington & Werner, 44 Fourth.
John Burns, Bomhoat Exchange, Berry st, near Third.
Carr & McElroy's, opposite San Jose R. R. Depot.
Clement Dixon's Ale Vaults, Nos. 2 & 3, Summer st.
Charley Smith's Saloon, 539 Washington street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N. E. cor Third and Howard
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.
Cleveland's Sample Rooms, 318 Bush, above Montg'y.
W. B. Dolan's, 145 Third, corner Hunt street.
Donahue & Phelan, 321 Second st.
Evans' Saloon, Long Bridge, corner Berry and Third.
"Excelsior," Haase & Co., cor. Drum and Commercial.
Fitch & Little, fancy liquors, Summer st. near the Markt
Fourth Street Exchange, Chas. F. Sitter, 245 Fourth st.
James Gibb, "Cosmopolitan," 617 Merchant street
German Hall, Ed. Angelis, Propr., 18 Sansome st.
Headquarters, Decols & McLean, Fourth, cor Townsend.
J. P. Lavins' Saloon, northwest cor. Battery & Br'dwy
J. Dillon, "Fourth St. Exchange," cor. F'rth and Mkt.
John B. Holje & Co., 28 Clay street.
John J. Kahman, N. W. cor. Post and Kearny sts.
King & McCormick, "Rotunda," Market & O'Farrell.
A. Leppert, New Corner, corner Fourth and Berry.
Mechanics' Sample Room, C. Diedrichsen, 1st, cor Mrkt
"Manadnock," A. Horstkemper, Drumm & Oregon sts.
Nolan's Exchange, Ball & Racket Court, 732 Howard st.
Meyer & Quaid's, S. E. corner Market and Fourth sts
A. Phister & Co. (Punches) cor Leidesdorff and Halleck.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Riog's Saloon, Peter Ring, California st., below Drumm.
Squarza's, A. Bona, Prop'r, 120 Leidesdorff st.
Uncle Billy & George, Saloon 707 Davis st.
Union Saloon, C. H. Cordes, Market, below Fremont.
"Young American," Geo. C. W. Heuer, Stewart & Howard

SAWING, PLANING AND MOULDING MILLS.
D. A. Macdonald & Co. corner Market and Beale sts.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Henry Lehnhardt, (dealer in all kinds) 3d cor Tehama

SHIPWRIGHTS, CAULKERS AND SPAR-MAKERS.
Coombs & Taylor, 109 Market street.

SODA AND MIXERAL WATERS.
Empire Soda Works, corner Third and Harrison.

STATIONERS AND BOOKBINDERS.
Jas. E. Damon & Co., 421 and 423 Sansome street.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
M. J. Blackman, 302 Third street, near Folsom.
Reinzi Hughes, (also Crockery and Glassware) 215 3d.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.
Schuster Bros., 102 Kearny, near Post st.
Murphy & Sheldon, (Metal Roofers, etc.) 153 Third st.

UMBRELLA AND PARASOL MANUFACTORIES.
C. King & Co., (repairing and fitting) 255 Third st.
John D. Barr, Manufacturer 623 Mission near Second.

UNDERTAKERS.
Craig & Yung, 705 Market st., one door west of Third.

VARIETY STORE.
D. Michael & Co., 348 Third street.
Edward Dunn, 502 Third street.

VIOLIN, GUITAR AND BANJO STRINGS.
Libby & Munk, 329 Kearny, st.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

WAX FLORIST.
Mrs. M. E. Gerrish, 11 Post street.

WHOLESALE WINE AND LIQUOR DEALERS.
Campbell & Co., 629 Front st., bet Jackson and Pacific.
Henry M. Cutter, Importer, 520 Front street.

WHOLESALE UPHOLSTERERS.
D. N. & E. Walters, 13 Battery street, corner Bush.

WOOD AND COAL YARDS.
Patrick Byrne, S. W. corner Perry and Fourth sts.
Edward Flanagan, Agt. Coose Bay Coal Co. 606 Battery
Occidental Fuel Depot, Geo. C. Eldridge, 607 Market st

EDWIN BOOTH'S NEW THEATRE, N.Y

The frontage on Twenty-third street will be one hnndred and eighty-fonr feet, and on Sixth avenne seventy-nine feet, in the Renaissance style of architecture. The hight from the side-walk will he seventy feet to the base of the rich main cornice, and over all these will be a Mansard roof of twenty-four feet.

The part of the hnilding occupied as the theatre proper will range one hnndred and forty-nine feet on Twenty-third street, and will be divided into three parts, so combined as to form a snperb ensemble, with arched entrance at either extremity—on the one side for the admission of the pnblic, the other for the actors and others employed in the house. Directly in the centre of this frontage will he three other doors, devided for the prupose of securing the most rapid egress of a crowded audience, in case of fire or any other sudden emergency. Upon the occurance of any such alarm, these the doors will he thrown open, and their aid and facilities provided for the rest of the throng, the entire hnilding could he vacated in five minntes.

Between these enterance doors, and on either side, will he spacions and lofty windows, while above them, and forming a part of the second story, will he roomy niches surrounded by coupled columns resting on chastely sculptured pedestals. Between these columns,at the depths of the recess, will be neat pilasters sustaining the elliptical arches that will serve to crown and span the niches, the latter to be occupied by statnes of the great dramatic authors and interpreters of evrey age and country. The main niche, in the centre, will be flanked on either side by curiously contrived blank windows. This entire facade, as well as that on Sixth avenue, will he huilt of the finest Concord granite from the best quarries in New Hampshire.

"My Dear Ellen," said a yonng man, "I have long wished for this opportunity, but I hardly dare trust myself to speak the deep emotions of my heart; but I declare to you most tenderlly. Your smiles would shed——"

"Never mind the wood-shed," said Ellen, "bnt go on with your pretty talk."

Pictures.—Christmas is coming, and your friends will expect presents. Go to Morse's Gallery, No. 315 Montgomery street, and let him take you in the highest style of the art. He is an accomplished photographer, and very reasonable in his charges. If desired, pictures can be colored by Miss Romanes in the most artistic and natural manner.—Sunday Mercury.

The Snug.—"The Snug" has been located one door below Maguire's Opera House, for ten years past. It was established for the convenience of the habituates of the Opera House, and has the reputation of dispensing the best wines and liquors in the city, under the charge of its present proprietor, Mr. Timothy McCarty. Entrances from various parts of the Opera House to the bar have been cut, for the convenience of the public. Mr. McCarty gives his entire attention to his guests, and renders his establishment a "Snug" place by day or night.

BOWEN BROS.

GROCERS,
Tea and Wine Merchants,
S. E. cor. Montgo'ry and California,
San Fraucisco.

Wholesale Store,
304 Front Street.

BUCKMAN BROS.,

(Successors to John Myers,)

CAPITOL SALOON,

226 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Opposito the Russ Houso

Notice to Creditors.—Estate of John Horgan, deceased.—Notice ie hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the Estate of John Horgan, deceased, to the creditore of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exbibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratrix, at the place of her transaction of business, at the office of William A. Quarles, Public Administrator, room 5, No: 520 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated December 13th, 1867.

CATHARINE HORGAN,
Administratrix of the Estate of John Horgan, deceased.
d14-6w

In the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

ADDIE M. VINES, Plaintiff, vs. DANIEL B. VINES, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteentb Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to DANIEL B. VINES, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaitiff, in the District Court of the Fifteentb Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, hut in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment hy default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decreo from this Court dissolving the honds of mstrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the custody and care of the child of the parties hereto may be awarded to plsintiff. Also for general relief.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of of the Fifteentb Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 22d dsy of Novcmber, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

[SEAL.] WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By J. D. Ruggles, Deputy Clerk.
Pixley & Smith, Attorneys for Plaiutiffs. d14-13w.

In the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of NATHANIEL MASON, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution sbould not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of SAMUEL BROCKHURST and NOAH CLIFT EFFORD, the Executors of the last will and testament of NATHANIEL MASON, deceased, setting forth that they bave filed their final account of their administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same bas been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the devisees and belrs of said deceased, and praying smong other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said cstate among tbe persons entitled:

It is ordered, that all persons interested in the estste of the said Nathaniel Mason, deceased, be and appear before the Prohate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on TUESDAY, the fourteenth day of January A. n. 1868, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution sbould not be made of the residue of said estate among the devisees and heirs of the said Nathaniel Mason, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successivo weeks before tbe said fourteenth day of January, A. D. 1868, in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Prohate Judge.

Dated Decemher 11th, A. n. 1867.
E. B. Mastick, Esq., Att'y for Executors. d14 5t

In the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JULIUS STURM, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, hy the petition this day presented and filed hy William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of Julius Sturm, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, tnat it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of tho real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 14th day of January, A. D. 1868, at eleven o'clock in tho forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

Datcd Decemher 13th, 1867.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Office of the County Clerk of tbe City and County of San Francisco.—I, Washington Bartlett, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, snd ex-officio Clerk of the Prohate Court, in and for said city and county, do nerchy certify tho foregoing to be a true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Wituess my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 13th day of Decemher, A. D. 1867.

[SEAL AND STAMP] WASHINGTON BARTLETT, Clerk.
By A. J. Jegbers, Deputy Clerk.
J. F. Finn, Esq., Att'y for Administrator. d14 5w

In the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of MINNIE SHERWOOD, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be mado.

On rcading and filing the potition of Lilly Sherwood, the Administratrix of the Estate of Minnie Sherwood, deceased, setting forth that she has filed her final account of her administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same hae been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have heen duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to bo distributed to her as the only and sole heir of said deceased, praying among other things for an order ofdistrihution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled.

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estato of the said Minnie Sherwood, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on MONDAY, the thirteenth day of January, A. D. 1868, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distrihution should not he mado of the residuo of said estate to the said petitionor, as heir of the said Minnie Sherwood, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order ho published for four successive weeks, hefore the said 13th day of January, A. D. 1868, in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated December 13th, 1867.
Jas. C. Cary, Attorney for Petitioner. d13 5w

Nature Unveiled,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka, Theatre Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine.

BUILDER'S INSURANCE CO.

OFFICE IN THE BUILDING OF THE CALIFORNIA SAVINGS BANK, CALIFORNIA ST., one door from Sansomo.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

Is a soothing expectorant, prepared to meet the urgent need of a safe and reliable cure for diseases of the throat and lungs. A trial of many years has established the fact, that it is more efficacious in pulmonary affections, than any other remedy. Its efficacy has now become so generally known, that it is justly regarded in many countries as a medicine of indispensable necessity. In Great Britain, France, and Germany, where medical science has reached its highest perfection, it is prescribed in domestic practice, and constantly used in the armies, in hospitals and other public institutions, where it is regarded hy the attending physicians as the most speedy and agreeable remedy that can be employed.—Scarcely any neighborhood can be found where well known cases of diseased lungs, which had baffled the efforts of the most skillful and experienced doctors, have been permanently cured hy it. These results are the most convincing proofs of the superior curative properties of this preparation; and to them the authors point with peculiar satisfaction. While it is most powerful against confirmed diseases, it is extremely gentle as a medicine in infancy and youth, being quite harmless to even the youngest, when administered judiciously.

This health-restorer accomplishes even more by prevention than cure. If taken in season, it heals all irritations of the throat and lungs, whether arising from Colds or Coughs, or from other causes, and thus prevent that long train of painful and incurable diseases, which would arise from the neglect of them. Hence no family should be without it. Influenza, Croup, Hoarseness, Whooping Cough, Pleurisy, Incipient Consumption, and other affections of the breathing organs, give way before this preeminent combination of medical virtues.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine everywhere,

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
Wholesale Agents.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

STEAMSHIPS FOR

NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Brannan-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 18th or 19th is expected to connect with the French Transatlantic Co.'s steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th is expected to connect with English steamer for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America. Through tickets can he obtained.

STEAMERS FOR DECEMBER.

Dec. 10—SACRAMENTO, Capt. W. H. Parker, conuecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY. Capt. Gray.
Dec. 19—CONSTITUTION, Capt. J. M. Caverly, conuecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Conuor.
Dec. 30—MONTANA, Capt. E. T. Farnsworth, connecting with ARIZONA. Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to bave their baggage on hoard hefore 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool hy the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained of P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamship GREAT REPUBLIC, Capt. S. Doane, will be dispatched on December 4th, from wharf, corner of First and Brannan streets, for YOKOHAMA and HONGKONG; connecting at Yokohama with the steamer COSTA RICA, for SHANGHAI.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

New Opposition Line via Panama.

The North American Steamebip Company will dispatch the elegant and commodious Steamship

AMERICA,
(3000 Tons,)

EDWARD WAKEMAN.....Commander,

For PANAMA, from Mission Street Wharf, at 12 o'clock noon, on

SATURDAY, - - - - - DEC. 14th, 1867,

Connecting, via Panama Railroad, at Aspinwall with the Company's now and splendid Steamship SANTIAGO, 3,000 Tons, for NEW YORK.

One hundred pounds Baggage free.
Surgeon on board; medicine and attendance free.
The Company will continue their Line via Nicaragua.
For further information apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pino streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco

First Premium

AWARDED BY THE STATE FAIR TO

SILAS SELLECK,

FOR THE BEST PLAIN PHOTOGRAPH.

—ALSO—

SPECIAL PREMIUM

For the Best Cabinet Portraits.

MR. SELLECK is now prepared to execute the very best PHOTOGRAPHS, in all the different styles, at No. 415 Montgomery Street.

N. B.—The best Water Color and India Ink Artist in this city is attached to this Gallery.

ST. CHARLES RESTAURANT,

At the Hotel of C. Galliand, Nos. 507 and 509 Pine Street, between Kearny and Dupont streets.

BY MME. CAZINTRE.

☞ All who will call at this Restaurant will find an excellent table and prompt attention.

California Coffee and Dining Saloon.

Nos. 612 and 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.
J. R. REAGAN, Proprietor.

A Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot en chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can he served quickly snd satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

ITALIAN RESTAURANT,

No. 515 Merchant Street,

Between Montgomery and Sansome, San Francisco.

Taglierini, Maccaroni, Risotto and Ravioli In the Italian Style.

MEALS FIFTY CENTS, OR TO ORDER.

Rooms for private parties up stairs.
MR. GUISEPPE CADENASSO.

LEON DINGEON. F. W. HAUBRICK.

DINGEON & HAUBRICK,

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET.

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties.

NEW RESTAURANT.

MR. SORBIER takes pleasure in informing his friends and customers that he has opened a FIRST-CLASS RESTAURANT under the name of

SORBIER'S RESTAURANT,

at No. 607 SACRAMENTO STREET, above Montgomery, where he will be pleased to see his old friends and the public in general, and where all can be assured that they will be served with the very best the market affords, at most reasonable rates.

JOHN E. SORBIER,
Late of the Occidental Restaurant.

F. C. BELDEN,

Of the well-known Family Depot, No. 612 Sacramento street, has opened the

SUMMER STREET RESTAURANT,

at the northeast corner of Spring and Summer Sts.

☞ Meals to order, and by the plate. Wines and Liquors of the best quality.

OCCIDENTAL RESTAURANT,

536 Washington Street, below Montgomery.

GEORGE WITTMAN would inform the public and the former patrons of this

POPULAR RESTAURANT

That he has assumed full charge, and will continue to keep all the delicacies of the season and one of the best lists of WINES, etc., and solicits the continuance of their patronage.

COCO-MUNGO SALOON.

J. M. WASHBURN, Agent.

No. 536 Merchant Street, (Montgomery Block.)

THE BEST OF LIQUORS,

SKILLFULLY CONCOCTED MIXED DRINKS,

AND A FIRST-CLASS HOT LUNCH,

Not inferior to any offered in San Francisco, is furnished daily at the COCO-MUNGO—Clam Chowder, Fish Chowder, Gumbo Soup, Pork Tenderloins, Cape Cod Boned Turkey, Venison, Quail, and all the delicacies of the season, as fast as they are to be found in the market, figure upon the lunch table of the COCO-MUNGO.

A Reading Room, abundantly supplied with Domestic and Foreign Papers and Periodicals, is one of the features of the COCO-MUNGO.

C. F. HAYWARD,

—DEALER IN—

Harness, Saddles, etc.,

305 BATTERY STREET,
Near Sacramento,
San Francisco.

Architectural Designs

—FURNISHED BY—

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS,

Southwest corner of Sacramento and Kearny Streets, San Francisco.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

A GOOD HUSBAND.

There is one sensible married man in this State. He is a soldier, and was reported to have been killed, but was only prisoner. He returned home to find that his wife had turned over a new leaf in the marriage service, and that another man occupied his seat in the chimney corner. Did he go to work slaughtering the false wife and new husband? Not much. He walked in and said :

"Well, old gal, how is things?"

"Pretty good, Bill," said the double married woman, not taken back greatly.

"Which do you prefer, the old or new love?"

She hesitated for an instant, and then said :

"I don't like to hurt your feelings, but —but——"

"Oh, spit it out. Don't mind my feelings, nor the other chap's! I won't be angry if you come down a little rough on my vanity. Count on me being amiable. I won't cut up rusty if you should go back on me."

"I'm glad you're so thoughtful, Bill, and I acknowledge that I do like my present husband best; but if anything should happen to him, I know nobody else I would so soon join fortunes with again as you."

"That's the way to talk. I'll now bid you good-bye.

"Trusting that a wise and beneficent providence will permit no accident to happen to the other fellow, and that he will live long enough to enjoy your delightful society. Good day."

And the careless husband traveled off with his knapsack on his back, whistling in a cheery, clear tone, "The girl I left behind me."

"A RICH ONE.—A lighthouse keeper recently appointed on the Jersey coast, made a ridiculous blunder.

Immediately after he had taken possession complaints were that the lights went out by twelve o'clock. The proper officer was at once sent to look into the matter, and he was told that complaints were made against him.

"For what?" was the inquiry.

"Why," replied the officer, "they say that our lights do not burn after twelve o'clock at night."

"Well," was the reply, "I know they don't for I put 'em out myself then, for I thought all the vessels had got in by that time, and I wanted to save the ile."

MANY years since, in California, old Judge C— kept a little dead fall as they call a rum mill out there, a few miles above Marysville,

H. BATTEL'S SAMPLE ROOMS,

411 SANSOME STREET,

Betwoen Commercial and Sacramento streets.

H. BATTEL BEGS TO INFORM HIS FRIENDS AND the public that he has opened the above hall as a first-class Refreshment Saloon, where they can always be sure to find the very best

WINES, LIQUORS, AND HAVANA CIGARS

In the Market.

Hot Lunch served daily from 10 to 2 o'clock.

Notice.

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE,

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, POST STREET.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

THE PROPRIETORS OF THIS POPULAR INSTITUtion have much pleasure in announcing that in consequence of the growing interest taken by American ladies in mercantile pursuits, they have at the solicitation of many heads of families, fitted up class rooms exclusively for young ladies, that they may have all the advantages of a commercial education, and be fitted to act in the capacity of clerks or book-keepers. Experience in this matter in the Eastern States and on the Continent, shows that with a little careful training, they can be qualified to fill with efficiency all the lighter departments of trade, where there is a wide range for the exercise of their talents.

A. DE LEO DE LAGUNA, Principal,
JAMES VINSONHALER, President.

Asphaltum for Sale

IN ANY QUANTITY TO SUIT, BY THE

PACIFIC ASPHALTUM COMPANY,

No. 533 Kearny street, corner of Sacramento,

SAN FRANCISCO.

This Asphaltum is the purest to be found in the market, being free from rock and clay, or other impurities.

Sidewalks Laid and Roofing Done at Shortest Notice.

NEUVAL & CO.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company,

OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

—OFFICE—

S. W. cor. California and Sansome streets.

CAPITAL, $500,000, FULLY PAID IN GOLD COIN.

INSURE MARINE RISKS

Under Open Policies, on Cargoes, Treasurs, Freights, Profits, and Commissions.

—ALSO—

ISSUE POLICIES ON TIME,
VOYAGE AND HARBOR RISKS ON HULLS.

INSURE AGAINST LOSS BY FIRE

On Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Wares, and other Porsonal Property.

FIRE, MARINE, HARBOR, AND INLAND TRANSIT RISKS,

On terms as favorable as any other reliable First-Class Company.

Greatest amount taken on any one risk, $50,000. Portions of Risks considered too large, will be re-insured in responsible Companies.

LOSSES PROMPTLY PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!

D. J. STAPLES, President,
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

HAMBURG—BREMEN,

Fire Insurance Company.

CAPITAL, - - - - - $1,000,000

MORRIS SPEYER, Agent.

OFFICE—526 Washington Street, a few doors below Montgomery.....San Francisco.

Being no longer governed by the Tariff of the Board of Underwriters, this Company will effect Insurances at as LOW RATES as those of any other responsible Company.

OCCIDENTAL

Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

FIRE INSURANCE.

Manhattan Fire & Marine Insurance

OF NEW YORK.

Incorporated.....1821.
Cash capital.....$500,000
Surplus..... 650,000

Total Assets, over.....$1,190,000

The above named responsible and well known Company has complied with the law of the State of California, and has deposited $75,000 as additional security for policy holders,

Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, and other property insured against loss or damage by Fire, on the most favorable terms. Also, Insurance on Merchandise, Specie and Freight to or from all parts of the world. Losses promptly adjusted and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., General Agents,
206 Front street, corner of California.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,

DENTIST,

No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens. North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.

N. T. WHITCOMB.

Removal.

WILLIAM SHERMAN & CO.,

Have this day Removed their Stock of

Clothing & Men's Furnishing Goods,

From Sansome Street to

608 Montgomery street,

(East Side,) North of Clay,

San Francisco, November 22, 1867.

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,

JEWELRY AND ATERIALS.

☞We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.

Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

DICKEY'S

CREME DE LIS

DE CALIFORNIE.

THE FASHIONABLE WHITE WASH FOR BEAUTIFYING THE COMPLEXION.

A NEW COMBINATION, equal to the best French preparations, and free from their poisonous ingredients.

GEO. S. DICKEY, Chemist,
Corner of Market, Stockton, Ellis and Fourth streets,
San Francisco.

Administrator's Sale of Real Estate.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT, IN PURSUance of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, made on the 26th day of November, A. D. 1867, in the matter of the Estate of JUSTIN VICTOR SUBERVIELLE, deceased, the undersigned, the Administrator of the Estate of said deceased, will sell at private sale, to the highest bidder, for cash, gold coin of the United States, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on

WEDNESDAY, THE 8TH DAY OF JANUARY, A.D. 1868,

at 12 o'clock, M., at the office of W. C. Burnett, Esquire, the attorney of said Administrator, No. 606 Washington street in the said City and County, all the right, title, interest and estate of the said Justin Victor Suberville, at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has by operation of law or otherwise, acquired other than, or in addition to that of the said deceased at the time of his death, in and to all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows, to wit :

I.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of King street, 114 feet 7 inches northeasterly from the northeast corner of Fifth and King streets, thence running north easterly along said line of King street 91 feet 8 inches; thence northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet; thence southwesterly and parallel with King street 91 feet 8 inches, and thence southeasterly 120 feet, to the point of commencement.

II.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of King street 343 feet 9 inches northeasterly from the northeasterly corner of Fifth and King streets, thence running northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet; thence northeasterly and parallel with King street 22 feet 11 inches; thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet, to King street, and thence southwesterly on the northwesterly line of King street 22 feet 11 inches, to the point of commencement.

III.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of Townsend street 137½ feet northeasterly from the northeasterly corner of Fifth and Townsend streets, thence running northeasterly along said line of Townsend street 45 feet 10 inches; thence northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet; thence westerly and parallel with Townsend street 45 feet 10 inches, and thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet, to the point of commencement.

IV.—Commencing on the southeasterly line of Berry street, 229 feet 2 inches southwesterly from the southwesterly corner of Fifth and Berry streets, thence running southwesterly along said line of Berry street 45 feet 10 inches; thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet; thence northeasterly and parallel with Berry street 45 feet 10 inches, and thence northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street, 137½ feet, to the point of commencement.

V.—Commencing at the northeasterly corner of California and Mason streets, thence running easterly along the northerly line of California street 34 feet 4½ inches; thence northerly and parallel with Mason street 68 feet 9 inches; thence westerly and parallel with California street 34 feet 4½ inches to Mason street, and thence southerly along the easterly line of Mason street 68 feet 9 inches, to the point of commencement.

That offers and bids will be received, on such sale, on and from MONDAY, the 30th day of December, A. D. 1867, until and at 12 o'clock, M., on the 8th day of January, A. D. 1868, by said Administrator, at the said office of W. C. Burnett, Esquire, in said city and county.

Terms and Conditions of Sale: Cash, gold coin of the United States; ten per cent of the purchase money to be paid to the Administrator, on the day of sale, the balance on confirmation of sale by said Probate Court: deeds and stamps at expense of purchasers.

LUCAS PONTON DE ARCE,
Administrator of the Estate of Justin Victor Suhervielle, deceased.

W. C. BURNETT, Attorney for Administrator. Office 606 Washington street. d7-4t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF BENJAMIN OBER, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Executrix of the last will of the estate of Benjamin Ober, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executrix, at her place of business, at the law office of Messrs. Clarke & Carpentier, No. 606 Washington street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, November 14th, 1867.

JANE E. OBER,
Executrix of the last will of Benjamin Ober, deceased.
H. K. W. CLARKE, Esq., Attorney for Executrix.
nov16-23-30 dec7-14

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street, . Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ANN LEEDOM, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to FRANCIS LEEDOM, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaitiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, awarding the care and custody of her daughter Julia to plaintiff, and allowing her to resume her maiden name.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 7th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

[SEAL.] WM LOEWY, Clerk,
By OCTAVIUS BELL, Deputy Clerk.
Geo. W. Tyler, Plaintiff's Attorney. s14-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of T. O. HOPKINS, deceased.

All papers and proceedings in the above entitled matter having been transferred to this Court from the Probate Court of Alameda County by reason of the disqualification of the Judge of said Court to act, and among said papers, a petition of A. J. Lowell, Administrator of said estate, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of said estate, that the same has been audited, allowed and confirmed, that all the debts and expenses of administration have been fully paid, that a portion of said estate remains for distribution to the heirs of said deceased, and praying for a distribution to the heirs entitled.

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of the said T. O. Hopkins, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on MONDAY, the 16th day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said T. O. Hopkins, deceased, according to law :

And it is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before said hearing, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated November 13th, 1867. nov16-23 30 dec7 14

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ANTHONY GIFFORD, deceased.

Order to show cause why Order of Sale of Real Estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of Anthony Gifford, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts, expenses and charges of the administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 24th day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a weekly newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated November 22d, 1867.
T. J. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
nov23-30 dec7-14-21

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JOHN DE VRIES, deceased.

City and County of San Francisco—ss.

Notice is hereby given that B. B. McAllister, having, on the 20th day of November, 1867, filed in this Court his petition, praying to be allowed to amend the petition of Charles Ackerman, praying for an order of sale of real estate, filed herein June 12th, 1865, to establish certain facts, which are in brief, to-wit :

That the said real estate was, at the time of filing said petition for the sale thereof, almost wholly unproductive, and produced a monthly rental of eight dollars per month and no more, and for the further particulars, reference is here made to said petition on file in my office; the hearing of the same has been fixed by said Court for MONDAY, the 16th day of December, 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M. of said day, of the December term of 1867, at the Court room thereof, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco; and all persons interested in the said estate, are hereby notified then, and there to appear, and show cause, if any they have, why the said petition should not be granted.

Dated November 20th, 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By A. J. JACOBUS, Deputy Clerk.
E. B. MASTICK & T. B. BISHOP, Esqs., Attorneys for Petitioners. nov23-30 dec7-14

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—IN THE MATTER OF the Estate of EDWARD O'DONNELL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Edward O'Donnell, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said estate of the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, on the southeast corner of Sansome and California streets, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, November 14th, 1867.

CHARLES B. POLHEMUS,
Administrator of the Estate of Edward O'Donnell, deceased. nov16-5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF H. C. KORF, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of H. C. Korf, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator, at his office and place of transaction of business, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated San Francisco, November 19th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Administrator of the Estate of H. C. Korf, deceased
nov23-4t

SOLD HER MAN.

A young medical student from Michigan, who had been attending lectures in this city for some time, and who considered himself exceeding good looking and fascinating, made a deadly onset on the heart and fortune of a beautiful young lady in the same family with him. After a long siege the lady surrendered. They were married. The same afternoon the young wife sent for and exhibited to the astonished student a "beautiful" little daughter, aged three years and a half.

"Good heavens! then you are a widow?" exclaimed the student.

"Yes, my dear, and this is Amelia, my youngest; to-morrow, Augustus, James, and Reuben will arrive from the country, and then I shall see my children together once more."

The unhappy student replied not a word; his feelings were too deep for utterance. The "other little darlings" arrived. Reuben was six years old, James nine, and Augustus a saucy boy of twelve. They were delighted to hear that they had a new papa, because they could now live at home and have all the playthings they wanted. The "new papa," as soon as he could speak, remarked that Augustus and James did not much resemble Reuben and Amelia.

"Well, no," said the happy mother; "my first husband was quite a different style of man from my second—complexion, temperment, the the color of hair and eyes— all different."

This was too much. He had not only married a widow, but was her third husband, and the astonished step-father of four children.

But the fortune, tought he; that will make amends. He spoke of her fortune.

"There are my treasures," said she, in the Roman matron style, pointing to her children.

The conceit was quite out of the Michigander, who finding that he had made a complete goose of himself, retired to a farm in his own native State, where he could have a chance of making "his" boys useful, and make them sweat for the deceit practiced upon him by the mother.

ADVICE to Husbands—"How to make a home happy"—Go off somewhere.

A one-legged miller is at once a miller and hopper.

TAILOR'S revenge—giving a customer fits.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,

SANSOME STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE PROOF.

Two Hundred Rooms well Ventilated and Richly Furnished.

Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.

The Exchange Coach, with RED LIGHTS, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel FREE OF CHARGE.

The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully inform the traveling public that the

AMERICAN EXCHANGE

Is now and will continue as it ever has been, the most comfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the State. TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

F. D. RING,

MANUFACTURER OF

JEWELRY AND SILVER WARE,

No. 540 Market Street, adjoining the Hibernia Bank,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of precious Stones set in the latest style and most approved manner. Watches and Jewelry carefully repaired by experienced workmen.

G. E. T. GLOVE COMPANY,

FACTORY, 526 MERCHANT STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome,

Manufacture all kinds of OIL DRESSED AND INDIAN TANNED GLOVES for Gentlemen, Drivers, Teamsters, Miners and Lumbermen. Also, BUCKSKIN MITTENS, GOLD BAGS, PURSES, etc., in endless variety, and all sewed by hand. All work warranted. The Trade supplied. We warrant one pair of our manufacture to outlast two pairs of Eastern manufacture.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

JOHN WIELAND,

Proprietor

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street, between California and Pine.

Belden's Family Depot for Domestic Luxuries

AT this depot are, all should know,
For him who strong or faint is,
Superior grub—for home or club—
And every kind of dainties.
Westphalia hams, fresh oysters, clams,
Constituents of chowder,
Fine breakfast tea, and hominy,
And genuine curry powder.
Oil, mustard, wine, both French and Rhine,
Lard, coffee, ketchup, capers.
Crushed sugar, peas, and Switzer cheese,
And sperm and waxen tapers.
The giblets, pluck, of goose and duck,
Of woodcock, snipe and plovers,
Of partridge, too, and cockatoo—
The last express for lovers!
It seems absurb there scarce a bird—
My rhyme this somewhat ruffles—
But Belden's got in tin or pot,
The RIVER of with TRUFFLES.
Prunes, raisins, rice, preserves and spice,
Gin, whisky, rum and brandy,
Drinks made of malt, and table salt,
Tongues, sausages, and candy.
Above's not all to which I'd call
Particular attention.
Le vin d'elite, Chateau Lafitte,
And others, I would mention.
Surpassing fine Madeira wine,
St. Julien, port and sherry,
Chateaux Margaux and Veuve Clicqnot,
Old apple jack and cherry.
La Rose, Chablis, and Burgundy
Both white, and red and sightly,
Prime Hermitage of ripe old age,
Still, sparkling too and sprightly.
Sauterne, medoc, still sparkling hock,
Johannesberg, Hockheimer,
Then sirs and dames (these German names
Would craze an English rhymer!)
Just come and buy, and cease to sigh
For Egypt and its fleshpots;
Ne'er better fare did Pharoh share,
Or any other despots.

ET CETERA

No. 652 Sacramento Street.

$100 00

SAVED in a very Short Time by using

STANDARD SOAP CO.'S

WASHING POWDER.

TRY IT!

Does Not Injure the Clothes. Sold Everywhere.

NOTICE!

Not Out of Business—Only Removed.

Pioneer Steam Marble Works Com'y

HAVE REMOVED

Their Marble Mantel Warerooms from No. 546 California street to their extensive Steam Factory,

422 and 424 Jackson Street,

Where they keep constantly on hand the best and most select stock of

MARBLE MANTELS AND GRATES, HEADSTONES AND MONUMENTS.

Our Steam facilities enable us to sell better work at reduced prices than that manufactured by hand.

422 and 424 Jackson Street, Between Montgomery and Sansome.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

Wholesale & Retail Confectioners,

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the state. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

WILL & FINCK,

EXCELSIOR CUTLERS, LOCK-SMITHS & BELL-HANGERS, Importers and Manufacturers of all kinds of Cutlery. Razors, Shears, and all kinds of Cutlery, ground and repaired. Bell Hanging and Lock-smithing done in the best manner. 613 Jackson street, fourth door west of Kearny.

Country orders promptly attended to.

T. B. RODGERS,

CUTLER,

108 Leidesdorff street.

Corner California, adjoining the Pacific Insurance Office, San Francisco.

Dr. John T. Crook,

Late of the Pacific Mail service, has established himself in the practice of his profession in this city.

—OFFICE:—

S. W. corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets.

OFFICE HOURS—9 to 10 A. M.; 2 P. M.; 4 to 6 P. M.

REESE W. GLUYAS. S. E. DUTTON.

GLUYAS & DUTTON,

COUNTING HOUSE STATIONERS,

Fireman's Fund Insurance Company's Building, No. 227 Sansome Street.....San Francisco.

Pioneer Iron Shutter Works,

ESTABLISHED 1849.

CALVIN NUTTING,

Manufacturer of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS & SHUTTERS,

STEEL LINED BANK VAULTS,

Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc.

123 Bush street, between Sansome and Battery, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

Pioneer Iron Works,

CORNER OF MARKET AND FREMONT STREETS, San Francisco.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT

Manufacturers of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS, SHUTTERS, BANK VAULTS, PRISON CELLS, BALCONIES, GRATINGS, IRON FENCE, STAIRS, ETC.

BURGLAR PROOF BANK VAULT LOCKS

Constantly on had, a large assortment of Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work o all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on band and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

GALLAGHER WEED & CO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

AN FRANCISCO

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

—OF—

MACCARONI,
VERMICELLI,
PASTE, and
FARINA

First Premium in 1857—1859—1864—1865.

Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co.,

706 SANSOME STREET,

San Francisco.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT,

Wholesale Candy Manufacturers,

No. 408 CLAY STREET,

Between Sansome and Battery Sts., San Francisco.

FANCY AND COMMON CANDIES

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Sugar Toys, Figures, Animals, Birds, etc.

Are prepared to receive orders to any extent and in any desired style.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT.

Removal.

JOHN G. HODGE & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale Stationers,

Have Removed to

329 and 331 Sansome Street,

Southwest corner of Sacramento.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

Hay, Grain, and Feed of all kinds.

Hucks & Lambert's Patent AXLE GREASE.

21 Clay street and 28 Commercial street, between Drumm and East, San Francisco.

MRS. C. COOK,

FIRST PREMIUM HAIR JEWELRY,

519 Montgomery street,

Between Clay and Commercial.....SAN FRANCISCO.

AVERY'S

GREAT

NATIONAL PUMP

AND WELL.

This Pump has proved itself to be the greatest invention of the ages. Designed for DEEP WELLS, it will RAISE WATER (500) FIVE HUNDRED FEET; can sink a well 30 to 40 feet in (60) sixty minues.

This Pump is specially adapted to the wants of BREWERS and DISTILLELS, on account of the facility with which, by its use, casks in the upper stories of their warehouses can be filled from the vats below.

STATE, COUNTY, & TOWN RIGHTS FOR SALE.

Pumps Furnished at Moderate Prices, by

S. P. ROBERTS,

Agent for California and Nevada,

Care FARNSWORTH & MILNE, Plumbers,

318 Pine street, San Francisco.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.

The Hat wearing community are invited to examine the Stock at the above store, and in quality, style and price,

THEY DEFY COMPETITION!

Their Stock embraces all of the latest "novelties" and Standard Styles to be found elsewhere.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.

PRIVATE MEDICAL AID.

QUICK CURES AND MODERATE CHARGES.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY,

PRIVATE MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE,

Sacramento Street, below Montgomery, Opposite Pacific Mail Steamship Co's Office, Private Entrance on Leidesdorff Street, San Francisco.

Established expressly to afford the afflicted sound and scientific Medical Aid, in the treatment and cure of all Private and Chronic Diseases, cases of Secrecy, and all Sexual Disorders.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY returns his sincere thanks to his numerous patients for their patronage and would take this opportunity to remind them that he continues to consult at his Institute for the cure of chronic diseases of the Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Digestive and Genito-Urinary Organs, and all Private Diseases, viz: Syphilis in all its forms and stages, Seminal Weakness, and all the horrid consequences of Self-Abuse, Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Nocturnal and Diurnal Emissions, Sexual Debility, Diseases of the Back and Loins, Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, etc.; and he hopes that his long experience and successful practice will continue to insure him a share of public patronage. By his practice of many years in Europe and the United States, he is enabled to apply the most efficient and successful remedies against diseases of all kinds. He uses no mercury, charges moderate, treats his patients in a correct and honorable way, and has references of unquestionable veracity from men of known respectability and high standing in society. All parties consulting him, by letter or otherwise, will receive the best and gentlest treatment, and implicit secresy.

TO FEMALES.

When a female is in trouble, or afflicted with disease, as weakness of the back and limbs, pain in the head, dimness of sight, loss of muscular power, palpitation of the heart, irritability, nervousness, extreme urinary difficulties, derangement of digestive function, general debility, vaginitis, all disease of the womb, hysteria, sterility, and all other diseases peculiar to females, she should go or write at once to the celebrated female doctor, W. K. DOHERTY, at his Medical Institute, and consult him about her troubles and disease. Irregularities, suppressions, etc., will receive the Doctor's most particular attention. Let no false delicacy prevent, but apply immediately and save yourself from painful suffering and premature death. Ladies whose delicate health or other circumstances prevent an increase in their families, should write or call at DR. DOHERTY'S MEDICAL INSTITUTE, and they will receive every possible relief and help. The Doctor's offices, consisting of a suite of six rooms, are so arranged that he can be consulted without fear of observation.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Patients (male or female) residing in any part of the State, however distant, who may desire the opinion and advice of DR. W. K. DOHERTY on their respective cases, and who think proper to submit a written statement of such, in preference to holding a personal interview, are respectfully assured that their communications will be held most sacred. Dr. Doherty takes this opportunity of observing that all letters are duly opened and replied to by himself, and the latter as promptly as possible.

If the case be fully and candidly described, personal communication will be unnecessary, as instructions for diet, regimen, and the general treatment of the case itself, (including the remedies) will be forwarded without delay, and in such a manner as to convey no idea of the purport of the letter or parcel so transmitted.

Consultation, by letter or otherwise, FREE. Permanent cure guaranteed, or no pay. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D.
San Francisco, Cal

SPERMATORRHŒA.

DR. DOHERTY has just published an important pamphlet embodying his own views and experiences in relation to Impotence or Virility, being a short treatise on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, Nervous and Physical Debility consequent on this affection, and other diseases of the Sexual Organs

This little work contains information of the utmost value to all whether married or single, and will be sent FREE by mail on receipt of Six Cents in Postage stamps for return postage. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D., San Francisco, Cal.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor.
CARS. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
WM. STEVENSON,.....Treasurer

RE-OPENING,
MONDAY EVENING.....DECEMBER 16.

First Appearance of
MISS FANNY YOUNG,
In the New Play of
OUR VILLAGE,
As Polly Marigold;
And in the Burlesque Extravaganza of RUM-TI-FOO-ZELL.

NEW SONGS! NEW BURLESQUES!
OPERATIC GEMS! NEW DANCES!
Also, Great and Novel Sensational Effects never before attempted on any Stage on this Coast,
The Mechanical Plans for which have been purchased by Mr. Thos. Maguire, in New York, expressly for this Theatre, and will be produced by the celebrated mechanists, Messrs. Stackhouse and John Torrence. The new scenery by Mr. Burbury.
For full particulars, see Bills and "DAILY CRITIC."
Box Sheet now open.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle	$1 00	Orchestra	$1 00
Parquette	50	Upper Circle	25

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

Lessees and Managers,
MESSRS. EDWARDS, BATES & VINSON.

FOURTH WEEK OF "UNDER THE GASLIGHT."

This Afternoon and Evening....Dec. 14th,
Augustin Daly's Original and Thrilling Drama of
UNDER THE GASLIGHT!
With the popular artist,
MR. CHARLES WHEATLEIGH.
In his celebrated impersonation of Snorkey,
Assisted by
MRS. F. M. BATES,
And the Entire Strength of the Company.

This extraordinary production will be presented
☞ EVERY EVENING TILL FURTHER NOTICE. ☜
THE RAILWAY TRAIN
Has been universally pronounced to be the GREATEST EFFECT ever witnessed on the Stage.
Box Office open at 10 o'clock A. M.
N. B.—An Early Application for Seats is necessary to prevent disappointment, as they are already secured several days in advance.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.
Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats.....One Dollar
Parquet 50 cts | Gallery 25 cts
Doors open at 7 o'clock; to commence at 8.

Leslie, Raynor & Smith's Minstrels.

Temple of Music, 320 Bush Street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.

Immense Success of the Grand Combination
NEW MINSTREL TROUPE!
Endorsed by the presence of thousands of our First Families.

To-day.....at 2 o'clock,
A GRAND MINSTREL MATINEE.

To-Night the Wonderful Optical Illusion,
THE GHOST!
Vast Audiences Spell Bound and Mystified by the Powerful Effect Produced!
GREAT SENSATION!

PRICES OF ADMISSION:
Orchestra Chairs and Dress Circle.....75 Cents
Parquet.....50 cents | Upper Circle.....25 cents
Box Office open from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M., where Seats can be secured without extra charge.

GRAND OPERATIC CONCERT!

BY COLORED PERFORMERS.

W. H. BLAKE
Will give his Second GRAND OPERATIC CONCERT
At Dashaway Hall, Post street,
ON TUESDAY EVENING,....DECEMBER 17.

The following Ladies and Gentlemen have kindly volunteered their services:
Mrs. Smith, Miss Miles, Miss Phillips, Mrs. Barber, Mrs. Phelps, Miss Lester, Mrs. Prior, Miss Davis, Miss Harris, Miss Saunderson, Mrs. Brown, Miss Evans.
Messrs. Bundy, Pique, McFee, Brown, Gale, Pennington, Loney, Hamer, Brown, Starkey, Brooks, Talbot, Jackman, Carter.
Mr. ALEXANDER TAYLOR will preside at the Piano.
Conductor.....W. H. BLAKE.

BIERSTADT'S PAINTING,

'CROSSING THE PLAINS'

NOW ON EXHIBITION AT

209 Montgomery Street.

Admission,.....25 cents.
Season Tickets, $1 00.

Removal.

DR. HEALD,

DENTIST,

Has removed from Kearny street to the southwest corner of MONTGOMERY AND BUSH STREETS.
☞ Entrance on both streets. ☜

SPECIAL NOTICE!

GREAT REDUCTION IN
DRY GOODS
FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.
9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
WILL OFFER ON
Monday, - - December 2d,
THE FOLLOWING DESCRIBED GOODS
AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

1000 Foulard de Laine Dresses;
1500 Empress Cloth Dresses;
1200 Poplin Dresses;
3000 Print Dresses;
500 Pieces of French Merinos;
300 Pieces Alpacas;
Empress Plaids,
Real Scotch Plaids,
Ottoman Velours,
Winseys,
Linseys.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
RETAIL STORE,
No. 9 Montgomery street.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,
No. 107 Battery Street, near Pine Street.

BRIDAL SILKS!
RICH LACES!
EVENING SILKS!
CHRISTMAS
and NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.,
9 Montgomery Street,

Have received an unparalleled and choice assortment of the following described Goods suitable for

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS!

Bridal and Evening Silks;
Chantilly and Point Lace Shawls;
Black and Colored Silks;
Chene and Droge Silks;
Velvet and Silk Cloaks;
Indian Shawls;
Irish and French Poplins;
Point and Applique Lace Handkerchiefs;
Embroidered and Plain Handkerchiefs;
Irish and French Poplins;
Point de Venice Lace Collars;
French and English Hosiery;
Barnsley Napkins and Cloths;
Chantilly Flounces and Capes;
Cashmere Shawls;
Lama Lace Shawls;

GLOVES, BEST MAKE.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.'S
RETAL STORE:
No. 9 Montgomery street.

WHOLESALE STORE:
No. 107 Battery street.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

BOYS'

Pioneer Clothing Store,

CLOSING BUSINESS!!

CLOSING BUSINESS!!!

We offer the entire stock at the following reduced prices:

	Regular Prices.	Present Prices.
Boys' French Cass. Basket Pants	$6 00	$4 00
Boys' Velvet Cass. Ext. Sup. Pants	8 00	5 00
Boys' Cadet Union Suits	8 00	5 00
Boys' Union Sack Overcoats	8 00	5 00
Boys' Petersham Overcoats	14 00	10 00
Boys' Bl'k Castor Beaver Overcoats	16 00	12 00
Boys' Bl'k Esquimaux Beaver Overcoats	18 00	13 00
Boys' French Cloth Frock Coats	18 00	12 00
Boys' Esqtimaux Bever Suits	15 00	12 00
Boys' Fine Esquimaux Bever Suits	26 00	18 00
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants	2 50	1 50
Youths' Cassimere Kneo Pants, ex. Fine	3 00	2 25
Youths' CaSsimere Knee Pants, embr'd	4 00	3 00
Youths' Gatibaldi Fancy Suits	7 00	5 00
Youths' Geribaldi Extra Fine Suits	8 00	6 00
Youths' Embroidered Cloth Suits	10 00	5 00
Youths' Black Beaver Suits	10 00	6 00
Youths' Pilot Cloth Overcoats	10 00	7 00
Youths' Chinchilla Overcoats	10 50	8 00
Youths' Union Sack Overcosts	8 00	6 00
Youths' Black Castor Beaver Overcoats	12 00	9 00
Youths' Heavy Black Beaver Garricks	10 00	8 00
Youths' Black Cloth Overcoat (sleeves)	11 00	8 50

500 Men's Esquimaux and Castor Beaver Overcoats,
Forty per cent. less than any other store on this Coast.
100 dozen Men's Star Shirts, $1 50
Astonishing low figures.
Remember, our goods are all Custom-made, from our Broadway store in New York, thirteen years' standing. Everybody must know our goods. Retiring from business, the goods must be sold. Call at LOCKWOOD & CO'S, and examine the great reduction in prices.
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
624 Clay Street.

USEFUL AND ELEGANT
PRESENTS!

WE ARE IN RECEIPT, EX FRENCH SHIPS, "VOLTA" and "MAHELA," of LARGE ADDITIONS
TO OUR Extensive Stock
OF
CHINA, GLASSWARE,
FANCY GOODS, Etc., Etc.
Please call and examine.
HAYNES & LAWTON,
516 Sansome street, corner of Merchant.

SIXTH
INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION,
Under the auspices of the
Mechanics' Institute,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE UNDERSIGNED, ACTING UNDER authority from the Mechanics' Instituto of the city of San Francisco, take great pleasure in announcing to the Public that they have resolved upon holding an Industrial Exhibition in the month of August, 1868, on a much larger scale than was ever before attempted on this coast; and they make this early announcement of their intention, that all who may desire to participate shall have ample time for preparation.
A programme, embracing rules and regulations for the government of participants, with a list of Premiums to be awarded, etc., is receiving such earnest and careful attention as the importance of the enterprise demands, and in due season the same will be made public by circular letters widely distributed, and by advertisements in the leading journals of this coast.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:

GEO. K. GLUYAS,	J. P. O'CONNOR,
THOMAS YOUNG,	EDWARD NUNAN,
D. E. HAYES,	GARDNER ELLIOTT,
HORACE D. DUNN,	H. F. WILLIAMS,
GEO. T. BOHEN,	C. M PLUM,
H. ROSENBANS,	J. A PRITCHARD,
C. H. HARRISON,	WM. J. LEWIS,
D. R. COLEMAN,	W. W. HANSCOM,
W. C. PEABE,	JOS. MOSHEIMER,
JAMES SPIERS,	WILLIAM CORCORAN,
C. L. TILDEN,	D. A. MACDONALD,
IRVING M. SCOTT,	GEO. COFRAN.

NO HUMBUG! NO HUMBUG!

POSITIVE DISSOLUTION OF COPARTNERSHIP.

The Copartnership of the Proprietors of QUINCY HALL
CLOTHING
EMPORIUM
Will positively be dissolved on or before the
FIRST OF JANUARY, 1868,
In consequence of which, we offer our Entire Stock until then at
PRICES REGARDLESS OF COST!
Good quality of White Shirts for.....$1 50
Good Red Flannel Undershirts and Drawers for....$1 50
ALL OTHER GOODS PROPORTIONATELY LOW.
Now is your time to secure BARGAINS
AT
545, 547, & 549 Washington street.

Turnbull & Smith,
PRINTERS,
522 CLAY ST.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Good Work!—One Price!—Punctuality!

D. BRUCE,
PRINTER,
COMMERCIAL STREET OPPOSITE MINERS' RESTAURANT.

SAN FRANCISCO
FRINGE, CORD, TASSAL,
BUTTON AND TRIMMING
MANUFACTORY,
125 Kearny street, between Post and Sutter.

Every article made in the best style and at the most reasonable rates. LADIES' DRESS TRIMMINGS manufactured to order. Orders filled at the shortest notice.
Orders from the Interior promptly attended to.
M. ETTINGER,
Foreman for the past eight years at the manufactory of Mrs. D. Norcross.

MORE LIGHT FOR THE MILLION

THE EXCELSIOR
Coal Oil and Lamp Store,
NO: 10 THIRD STREET,

KEEPS CONSTANTLY ON HAND THE BEST brands of Kerosene Oil, Lampa of every description, GLOBES, WICKS, SHADES, CHIMNEYS, LANTERNS, Etc.
The public are cautioned against buying inferior Coal Oil, sold by parties as STANDARD KEROSENE, and which is frequently explosive, being a mixture of Coal Oil and Benzine. The Standard Kerosene sold at No. 10 Third street, is warranted to be free from smell, and burn longer than any other brand of Oil, and is to the consumer cheaper than less priced oils. All goods warranted to be as represented.
☞ Give us a call. JOHN B. OWENS.

SOMETHING NEW AND GOOD.
TRY IT!
PRESERVED COFFEE
PREPARED FROM
THE BEST OLD GOVERNMENT
JAVA COFFEE,

Condensed in the form of paste, by a process patented September 3d, 1867. One ounce equal to two of the best ground coffee, and suitable for any gentleman's table. Preserves its strength and flavor without deterioration, in any climate and without regard to length of time.
If you want chicory, apply it yourself. Give our Coffee a trial, and if it is not fifty per cent. cheaper and better than any other, we will return your money.
FRANK SILVER & CO.,
No. 10 Stevenson street, near First,
San Francisco.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VII., No. 31.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 21, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

Religious Weeklies; "The Lost Galleon;" The Alaska Duels—their Secret History, No. 2; A "Paper Hunt" in Japan, by Forbes Maitland; Female Suffrage, by A. G. B. Literary Gleanings: The Educational Question; The Reason Why; The Herald on "Mark Twain," etc. "Lion's Mouth:" The Educational Bear-Garden; Earthquakes, Tornadoes and Northers; The Bulletin's Puns; A Brother Snip; The Epicurean Crow, etc. Express Riding in Western Texas; The Hair Markets of Europe and Fashions in Hair Dressing; Waited for at the Downley Station; The Last Moments of Nero; Volcanic Marvels in Java; The History of the Stove.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

Earthquakes, Tornadoes and Northers.

The last issue of the California Farmer contained a remarkably cheerful article on the prevalence of storms and earthquakes this year. The editor after enumerating the different varieties of disasters which have of late visited various portions of the globe says:

While reflecting upon the subject, we are led to ask, why should the "Pacific coast" be exempt from its share of these calamities? We do not desire to awaken fears, or alarm the timid, but may we not repeat the question, and ask, why should the PACIFIC COAST be exempt?

Why should the Pacific Coast not be exempt from storms, typhoons and earthquakes, although St. Thomas has suffered? That is quite as sensible a question as the Farmer's. We are not in the same latitude as St. Thomas, and are, we should imagine sufficiently far distant from it to remain unaffected by any earthquakes which may occur there. The Farmer insists that we ought to have our turn, saying:

"Shall we not have our turn? Either by an EARTHQUAKE, TORNADO, or a terrible NORTHER, that shall sweep into our harbor and sink our shipping at the wharves, and destroy our city front!"

"Shall we not have our turn?" Well, we are not particularly anxious for it, and should not mind being overlooked. Of course the editor of the Farmer hopes such things won't occur, but then "why shouldn't they?" This inspiriting editorial closes with the following valuable advice:

"We trust such things may never occur, but are we sure they will not? While we are continually reading the records of such things elsewhere, let us do what we can to meet the exigency of our case, if our now favored territory must suffer."

Certainly, as we are not sure such things will never occur—"such things" being an EARTHQUAKE, TORNADO and a terrible NORTHER that shall sweep into our harbor and destroy our shipping at the wharves, and destroy our city front—we must "do what we can to meet the exigency of our case." That is to say we must take all the precautions possible against earthquakes, strive hard to stave off the norther and if possible prevent the arrival of the tornado. The Farmer man is evidently longing for something of the kind. He had better go down to St. Thomas and take his paper with him. You wouldn't catch him asking "why shouldn't we have the rinderpest amomg our cattle," 'why shouldn't all our horses die of blind staggers?" or "why shouldn't the Sacramento valley be swept by another flood." That would not suit his readers at all. The people in the interior are not half so much alarmed at reading about earthquakes, or tornadoes, or nortbers, which would sweep away the city front of San Francisco, as by a description of a new disease among the chickens, or the prevalence of smut in oats. That bucolic old croaker had better employ himself in hunting up gigantic potatoes and writing editorials on them, than in asking impertinent questions as to why San Francisco shouldn't be tetotally smashed up.

The Bulletin's Puns.

Puns don't look well in the editorals of a dignified daily paper. We don't object to the Bulletin publishing a sprightly and slightly facetious editoral occasionally, but we must protest against its becoming so utterly lost to all feelings of sense, decency and respect for the English language, as to commence an editorial in the manner it did on Wednesday:

"The Legislature is not happy thus far in its essays towards economy, which are all on the principle of saving at the spigot and losing at the bung—literally a bungling policy."

D'ye see? "Losing at the bung—literally a bung-ling policy. Funny isn't it? The man who wrote that would ask you whether your pipe was "a meerschaum or a meer sham," would observe that he meant to "throw some light on the subject," when he lit the gas, would call chicken stealing "a foul proceeding" would do anything! We are shocked and grieved. In the Alta we are prepared to see this sort of thing, but we expected better things of the Bulletin.

The Educational Bear-Garden.

In spite of our publishing last week a verse of Dr. Watts' beautiful hymn, with reference to dogs delighting in barking and biting, and bears growling and fighting, for the express benefit of the members of the Board of Education, they will not behave themselves. At the last meeting of the Educational bears, while the subject of the nomination of teachers was being discussed, the following scene took place. We take the Bulletin's report:

Dr. Ayer—All we desire is that the ladies shall be treated respectfully.

Mr. Cobb—(Very excitedly and close to Dr. A.'s face)—I call the gentleman to order, sir. Doctor Ayer, you shall not stand here and charge me with treating ladies with disrespect. No gentleman, sir, treats them with more respect than I do. You can't come any of your suave over me, sir.

Chairman—Order! Order, gentlemen!

Dr. Ayer—I am surprised, Mr. President, that the learned and very affable gentleman from the Fourth should express himself with such warmth about language which did not mean any discourtesy to him.

This was very wrong of Mr. Cobb, very wrong indeed, to tell Dr Ayer that he couldn't come any of his suave over him. Mr. Cobb has evidently a great dislike to "suave," but he should not have accused Dr. Ayer of trying to come his suave over him. No one can doubt for a minute that Mr. Cobb is the very pink of politeness, and that be could never be guilty of treating ladies with disrespect. He has of course an unlimited supply of "suave" for them. We are sorry that he should have spoken "excitedly and close to Dr. A.'s face;" there is a way of "saying a thing to a man's face" without going close to it. We rejoice to find that in the end Dr Ayer succeeded in coming his "suave" over Mr. Cobb. He called him "the learned and very affable gentleman from the Fourth," and then Mr. Cobb said, "I am satisfied." We do trust that order will be kept in the Board of Education, and that no fighting will be allowed during school hours.

A Brother Snip.

A Washington letter chronicles the visit to the White House of James Verner, a delegate from the striking tailors of London, who is on a visit to this country to raise funds for the relief of the suffering strikers. The President gave him $50, besides favoring him with the old Joe Miller, which relates the origin of the noted saying: "It takes nine tailors to make a man." This is a pleasant anecdote. It is charming to find that Andrew Johnson does not forget the days when he was engaged on piece-work less important, and far easier than the peace work which he is at present attempting to put through. We wonder if Andrew Johnson was ever on a strike. If he ever was we should fancy his employer had to give in to his obstinate endurance. It was rather a good idea for James Verner, who has come to this country on a begging mission, to drop in at the White House to see a brother snip. At any rate be made $50 by the operation. As it takes nine tailors to make a man the funds collected should go a long way towards relieving the distress of the strikers, but we fear that the ninth part of a man has a full sized appetite. Of course the President having subscribed $50 for the tailors, the people of the United States generally, and the tailors of the United States in particular will follow his example, and support these ill-used artistes in their opposition to the tyranny of capital. When the aristocracy of England find their clothes beginning to look seedy, the Prince of Wales has to walk about in a coat out at elbows, and the city magnates are forced to have their old clothes turned, cleaned and repaired; then the master tailors will be forced to come to their senses and submit to the demands of their workmen, the cheerful goose will once more hiss over the jet black cloth, the cabbage will again flourish luxuriantly, and the people of England who are now in danger of being reduced to nothing to wear will again be clothed. All honor to Andrew Johnson, who did not turn a deaf ear to the appeal of brother snips in distress!

The Epicurean Crow.

The editor of the Critic appears to be deeply versed in ornithology. In a paragraph treating of the difference between dining and feeding, the most important moral of which appears to be that George, of the Occidental Restaurant on Washington street, caters to the taste of epicures, he draws a distinction between the manner in which the cultivated man and the beast eats. He says:

The beast, as a rule, (there are some exceptions, the crow, for instance, is an epicure, and gets all the enjoyment possible out of eating,) fills its stomach as speedily as possible, on the food which it can obtain readily, and is satisfied.

The editor of the Critic may know all about the habits of crows, but we must take exception to his calling a crow a beast. A crow isn't a beast, it is a bird. What proof he can bring of the epicurean tastes of the crow we cannot imagine. Crows seem to be very sociable over their dinner, and to indulge in a good deal of social conversation, but we never knew that they were very particular in choosing their food. We are sure that a carrion crow cannot be considered an epicure, his being a hippophagist gives him no claim to the title of gourmet, and he generally prefers his horse flesh in a terribly "high" condition. If the editor of the Critic insists on the crow being considered an epicure, either he should—or make the crow—produce cause.

The County for Sale.

Thomas Young, late County Recorder, and Jos. S. Paxson have gone into the business of selling real estate, and from the number of lots which they advertise for sale in one day's issue of the Call, we should fancy if they continue at the same rate it will not be long before they have sold the whole county. We don't see that they have any right to do this just because one of them happens to have been County Recorder, and the other County Treasurer.

EXPRESS RIDING IN WESTERN TEXAS.

DICK CARTER'S RIDE.

"WHO'LL ride this express to-night? A hundred dollars to any man who'll volunteer to ride this express!" shouted Captain Walker; and received no response.

Captain Walker had been detailed by General Baylor, (Confederate service,) to watch the lower parts of the Rio Grande del Norte, and report upon Federal movements, while he himself endeavored to seize Melissa and the Union forts some two hundred miles above. Very irregular communication had been maintained by the two commanders for the expanse of country to be traversed by express riders was barren of all supplies, and little better than an inhospitable prairie, over which bands of savage Indians and outlaws roamed at will; so that the prospect was not very pleasing or encouraging to anyone sufficiently bold and patriotic to proffer their services for the undertaking. His irregularly-armed and indifferently-mounted men, at the moment at which he spoke, were gathered in groups upon a knoll, intently watching the approach of a single horseman, who was galloping from the north-west at the top of his speed, while clouds of dust ascended in his wake at every stride. The rider was evidently in hot haste, and although the whole prairie was minutely scanned for Indians, who, it was supposed, might be chasing him, not a Comanche was visible in any direction. Though yet some distance away, his haste and gestures gave token that the news he brought was of vital importance. Hence it was that, knowing the necessity for a speedy answer to his commander, Walker shouted out again and again—

"Who'll ride the return express? Two hundred dollars for a volunteer to ride the express."

He received no response from his men. All laughed at the idea of his tempting any one for the miserable sum offered, (Confederate currency?) particularly as the distance was great, and the dangers many.

His dirty, leather-trowsered men for the most part saddled their horses, and galloped forth to meet the courier approaching, to ascertain the news.

"Hallo, Dick!" shouted one.

"What news, comrade?" asked another.

"Where's Baylor and Canby? Have they had a fight yet?"

"How far have you come?"

"How's the Indians?"

Such were the questions put to the courier, who, more dead than alive, endeavored to push through the crowd of excited troopers questioing and encircling him.

He said nothing, but, looking deadly pale, and excited, spurred up his jaded animal into a maddening gallop, and plunged forward to the camp fires, smoking in a small copse by the side of two wells. Without heeding the many questions put to him by the crowd of excited soldiers galloping, shouting, and yelling beside him, like so many wild men, he raced into camp, and delivered his letters to Captain Walker who sat watching a pot of sweet potatoes boiling—the only procurable dish he had enjoyed for many weeks.

"Why, Dick, you look tired, my boy. How far have you come to-day? Sixty miles! Not a very bad ride that, either; and it is fully two hours of sun yet. Why, this letter is spattered with blood, Dick! How comes that? Met the Indians, eh? Well, by Jove! you seem to have had a narrow escape, my boy. Here, lad, help yourself to my share of supper. And, Lopez, you hitch out his horse to grass. Why, that ain't your own horse! An Indian pony, eh? So they killed yours! Rather tight work that, boys, ain't it?

And with that Captain Walker left his troopers, and, sitting alone under a distant tree, was soon lost in reading the bloodstained letter.

Dick, the courier, had scarcely dismounted beside the camp fire, ere he fell into a profound sleep, perfectly overcome with exhaustion and excitement. Perceiving blood upon his hands, and several shot-holes through his leathern jacket and trowsers, kind troopers, in their rough, half-civilized manner, opened his garments, and discovered that he had received a flesh-wound in the shoulder from rifle shot, and another in the left hand. Neither of them were of a dangerous character, yet he had evidently bled profusely.

While sleeping, they washed his hurts, and, in turning him over, found an arrow had penetrated the leather, and was within an inch of his side. The weapon was deeply dyed with poison, and had it only scratched his flesh must have caused certain death. While performing these kind offices for their unconscious comrade, many were joking about the pleasures of express riding, and calculating the chances of this or that one being obliged to "run" the return journey. As evening advanced, horses were driven in nearer to camp, and so "staked out" that in case of any alarm each man might saddle and mount without confusion in the dark.

When Dick was rested after an hour or two, and had refreshed himself with whatever the camp afforded, he began to recite the adventures of his two hundred miles' journey across the prairie; while Captain Walker, with a large flat stone for a desk, was sitting with his lieutenants around their own fire, writing his dispatch to General Baylor in pencil, on the fly-leaf of an old bible.

"Well, yon see, boys, I don't wish to scare anyone; but whoever has to ride the next express must be a man, out and out, for he'll have to fight his way through, and no mistake, for the Federals have all the Indians under their pay, and they are cutting up all kinds o' shines over the whole country as they never did before, and have lots of powder and shot. You see, General Baylor thought that old Canby had but one thousand men in New Mexico, at Melissa and Fort Craig, or he would not have come five hundred miles to attack him with our regiment of twelve hundred. But instead of Canby having a thousand he had five!

"I don't mean to say that? Yes, but I do, though, and what is more, there's going to be some very tall fighting, or some very fast running, done by somebody, and no two ways about it, gentlemen, and very shortly, too. And just look how the case stands. General Jack Baylor starts out from San Antonio (Texas) with twelve hundred men for El Paso, Arizona, to take possession of the territory, and hold it for the South. He travels more than seven hundred miles of sandy prairie, with few wagons, and very little of supplies. Nothing could be bought on the route. If we had all the gold in California, nought was to be met with but wild, throat-cutting Comanches, and dried prairie grass.

"When we could not find water we had to dig for it; and after several weeks of pulling and hauling we all arrived at El Passo, and looked around.

"Instead of finding the territory vacated by the Federals, Baylor discovers that they have five times more men than he has; but this was not known until he had left El Paso, and gone several hundred miles up the Colorado. Not only this, but he also ascertained that they are well fortified and provisioned in several forts on the south bank, and endeavoring to surround him. This is exactly how the case stands; and here am I, after four days' ride, sent to call you all together to go up and help him out of the scrape! So, as I said before, boys, it's my idea that we shall all have to do some very lofty fighting, or some very swift running, before long."

"My wounds, eh? Oh, they are easily explained. When I set out, they told me that the Indians were pretty thick all over, but I've seen so much of the redskins I didn't mind it much. I laid by all day, and traveled, as usual, at night. The first journey I made fifty miles, and, as the sun was coming up fast, I hid in a large bunch of cactus, and staked my horse to grass among the overgrown chaperalle near it. There was an old well hard by, and I wasn't at all pleased to find Indian trails round it. None on 'em could be more nor two days old.

"'They are a hunting party,' I thought, 'after buffalo,' but was never more mistaken in my life.

"As I cautiously looked about over the prairie, before lying down to sleep, It struck me I could see smoke about five miles away. So I got up into a tree, and saw what appeared to be a cabin on fire.

"'There's no cabins about these parts,' I thought; but after awhile I remembered I couldn't be far from the trail of the El Paso mail stage route, which ran from California through El Paso, San Antonio, and on to the Mississippi river.

"I looked and looked again, and felt certain that it was the mail station on fire, for with my glass I could plainly see a drove of mules running about the prairie, chased by what appeared to be Indians.

"I was not long kept in doubt as to who they were, for to my astonishment I saw about two dozen of them galloping towards me, driving some fifty head of horses and mules. I knew they were coming to the well, and if they caught me I was a dead man, so I immediately unhitched my horse and led him away some distance through the high grass, and secreted myself.

"At night I stole out cautiously, and one of the first things I met was a mail stage broken and upset in the road. Boots, caps, papers, and clothes were scattered about, and from the down-trodden appearance of the grass I felt certain there had been a desperate fight. In the distance I saw camp fires, and was certain they were Comanches. I felt benumbed to all thoughts of danger, and resolved to approach and see what they were about, let the cost be what it would

"They were camped under a rise in the plain, and the red devils were dancing round some eight or ten bodies of dead white men! They had evidently made a capture of whisky somewhere, for most of them were reeling and drunk.

"There were no doubts now about the matter. They had waylaid the mail party, and butchered them, and must have afterwards proceeded a few miles, and attacked the mail station. As it was built in the form of a square, and well fortified with timber, they found much difficulty in getting in; but, as the wind was blowing freshly, they set fire to it, and soon drove out the occupants. (We afterwards learned some four or five escaped on horseback; but three were murdered and consumed in the flames. They had been quick about their work, however, for, although the fire burned briskly, they managed to secure many things, and, among others, three barrels of whisky, with which they had made themselves drunk.)

"I don't know what possessed me at the moment. I knew that curiosity was leading me into great danger, but yet I lingered near the encampment, listening to their songs, and grinding my teeth with rage.

"'I'll have a shot,' I said, 'if it costs me my life.'

"So, mounting my horse, I approached as near as I dare, and let fly at the tallest of them all. I saw him drop, and, spurring my horse, was soon lost in the darkness among the high grass.

"The redskins were on their feet in an instant; but, as most of their horses had gone on with the first party, few of them could mount. I saw them flying about in all directions, looking for my trail; but, although the flicker of their camp fires gave me a good view of them, it was impossible for them to discover me in the darkness; so, perceiving the coast to be clear, I continued my journey somewhat satisfied, guiding myself for the most part by the stars.

"I don't know how far I traveled; but, when the sun rose, I was very tired, and my poor horse trembled with exhaustion. I searched for water in all directions, but couldn't find a drop. I would have given my right hand for water—not so much for myself as for the poor animal which had carried me so well. Not a pint could be found anywhere. The grass was wet from heavy dews, however, and that in some sort quenched his thirst. I was soon sound asleep, and dreaming of horrible things, I awoke to hear a party of Indians yelling in the distance. They had discovered my 'trail,' and were after me. If you ever saw a fellow saddle and mount in a hurry, you should have seen me do it on that occasion! I was up and off in a moment!

"Directly they saw me they gave a loud yell, and commenced the chase. Shot after shot went whistling past my head, and a shower of arrows fell around me. I dug spurs deeply into the sides of my poor horse, and he darted off like a rocket. I scarcely knew in what direction I was going, but judged that I couldn't be far off my true course; so I flogged, and whipped, and spurred, until I seemed to fly over the prairies. After riding hard for about ten miles, my horse began to weaken.

"'It is all over with Dick, now,' I thought. My revolvers were loaded and untouched, and I still had one full load in my double-barreled shot gun. 'I'll make some of 'em tumble yet before I go,' I said, 'if they only come close enough.'

I fired two shots, and disabled a couple of the red rascals; yet there were still four of them left in chase, and one, being splendidly mounted, was rapidly gaining upon me.

"'It is you or I for it,' I thought, whipping and spurring like a madman.

"After a three or four mile ride, he was alone in the pursuit, and had wounded me in the shoulder. My poor horse had two arrows in him, while two more had stuck in my saddle-bow, but luckily escaped me. My poor animal was failing at every stride, and the Indian, knowing me to be wounded, and desirous of taking me alive, rode up to throw a lasso over my head; but just as the coil was spinning through the air, I suddenly halted, and drove a bullet through his skull. My horse fell under me; but, quick as thought, I seized the Indian mustang, and in two minutes was flying like the wind on my newly-acquired half-wild animal.

"I was never so excited in my life. It seemed as if I had lived a full century during that last chase; but it was a long time before I returned, as it were, to consciousness, for my wound bled freely, and it was death to halt, as I felt certain the red devils would only be more exasperated, and sure to follow.

"My mustang, however, seemed to be as much excited as myself, for he maintained his gallop for several hours, and carried me along at a rapid rate. I saw he had not been half trained, and was perfectly young, fiery, and fresh. So, therefore, I determined to push him hard until far in the night, for my life depended upon his fleetness.

"I had the good fortune to fall in with no more redskins on the following day; but, from frequent recent trails visible on my whole route, I felt certain that they could not be far off; so that the nearer I approached your camp, the more carefully I picked my way.

"Last night I was rather excited, it must be confessed, for I knew the remaining distance could not be more than sixty miles; but I also knew that parties of them would certainly be found prowling round you. In fact, I was so excited for once in my life that I could not sleep, but lay awake, listening for sounds, and looking for camp fires. Towards early morning, when the mustang had grassed sufficiently, I mounted again, and started off on the last stage. All progressed well with me until within twenty miles of camp, and then I fell in again with a small party returning from a hunt, and was obliged to fight my way through them as best I could.

"One shot hit me in the hand, and several arrows stuck in my jacket; but beyond that I received little in return for two capital shots which I gave them, for each load brought one of them down, and a pretty noisy howling they made over it, you may be sure. Here I am once again, boys, and pretty well tired out; but if there's to be any more express riding done for a month or two, I hope Captain Walker and all of you will be kind enough to count me out, and let me take a back seat."

—:-o-:—

BILL RODNEY'S RIDE.

When Dick had concluded his narrative, there was a general laugh among the sunburnt, dirty, leather-dressed troopers at his escapes and mishaps, and many cried out, derisively—

"Who'll ride this express? Two hundred dollars to any man who volunteers to ride this return express!"

"Well, laugh as you please, boys," said Captain Walker, approaching the noisiest of the circles, who, squatted around their fires, were smoking and laughing; "laugh as you please, my lads. The dispatch is ready, and some one must ride with it. I don't like detailing men for such duty. I would rather have one volunteer than a hundred of any other sort. I'll give two hundred dollars to any volunteer. Who goes?"

"Let us toss up for it," said some.

"No, make a lottery of it," cried another. "Whoever gets a blank must go."

"Detail a man, captain," proposed a third, "and that will settle the matter. It is nothing but regular duty, and no one can refuse."

"Oh, my horse is lame," said one, "or else I'd ride it without asking."

"Yes, and mine is so weak he couldn't go twenty miles," added another.

"Oh, yes, grumble away, boys. Don't any of you go. Let the general get surrounded and cut up. I suppose you don't think it matters much. Some of you fellows have talked about the Indians so much of late that I thought you would not desire better sport than to meet a few lodges of them. But when the time comes, I take particular notice most of you always have lame horses, or something of that kind, when any express has to be ridden."

This was said by Bill Rodney, and did not please his companions much, who showed displeasure at his remarks by growling, and asking what business it was of his what they said or did.

"Well, I'll tell you what I'll do," continued the first speaker rising from the fire. "Every one knows that my horse has been lame for a month; but, if Captain Walker will lend me his mare, I'll ride the express, and start now."

"Well done, Rodney," said Walker, slapping him on the back. "The thing must be done, you know, my boy, and you're welcome to ride my mare. She'll carry you as far and as fast as anything in the country; and, as you ride light, I think you'll manage to pull through the trip in quick time, and without injury—at least, I hope so."

Walker's mare was the best-conditioned and most powerful animal in camp, and could have carried two such wiry, lathy fellows as young Rodney.

Most of the troopers, like inhabitants of distant settlements, were attired as Mexicans—that is to say, they wore leather jackets and trowsers, the latter slit from hip to heel, and profusely decorated with double rows of buttons down the sides, so that when riding in warm weather they could loosen those garments and cool themselves. In truth, any attire but such as was made with leather would not have withstood the wear and tear of one week.

Putting a plug of tobacco in one pocket, and a few matches in another, young Rodney filled his gourd with water, and stuffing two or three corn cakes in his harvesack, was ready for the journey in five minutes. His rifles and revolvers were the main articles of curiosity, and these he cocked, and primed, and oiled until perfectly satisfied of their efficiency and trustworthiness.

Coiling a lariet over the high bow of his Spanish saddle, and throwing a blanket behind him, he was mounted and off before half the men in camp were aware of his purpose or destination, saying, as he galloped away—

"If I don't get through, captain, you'll know what's happened."

"I hope he'll get through safe," said Dick, as Rodney galloped forth into the darkness, "for I can tell you, boys it's no joke to ride an express in these squally times."

Some of the troopers accompanied him a short distance, and returned. The night was dark, we soon lost the sounds of his horse's hoofs as he bounded forward on his perilous journey.

In a few days after Rodney's departure, Walker's command began their march to join Baylor. Indians frequently seen upon the route were timorous, and would not approach within less distance than a mile, for, although very demonstrative and threatening, they were loth to bring on an engagement, fully aware that a few bundred of them would be useless in any encounter with a body of disciplined, hardy, and well-mounted men.

Little indeed occurred on the journey to relieve the troopers of monotony. Some left the line of march to shoot a buffalo or two ; but were always careful to rejoin the command before sunset, for fear of being butchered by prowling bands of Comanches, who always hung upon the flanks of the regiment. Great care was also necessary during night to prevent the rascals from stampeding or running off the horses for they were so full of tricks and disguises that oftentimes they successfully approached within a few bundred yards of the encampment for purposes of theft or murder. Yet, with all their tricks and schemes, they could not succeed in stealing a single horse, and never dared to fire, for our men would have been up and upon them in a moment. On one occasion indeed, they set fire to the prairie at different points ; but the wind, blowing strongly in one direction, saved us without trouble.

It was resolved by the troopers to give chase to the rascals on a fitting opportunity ; but the wild sons of the desert were by far too nimble and fleet afoot to be overtaken or punished. One of their chiefs, more daring than the rest, rode within rifle distance, but was quickly tumbled over by an accurate shot. His comrades endeavored to carry off the body, but did not succeed. Upon his person were found many things which had evidently belonged to strangers ; and on close examination, a jacket, proved to be the property of the express rider, Rodney. There were several rents in the sleeves, as if made by rifle shot, and the opinion generally prevailed that the poor fellow had been caught, overpowered and murdered. These surmises were confirmed, for two days subsequently the command halted at a deserted Indian camp, where his sombrero and other articles were found torn up into shreds ! This discovery only hightened the fury of Walker's men, and many schemes were planned and devised for repaying the Comanches with tenfold vengeance ; but those crafty gentlemen maintained a respectful distance, and from unknown causes, suddenly disappeared altogether from the line of march.

As Walker approached Melissa, he was met by several outriders, urging him to push forward rapidly. And in answer to inquiries, it proved that Rodner had not been taken by the Indians ; but, as the outriders said, was in Baylor's camp, and "sound as a trout." In a day or two that young scapegrace appeared, and explained matters thus :

"When I had been ten hours out from your camp, I became aware that Comanches were in the neighborhood, for their fires were still smouldering, and gave token that they could not be many miles away.

"The captain's mare was so powerful and fresh that she bounded along at a glorious pace, and, when night had far advanced, I began to congratulate myself upon having escaped the red fiends ; but, as morning broke, I descried far off in the prairie large numbers of horses, which was more than enough to convince me that I had unfortunately overtaken a party of cut-throats, and was in no good humor at the prospect before me. As no time was to be lost, I rode into very high grass, hobbled the mare by a fore and hind foot, and then threw her upon her side. She could not move. Taking off my jacket, sombrero, and riding shirt, I got some moist red clay, and rubbed it on my face, arms, and body, pulled my hair about in Indian style, and within a short time looked as much like a Comanche as could be.

"The sharp-eyed rascals had discovered my trail, and were hunting for me. I put my sombrero and jacket on a cactus bush, in such a manner that at a distance they would have been taken for a living person standing there. I loosened the mare and kept well in the chapparal, so that I had gone a long distance from the cactus tree ere any one of them would go near it.

"They approached the spot very cautiously, and found my saddle. They gave a wild yell, and making sure I was there also, began to 'pop' away at my poor jacket until it shook again. They seemed loth to approach, and, while hesitating, I mounted my saddleless mare, and appeared on their outskirts, screaming and jabbering as finely as any Comanche that ever breathed. I managed to get a considerable distance from them ere myself or the deception was discovered ; but finding the ruse, they gave chase in fine style, and felt convinced I was some wandering Crow or Blackfoot—two tribes they held in the most desperate enmity.

"Walker's horse was equal to the occasion, however, and outraced them in gallant style. I rode hard all day, as you may suppose, and, when night came on, began to feel chilly and benumbed with the heavy dews. As fortune would have it, I had a few matches, and resolved, at all hazards, to light a fire, for I was now approaching the river, and the woods became thicker at every mile.

"I had scarcely lit the fire, and was warming myself comfortably in a hollow, when I heard the sound of approaching animals, and, before I could decide upon any line of action or deception, a lasso was thrown over my neck, and I began to suffocate.

"'Caught at last,' I thought, and had fleet, hazy, flashing visions of home, parents, and sweetheart, when I was suddenly and violently jerked, and lost all further consciousness.

"When I recovered sensibility. I found myself lying beside a comfortable camp fire, and was well wrapped up in blankets. One of the party was bathing my temples, and holding my head in his lap, attending to me as gently and affectionately as ever woman could do.

"'Oh, he'll come round ag'in, Limpey,' said a gruff voice. 'It were a pretty close shave, though, warn't it? Who'd a thought of finding young Rod out here fixed up like a darned Comanche ?

"'Well, its lucky he halloed in time,' said Limpey, in reply, 'or he'd bin a dead horse by this time, but directly I hearn him holler, I know'd it warn't no Injun, for they cant jabber English yet awhile.'

"When I opened my eyes I endeavored to speak, but the violent tug of the lasso had benumbed and hurt the muscles of my throat, so that I had to make signs in order to be understood, and was scarcely able to whisper. I was evidently in the hands of friends, and knew their voices, so that when I crawled near the fire I recognized the features of an old friend named Brown, alias Limpey Brown, from the fact of his having been lamed in his youth in an Indian border fight.

"As well as I could ascertain from the old man Brown and his party of five, it appeared that the Indians, taking advantage of all the young men being away in the army, had been in the habit of making frequent incursions among the border settlements, had run off all the horses, and oftentimes destroyed every dwelling in their path. Old Brown, or Lame Bear, as the Indians called him, had been frequently visited, and at last had come to the resolution of gathering his neighbors and giving chase. He was now out after a party who had run off his stock, and was waiting for them at one of the fords of the river over which they were necessitated to pass. When the moon had risen over the prairie they were watching for Indians, and perceiving an object approaching lay in ambush, and judging from my appearance that I must certainly be a Comanche, had entrapped and almost strangled me ere the mistake was discovered. Had I not shouted at the moment I did, in an agony of despair, I should have been lifeless. Another tug of the lasso would have finished me for a certainty.

When Walker's command had formed a junction with General Baylor, they marched upon Melissa, and their forces being magnified by Federal spies, the Union troops in Fort Craig evacuated the place, in hopes of joining other forces higher up the river ; but they were so harassed in their retreat by the Confederates, that they broke into a panic, and dispersed in various directions, losing all their material, guns, and several hundred prisoners. In truth, Baylor's commaud, though small, fought the enemy in detail, and so effectually routed them that the whole territory of Arizona was quickly vacated, and for the time fell into the hands of southern leaders.

T. C.

THE HISTORY OF THE STOVE.

FOR an article of such general use, so indispensible in every household, it is astonishing how brief has been the history of stoves. With all of its multiplicity of forms, patterns, and varieties, it is a creation of the present age—a modern convenience—which our grandfathers knew naught of. The Troy (N. Y.) Times thus relates the history of stoves in general :

Stoves are comparatively of recent general use, though they were in this country as early as 1790. In that year a Mr. Pettibone, of Philadelphia, was granted a patent for a stove, which was claimed to be capable of warming houses by pure heated air. Pettibone's stove was soon after put up in the almshouse at Philadelphia, and Drs. James and Chapman, and several members of Congress, gave testimonials of its utility for warming and ventilating churches, courts of justice, hospitals, manufactories, etc. This was probably the first attempt to use stoves, at least in this country. From this time forward for many years, the stove was confined to public places, its use for warming private houses, or for cooking purposes not having been thought of. The long box stove, capable of taking three feet wood, was the only stove our ancestors knew anything about.

Cooking stoves have come in use within the last few years. The first advance toward a cooking stove was making the Franklin stove with an oven : and the first that deserves the name of cooking stove was an oblong affair, having an oven running the whole length, the door of which was in front and directly over the door for supplying fuel, and having also a boiler hole and a boiler on the back part of the top near the pipe. Then a stove similar in arrangement, with swelling or eliptical sides, was made, generally called the nine-plate stove. About the year 1812 cooking stoves were made at Hudson from patterns made by a Mr. Hoxie, who was the first to elevate the fire-box above the bottom. This improvement was patented, and was sustained in suits against parties who in any way elevated fire from the bottom. In Hoxie's cooking stove the fire was made above and upon the oven, and he was the first who made any stove in which the flame was made to descend from the top to the bottom of the oven. In 1815, William T. James, of Lansingburg, afterward of Troy, made the stove known as the "James' Stove," which not only continued a leading cooking stove for nearly a quarter of a century, but may yet be seen on board of small eastern coasting vessels, where, being cheap and durable, it supplies the place of a caboose. James' stove is probably better known as the "Saddle-bags Stove."

The first heating of houses by flues, from anthracite coal, was accomplished by Professor Johnson, of Philadelphia about 1825. The Professor succeeded in heating a large house by means of a furnace in a cellar, surrounded by an air chamber of brick work, whence the gaseous products of the combustion were carried through the building, passing through cylindrical drums, on the first and third floors, and out at the top. This mode of warming buildings rapidly grew into favor as our people came to be well acquainted with coal.

The ample supply of wood in the country was for many years in the way of the successful introduction of stoves. This fuel was at every man's door, and houses were all supplied with ample fire places. The cost for preparing wood for stoves was an item which quite offset any economic advantages they had otherwise. And, besides, the people were loth to give up the cheerful fire-place for "a little black box in the corner," as the stove was disparagingly called. Even now, the West uses few stoves compared with the East, and Eastern manufacturers make stoves adjusted to wood for the Western market, while those for the market of the Central and Middle States are nearly all coal burners.

ARE OUR FEET PROPERLY CLOTHED?

IT is somewhat surprising that, with all our boasted improvements, we have not as yet produced a proper covering for the feet. Barbarous people, if their climate admits, go with bare feet, or wear sandals, covering only the sole of the foot. We, however, encase the whole foot, and a portion of the leg, in a material almost impervious to air and moisture, and generally uncomfortably hard and rigid. The color and polish of our boots are directly calculated to attract the sun's rays ; and the enamel on patent leather, and the blacking on ordinary calf-skin, tends to harden and soldify the substance, closing the pores and making air tight cases for a portion of the body which exudes more perspiration than any other, and is subjected to greater strain.

Our boots in summer parboil our feet in a warm bath, and in winter freeze them in an icy envelope. It is doubtful if wet feet are, in themselves, very conductive to disease, some medical men to the contrary notwithstanding ; but cramped confinement of the feet, in an icy cold envelope, generated by perspiration and chilled by the eternal atmosphere, thus shutting the internal atmosphere, thus shutting the imprisoned feet almost air-tight, is as unhealthy as it is uncomfortable.

For hot weather there is hardly any shoe so agreeable as that introduced within the past three or four years, known as the army shoe, and extensively used by base-ball players. It is of heavy canvass and unblacked leather. It is cool and remarkably easy to the feet. The texture of the canvass allows the escape of the perspiration, and the color of the shoe does not attract the heat of the sun.

It would seem that the plan of covering other portions of our bodies with material pervious to air might advantageously be extended to our feet. There is no natural reason why our feet should be so much less sensitive than our hands. They become indurated and deprived of their natural activity by long, close confinement. The people of warm climates, who use their toes as we do our fingers, and the barefooted school boy, who picks up and throws pebbles with his feet, show that the foot of the civilized adult in our climate is a much abused member.

A more flexible and porous material for our boots and shoes might save us from many of those terrible annoyances, which, in the form of corns and bunions, make our pilgrimage one of pain.

GOOD FAMILY ADVICE.—Let all troublesome topics be avoided at meals. Do not dwell upon the difficulties of business, the delinquencies of domestics, or discipline the children at the dinner table, for a cheerful spirit not only gives relish for food, but a good start at digesting the same.

FRIENDSHIP.—The friendship of an artful man is mere self-interest ; you will get nothing by it.

TO-MORROW.—The day when misers give, when idlers work, and when sinners reform.

IDLENESS is like the nightmare—the moment you begin to stir yourself you shake it off.

LITERARY GLEANINGS.

THE EDUCATIONAL QUESTION.

A NUMBER of rather elaborate works have recently appeared having a bearing upon the question of the relative claims of positive science and of literature for the leading position in the academic curriculum of our American colleges. Nevertheless, but little new light has been shed upon the question. Speaking of the branches of study pursued in our colleges in their purely utilitarian aspect, a writer in the New York Round Table says:

"The constant recurrence of the word "use" and "practical" suggests a query. How if the advocates of literature were to cary the war into Africa and boldly deny that the positive scieoces are of much practical value to the majority of men? It seems a bold paradox, yet we are inclined to think that a skillful pleader might make something of the case. Most persons reading for the first time George Cornwall Lewis's Astronomy of the Ancients must have been startled at coming upon his statement that modern discoveries in this science have been of no immediate practical benefit; even our calendar was regulated by men who believed in Ptolemy. But it is easier to be surprised at the assertion than to confute it. Take the recent discovery of the sun's material by means of the spectral liues: it evokes all manner of curious emotions; yet what practical inference can we deduce from it? But it is different with other sciences—chemistry, for instance. In the aggregate, yes; but even here the results of science to society are one thing, the value of scientific knowledge to individuals (not experts or professionals) quite another. How is an ordinary merchant or shopkeeper or lawyer or clergyman helped in his daily business by knowing that common salt is muriate of soda, that the red rust of iron is a deutoxide: that water is composed of two gases? To be sure if a man ventures to talk of such things without knowing anything about them, he is likely to make himself ridiculous. There is a striking instance of this in Bastiat's Economic Sophisms. He supposed hydrogen to be an ingredient of air, and turned one of his illustrations accordingly—a blunder which, oddly enough, some of his American translators have failed to correct, while his English adapters have noticed it. But this merely shows that men should not draw illustrations from subjects with which they are not thoroughly conversant. In a majority of cases the effect produced by the acquisition and exercise of scientific knowledge is a feeling of wonder and pleasure combined, not specifically differing from that produced by the acquisition and exercise of literary knowledge. A tourist of a philologic turn, descending the Alps into Italy for the first time, sees on a sign Asta di Vino. That word asta carries him back to the days of old Rome, when the captured booty was sold under the spear (hastano), the origin of our auction red flag. His scientific companion may derive equal satisfaction from examining the material of an old wall or the plants which grow about it. Both knowldges are useful in the highest sense of the word, both men enjoy their tour as no uneducated man men can; but the money value of the acquisition is about the same in both cases.

Whichever theory of education we adopt, the formatio nor the information one, much dependence must be placed on the memory of one of our instruments. Now, there is no intellectual faculty more loosely and vaguely talked about than the memory. People speak of such a man "having a good memory." A good memory for what? Such a thing is "easy to remembar." Easy for whom to remember? There is a well-known story of Foote, the comedian, how he posed a boaster by writing half-a-dozen incongruous lines which the other was unable to learn; and there is a general acquiesce in the difficulty of remembering that particular scrap of nonsense; a popular child's book represents several smart lads and lasses floored by it; which—to use a popular phrase—is all bosh. Any man with a keen sense of the ludicrous will commit to memory much sooner and retain for a much longer time the history of the female party who "went into the garden to cut a cabbage leaf to make an apple pie," than the same number of lines from an ordinary sermon or essay or newspaper narrative.

We know a person who has the reputation among his friends of possessing a remarkably tenacious memory—and so it is—for literature of all languages, especially poetry. He does not forget a ballad in twenty years. This same gentleman once lost $10,000 in a law-suit from having clean forgotten a conversation with a physician on a medical subject only three years before. Parson Crawley in the Chronicle of Barsetshire represents this class of literary men; and what is called their absence of mind is often only an absence of interest. A sharp business man, failing to recollect a poem or play which he had accidentally heard, would not be charged with absent-mindedness.

As a general rule, men learn most quickly and retain longest those things which they like best. A turfman will pour out volumes of racing or trotting statistics, though his recollection of political or historical facts may be very imperfect. To be sure, this is not the only test. Association has much to do with recollection. Thus the "funny-man" who learns and retains with ease the already-mentioned passage from Foote, has in his mind's eye some image, more or less distinct, of the great she-bear coming up the street to enquire for soap, and the great Panjandrum with its little round button at the top. Unsystematized and exoteric facts, in the subject of which one feels no strong interest, are difficult to retain. Let a naturalist communicate to half a dozen of his unscientific friends some elementary facts of his science, say the general division of insects according to their wings, and then try a week after how many of the party recollect them accurately. Unconnected dates are still harder to keep in mind. The upshot of all which and of much more that might be adduced is that all general assertions where the memory is concerned should be received with caution. When we are told, for instance, that a boy may acquire the rudiments of six or more sciences while he is acquiring the rudiments of Greek and Latin, our proper answer is, "Some boys can and others cannot."

It is said, and with truth, that the old-fashioned school and college studies are distasteful to a large number, perhaps a majority of the students. But this fact is far from justifying the inference that a course consisting chiefly of the positive sciences would be more attractive in the long run. No doubt lectures, especially when illustrated by experiments, are preferred to recitations by most boys; but the serious study of science soon becomes a steed of a very different hue. Most ladies are interested by chemical lectures, but an extempore examination will show how little most of them learn in this way. We have seen the experiment tried to the utter disgust of both lecturer and audience. Chemistry is really learned by hard "grinding" and "sapping." It may well be suspected that the idea of amusing scholars by their studies is a little utopian. How many grown men are amused by their business occupations?

THE REASON WHY.

The London Saturday Review thinks there is a great misapprehension in this country in regard to reasons that prevented England from interfering in behalf of the rebels during the war. It says:

Some say that we did not interfere because we were afraid of the North; others because, with a diabolical malignity, we calculated on the exhaustion of both North and South. Others, again, hold the faith that the operatives of our manufacturing districts, electors and non-electors, acted as a drag on the Government, and would not let it go to war. Of these reasons we know the two former to be utterly false, and the latter only in part true. As to fear of war, there are, we admit, many more persons in England unwilling to go to war with America than there are Americans unwilling to go to war with England. But all that this means is that we have a greater horror of war with a kindred race than they have. The imputation that we were afraid of the military and naval resources of the Federal Government may safely be left to be refuted by any American citizen who ever took the trouble to ascertain the available resources of his country at the beginning of the Civil War. No Englishman who witnessed the manœuvring of the Northern army for the first year of the war, or the condition of the blockading squadron in the Gulf for the two first years, can ever admit that there was at that date, in either of the services, anything to deter England, much more England and France combined, from giving active aid to the South. Whatever accession of vigor accrued afterwards was partly due to security from European attack. As to the action of the North-country operatives, it could have availed little against the Government and the residue of the English population, had these been resolved on intervention. But the real fact is, that neither the Government nor the people wished to interfere. They thought that intervention, under the actual circumstances of the contest, would be not only a deviation from a favorite policy, but a vindictive meanness. It would be tantamount to saying that we had old grudges against the United States Government to pay off, and that we took the opportunity of its weakness for paying them off. Add to this, there were men in Parliament and in the Ministry who were, by principle and tradition, hearty friends of the Republic. Others, again, hated slavery, and therefore hated the South. What with predilection and magnanimity, we forbore from taking a part which, if taken, must have produced a most important effect on the war. We did not take that part; and, as we believe, mainly because we did not take it, the Union is, to all outward appearance, restored to its integrity. That this view will ever be shared by the bulk of the American people it is impossible to believe. That many among their more enlightened politicians hold it is a notion which the language of the Bancrofts, the Beechers, and the Sumners is sufficient to confute. That any Transatlantic historian will ever venture to adopt it is more than we can hope. It flatters the pride of the American citizen to think that England gratified a revengeful spite against his country in the hour of her extreme peril. It would offend his pride if he were persuaded that the Union owes its present consolidation to the deliberate inaction of England. People and politicians will go on in their old courses, abusing us, reviling us, and threatening us. The Americanized bog-trotters will still continue to interweave with the tribal traditions of Celtic annals the semi-Jacobin aspirations of modern republicanism, and to arouse against the constitutionalism of England the sentiments both of feudalism and of democracy. Even before the fabric of their own polity is thoroughly reconstructed, some American statesmen may not disdain to profit by the large leaven of Irish discontent fermenting among them to exacerbate a dispute with England into a serious quarrel. Anything would serve the purpose—a Fenian privateer, or a New England fishing-boat on the banks of Newfoundland. And the placidity of England in past times may perhaps seem to justify exorbitant demands and insolent threats. But it may not be irrelevant to remind the most hot-headed of the anti-English party that even the best-tempered men can be provoked into a quarrel; that the intensity with which a contest is carried on is often in a direct ratio to the long-suffering which deferred it to the last moment; and that nothing would so irritate the thoughtful and intelligent classes of Englishmen as the reflection that a magnanimity and endurance almost without precedent had inspired neither good will nor respect in the minds of those whose country and institutions they had helped to preserve.

THE HERALD ON MARK TWAIN.

The New York Herald of Nov. 26th, says:

In yesterday's Herald we published a most amusing letter from the pen of that most amusing American genius, Mark Twain, giving an account of that most amusing of all modern pilgrimages—the pilgrimage of the Quaker City. It has been amusing all through, this Quaker City affair. It might have become more serious than amusing if the ship had been sold at Jaffa, Alexandria, or Yalta, in the Black Sea, as it appears might have happened. In such a case the passengers would have been more effectually sold than the ship. The descendants of the Puritan pilgrims have, naturally enough, some of them, an affection for ships; but if all that is said about this religious cruise be true they have also a singularly sharp eye to business. It was scarcely wise on the part of the pilgrims, although it was well for the public, that so strange a genius as Mr. Mark Twain should have found admission into the sacred circle. We are not aware whether Mr. Twain intends giving us a book on this pilgrimage, but we do know that a book written from his own peculiar stand point, giving an account of the characters and events on board ship and of the scenes which the pilgrims witnessed, would command an almost unprecedented sale. There are varieties of genius peculiar to America. Of one of these varieties Mark Twain is a striking specimen. For the development of his peculiar genius he has never had a more fitting opportunity. Besides, there are some things which he knows and which the world ought to know about this last edition of the May-Flower.

MISCELLANEA.

CHURCH the painter is said to be starting for the Orient. He intends to sojourn in Syria, making Beyrout his head-quarters. The fruits of his studies in this field, new to American artists, but old to European confréres, will be looked for with the liveliest interest.

MR. PARTON'S brilliant paper on "International Copyright," published in the October number of the Atlantic Monthly, has attracted more attention abroad than any other recent American production. It furnishes the London Times of October the 28th with a subject for a leading editorial.

MRS. HENRY WOOD, author of "East Lynne," etc., is to assume the editorship of The Argosy. A serial story from her pen will be commenced in the December number of that magazine, which has led a very feeble existence since Charles Reade finished the story of "Griffith Gaunt."

RICHARD GRANT WHITE in a letter to the New York Times of Saturday, denies having said that Mr. Charles Reade stole the plot of "White Lies" from the French, and asserts that Mr. Reade is the most imaginative and dramatic writer in our language, since Walter Scott.

MR. DANIEL SMITH, brother of the late poet, Alexander Smith, is preparing a new work, based upon Madame Ida Pfeiffer's Voyage Round the World."

VICTOR HUGO and Lamartine are engaged in preparing political works. That of the former is a poem called "Ideas of the Revolution." Lamartine's book is entitled "France et l'Avenier."

MATHEW ARNOLD is forty-six years old. He published his first volume of poems in 1849, after his marriage. He will be the next Laureate.

ALEXANDRE DUMAS, pere, is said to have made ten millions of francs by his writings, and to have expended it all like a prodigal prince.

CHARLES DICKEN'S new story, in Our Young Folks, will be entitled "A Holiday Romance."

THE FESTIVE SEASON.—Merry Christmas is close at hand. Fat turkeys with a premonition of their fate, are gobbling as hard as they can, knowing that they can enjoy the pleasures of life but for a short season, for to-morrow they die. Those who are looking up splendid fat turkeys as Christmas presents for their friends, should not forget that Will & Finck, the Excelsior Cutlers, have the most beautiful carving-knives and forks which would serve as a most appropriate accompanying present to the turkey. Will & Finck's assortment of cutlery at 613 Jackson street, is well worthy of inspection.

THE People of San Francisco are at last beginning to realize the fact that the cold and stormy day is the very time for taking DR. BOURNE'S BATHS, and they are now acting accordingly. The foolish notion that they are "weakening," and that there is danger of "taking cold," is nearly exploded. Dr. Bourne's Baths are different from all others—remember that. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street.

To those living in the southern part of the city we would recommend a call at Tyler's, 691 Market street, corner of Third, and take an inspection of his articles suitable for Holiday presents. His Zoethrop, or Wheel of Life, is a great novelty; there are besides photograph albums, writing desks, fancy articles, a great variety of juvenile books, scrap books, cutlery, etc. Tyler's stock is very extensive, and you will be very likely to find what you want there.

WATCHES, DIAMONDS, JEWELRY AND SILVERWARE.—There is one place in the city where you can purchase Watches, Diamonds, Jewelry and Silverware, at a fair price and not get imposed on, and that is at J. W. Tucker & Co.'s new store 101 and 103 Montgomery street, corner of Sutter. We advise our friends to go there.

BUTMAN'S splendid painting of Mount Shasta, which adorns the alcove of Roman's bookstore, is for sale. This is one of the best landscapes, if not the best, ever produced in California. The size of the painting is five feet by eight. What a splendid Holiday Present it would make!

CHRISTMAS GIFTS.—A. Roman & Co., 417 Montgomery street, have a magnificent stock of new illustrated books, standard and miscellaneous books, juvenile and toy books, writing desks, portfolios, photograph albums, fancy stationery, etc., most suitable for Holiday Gifts.

NO ONE who has not examined the wonderful Brazilian Pebble Spectacles, knows what spectacles are. Call at Muller's, 205 Montgomery street, if you wish to get suited with spectacles. Muller is an optician, and can fit your eyes at sight.

HAYNES & LAWTON announce in our advertising columns a list of goods most suitable for Holiday Presents, such as Bohemian glass ware, statuary, vases, etc. This firm is one of the largest and oldest established in the city, and has always been noted for its fine and extensive stock of glass and crockery ware.

QUINCY HALL SELLING OFF.—The immense stock of clothing and gentlemen's furnishing goods at Quincy Hall, Montgomery block, is offered at great reduction for the next twenty days, as there is to be a dissolution of co-partnership. They are selling goods unprecedently low.

RESPUBLICA.

GEORGE LUNT.

When Greece, in arts and arms supreme,
Rose sovereign o'er her darkened Age,
And lent its old, immortal theme
To grateful History's burning page,

When words, like arrows winged with fire,
Touched hearts that kindled at the flame,
And Song, re-echoing to her lyre,
Heard the far voice of coming fame;

Then Freedom kept, a guarded mound,
That fortressed rock where Athens sate,
And Wisdoms soul, divinely crowned,
Its sheltering Genius, held the State.

Resistless Thought its vital beam
To bard and sage and hero gave;
That long has lit Time's upward stream,
And shines eternal on the wave.

This was her boast, and is her pride,
The old Republic's stern behest
That mind to answering mind replied;
And they who swayed her were her Best.

This wrote her story with the stars;
She perished! How, her annals tell:
Hate, envy, meanness, all that mars,
And Folly ruled, as Greatness fell.

Then Force and Fraud's barbarian will
Rose o'er the mind's decay,
And sank on tower and templed hill
The twilight shades that closed her day.

This golden moral Eld unrolls,
O proud Republic! to thine eyes;
Bids thee love most thy nobles souls,
For Freedom sinks when Honor dies.

[For the Californian.]

A "PAPER HUNT" IN JAPAN.

BY FORBES HAITLAND.

A number of articles have been written of late on fox hunting, steeple-chasing, kangaroo hunts, "drives," etc., but I have never heard anything about a "paper hunt." It is too bad to overlook such glorious sport, especially such "meets" as we had at the Marines' Camp, on the bluff near Yokahama. It was magnificent fun; we really went at it in earnest. There was no sham in the runs we had; such eight-foot drops, and the paddy-fields up to your girths at every pop, with good six foot ditches containing not the cleanest of water, we managed to get up a rather decent run. As this style of hunting (?) is entirely unknown in California, I will give a description of one of the best runs I ever had.

The advertisement in the Japan Herald generally read as follows: "The foxes will break cover on the bluff at one o'clock on Saturday." The great thing is to have good dare-devil foxes, mounted on good strong Tartar ponies. (It may appear absurd to talk of mounting foxes; the explanation is we are compelled, on account of the scarcity of the quadruped, to use the biped.) Each fox is furnished with a bag containing small pieces of white paper, which the fox will strew along so as to give the scent to the hounds. The said hounds consist of some twenty or thirty hair-brained English and American residents. The foxes on the occasion to which I refer were No. 1; their ponies well up in ditching, and the riders capable of carrying them over. Captain C., and young D——, were the two best foxes in Japan. The day was delightful; such a day as we have nowhere but in Japan—the air clear and bracing, just cool enough not to overheat your horse, yet warm enough to prevent the rider or his horse catching cold on the homeward journey. After a first class tiffin with the Marine mess, a sufficient amount of champagne and good jokes to put the devil in one, the bugle sounded "hounds to your horses." The echo of the bugle had hardly ceased when up came the 20th fellow's in full cry "No time to talk, into your saddles, sharp!" "Into your saddles," was an order a precious sight easier given than obeyed, when one had a mount like mine. Oh, "Blotting-paper," (the animal's name; I called him so on account of the number of badly-formed spots on his hide, he looked like a perambulating landscape,) "you had a vile temper, but you were the best cross-country nag I ever had a leg across." He was perhaps the homeliest looking animal one ever clapped eyes on. He exactly resembled the toy rocking-horses, made by contract and cut off in lengths to suit purchasers. After a ten minutes' struggle I at length got my feet in the stirrups. It is an old saying "a stern chase is a long chase," but it did not prove so in my case. I very soon closed on the tail end, and a few minutes later had collared the leading horse. Blood will tell and so will strong hind-quarters crossing a girth-deep paddy-field. We had only found one trace of the foxes, and lost all scent almost immediately. We were at a stand—they must have doubled on us But no, a piece of white paper flutters about a foot from the ground at a distance of fifty yards. I gave my horse a cut with my hunting-crop and a dig of the spurs, and I was going to utter a terrific tally-ho, when I was shut up by Col. S.'s pony depositing something under a ton of clay slap in my mouth. Down the hill we went at a two-forty pace, soon to be stopped by a nine-foot creek and not a bridge in sight. No matter, Blotting-paper is good for that any day in the week; if I can't leap it he can swim, and what's a wet jacket to being first over; and with a "go it, old landscape," and a cut of the whip, we dash in and cross the creek, and are soon striding over a comparatively dry paddy-field. Following close on my heels were some dozen fellows looking more like half-drowned rats than human beings, all bespattered and with the water dripping from their clothes. These were all that remained of our gallant troupe. We are still on the proper scent, every now and again sighting the paper. At last from the brow of a hill we can see our foxes tearing along at break-neck pace, about half a mile distant. Now comes the tug of war; they are making for the eight-foot drop with a broad ditch, and within three feet of it, thinking to scare us, but there's no danger of that, we all had good sound horses and prided ourselves on being tolerable horsemen.

At it they went, neck or nothing. Well done, C., you took that splendidly; no shirk in you! Now D——, go it! Ah! a balk by Jove! Now for a chance to collar at least one fox. C., is making for the short cut to camp, (once past the sentry he is safe.) D—— has remounted and up the hill he goes; once over the leap and drop and I can collar him. Blotting-paper was thoroughly heated, and seemed to work with me; a minute more and the ditch was cleared; a second more and Blotting-paper and I were performing the most wonderful evolutions in the field below. I had given him too much head, he overreached, and the edge of the bank gave way; over we went I just recovered in time to see S., take the drop in stunning style, remarking as he passed, "keep quiet old boy, and you'll have a few friends with you instanter." Not being particularly anxious for company, and finding I had neither broken my neck nor my collar-bone, and seeing my gallant steed grazing close by me, (the fire having been considerably taken out of him,) I remounted as quickly as possible and made after D. As luck would have it, S., had doubled on him and was now pushing him hard. At last I have him; no, he doubles again, and dashes right into the grasp of a man who had shirked the heavy leap and taken the bridge path! After we had made sure of our fox—that is, after he had given his word of honor not to bolt, I observed D., was perfectly dry, while we, poor devils, were drenched to the skin. "I say, old fellow, how did you manage to get over the nine-foot creek?" "Why you are quite dry!" "Look at me, wet right through!" "And look at me!" were the exclamations which greeted him on all sides. "Hold on, not too many at once. The fact of the matter is C., and I pressed a couple of Coolies into the service and made them act as sappers and pontoon the creek. After having led our horses over, we dropped some paper farther down the creek to put you off the scent, having destroyed our pontoon; thus as we thought severing all connection with the opposite side, we scurried over the paddy-field. You caught me, but C., got in all right. Now for Sherry and bitters." Thus ended one of the many pleasant paper-hunts I had in Japan.

[For the Californian.]

FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

It is usually asserted by the opponents of female suffrage that its adoption would introduce a bone of contention into the domestic circle. Political disagreement would produce domestic discord. This argument assumes two things. First: Political preferences are more powerful than nature affections and the ties of consanguinity. Second: irreconcilable political differences among members of families must necessarily arise. The falsity of the first assumption becomes obvious from even the most superficial examination of the subject. Nearly every man reckons among his personal friends, some whose political views differ radically from his own. Indeed it is very rarely the case that even the most ordinary friendships are in any degree affected by political differences. In the most exciting political campaigns, when each candidate is straining every energy, and making use of every means to defeat his opponent, it not unfrequently happens that the two are warm personal friends. It is true that when we listen to the bitter invective, the charges of dishonesty, and the imputations against each others private and public character, which they hurl at one another from the rostrum or the press, we are apt to think that these men hate each other with an undying hate. But any one at all acquainted with the subject knows how little sincerity or real feeling these frothy ebullitions embody. They are the merest vapor, and have for their legitimate object only the obscurity of the political horizon.

Even when political differences were pushed to their extreme, culminating in a war which strained antagonistic feelings and prejudices to the top of their bent; when from arguing we fell to cutting one anothers throats, the estrangement of families was exceptional; and even in these exceptional cases, was mostly temporary. No true father discarded the son whose convictions—mistaken though they may have been deemed—led him to battle for "the other side." No true, loyal mother ever ceased to pray for the darling boy fighting bravely against his country. Many a hated suit of yankee "blue" has yielded to the clasp of a Southern sisters arms. After the long weary strife, many a husband has presented his soiled uniform at the door of the little cottage over the border, from which for years, political differences had made him an exile, and been received with tears of joy by the wife, true to her section, but loyal to him alone. Truly blood is thicker than water; and would to God the animosities engendered by the war had faded half so completely from political, as they have from domestic, circles.

It seems hardly possible that, in families, a difference of opinion between man and woman could exert a greater or more deleterious influence over the affections than a like difference between man and man. Nor could its influence be even so great; for in families the affection of the male members for the female members, and conversely, is even stronger than that obtaining between the male members, or between the female members. Sexual love is so general a law that it deepens and intensifies even the ties of consanguinity. And yet how seldom do we find any contentions among the male members of a family on account of difference in politics. This is due first, to the falsity of the first of the assumptions previously noticed; and, secondly, to the falsity of the second of these.

That irreconcilable political differences among the members of a family often can arise is denied by reason; and that they do is disproved by observation. The children are from infancy subjected to the same, or very similar, influences accustomed from the earliest dawn of his intelligence, to regard the opinions of his father as next to infallible, and judging of the truth of all others according to their conformity with these; his political reading confined to the books and papers which inculcate like beliefs because selected by the same authority; the son, in the great majority of cases, embraces the family politics entire, or with but slight modifications. Politically, then, the son being but a reflection of the father, it could scarcely happen that the daughter could differ very widely; she being exposed to the same paternal influences, and even fewer extraneous ones. But this argument is too narrow in its application to cover the whole case. It shows indeed, how important differences in politics would be unlikely to arise between father and daughter, or between brother and sister; but, so far from showing that these differences would be infrequent between husband and wife, it implies rather the contrary; for having imbibed very decided political views from their respective parents, they might be expected to retain them. Certainly we should not then witness that slavish readiness on the part of the wife to adopt the opinions of the husband, which we now see; and which, implying as it does the absence of any decided opinion at all, could not then take place.

For if woman had a voice and an influence in government, she would acquire her political beliefs in a way which would induce something like conviction of their truth.

But in the marital relation, the beliefs of one party must always be dominant over those of the other. When two minds are brought into close and constant relations with one another, their dissimilarities, constantly acting and reacting on each other, are finally worn away, and there is formed—not so much two similar minds as—one aggregate of belief and feeling. Under the present state of things the beliefs of the husband, as a matter of course, must predominate. Under different conditions, which mind might exercise the greater effect in shaping the family politics, would depend on a variety of circumstances, too involved to be intelligibly discussed. But in the aggregate of cases taken as a whole, the chances would be in favor of the eventual predominance of those political opinions which should go along with the greater intelligence. The political faith of each, however, would modify that of the other, and there would be a softening of the asperities of both.

But even supposing husband and wife to retain opposite political beliefs, it does not necessarily follow that contention would be the result. Certainly there is no subject upon which people differ more widely, or about which they are more disposed to wrangle, than Religion. And yet we daily observe men of one creed taking wives of another, with no unpleasant results arising from their difference of faith.

It was our object to overthrow a certain objection. We first saw that it was based upon two assumptions. We have now seen that neither of these assumptions is in any degree true. The objection raised upon them, then, must fall. It is simply a conclusion from no premises. A. G. B.

San Francisco Dec. 18th, 1867.

If you are puzzled what to buy for a Holiday Present, go to Appleton's, 508 Montgomery street; and if the present is for a lady, buy one of his beautiful shell boxes, photographic albums, Rodger's scissors, or cutlery, or some of the beautiful fancy articles he has on hand. If for a gentleman, one of Appleton's fine knives, or gold pens, or California diaries, would be just the thing.

Idaho.—Old patients and friends, of Idaho, will find Dr. Bourne, as usual, at No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. Science, knowledge and fixed principles enable Dr. Bourne to be permanent in location, and on the square in his intercourse with the sick.

THE HAIR MARKETS OF EUROPE, AND FASHIONS IN HAIR-DRESSING.

WHEN, in any fashionable promenade, we watch the mob of fair women with those wen-like appendages which destroy all the symmetry of the head, the idea that naturally occurs to us is, where does all this hair come from with which our fashionable beauties are adorned? If one woman possesses a chignon of portentous proportions, what other woman has been despoiled to furnish it forth? If another woman passes by with an auburn "heart-breaker," coquettishly thrown over her shoulder, that does not quite match her own tresses, we may be sure there must have been a "rape of the lock" of modern date. When vanity is made to sport in a superabundance of flowing locks, where are we to seek the "miserables" from whose heads they have been ravished?

Such were our thoughts the other day as we watched the lop-sided coiffures of the fair promenaders in the street. It is certainly a startling reflection that half the world is dressed in the hair of the other half—that the charming Mary owes half her beauty to some red-legged Scandinavian Olga, or that whilst we are admiring the silken tresses Beatrice so gracefully sports, the head upon which they have grown is bowed perhaps in sorrow at the foot of the convent cross. The commercial transactions that must take place in these treasures of Vanity Fair can be of no ordinary kind, and of no mean value.

When we are told that locks of a fashionable color are nearly as valuable as gold, weight for weight, the wonder is that spring-heeled Jack—whose prominent trick some years ago was to cut off young women's back hair—is not heard of again. The supply of back hair is more easily accounted for than that of the highly-prized golden tints. The majority of it comes, we are told, from Brittany and the south of France, and the ease with which young girls part with it is accounted for on very rational principles. In Brittany a very quaint and becoming cap is universally worn by the women young and old, which all travelers in that part must have noticed. This head-dress so completely covers the head that the hair cannot be seen; hence the hair merchant finds here a fine field for his operations. Mr. Trollope, traveling through Brittany, gives a most interesting description of the shearing of a whole fair full of people. The young girls, he tells us, stood in a row with their caps off, and their long black hair combed out ready for the man who operated. Each peasant-girl as she advanced was shorn, the lock tied up into a knot, and thrown into a large basket; in this manner the whole number submitted to be shorn like so many sheep, parting from what is considered their "glory" by other women without a pang, and for a few sous. This hair is particularly fine, and is very long, hence the collectors must make an immense profit by the transaction. As all the southern countries of Europe are dark-haired and Catholic, the reader may conjecture another source from which black locks are derived. The cloister sends its contingent to supply the requirements of the fashionable world. Every nun delivers up her locks as a sacrifice, and fashionable women immediately takes possession of it to use it, if we are not too uncharitable, as a snare—so diverse are the motives of human nature.

Brown hair, which is the most universal color in the great European states, is consequently supplied in the largest quantities. Now that it has become so valuable, there are strong motives for its abstraction from the most objectionable and repulsive sources. Besides those named, we have no manner of doubt ourselves that in all cases of fever the hair shaved off for the purposes of health passes once more into the hands of the barber, and very possibly becomes a fresh centre of contagion. It would be well for the interests of the community that in all such cases it should be burnt in the presence of witnesses. Not many years ago it was the custom to cut off the hair of pauper women when they entered the workhouse; but this practice, which was illegal and very cruel, has been for some time discontinued; but the rule is carried out inexorably with all prisoners, not excepting those suffering for political causes. These may be called the domestic sources of supply to the hair market, scarcely any of which, we should say, is consigned to the great emporium for this article, which is Paris. Towards this centre hundreds of tons find their way every year, and is their made up to suit the requirements of fashion, and is thence redistributed over Europe.

In the present Paris Exhibition, in the Neapolitan department devoted to human hair, is a very curious case, exhibiting the processes by which what is termed "chiffonier's hair" is prepared for ornamental purposes. This hair, it may be stated, appears with its root intact—in other words, it has clearly been torn from the head by violence. When first it came into the market, much speculation existed among the hair merchants as to the source from whence it had come. That it had been obtained by violence was evidence; but it soon appeared that the violence was exercised by its owners—in other words, these pieces of hair were neither more nor less than the cleanings of the comb at the toilet table. These, in Continental cities, find their way into the streets—there are no dust-bins there—whence they are collected by the chiffoniers, and sold to the hair merchants. A writer in the Hairdresser's Journal, speaking of the singular exhibition of the little knots of toiletted hair he found in one of the cases, says:—"The first process to which the manufacturer submits them is to sort them into colors; and here I find them divided into some eight or nine separate colors, of which the dark most decidedly predominates, thus showing the Italian climate. The second process is to disentangle these masses of hair by carding them. They are now submitted to the fourth operation—a secret, I presume, to the Italian manufacturer—that of turning, or, in plain words, putting all the hairs with the roots at one end. The whole process is interesting, as exhibiting the manufacture of an article that has always been surrounded with doubt and suspicion;" and we may add that it affords a singular example of the care with which every scrap of hair, day by day growing more valuable in the markets of Europe, is collected and returned to human heads if not from those whence they originally came. Among the peasantry of our own country it would be considered most unlucky to throw away such scraps of hair; it is the universal practice to collect it and burn them. A writer in Notes and Queries says that they imagine that, if left about, the birds would build their nests with it; a fatal thing for him or her from whose heads it had fallen, the belief being that if a pyet (Anglice, magpie) should get hold of it for the purpose of building a nest—not an unlikely thing, considering the thievish nature of the bird—the person from whom it had fallen would be sure to die within the year.

And now for a few words in conclusion respecting those abominations called chignons. Any one who knows anything about human hair, knows that immediately upon death everything like animal life immediately escapes from it. The hair dealers have never seen life in any animal from among the large quantities that pass through their hands. Vegetable growths, no doubt, exist; but when we hear the "chignon fungus" spoken of in the Lancet, we cannot help laughing, as it must be quite clear that the form the manufactured hair takes can have nothing whatever to do with the nature of the growth of the parasite.

It will perhaps surprise our readers to be told that the chignon was known by that name nearly a hundred years ago. The Hairdresser's Journal makes the following quotation from a book on hairdressing bearing date 1782:—"Those ladies who are obliged to wear false hair, I would inform them that the greatest difficulty attending it is the putting it on properly. . . Now to put on; and first the false chignon. I have before said where this is to be placed, but if it is not made very flat and strong with a good small comb, it will make the head appear bumpy and awkard behind." In these words the ugliest of all fashionable adornments of the head is most clearly identified both by name and nature, and it is only another proof that, as in architecture, so in the coiffure, we go back to the past for our styles and fashions—a hundred years is only a modern revival, indeed. Is there not a wig in the British Museum very like the present fashion, which is at least two thousand years old?

The very golden hair so beloved by the poets and painters of old, is rising in value every day, and we are really puzzled to know from what source it is obtained; speaking generally, the major portion of it comes from the northern parts of Europe, where this colored hair, or rather light hair, greatly predominates. The only southern country that seems to possess it is Venice, or rather it did in the time of the great artists of the past. Giorgione and Titian rarely painted a female head of another colour; Rubens, still later, indulged in this color, but in this he merely copied the fair locks of the Flemings, who are still famous for the beauty of their golden hair. We do not know if in Venice the same hair is still to be found, or whether, it having possibly been a foreign introduction, it has not disappeared by reason of the mingling of the races. The beauty of golden hair by no means depends upon its color, its quality also far surpasses any other. It is so beautifully fine that a head of hair of this color contains nearly twice as many individual hairs as are found in a red head. The gradation in bulk, in fact, regularly progresses from the blonde, the most delicate and flowing, to brown, black and red—the coarsest of all hairs. The flexibility of the fair hair gives that artistic and kindly sweep which the painter loves to depict. The very yellow hair comes from the low countries; it is a very different looking thing from the saffron-tinted, disagreeable-looking color we see in the shop-windows shown as specimens of the result of using dye. The deadness that always distinguishes these wretched attempts to produce artificially this much coveted color, is but too apparent. A woman must be weak indeed, or the veriest slave to fashion, who submits to these vile tricks of the hair-doctors; and when once the dyeing process has been accomplished, the man or woman is forever after the slave of the dye. For inasmuch as the hair grows from the root, and not, like a vegetable growth, from its free extremity, of course the dye must be applied day by day, otherwise the hair next the scalp will be of a totally different color from that on the other portion of the head. Thus the poor devotee of fashion, or of vanity, in an evil moment places his or her charms, or the counterfeit of them, completely at the mercy of the hairdresser and his worthless nostrums.

At the hair-merchants sometimes very long hair is to be met with; six feet is often attained, but such lengths as these are very valuable indeed. Gray hair is now much used for mixing with the scanty locks of the aged, for vanity in many cases journeys with us unto the end, and it is now largely employed in wig-making. There is nothing that looks more unnatural than a bright brown or jet black wig upon an old withered face; the hairdressers are beginning to see this. The weather-marks of age should be indicated in the hair as well as in the skin; this is now done by adding a few gray hairs into the dark peruke, and by changing the wig as years go by, throwing in a little more snow from time to time, the artist manages to let us down harmoniously, whilst the horrors of a bald pate are avoided. Gray hair has accordingly risen considerably in demand and in price: it is as dear now as the fashionable golden color. In Paris, where old age seems to be a greater enemy than it is here, there are establishments where young girls are employed to pluck out grey hairs from the head and beard; but these are by no means thrown away; they fall to the lot of the perruquier, who works them up into the artful contrivances with which we hide the bare and shiny pate.

The color of the hair is wholly due to the pigment which is conveyed into it from the blood; hence the absurdity of plastering the hair with all kinds of pomatum, which only acts upon the outside of the hair. In all cases baldness and grayness are caused by an absence of this secretion. In baldness the root becomes obliterated, and of course the hair falls out; in grayness, however, there is a mere cessation of the pigment secreted. This may occur from other causes than age; sudden fear or great emotion has been known to turn people gray in the course of the night. In such cases the hair may recover its tint, although but rarely; but where grayness arises from natural decay, it is vain to attempt to restore its color, and it is equally vain to attempt to make the hair grow again when it has once fallen off from the same cause. In youth, where fever has arrested nutrition and caused it to fall off, it comes with a recovery of strength; but where the bulb of the hair has perished, all the hair restorers in the world would prove ineffectual.

In England the prevailing color of the hair is brown. This may be ascribed to the great mixture the race has undergone by reason of the number of foreigners commerce has attracted to our shores. In London this is especially observable. In the south and west, where the Saxon element has remained undisturbed, light hair is much more common. Indeed, in Somersetshire, among the country-folks, where there has been but little change for centuries, a dark-haired peasant child is a thing to be remarked. A Bristol physician has, in fact, boldly declared that we are, day by day, getting a darker-haired people—not by reason of our greater mixture with dark-haired nations, but by reason of conjugal selection. He has asserted that, of a given number of light women he had watched, thirty-two per cent. remained single, whilst of a similar number of dark-brown and black-haired women, only twenty-one per cent. remained single. Now, if this state of things should be permanent—if men selected dark-haired women instead of light-haired ones—in course of time, perhaps, we should become a black-haired people. But this is a pretty theory, which our senses condemn at once. If light-haired women are looked coldly upon by the men, why are the fair so very solicitous about having light hair? If the matrimonial market inclines in the contrary direction, the mode (possibly set by the hair-dressers, on account of the value of golden tresses) would not have been followed; for much as the women like to be in the mode, they would, as a rule, rather find themselves eligible in the matrimonial market. Fashion, for once, in the matter of the color of the hair, is right. What the poets and painters have praised, must possess the quality of beauty; and fashion, in the method of dressing the hair (always excepting chignons) is at the present moment admirable. The method of artfully adjusting it in curls over the brow adds infinite softness to the outline, and makes many an ordinary-looking face interesting, if nothing more. The same style was prevalent at the end of the last and the beginning of the present century, and that, perhaps, is the reason why English faces of that period, under the hands of Reynolds and Lawrence, looked so much more full of character and so much more "taking" than those of a year or two ago, when every woman imagined she could afford to dress her hair after the Greek method, wanting the pure lines of the Greek face. Let us trust, however, that that gross deformity, the chignon, which we have evidently copied from the Chinese and Japanese, and, of course, exaggerated the mode, like barbarians as they tell us we are, will speedily fall out of favor. Why women should increase the apparent size of the head to double its real proportions whilst they have reduced their skirts to the scantiness of wet bathing clothes, is a matter so marvellous that men have given it up altogether.

In the last century the fashion was extraordinary enough. The hair was piled up a foot high, and ornamented with ribbons, and manipulated into all manner of devices. Altitude did give a certain dignity to the figure; but now the lateral extension makes us fear that the ladies will lose their balance and fall backwards. Whilst the one sex is dressing the hair so as to point obliquely behind up into the sky, the other are running all to beard in the contrary direction. Possibly there never was a time when so much hair was worn upon the human face, masculine and feminine, as now.

In Paris they have already grown tired of the passion for blonde hair, or rather the dark-haired beauties have decided that the fair hair has had its innings long enough and have determined to give the brunettes a chance. Consequently, jet black tresses are coming into fashion, and as the Frenchwomen are all artists in their way, they have taken to dye their skins to match: preparations of walnut-juice and chicory are now used to give fair dames an almost Eastern cast of complexion. If any man should—according to the Bristol physician's theory of natural selection—marry one of these made-up brunettes, we may fairly ask whether, on discovering that he had been wedded by mistake to a masked blonde, he will have a fair reason for demanding a divorce. But dark or fair are by far too natural distinctions to satisfy the fair Parisiennes. We hear that some of the leaders of fashion—we suspect they must be very fast—have adopted the fashion of dyeing the hair green, mauve and blue, as it may be, to match the color of the dress they may be wearing at the time. We have all heard of Blue Beard, but blue locks!—the idea is too terrible: we may debit the demi monde pretty safely with the introduction of this fashion.

Anything that is very startling finds favour with this class, and it certainly is not to the credit of honest women that they submit to follow the lead of such people. In the metropolis the actresses are the true leader of fashion. The theatre is, in fact, an invaluable means of puffing off any new style the professors of new coiffures may invent. It will, perhaps, be new to some of our readers to be told there are weekly meetings in London of a society termed La Societe du Progres de la Coiffure, at which foreigners and Englishmen assist at what is termed a grand course. Imagine, good reader, an assembly-room crowded with a barbarous—forgive the pun—company. An artist, with the politeness of the Grand Nation, leads a fair demoiselle up to the tribune, and without more ado tries all the efforts of his inventive skill in producing some sublime hirsute effect amid the rapturous applause of his fellows. Imagine the feelings of the young lady thus operated upon, and the sensation of intense jealousy with which she is often obliged to witness some other fair one experiment upon with greater applause from the spectators. As long as the arrangement of hair among women follows a particular mode, there is not much chance of judging character or disposition from the manner in which it is dressed. As long as girls will wear as much false hair as that naturally belonging to them, it would be puerile to attempt to read character or disposition in the fashion and character of the locks displayed; but viewed naturally, the hair is as great an index of temperament and disposition as the features. Mr. Creer, in his volume on hair, for instance, quotes the following indications of character founded upon the set and texture of flowing locks from a book recently published in Paris, entitled "Secrets of Beauty:"—"Coarse black hair and dark skin signify great power of character, with a tendency to sensuality. Fine black hair and dark skin indicate strength of character along with purity and goodness. Stiff, straight black hair and beard indicate a coarse, strong, rigid, straightforward character. Fine dark brown hair signifies the combination of exquisite sensibilities with great strength of character. Flat, clinging, straight hair a melancholy but extremely constant character. Harsh, upright hair is the sign of a reticent and sour spirit; a stubborn and harsh character. Coarse red hair and whiskers indicate powerful animal passions, together with a corresponding strength of character. Auburn hair with florid countenance denotes the highest order of sentiment and intensity of feeling, purity of character, with the highest capacity for enjoyment or suffering. Straight, even, smooth, and glossy hair denotes strength, harmony, and evenness of character, hearty affections, a clear head, and superior talents. Fine, silky, supple hair is the mark of a delicate and sensitive temperament, and speaks in favor of the mind and character of the owner. Crisp, curly hair indicates a hasty, somewhat impetuous and rash character. White hair denotes a lymphatic and indolent constitution;" and we may add that besides all these qualities there are chemical properties residing in the coloring matter of the hair-tube which undoubtedly have some effect upon the disposition. Thus, red-haired people are notoriously passionate. Now red hair is proved by analysis to contain a large amount of sulphur, whilst very black hair is colored with almost pure carbon. The presence of these matters in the blood points to peculiarities of temperament and feeling which are almost universally associated with them. The very way in which the hair flows is strongly indicative of the ruling passions and inclinations, and perhaps a clever person could give a shrewd guess at the manner of a man or woman's disposition by only seeing the backs of their heads.

POEMS UNWRITTEN.

THERE are poems unwritten and songs unsung,
Sweeter than any that were ever heard—
Poems that wait for angel tongue,
Songs that but long for a paradise bird.

Poems that ripple through lowliest lives—
Poems unnoticed and hid away
Down in the souls, where the beautiful thrives,

Poems that only the angels above us,
Looking down deep in our hearts, may behold—
Felt though unseen by the beings who love us,
Written on lives as in letters of gold.

Sing to my soul the sweet song that thou livest!
Read me the poem that never was penned—
The wonderful idol of life that thou givest
Fresh from thy spirit, O beautiful friend.

THE LAST MOMENTS OF NERO.

WHEN Nero learned that he had a master in Galba, he upset the table at which he was seated feasting, dashed to pieces his two most favorite crystal glasses, called for a box of poison, which he was afraid to use, and then rushed into the Servilian garden to think upon what he should do next. There, or within his sleeping room, he passed a most miserable night; and when, at daybreak, he found that his guards had not only deserted him, but had carried off the little gold box containing the poison, and even the very covering of his bed, he ran headlong down to the Tiber, where he stopped short on the bank, and slowly walked back again. It was then, barefooted and half-dressed as he was, that he was encountered by the faithful Phaon, who flung a cloak over his shoulders, tied an old handkerchief about his head, hoisted the bewildered wretch upon a horse, and rode away towards a country house four miles off. In danger of discovery, the fugitive party abandoned their horses, scrambled through thickets, drakes, by-paths and brambles, and at length reached the neighborhood of the desired asylum. The tender feet of the Emperor were mangled and bloody, despite the care which had been shown by his friend to spread his cloak on the ground for the ex-Emperor to tread upon. Phaon asked him to conceal himself for a while in a gravel pit; but Nero declared that it looked to much like a grave, and he was determined not to be buried alive. He sat down under a wall, picked the burrs and brambles from his dress, drank from the hollow of his hand a few drops of water, and sighed over the thought of the draughts he used to imbide of boiled water made cold again in snow. He was at length got into the house, where he turned away in disgust from the piece of brown bread which was offered him—his last banquet; drank again a little luke-warm water, flung himself on an old flock-bed, and cursed his destiny. They who surrounded him counseled him to make an end quickly; and thereupon he had a grave made before him to his exact measure. He ordered sundry preparations to be made for his funeral, commanded water for the washing of his body, wood for the pile, expressed a hope that they who survived him would allow his head to remain on his body, and he then burst into an agony of tears at the thought, as he said, of what a clever fellow the world was about to lose: "Qualis artifex pereo!" was his exclamation. It was not his only one. He cited lines from various Greek and Latin authors as applicable to his situation; and when reproached for dallying so long before he put himself to death, very appositely and naturally inquired if any one present was willing to show him the way by setting him the example. He then made a few more pedantic quotations, and finally, with trembling hands, put the dagger to his throat. He would have held it there long enough had it not been for Epaphroditus, who grasped his hands and forced it into his throat. The terror of the ex-monarch was fixed on his features after death. But even he had friends; five thousand crowns were expended on his funeral pile, on which his body was laid in a splendid silk covering; a couple of his old nurses collected his ashes, and an imperial congress accompanied them in the pious task of solemnly depositing the body in the tomb of the Domiti. For years after loving hands hung garlands on his tomb! and surely Nero could not have won this tribute of sympathy, spontaneously made, had he not had some touch of virtue in him, which saved him from ranking beneath humanity!

INTELLIGENCE OF ANIMALS.

BORLASE says he saw a lobster attack an oyster, which persisted in closing his shell as often as the lobster attempted to intrude within it. After many failures, the lobster took a small stone, and placed it between the shells as soon as they were separated, and then devoured the fish. Mr. Gardener, in his "Curiosities of Natural History," states that he once watched a crab enlarging its burrow in the sand; and about every two minutes it came up to the surface with a quantity of sand in its left claw, and, by a sudden jerk, threw it to the distance of about six inches. Having a few shells in his pocket, he endeavored to throw one of them into the hole; three of them fell near, and the fourth rolled into it. Five minutes afterward, the animal made its appearance, bringing with it the shell which had gone down; and, carrying it to the distance of a foot from its burrow, there deposited it. Seeing the others lying near the mouth of the hole, it immediately carried them, one by one, to the place where the first had been deposited, and then resumed its original labor. Duges saw a spider which had seized a bee by the back, and effectually prevented it from taking flight; but its legs being at liberty, the bee dragged the spider along, which presently suspended it by a thread from its web, leaving it to dangle in the air till it was dead, and then it was drawn up and devoured. An individual living in the square at St. Mark's, Venice, has been in the habit of scattering grain every day at two o'clock, previous to which hour the birds assemble in one place on the cathedral; and as the clock strikes, they take wing and hover round his window in small circles till he appears, and distributes a few handsful of food. This, at all events, indicates the facility of noting time, and may be placed on a parallel with the story of the dog which went to church regularly every Sunday, at the proper hour, to meet his master. Animals are prompt in using their experience in reference to things from which they have suffered pain or annoyance. Grant mentions an ourang-outang which having had, when ill, some medicine administered to him in an egg, could never be induced to take one afterward. Le Vaillant's monkey was extremely fond of brandy, but never could be prevailed upon to touch it again after a lighted match had been applied to some it was drinking. A dog, having great antipathy to the sound of a violin, always tried to get the bow and conceal it. Plutarch tells a strange story of a mule, which, when laden with salt, fell into a stream; and finding its load thereby lightened, adopted the experiment afterward, and whenever it crossed a stream slipped into the water with its panniers. To cure it of the trick, the panniers were filled with sponge, under which, when fully saturated, it could barely stagger.

VOLCANIC MARVELS IN JAVA.

THE materials for studying the power and the produce of volcanic action are found, perhaps, in greater variety, extent and abundance in Java, than in any other part of the known world. All the mountains bear the evidence of these awful agitations, which force their way from the earth's centre to its circumference, and become the safety-valves in the ordinary normal action, or record the terrible explosions when that action is insufficient to give vent to the fierce and fiery element which rests or rages under the crust of our terrestrial sphere. Not at the top of Tenyer Mountain, but along its sides, and at a fluctuating elevation of 6000 to 7000 feet, we passed, on our way from Samarang to Sourabaya, through a crater of nearly three miles in length, having on each side various rugged elevations; the floor being sometimes hard and rocky, sometimes wavy, like the tidal sand, and sometimes so loose as to make progress difficult. The natives speak of the mountain with reverence, one of its volcanic peaks bearing the name of Bramah—a name which, though of Hindoo origin, is associated with terror in even the minds of Mussulmans. In Java, as indeed throughout the Oriental world, the new faiths which have been introduced by foreign invaders or settlers, whether Christian, Mohammedan or Buddhist, are all tainted with the phraseology, and invested with the superstitions, even of pre-historic times.

The mud lakes fling up vast volumes of mingled black earth and water, and masses of smoke are seen in the distance; they rise and disappear, while sounds resembling remote thunder accompany the explosion of the filthy springs. As the borders of the lake are approached, the soil gets softer and softer, warmer and warmer, till it merges in an agitated mass of hot mud, from which boiling columns are flung up from a circular mouth, in the very centre of the lake, and are scattered all around in successive bursts. The greatest height reached by jets is about thirty feet. The neighboring ground is impregnated with the salt which is found in the saline forces of springs. A demon, in the shape of a water serpent—is believed to have taken up his abode in the regions under the lake, and its outpourings are but exhibitions of his supernatural powers. There and elsewhere, if a traveler desires to obtain any information from the natives, he will do well to respect their credulity, and not to stop their narratives by expressions of doubt or disbelief. How often I have seen the willing Oriental talker suddenly and hopelessly silenced by a single word which could be construed into contempt for his religious belief or an impeachment of his veracity.

In many parts of Java the paths are lighted by jets of fire which burst from the earth's surface—inextinguishable, or at least, never extinguished lamps, whose flames are fed by a perpetual supply of hydrogen, and consumed on reaching the atmosphere of the outer world. The whole character of the scenery of these tropical islands has something mysterious and sublime.

HAVING used the 'Grover & Baker Sewing Machine" for many years, I take great pleasure in recommending it to the publis, as I believe it superior to all others that have come under my notice. MRS. MATTHEW CROOKS.

San Francisco, May 1st, 1867.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO,.....SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1867.

RELIGIOUS WEEKLIES.

The dulness and insipidity of the religious journals have recently been the theme of much ungracious comment. The New York Round Table declares that as a class, the various sectarian organ evinces less talent and freshness than even the flash Sunday papers. With the exception of the Independent, we know of no religious journal that has ever gained any considerable share of reputation or influence, outside of a very narrow denominational circle. Of the religious weeklies published in this city, there is not one that is specially noticeable for ability, or that possesses any interest for the general reader. If any exception is to be made to this statement, it must be in favor of the Catholic Monitor, which evinces more spirit and vigor than any other sectarian organ in the State. The Stockton Gazette, in noticing the Spare Hour a new Baptist paper, says:

"In its editorial department we trust a few more spare hours will be employed than on most theological papers in this State. If the vitality of these religious weeklies is an evidence of that in the churches, the visible decline of general interest in religious matters is not to be wondered at. They are as dull and dry as an old fashioned orthodox sermon divided into forty-two heads. Their columns may be hunted in vain for a live idea or a new thought save in the selected matter which owes its presence to the clerical arm and shears. They have not a word to say regarding new faiths and opinions springing up on every side and embraced by millions. Through conscientious motives and religious belief, people are induced to subscribe for them. They hope for bread and get stones.

We can assure these reverend knights of the pen and kings of the shears if they do not wake up and bestir themselves in common with their profane cotemporaries, that their slow, ungreased coaches will shortly be left out of sight. Religion now-a-days is becoming eminently practical. It involves something else besides the perpetual repetition of a text or a sermon. It is working itself more and more into the details of every-day life. Any one of the leading profane dailies embodies more of it in its columns than the combined religious press. True, they flavor their dish with much of the spice of Anti-Christ. That is certain to be read by all. The wheat and the tares will come up together."

"THE LOST GALLEON."

THE LOST GALLEON, AND OTHER TALES, is the title of a litte volume of verse by Frank Bret Harte, just published by the author, and printed by Towne & Bacon. As a specimen of book-making in all its mechanical departments it is altogether admirable, and so superior to many Californian productions that are brought out at the East, that we hope Mr. Harte will forward a copy to Carleton & Co., who published his "Condensed Novels," in order to afford those gentlemen an opportunity of comparing the two. Besides "The Lost Galleon." "John Burns of Gettysburg," "The Tale of a Pony," "The Ballad of the Emeu," "North Beach," "To the Pliocene Skull," the book contains a considerable number of pieces not inferior to these, though less familiar to the reading public of California. The author introduces his volume with the following highly characteristic verses:

BEFORE THE CURTAIN.

Behind the footlights hangs the rusty baize;
A trifle shabby in the upturned blaze
Of flaring gas, and curious eyes that gaze.

The stage, methinks, perhaps is none too wide;
And hardly fit for royal Richard's stride,
Or Falstaff 's bulk, or Denmark's youthful pride.

Ah well! no passion walks its humble boards—
O'er it no king nor valiant Hector lords—
The simplest skill is all its space affords—

The song and jest, the dance and trifling play—
The local hit at follies of the day—
The trick to pass an idle hour away—

For these, no trumpets that announce the Moor—
No blast that makes the hero's welcome sure—
A single fiddle in the overture!

Although there are several poems in the book that we have been accustomed to rank as among the best of their class, by any American writer, the impression produced by them upon a re-reading in the present collected form, is not less favorable. One of the author's most powerful literary instincts seems to be a horror of the exaggerated, the unreal, and false in sentiment and passion. This instinct, while it guards a writer against the danger of doing anything that can be made to appear absurd, sometimes exercises an injurious effect by too closely restricting the natural impulses of genius. There are some notable literary performances which the world is the better for, and could not willingly spare, which could not have been produced by men of a cautious and critical turn of mind, and possessed of a quick and delicate perception of the ludicrous or unheroic aspects of things. We have said that Mr. Harte's introductory verses are "highly characteristic," and when we add that we do not exactly like them, might be understood as meaning that we do not admire the author's writings. This, however, is not our meaning, since "Before the Curtain" is marked by the only quality in Mr. Harte's productions that affects us disagreeably, a certain something that it would be inexact to call an affectation of self-disparagement, but which we can at present find no other name for. He offers us a volume of poems, excellent in their kind, nearly perfect as literary compositions, and calculated to charm the taste of all cultivated readers. And yet, he cannot permit us to sit down to enjoyment of the feast, without first entering a formal protest against being supposed to labor under the illusion that he has done anything worth speaking of, and solemnly cautioning his readers against doing him such an injustice by imagining that he attaches any value to such literary trifles. "Before the Curtain" is not, however, the key note to the volume. It contains several poems that evince no trace of critical consciousness, and many that are exquisite for delicacy and beauty. No such elegant volume has ever been printed in California, and we hope that it may find a place on every center table in the State.

THE ALASKA DUELS—THEIR SECRET HISTORY.

NUMBER II.

DOCTOR ADONIS having at length determined to accept the challenge of the mythical Tretikoff, Lieutenant Eagan as the second of the Doctor, and Harry Baker as the "friend" of the bloodthirsty Russian, arranged for the meeting, and fixed upon the time and place when and where the encounter was to come off. The Doctor having magnanimously given his adversary the choice of weapons, Baker announced that his principal had chosen sabres. The spot selected for the scene of the combat was a secluded valley about a mile from the town. But as the time drew near, the Doctor began to experience some scruples of conscience in regard to taking the life of a gentleman whose sister he had grossly insulted, and he accordingly consulted with a particular friend named Murphy as the most feasible means of preventing the affair from going further. Murphy, who had accompanied the expedition as a member of the press, had formerly been connected with one of the leading papers of Virginia City, and he claimed to have been in some way officially concerned in the duel between Tom Fitch and Joe Goodman of the Territorial Enterprise, in which the eloquent Republican orator received a bullet in the leg. By virtue of this experience and of much study of the code, Murphy assumed to be au fait in all matters relating to the duello. No man on this coast understood the nicer points of the theory and etiquette of affairs of this sort so well as he. But he was particularly proud of his skill in effecting compromises without damage to the honor of either party. In fact he used to intimate that no "affair" need ever go beyond a certain point, provided the seconds are thoroughly posted in the niceties of the code, and are sincerely desirous of bringing about an amicable adjustment. He further gave his acquaintances to understand that he could and would have arranged the Fitch and Goodman affair, though not acting formally as the second of either party, had the difficulty occurred in a civilized community. "But you see," he used to observe in alluding to that matter, "it was a sort of backwoods community. Neither the principals nor the seconds had any knowledge of the fine points of the business in hand, no more than so many Piutes. They thought that the main thing was just to fight, and fight they would, if they had to go into it with no more ceremony or regard to the proprieties than a couple of grizzlies. What can a gentleman, who wants to have things conducted according to European precedent, do with such "savages?" In short, Murphy's strong suit was "compromises;" he held that the regular and legitimate termination of every "affair," was a tableau in which the principals, instead of facing each other at ten paces with levelled pistols, are clasped in a loving embrace, while the seconds are "popping" champagne corks, preparatory to bumpers all round. Duels that terminated in bloodshed, he regarded as coarse and butcherly transactions, that resulted from ignorance and bungling on the part of the seconds, or brutality on the part of the principals. The Doctor being aware of the peculiar notions of Murphy on this subject, repaired to him for advice, in the hope that his skill and experience might suggest some plan by which matters could even at this late stage be amicably arranged. He laid the whole case before the humane and accomplished pacificator, stating his conscientious scruples against his taking his adversary's life, after having so grossly insulted his sister, and also representing that being himself utterly unacquainted with the use of the sabre, while the gigantic Russian was a cavalry officer to whom that weapon was probably familiar, the chances were that he, the Doctor, would be chopped into mince meat, a fate which he did not dread on his own account, so much as because of the disappointment and injury which would result to his employers from the loss of his services. Murphy at once entered into the business with alacrity: he declared that the affair was one that might be compromised by the use of a little tact, and further consoled the unhappy Adonis by assuring him that in case all attempts to bring it to a pacific termination should fail, and his worst forebodings he realized, he, Murphy, would assume the discharge of the other's duties as correspondent of the Herald.

The pacificator's first proceeding was to call upon the seconds, Baker and Lieut. Eagan, to whom he suggested "a basis of honorable compromise." The Doctor's second was willing to consider the matter, but Baker represented his principal, the sanguinary Tretikoff, as being inexorable in his determination to force the affair to a bloody issue. Baker deplored this implacable disposition on the part of the Russian, but he professed his utter inability to shake his resolution. Finding that nothing could be effected in this quarter, the peacemaker next sought an interview with General Davis, laid the case before him, represented that the Doctor was sure to be sacrificed if the meeting took place, and begged the General to interfere. The latter saw no way in which he could act in the matter, unless an application were made to him for protection, in which case, if the applicant were an American citizen, he would feel authorized to interfere. Murphy, after consultation with his friend, returned and with his consent, and on his behalf, formally demanded protection. Thereupon, the General being apprised of the hour and place of the meeting, promised to have an officer with a file of men upon the ground, to arrest the parties, in time to prevent bloodshed. Delighted at this fortunate result of his efforts, Murphy hastened to impart the pleasing intelligence to the Doctor, who received it with the most extravagant demonstrations of joy. His second calling upon him an hour or so later, was amazed to find him in such improved spirits. The dejection that had oppressed him ever since the receipt of Tretikoff's cartel had vanished. He borrowed Eagan's saber and illustrated to the astonished Eagan, the manner in which he intended to "carve" his adversary. The Lieutenant expressed his gratification at finding him in so cheerful a mood, and took his leave making an appointment to meet him in the morning, at the Club Room of the officers, two hours before the time appointed for the combat. Punctual to his appointment, the Doctor presented himself at ten A. M., at the Club Room, where his second, together with Lieut. Livermore, and several other officers who were acquainted with the history of the difficulty and took a lively interest in its progress, were already assembled. Never did a man about to engage in mortal combat with a formidable and ferocious antagonist, appear more cool and confident than the Doctor on this occasion. His bearing was haughty and heroic, and he seemed to be actually eager for the fray.

The hour fixed for the meeting was 12 o'clock M., and Eagan suggested that inasmuch as Tretikoff was reported to be skilful with the sabre, while the Doctor knew nothing of the weapon, it might be well to spend the intervening time in practising the broadsword exercise. To this the Doctor assented, though declaring that he did not consider it necessary, since he felt convinced that he could "carve" the Russian on general principles, without regard to science. Accordingly, having stripped to the buff, he was furnished with a sabre, and his second proceeded to "exercise" him, which he did with such energy that the perspiration soon began to stream down the hero's countenance, and he was compelled to desist, panting with his exertions. Just at this time Dr. Hough, the regimental surgeon, looked in, and stating with grave politeness, that he supposed from what he had heard of the principals in the "little affair" about to come off, that in all probability the services of a professional man would be required before it was over, he had come to volunteer his own. "The sabre," he added, "was an butcherly sort of weapon, and generally made wounds of that ugly description that defied surgery, but still it was as well to have a professional man on the ground, just for form's sake, if nothing else. Lieutenant Eagan thanked the Doctor for his offer and accepted it, on behalf of his principal, while for a moment or two the perspiring Adonis relapsed into a meditative silence. In consequence of the number of officers and others who gathered at the club room, it was now suggested that the party should adjourn to Baker's to continue the "exercises," which was accordingly done. There they found Baker in company with a stern looking Russian of large stature, whom the Doctor naturally enough took to be his adversary, the redoubtable Tretikoff, but who was in fact an officer in the Company's service, who happened to be present at the time. No one undeceived the Doctor on this point; but when he expressed a wish to have a conversation with his foe, Baker objected to such a proceeding as "irregular," and added that inasmuch as the gentleman did not understand a word of English, it would be impossible for the two to understand one another. The supposed Tretikoff taking his leave in a few moments, the sabre exercise was resumed, Lieutenant Livermore, who was a proficient in the use of the weapon, offering to give Adonis a lesson, which proved even a rougher one than that previously given by Eagan. At length the latter, looking at his watch, declared that it was time to start for the place of meeting, Baker had already disappeared in order, as he said, to attend his principal to the ground. An enormous sabre was now huckled to the Doctor's side, which he vainly endeavored to conceal beneath his overcoat. Accoutred in this warlike guise, and attended by his second, together with Livermore and one or two others, the Doctor was marched through the principal street of the town, an object of no little curiosity to the spectators. On reaching the ground it appeared that the other party had not yet arrived, nor were any soldiers visible to make the arrest promised by General Davis. Adonis, after looking around with some appearance of excitement, probably caused by his impatience for the combat, took Murphy aside, and asked him whether he was sure that he had made no mistake in informing the General where the fight was to come off. The pacificator was certain there was no mistake, and that the soldiers would soon make their appearance. The Doctor now began to exhibit a singular and inexplicable agitation, which no one could fail to observe, and which may be naturally accounted for upon the supposition that he dreaded lest the party detailed to arrest him should arrive before his adversary, and so deprive him of the opportunity of putting his newly acquired skill as a swordsman to practical use. Eagan kept comforting his principal with the assurance that "they would be on the ground in half a minute more;" that "Tretikoff wasn't the kind of fellow to keep a gentleman waiting on such an occasion," with more to the like effect. Meanwhile the "pacificator" exhibited nearly as much mental disturbance as his friend, and ran out to a small eminence every few seconds to see if any one was approaching. At length the sound of footsteps was heard. "There they come!" cried Eagan, "and egad its time. I've a mind to call Baker out myself for this infernal slight. Why, we might have had our Russian killed and eaten by this time. But I'll have satisfaction out of Baker for this, or know the reason why."

"They come?" gasped the Doctor, turning as yellow as a peculiarly sanguine complexion would permit, "Who come?"

"Why, Tretikoff and Baker, to be sure," responded the Lieutenant, "who else in the d—l's name should it be?"

"What?" faltered the Doctor, with another gasp, and looking as though he were going to faint. "Then there's something wrong. Murphy, I tell you there's something wrong. Why did I ever make such an ass of myself as to"—

But here these excited and somewhat incoherent exclamations were interrupted by a cry of delight from the pacificator, and the Doctor, turning round, saw that the new comers were not the hostile party, but an officer with a party of soldiers. In fact, it was Major Wood, the officer of the day, with a file of men, sent by General Davis to prevent the duel, and arrest the parties to it. The Major demanded to know who were the principals in the affair, and Adonis, who promptly answered for himself as the only principal upon the ground, was formally placed under arrest. Eagan eyed the Major with anything but a friendly look, and muttered something or other about a "d—d provoking interruption;" but his principal bore the disappointment with a cheerful resignation, that seemed almost like light-hearted joyousness, and on the return he was far the liveliest of the party, notwithstanding that he was marched as a prisoner through the most frequented thoroughfare of the town. Being taken before Gen. Davis, he stated his perfect willingness to give his parole that he "would not pursue the matter further." The General was so well satisfied of the Doctor's good faith in the matter, that he ordered him to be released upon having signed the following written parole, which was done:

SITKA, October 29th, 1867.

I, Dr. Byron Adonis, do solemnly pledge my sacred word as a gentleman of honor, that I will take no steps to violate the law by dueling. BYRON ADONIS.

Taken at Sitka, October 29th, 1867, before me,
SAMUEL H. KINNEY, 1st Lieut., Second Artillery.

Thus terminated the first of the "Alaska Duels;" but out of it sprang a fruitful crop of the most terrible quarrels. That between Baker and Eagan, which immediately succeeded the Tretikoff affair, will be related in next week's CALIFORNIAN, with the same historical fidelity that has characterized the present narrative. I ought perhaps to add, that Baker accounted for the non-appearance of himself and his principal at the appointed time and place, by stating that they had got wind of the intended arrest, and thought it best to keep out of the way. Adonis, however, had another theory on the subject, which he often broached in his more convivial moments, namely: that his adversary (whom he still believes to be the Russian official he met at Baker's) was so impressed and awed by his, the Doctor's, bold and fearless bearing, that his courage failed him at the last moment.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

On Monday night Maguires's Opera House was again opened after a week being devoted to redecorating and renovating, and Miss Fanny Young made her debut before the San Francisco public. The character of "Polly Marigold," in the drama of "Our Village," did not afford her much opportunity to display any talent, save for singing and dancing, and for both of these she gained much applause. Harry Jackson carried off the honors of the piece by his capital acting as "Tom Tulloch"; he played the part with an earnestness and vim that drew enthusiastic applause from the audience. Mrs. Sophie Edwin, "Florence," acted as usual, well. Miss Katy Lynch made her first appearance on the stage on this occasion. Miss Lynch is pretty and made a favorable impression. She will rapidly gain experience at the Opera House and will no doubt prove a desirable addition to the company. The wreck of the Rattlesnake in this play was one of the most effectively managed shipwrecks I have ever seen on the stage, and reflected credit on Harry Jackson, who at present fills the position of stage manager. The burlesque of Rum-ti-foo-zle concluded the performance. In this Miss Fanny Young caused much laughter by her impersonation of "Lady Nancy Bell," and was loudly applauded for her burlesque opera singing. Her dance was also received with much favor. Harry Jackson was tremendously funny as Rum-ti-foo-zle, and was admirably seconded by Willie Edouin, who perfectly revelled in the opportunity afforded him of being as extravagant as he liked and as funny as he could. The gymnastic feat in which Willie Edouin burlesqued the performance of a rope walker, by walking and dancing on a chalk line drawn on the stage, was capital, and caused much laughter. On Thursday the drama of Rose Redland or the Coiner's Wife, was produced, with Mrs. Sophie Edwin in the title role, L. F. Beatty as "Mark Redland," Harry Jackson as "Larry O'Gig," and Willie Edouin as "Sawney McFile." Harry Jackson and Willie Edouin in comic parts are a whole team; the comical sayings and doings of "Larry O'Gig," the Irishman and "Sawney McFile," the Scotchman kept the house in a roar of laughter. Harry Jackson is certainly an actor of wonderful versatility and in his own line of characters never fails to please. This play was repeated last night in conjunction with the extravaganza of Rum-ti-foo-zle, Miss Fanny Young gaining popularity on each successive evening of its representation. It will be played this afternoon, and will be the afterpiece this evening, the performance commencing with the drama of Ben Bolt, in which Miss Fanny Young will appear as "Mary Moonlight."

Next week Miss Young will go to Sacramento to fill an engagement with the members of the Opera House company, now performing at the Metropolitan Theatre in that city. On Monday evening the Webb sisters, who left these shores many years ago, juvenile prodigies, and who have returned talented and experienced actresses, will commence an engagement at the Opera House. They will appear in dramas, comedies, burlesques and musical farces. The pieces chosen for their first appearance, are The Foster Sisters and A Day Too Late. During the engagement of these actresses, seats can be secured a week in advance without extra charge. The box office was open yesterday, and the box sheet is already filling rapidly. Those who wish to obtain seats on Monday should lose no time in securing them, as there will certainly be a tremendous rush.

Under the Gaslight has run very successfully through the week. It will be repeated this afternoon and this evening for the last time. On Monday, Boucicault's last grand sensation Flying Scud will be produced. By some unaccountable oversight, Boucicault so arranged the scenes in this play that the interest culminated about the middle and the concluding scene formed an anti-climax; for this reason the play did not meet with the success which was anticipated for it in New York. This fault has been remedied in this city by a judicious transposition of scenes, and the grand scene where "Flying Scud" dashes across the stage and wins the race is now the last. The plot of this play is an interesting one and it abounds in telling situations. The dance by the Pigskin Club, where the members are represented by the ladies of the ballet in an extremely grotesque and original performance, and the ladies will no doubt look charming in jockey costume. New scenery has been painted for this play, and nothing has been left undone which can insure its success. The parts are well distributed. I notice, by the by, that Miss Clelia Howson has on this occasion to play a part new to her, that of a young English swell, but one in which I imagine she will appear to good advantage. Not having the cast before us I am unable to say anything further about the characters of the play and those who perform them. A magnificent horse has been "engaged" for the part of "Flying Scud." An idea of his value may be gained from the fact that his life has been insured for the period of his engagement for $1,000. Everything promises well, and I should not be surprised if Flying Scud were to prove even a bigger hit than Under the Gaslight.

On Tuesday evening the second party of the series of Occidental Theatricals was given at Turn Verein Hall. The weather being unpropitious, but a limited audience was present. Shylock was performed with Geo. M. Ciprico in the title role. I, and I am sure with me, all lovers of the works of Shakspeare wish that amateurs would leave them alone, and content themselves with domestic dramas and farces. Take the best amateur company ever formed, and even if there is one actor who is able to play the leading role, the greater portion of his support will be stupid and tame, and perhaps distort the text. It is not kind of Mr. Ciprico's friends to pat him on the back and praise him until he thinks himself a young Garrick or Edmund Kean. Very few actors play Shakspearian parts well, and it is very painful to see the creations of the immortal bard made ridiculous. Some will say, "Mr. Ciprico is a young amateur and should not be harshly criticised." Yes he should if he will play Shakspeare. The intelligent public don't want to see an amateur play Shakspeare, and he has no right to do it. Mr. Ciprico did not play "Shylock" well; he was assisted by his recollections of all the actors he had ever seen in the part, and gave his audience a little Charles Kean, then some Forrest, next some Bandmann, and last, worst of all, some Ciprico. I am not going to spare these amateurs if they won't leave Shakspeare alone. Then J. B. Badger, because he possesses sufficient elocutionary powers to enable him to sell chairs and tables and action sufficiently graceful to knock them down should not try to play "Bassanio." He threw about as much feeling into his part as is expressed in the tones of a drill-sergeant. Miss Bell Devine read "Portia" capitally, but then she is not an amateur. The amateur who knew his part thoroughly had carefully studied it, read it intelligently and well, and showed some of the requisites for the making of an actor, was Mr. James Cosgrove, who played "Antonio." He has a good stage presence, a fine voice, and acted his part with a modesty which was in itself a great recommendation. The dance did not come off but will be given on New Year's Eve, when, if there must be a dramatic performance, we hope there will be a less pretentious and a better one than that which took place on Tuesday last.

W. H. Blake's second operatic concert by colored performers at Dashaway Hall, on Tuesday evening last, was really a most creditable musical success. In spite of the rain which poured down in buckets-full, quite a large audience assembled. The performers who appeared, nearly all of them, possess fine voices and sang correctly, though they of course were somewhat lacking in the skill evinced by professionals in managing the voice. Several operatic choruses were very well sung. Miss Evans gained great applause for the manner in which she sang "Ah! canst thou leave me." She has a sweet, full voice. Miss Davis' beautiful contralto voice was heard to great advantage in the duet "Music on the Wave," which she sang with Miss Lester, who has a soprano voice of remarkable sweetness and purity. The programme was well performed throughout, and all who were present on Tuesday evening were thoroughly well pleased. TOUCHSTONE.

CALIFORNIA GRAPES IN NEW YORK.—The last number of Wilkes' Spirit of the Times, speaks of the condition of a sample shipment of California grapes, which arrived in New York after a twenty-two days' voyage, a greater portion of which was through the tropics in the hot season, as follows: "We saw last week a shipment of California grapes from the Sonoma Valley. There were three varieties—Rose of Peru, Muscats and Tokay. The first were all decayed, about one half of the Muscats were good, and of the most delicate flavor, far surpassing any Malagas we ever tasted. The Tokays, a large, firm, flame-colored grape, came in good condition, and, although less delicate in flavor than the Muscats were, from their rich color and immense size, tho most beautiful grapes of the lot. This shipment was an experiment of Mr. William Hill, of Sonoma; and from the success attending this first trial, we hope to see our markets liberally supplied with this luscious fruit, that grows there in such profusion and luxuriance. Experience will teach our California friends how to pack them, and the freight will be reduced when once the R. R. is finished." Ah! when once the railroad is finished, not only California grapes, but California fruit in general will become a familiar sight alongside the stinted productions of the Atlantic seaboard, and will give her a reputation only second to that which her gold mines and grain-fields have gained for her.

A GALLERY OF PACIFIC COAST PAINTINGS IN NEW YORK.—Butman, the well-known California artist, is preparing to have an exhibition of his paintings in New York. The Home Journal says they will consist of paintings of scenery in the Far West, in California, Oregon, Nevada, Washington Territory, etc., and will be on exhibition at Miner & Somerville's Gallery, 82 Fifth Avenue, on the 16th of December. They comprise about one hundred pictures painted from sketches taken by the artist during a ten years' sojourn on the Pacific coast.

AN attempt is to be made in New York to revive The Century, an excellent weekly, published there some years ago by Thomas E. McElrath.

WAITED FOR AT THE DOWNLEY STATION.

AS I stood at my door, looking for a passing cab, I could not help wishing that I had taken my wife's advice, and gone to Dowuley by an earlier train. The weather had grown much worse instead of better, and not only did the wind blow as boisterously as it had done all day, but its gusts now drove before them a heavy rain which would have wetted one through in a very few minutes. As a rule, disengaged cabs crawling slowly past my house were a nuisance, and now I had waited full a quarter of an hour without seeing one, and I knew that the margin beyond the number of minutes absolutely necessary for getting to the station was growing dangerously narrow. There was a howl—there was a deluge! I could never walk to the station in this. Ah! there was one. In answer to the man's hail, I dashed through my little garden, and in a few seconds was inside a four-wheeler.

"Great Southern, sir? yes, sir," said the man as he stood at the door, the rain pouring from his oilskin in streams. "An uncommon nasty night, sir."

So it was, and so I should fancy the fellow found it, for when he opened the door for me to alight at the station, a complete ring of water formed where he stood. We were in pretty good time after all, and I got my ticket and was seated comfortably in the carriage for some minutes before the moment of starting. There were very few passengers in any of the carriages, and in the one by which I traveled, and which was marked for the Dowuley branch, there were but two or three, and I was the only occupant of my compartment. The last bell had rung, the whistle had sounded, the premonitory scream from the engine had been given, and then, of course, had followed the first tug, when I heard a voice shout—

"This way, sir, this way."

A guard tore along the platform, followed by a belated passenger; my door was unlocked, the stranger jumped panting in, the door was slammed-to, a shilling changed hands rapidly, and we swept from the station.

"By Jove," exclaimed the new comer, wiping his forehead as he spoke, "by Jove, that was a close thing."

"Very," I assented, "and the last train too."

"The last train, certainly," said my companion. "I believe there is no way whatever of getting to Downley if you miss this train."

"There is none," I replied, "which is very inconvenient."

"Oh, excessively so," returned he. "Have you any objection?"

Of course, as he said this, he exhibited his cigar-case, and finding I had no objection, he pressed a cigar upon me, which I may remark was one of the very best I ever smoked, and then, without further speech, he reclined with his eyes closed, as though in deep thought.

He was a tall, good-looking man, with fine beard and moustache, very black and full. But I could not help thinking that his head was a little too much like a head from a hairdresser's window; and his attire was a trifle too like a picture from a fashion-book. Somehow, everything about him was too new and glossy to please me entirely, and his jewelry was also too profuse, but it could not be denied that his cigar was a capital one.

I sank into a reverie as deep as his own; indeed, I rather suspect I had begun to doze, when I was roused by the stopping of the train. My companion roused himself too. I was on the side nearer to the platform, and looked out.

"A rough night still, isn't it?" he said.

"It is indeed," I replied. "Just put your head out, and try how the wind is blowing."

"No, thank you," he returned with a smile, "I will take your word for it."

I laughed in reply, and was about to close the window, when the guard looked in. The official passed on, but returned in a few seconds, and stared somewhat curiously, I fancied, into the carriage. The scream and the tug came again, and on we went.

"That fellow had a good stare at you," said my companion.

"Well, I fancied he looked chiefly at you," I said; "but the fact was, I have no doubt, he smelt a somewhat powerful odor of tobacco, and he wished us to see that he did."

"I shouldn't wonder," said the stranger, throwing himself back with the languid air of one who takes no interest in a conversation. "Do we stop again before we arrive at the Downley branch?"

"No," I replied.

"Very good, then," he continued; "let us make ourselves comfortable."

And, by way of doing this, he unlocked a black valise he had with him, and drew out a couple of bottles of champagne, which proved as good in quality as his cigars. He next produced contrivances for glasses, which shut up into a mere ring. With these appliances, we very merrily journeyed over the twelve miles which remained of the main line, when "Dowuley Junction" was now shouted; and, as soon as we came to a stand, our carriage was detached from the train.

"All tickets ready, if you please," said the collector, appearing at the door. As we handed our pieces of pasteboard to the man, the same guard who had twice before looked in, peered over his shoulder, to the annoyance of my companion, who muttered something strongly condemnatory of his impudence.

In another moment the main line train was thundering over the viaduct, and dashing, with its roaring and its sparks, into the utter darkness of the night, while our modest little engine came fussing out of some siding, and was hooked on to its smaller charge.

"Now we're off to Downley," exclaimed my new friend.

But he was wrong. A delay of some minutes yet took place, which really seemed quite unnecessary; for there was not a soul on the platform—along which the gusts of rain and wind swept fiercely—save and except the station-master, who, well wrapped up, twice walked slowly past our carriage, and looked sideways at us, with a very keen expression, or so I fancied. My fellow-traveler did not see this, as he was fixedly gazing into vacancy from the other side of the carriage. At last we puffed on to the branch. We had got into pretty good speed as we passed the second platform, which, on the Dowuley branch, exists for the convenience of up passengers, when, to my amazement, the door was pulled open, and a young man jumped in.

"Come, my lad," I remonstrated, "this is a very dangerous game; and surely we have been long enough at the station for you to get in leisurely."

"Yes," he said, with a grin.

On looking at him I thought he was one of the most dissipated, impudent-looking young fellows I had ever seen.

"Yes; you've been at the station long enough!" he added.

Then he stopped, without any perceptible reason, to grin again, and to wink at me. I tried to freeze him by a scornful look, but it had not the least effect upon him.

"Now," he continued, "do either of you gents know me?"

"I do not," was my reply.

My companion turned his face from the window for an instant, and bestowing a lofty glance of contempt upon the speaker, resumed his gaze. The new-comer was in no way abashed at the cool manner in which his advances were received, but resumed—

"I want to have a little talk with one of you, but I don't know which. Have either of you ever heard of Tawell, the Quaker, who was waited for when he got out of the train, all through the electric telegraph, which was a new thing in his time?"

I stared at the speaker, while my fellow-traveler bestowed a momentary glance upon him as before.

"Oh, come," continued the young fellow, assuming a still more knowing expression, "this won't do. The branch is only seven miles long, and one of you is wasting time awfully. Which of you is likely to be waited for at Downley?"

I could only continue my blank stare at the boy (he was little better); my fellow-traveler just moved, but I took no notice of him.

"Come, I say," urged the youth, "don't be a fool, one of you. I'm telegraph clerk at the junction, and I have wired to Downley to have a couple of blues ready for this carriage—two hundred and four B; that's the number you see. Oh, that's enough," he went on, turning to my new friend; "I can see which is the party. You're in for it, mister."

"But—but why should—how could anybody know?" began the gentleman, and his voice was now husky and quavering.

"That doesn't matter, that I see," retorted the youth; "the only question is, are you afraid of a policeman just now, or are you not?"

"Well, there are circumstances at present——"

"That will do," interrupted the clerk; "I don't want to know particulars. It was the guard of the down train, Bill Rixon, (he's been a policeman himself), put the station-master at the junction on the scent. They were very close over it. But he didn't say to me, 'Here, Sam, you share in whatever reward we get;' and, of course, they expect to get something."

"But what is the use of your telling me this now?" demanded the gentleman.

"Just this," returned Mr. Samuel. "Can you find a pound or two for advice that will get you out safe?"

"Yes; here are five sovereigns. Will that do?" said my friend.

"Good," ejaculated the clerk, dropping the money into his pocket; "now listen. About a mile this side of Downley, the road is under repair, and the orders are not to run over it at more than five miles an hour—in fact, just before they get there, the train very nearly stops. I'll tell you the right place to jump out, and I've got a key. If this other party can manage it, he had better make himself scarce too, I think. There will be a row when they open the doors at Downley."

"But what will you do?" asked my fellow traveler.

"Why, you don't suppose I should be such a fool as to stay in after you had got out," retorted the clerk, with a laugh. "Nobody knows I'm in the train, and it's worth my walking four miles to my lodgings if I can earn five pounds by doing it."

"Now sir," said the stranger, turning to me, "it is not fair for me to involve you in this trouble."

"Don't mention it," I said. It was a stupid thing to say, but perhaps the champagne had something to do with it.

"But I must mention it," returned my fellow-passenger. "The fact is that it is dangerous for you to remain here. If the carriage arrives with no one but you in it, the officers will certainly mistake you for me. Two days, at least will be required to establish your identity, during which you will be kept closely in confinement."

This was an alarming prospect indeed. Two days' confinement, not to speak of the annoyance and disgrace, would have been ruin to me. I had business on the following day of vital importance, which could not possibly be postponed, and my companion's anticipations seemed only too probable. "I hope," I said hesitatingly, "I hope you have not been engaged in any transaction of a questionable nature."

"Oh, as to that," returned my companion, "I will tell you frankly the whole truth about this painful case. You are a gentleman, and a man of honor, and will not betray me. I am an officer in the army; I cannot now enter into particulars, but my lieutenant-colonel was a scoundrel, a villain of the deepest dye. I challenged him—I horsewhipped him; the coward bore his disgrace. But his time came. He brought most unfounded charges against me, which, were certain officers in England, I could easily rebut. In their absence I may be ruined. I sent off two expresses to Canada and Bengal yesterday, but until they return I must conceal myself. But I weary you."

"Far from it," I exclaimed. "Pray go on."

"I have little more to say," he resumed. "You know why I fly. I will tell you who I am. My name is Lionel Gerald de Mortimer—have you an Army List about you?"

I mechanically clapped my hands upon my waistcoat pockets, as if to be quite certain on the matter, and regretfully said, "No, I have not."

"It's of little consequence," resumed the officer. "I should merely have shown you that the Honorable Lionel Gerald de Mortimer's name is in no plebeian corps. My father the baron's name, is of course, familiar to you."

I murmured that it was, and Samuel, the telegraph clerk, also murmured that it was familiar to him.

"May I confide in you?" said the fugitive.

"You can," I exclaimed. "You can," echoed Samuel, the telegraph clerk, and then we all shook hands. The officer stooped to his valise again, and the clerk hurriedly whispered:

"I say, we're all right."

He winked, and struck the side of his nose with his finger, and I mechanically imitated his gesture. The train was slackening speed now, but the captain—for such I had decided was his rank—produced another bottle, this time of brandy, and we all three quaffed to his escape—Samuel, the telegraph clerk, drinking, it seemed to me, rather more than his share. "Adieu! my preserver," exclaimed the officer, as the clerk rose and carefully unlocked the door.

"Fling out your bag," said the youth; this was accordingly done. "Now jump the way the train is going."

We did so, and although somewhat shaken, no harm was done, and we saw the angry lights at the rear of the carriages disappear with quickening speed round a curve.

"Well, I'm off," exclaimed the clerk, "good luck to you captain," and he vanished in the darkness.

"Now, where on earth are we to go?" said my friend. "I only thought of coming to Dowuley, because it was, I supposed, a quiet retired place; but I don't know the neighborhood."

"I do," I said, "follow me." He followed me accordingly, and I told him that I would take him to the little inn at which I usually lodged, and where I could obtain a bed for him. This latter offer he declined. He said he would just wash, and have some bread and cheese, and then walk across the country to a town he named some few miles off. I, of course, allowed him to decide on his own movements without comment, and in a few minutes we arrived at my inn, which was, luckily, a good way out of Downle in our direction. Tired and splashed as he was, for the night was still wet and tempestuous, the officer decided upon having "his crust," as he called it, which turned out to be a very hearty meal of cold roast beef, before refreshing himself with a wash. I then took him up stairs to my room, and as we crossed the landing he said, pointing to a staircase—

"Where does that flight lead to?"

"Oh, only to the back yard of the house," I replied, and we entered.

I had obtained two candles, and he went, taking his valise with him into the dressing room, while I sorted some papers which I had brought down with me. I heard him washing, and in a minute or two, hearing a footstep coming from the drawing-room, I looked up. I recoiled with an exclamation of alarm, for there stood a man in a moleskin jacket and trowsers, cloth cap, shaven face, and close cut hair.

"Oh, it's all right, I should say, if you don't know me," said the man, and I recognized the voice of Captain de Mortimer.

"What!" I cried, more astounded than before. "In the name of all that is wonderful, what does this mean;"

"You are not a bad fellow, but you are very green," returned the voice; "a greater spoony I never saw—nor a better hearted one. Why, old fellow, you stare as if you had never read of a sham moustache or beard. Good-bye, old chap, you have made a mistake to night, that's all; and our sharp young friend of the telegraph department has made a much greater. I won't ask you to shake hands with me again, because you are a gentleman and a man of honor, though soft, and I am a rogue; but take this."

As he spoke he offered me a ring.

"I don't want——" I began.

"Nonsense," said he; "take it. It is one of the few things which are really and honestly my own; believe me for once when I tell you I have had that ring for twenty years. That's right. I wish you good luck. Good-bye."

He was gone; valise, moleskin clothes, felt cap, and all. I heard him run steadily down the back stairs, and I never saw him again. I had disturbed sleep that night, dreaming of officers, both of the army and of the police, and woke very little refreshed in the morning. Luckily, the weather was now fine, and my business demanded that I should be in Downley early.

As I entered the market-place, I saw several small groups staring at placards, evidently newly-fixed; indeed a man was posting one up as I got there. I naturally stopped to see what it was about, and saw that it was headed, in bold type "Robbery. Five Hundred Pounds Reward." It went on to describe the appearance of Mr. John Macely in such language as to leave no little doubt as to who my companion on the preceeding evening Captain de Mortimer really was.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND AND PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bonrne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

☞ Use Ellery's Patent India Rubber Cement and Paint.—It is for all outside surfaces, TIN, IRON, OR METAL ROOFS; Iron however manufactured, Brick and Wooden Buildings, Ship and steamboat Painting; will not rot, peel, blister, or crack. Water-proof coating for cloth roofing on tops of houses, decks of steamboats, tops of stages and cars. Cloth roofs cemented and painted for $9 per 100 square feet. New or old Tin Roofs, in good or bad condition, cemented and painted, guaranted, at $1 to $2 50 per 100 square feet.

EPES & E. H. R. ELLERY,
No. 226 Jackson street.

F. DIXEY,
Merchant Tailor,

625 WASHINGTON STREET.

Cloths, Cassimeres for Vestings, always on hand and made to order in the most Fashionable Styles.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Removal! Removal!

A. J. PLATE,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

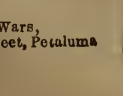
—ALSO—

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS,



Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, etc., etc.

—HAS REMOVED TO—

NO. 510 SACRAMENTO STREET,

Between Sansome and Leidesdorff Streets, San Francisco.
☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner

---

Removal.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,
Machinist,

Has removed from No. 416 Market street, to No. 10 Stevenson street, next to the corner of First.

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

Removal.

DR. HEALD,
DENTIST,

Has removed from Kearny street to the southwest corner of MONTGOMERY AND BUSH STREETS.

☞ Entrance on both streets.

JOSEPH FREDERICKS
CARPET AND UPHOLSTERY STORE,
PAPER HANGINGS, ETC.,

123 Kearny St., between Sutter and Post, San Francisco

FAMILIES ARE INVITED TO EXAMINE

OUR VARIED ASSORTMENT

Of the Finest Carpeting in the State. The best of taste displayed in Decoration and the unique Upholstering of Rooms, Halls and Public Buildings, and at prices conforming to the times. Call and examine goods.

Carrington's Yeast Powders

ARE THE BEST IN THE MARKET.

Try them if you do not believe it.

I. LANDSBERGER, Sole Agent,
429 Jackson Street.

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma

PARIS EXPOSITION,
1867.
GLORIOUS NEWS
FOR
THE FLORENCE!

OFFICIAL CATALOGUE JUST RECEIVED, (September 8th) the only copy on this coast—29 days from London. FREE FOR INSPECTION.

THE FLORENCE

RECEIVED THE ONLY PREMIUM awarded to any Sewing Machine (except Button Hole Machine) for sale on the Pacific Coast.

SAMUEL HILL, Agent,
No. 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

D. GHIRARDELLI & CO.'S
Italian Manufactury,

415 and 417 JACKSON ST., SAN FRANCISCO,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PLAIN, SWEET, CINNAMON AND VANILLA CHOCOLATES;
PREPARED COCOA, COCOA PASTE,
CRACKED COCOA, COCOA SHELLS, etc., etc.
PURE GROUND OLD JAVA COFFEE AND COSTA RICA COFFEE;
CHARTRES AND RIO COFFEE;
GREEN COFFEE OF EVERY QUALITY.
CHOICE WINES AND LIQUORS.

N. B.—Ghirardelli's Chocolate is manufactured by steam from Cocoa of the finest quality, imported direct. In excellence and delicacy of flavor, it is superior to any Imported Chocolate.

M. S. WHITING. F. G. BERRY.

WHITING & BERRY,

DEALERS IN

TEAS, WINES
AND SPIRITS,

FOR MEDICINAL and FAMILY USE.

Apothecaries, Physicians, Invalids and Families supplied, in quantities to suit, Wholesale or Retail, with

FINE,
MEDIUM,
or LOW PRICED QUALITIES.

609 Sacramento st., second door above Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

SIXTH
INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION,

Under the auspices of the

Mechanics' Institute,

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE UNDERSIGNED, ACTING UNDER authority from the Mechanics' Institute of the city of San Francisco, take great pleasure in announcing to the Public that they have resolved upon holding an Industrial Exhibition in the month of August, 1868, on a much larger scale than was ever before attempted on this coast; and they make this early announcement of their intention, that all who may desire to participate shall have ample time for preparation.

A programme, embracing rules and regulations for the government of participants, with a list of Premiums to be awarded, etc., is receiving such earnest and careful attention as the importance of the enterprise demands, and in due season the same will be made public by circular letters widely distributed, and by advertisements in the leading journals of this coast.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:

GEO. K. GLUYAS,	J. P. O'CONNOR,
THOMAS YOUNG,	EDWARD NUNAN,
D. E. HAYES,	GARONER ELLIOTT,
HORACE D. DUNN,	H. F. WILLIAMS,
GEO. T. BOHEN,	C. M. PLUM,
H. ROSENBAUM,	J. A. PRITCHARD,
C. H. HARRISON,	WM. J. LEWIS,
D. R. COLEMAN,	W. W. HANSCOM,
W. C. PEASE,	JOS. MOSHEIMER,
JAMES SPIERS,	WILLIAM CORCORAN,
C. L. TILDEN,	D. A. MACDONALD,
IRVING M. SCOTT,	GEO. COFRAN.

SOTOYOME HOTEL,
B. C. WRIGHT, Proprietor, Healdsburg Cal.

STERETT'S PRINTING OFFICE,

No. 533 Clay Street.

Cards, Billheads, Circulars, Books, Briefs, Transcripts, Posters, Bills of Fare Envelopes, Letter and Note Headings, Tickets, Pamphlets, and all Legal Papers printed at short notice, and upon reasonable terms.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Joseph Catania & Co.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FRESH AND SALT

STALL NO. 48 FISH MARKET, Clay Commercial and Leidesdorff Streets.

A large supply of fresh fish always on hand. Shipping, Restaurants, Hotels and Families supplied at short notice, and on the most reasonable terms.

N. B.—Fish sent to any part of the city free.

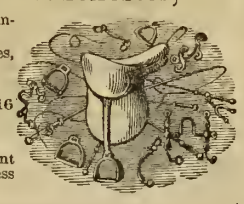
SAVE YOUR TEETH.—Do not have them extracted without first consulting a good Dentist. The loss is irreparable, and, in many instances, unnecessary. DR. BEERS, corner of Montgomery and Sutter Sts., makes a specialty of filling the fangs of dead Teeth, and building up broken crowns with Pure Gold—thus restoring them to their original usefulness and beauty.

☞ Call and examine the work. Finest quality of artificial work also manufactured.

C. MAIN. E. H. WINCHESTER. T. R. HAYES.

Main & Winchester,

Manufacturers and Importers of

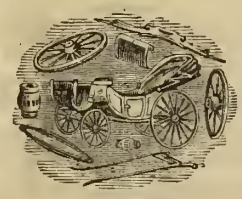


Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Collars, Saddlery Ware, etc.

Nos. 214 and 216 Battery Street,
San Francisco.

N. B.—Good assortment Concord Stags Harness constantly on hand.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with prompt ness, and at prices to suit the times.

C. ROBERTS,
CARRIAGE AND WAGON MAKER,

HORSE
SHOEING
AND JOBBING

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

Fourth Street, between Howard and Folsom,
San Francisco.

All styles of Carriages, Wagons and Carts made to order and Repaired.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

AT THE REGULAR

RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.

Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,

JEWELRY AND ATERIALS.

☞ We have made arrangements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter

Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.

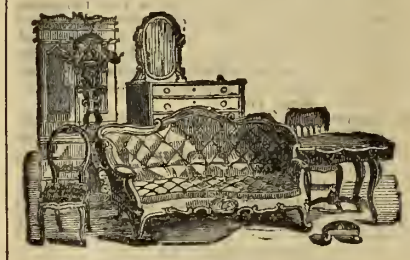
Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

NOTICE.

WE TAKE OCCASION TO INFORM OUR FRIENDS and customers that we have sold our entire stock in warehouse also invoices to arrive to Messrs. N. COLE & CO., 312 and 314 Pine steeet. The whole forms a most complete and desirable assortment of FURNITURE, and well merits attention before purchasing elsewhere.

J. PIERCE & CO.



FURNITURE.

WE beg leave to call the attention of the public to our warerooms,

Nos. 312 and 314 Pine Street.

Having purchased the entire stock of Messrs. J. Pierce & Co., and in addition to our large invoices from our factory at the East, we are prepared to fill all orders promptly, both wholesale and retail, and call the attention of the public to our salesroom, as containing the most complete assortment of desirable goods on this coast.

N. P. COLE & CO.

J. CUTBERLET,
CUSTOM
BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

—ALSO—

FRENCH SCREWED BOOTS AND SHOES,

No. 546 Washington Street, near Montgomery Street.

The finest quality of CUSTOM WORK neatly executed. Always on hand other fine work ready made.

Chickering & Sons' Pianos

RECEIVED THE

FIRST PREMIUM,
(Gold Medal,)
At the Paris Exposition.

FURTHERMORE, THE Improvements, Workmanship, and General Superiority of those instruments over all others on exhibition, was so marked an important, the Emperor created Mr. T. E. CHICKERING

KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOR.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

WM WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter

Dealer in

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &C., &C.,

735 Market Street.
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco

THE "GROTTO,"
JOHN DUNCAN, Proprietor.
530 Sacramento street, opposite What Cheer House,
FINE WINES, LIQUORS, ALES AND PORTER,
Wholesale and Retail.
Importer of Wise's Celebrated Irish Whisky.

"OUR OPERA."
CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,
621 WASHINGTON STREET, 621,
SAN FRANCISCO,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

N. GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

LIST OF PUBLICATIONS,

1867.

Poems. By Charles Warren Stoddard. "They evince the possession of a fresh and delicate faucy, a nice ear for meolody, nnaffected love for uature, and a pure purpose."—Bulletin. An elegant 8vo. Illustrated. $3 00.

Ontcroppings; Gems from California Poets. A beautiful small quarto; gilt, $1 00.

Confucius and the Chiuese Classics; or, Readings in Chiuese Literature. Edited and compiled by Rev. A. W. Loomis. The first book printed from stereotype plates in California. "One of the most eutertaining volumes issued from the American press for many a day."—Territorial Enterprise. A handsome 12mo. 2 00

Chinese and Englisb Phrase Book; With the Chinese pronuuciation indicated in Euglish, Specially ndapted for the use of merchants and families. By Benot Lancot. Second edition revised and enlarged. "A Roman & Co. have hit the nail on the head in the publication of this book."—Christian Advocate. 1 00.

In Bonds: A Novel. By Laura Preston. "A novel of more than ordinary elevatiou of purpose, carefully and effectively wrought out."—Pacific. A triumph in tbe authorship, and in the printing and publishing line." Times Paper, 1 25 Cloth, 1 75.

Leah's Confessions. An Autobiography. "The Anthor's pen is fine aud powerful. The moral of the novel is, ou the whole, good and wbolesome." Pacific. A handsome 8vo in paper, 75.

Carrie Carlton's Popular Letter-Writer. "The autbor has laid the public under a real obligation in this bappily concieved aud cleaverly-executed manual.—Bulletin. "'The Chronicles of Belleair' make a good story, and the love letters and other correspondeuce therein given are quite natural nnd appropriate."—Sacramento Union. 16mo. 75.

The Resources of California. By John S. Hittell. A California Prize Book, exclusively Californian in composition and manufacture. A large 12mo. 2 25.

A Youth's History of California, By Lucia Norman. A popular History for all classes of readers, young and old. "The book is a highly meritorions and interestiug one."—Round Table. A pretty 12mo. 1 00.

Route to California by the Isthmus of Panama. A useful aud iuteresting book to every traveler. 50.

Nevada and California Processes of Silver and Gold Extraction. By Guido Kustell. The best practical work on tbe subject. 8vo., cloth, 5 00.

The Elemeuts of Composition. By Prof. Aug. Layres. 12mo. cloth, 1 00.

Belles Lettres. By Prof. Layres. Second book of the series. "The writer, the lawyer, the minister or the statesman may study these rules and regulations with profit."—Bulletin. 12mo, clotb, 1 00.

The Greek Slave. A story by Ianthe. "A touching tale of Greek suffering under Moslem rule." —Alta. In paper, 75 cents; clotb, 1 00.

Instructions in Gymnastics. By Arthur aud Charles Nahl With numerous plates. Quarto, 2 50.

May Wentworth's Fairy Tales from Gold Lands. The scenes of most of these Tales are laid in California, introducing Emperor Norton and other local characters. A handsome 16mo. Illustrated, 1 00.

Legal Titles to Mining Claims and Water Rights in California. By Gregory Yale, (counselor at Law. "The first through discussion of the subject of mining property in the United States, and one much needed."—Sacramento Union. 8vo, sheep, 7 50.

Our publications are for sale by book sellers generally, and sent, post paid, on receipt of price by the publishers. Address, A. ROMAN & CO., San Francisco.

JOHN DANIEL,

Marble Works,

421 PINE STREET,

(Between Kearny and Montgomery.)

MANTELS, MONUMENTS, TOMBS, PLUMBERS' SLABS, ETC.,

On hand and manufactured to order.

Orders respectfully solicited.

H. T. GRAVES,

Manfacturer of

WIRE CLOTH, COAL SCREENS, FLOUR SEIVES, QUARTZ SCREENS, for Batteries, Door and Window Screens, for excluding Flies and Mosquitos.

CLOAK, SHAWL, CLOTHING AND BONNET STANDS

Fancy Work for Gardens, and a great variety of

WIRE WORK OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.

Sole Agent for the sale and application of

BROWN'S PATENT AND METALIC WEATHER STRIPS,

For the perfect exclusion of wind, dust, and rain; ☞ And for CRAMER'S PATENT WINDOW LIFTING PLATES AND RODS.

Call and examine them at the

CALIFORNIA WIRE WORKS,

412 Clay street, San Francisco.

R. T. HOUSTON,

Merchant Tailor,

No. 414 BUSH STREET,

Between Kearny and Dupont, San Francisco.

Steam Scouring, Cleansing and Repairing neatly executed.

Also—Ladies' Cloth Dresses and Cloaks neatly Cleaned and Pressed, or Mis-Fits altered.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S

SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

APOTHECARIES AND CHEMISTS.
J. H. Cogeshall, N. W. cor Third and Folsom.
Geo S Dickey, Pioneer Apothecary, cor Ellis & Stockton
Dr. T. B. Kelly, 503 Davis, corner of Jackson street.
Wm. Simpsou, 609 Davis st., opposite Oakland Ferry.

ARCHITECTS.
Hoagland & Newsom, s.w. cor Kearny and Sacramento.
McDougall & Marquis, 328 Montgomery street.

ALE, PORTER, AND CIDER.
J. H. Todman & Co., (Jobbers,) 511 Front street.
Maguire & Co. Hibernia Bottling Establishm't 40 First.

BAKERIES.
Dempsey's Bakery, 127 Fourth street,
Robt. Zundel, Fancy Cake and Confectionery, 16 4th st

BOARDING HOUSES.
Mechanics' Exchange, Slaven & Delhunty, 111 First st.
New England House, J. Schleicher, 205 Sansome st.

BOOKSELLER.
H. C. Bateman, 227 Kearny, bet. Sutter and Bush sts.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
S. Ambroise, sign of the red shoe, 29 Fourth st.
John Mason, 5 Second st. near Market.
Lake & Co. (m'f'trs Japan Paste Blacking) 504 Market.
Justin Macarthy, (Boot maker,) 427 Fourth st nr Silver.
Joseph Rosenblum, 29 Third st.
Jacob Wattell, 559 Market st.
W. H. Hanna, (children's work,) 335 Sutter street.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac,) 210 Pine

BOWLING SALOONS.
Occidental, Cameron & Goodwin, Market opp. Second.

BRUSH AND BROOM MANUFACTURERS.
California Brush Factory, 1009 Stockton, near Jackson.
San Francisco Brush Factory, 211 to 217 California st.

CIGARS AND TOBACCO.
J. R. Ojeitz, 312 Third st, near Folsom.
W. Priehatch, 144 Third st.
J. R. Rines, 154 Second st near Howard.
Kuhn & Lopez, 401 Kearny, southwest corner Pine.
Lindsey & Clune, Excelsior Store, 156 Stewart street.
M. Rosenshine, (Wholesale and Retail,) 214 Pacific st.

CLOTHING.
Mrs. C. Cryer, (Children's Clothing,) 26 Fourth st.
H. Levy, 54 Fourth street, near Mission.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
Mrs: Ezekiel, (Ladies' Clothing,) 403 Kearny st.
Meyersteiu & Lowenberg. N. W. cor Bush and Kearny.
William Sherman, 608 Montgomery street.

COAL DEALERS.
H. W. Newbauer, all kinds of coal, 121 Sansome street.
S. Klein, formerly Greenhood & Co., 209 Sansome street.

COACH AND CARRIAGE MATERIALS.
Waterhouse & Lester, (Dealers,) 29 and 31 Battery st.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.

CONFECTIONERS.
Baldwin & Lawlers, South Park Store, 418 Third st.
J. F. Donnelly, 112 Kearny st. near Sutter.
Ellwood & Ryan, (Fruits, etc.,) 258 Third st.
Mrs. Kain, 617 Mission, near Second.
J. Vogeley & Bro. 46 Second st.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 645 Clay street:
Dr. A. B. Campbell, 17 Third st.
Dr. Heald, S. W. cor. Montgomery and Bush sts.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DRESS AND CLOAK MAKERS.
Mrs. Taylor & Mrs. Jones 258 First, near Folsom.
Mme. Weller, 129 Second st.

DRY GOODS.
Irving, Landers & Co., No. 4 Third street.
Keane Brothers, 218 Third, bet Howard and Tehama.
M. Waterman, 22 Second street, corner of Stevenson.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co. 9 Montgomery street.
S. Mosgrove, 222 Third, bet Howard and Tehama sts.

FAIRBANKS' SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot 120 California street.

DRIED FISH.
Torello Kiczolc, corner Fonrth and Brannan sts.

FRINGE, CORD, AND TRIMMING FACTORY.
M. Ettinger, 125 Kearny st., bet Post and Sutter.

FURNITURE AND BEDDING.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Regan, 29 Second st.
Jacob Schreiber, 121 and 123 Sansome, bet. Pine & Bush
G. Scheier, (Crockery and Glassware,) 20 Fourth st.

GROCERS.
N. Bruns, northwest corner Third and Berry sts.
M. Farron, 523 Fourth st, corner Welsh.
Derby & Johnson, northeast cor. Bush and Powell sts.
Flinn & Neale, cor. Third and Tehama.
Fred. Lange, Family Grocer, cor. Powell and Lombard.
Jos. Van Doren, northeast cor. Bush and Mason sts.
Bernard Railly, 219 Second, cor Tehama.
Hermou Scnuidt, corner Third and Harrison.
Seneca Jones, Family Grocer, 105 Third street.
Wellman, Peck & Co., wholesale grocers, 404 Front st.

GUN-SMITHS.
W. Rudolph, Union Gun Store, 216 Pacific street.
Wilson & Evans, 513 Clay street.

H. & L. AXLE-GREASE.
Manufactory 146 Tehama st, and at North Beach.

HAIR DRESSING SALOONS.
Anthes & Fleischman, 329 Kearny, near Bush st.

HARDWARE AND CUTLERY.
L. B. Benchley & Co., (American and Foreign,) 3 and 5 Front street.
J. S. Sesser, 138 Fourth st, bet. Mission and Howard.

HATTERS.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.
Nickerson & Co., 35 Kearny, below Post.

HAY AND GRAIN.
Grant & Smith, 26 Market and 19 Sacramento sts.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.
George Morrow & Co., 21 Clay and 28 Commercial sts
Wm. H. Nichols, 18 Sacramento, and 17 Commercial.

HOTELS.
Atlantic House, John McManus, 210 and 212 Pacific st.
"Branch," M. O'Neil, 12 Sutter street.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, Droste & Pfefferle. 220 Pacific street.
Empire House, Peter Thompson, 106 Jackson street.
Franklin Hotel, Hugh Curran, cor Sansome & Pacific.
Franklin House, C. Maloney, cor. Br'dway & Sansome.
Golden Gate Hotel, J. Blackmun, 728 Market street.
Mariner's Home, Brown & Chandler, 504 and 506 Davis.
"Oriental," H. Saxtorph & Co., Washington & Drumm.
Sauders' Hotel, J. P; Sanders, 24 Sacramento st.

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER.
Michael English, 414 Pine street.

HARNESS AND SADDLE MANUFACTURERS.
A. B. Bois, 510 Davis street,
M. G. Conway, 721 Market bet. Third & Fourth sts.
D. Fennel, 522 Battery street, opposite the Post Office.
H. D. Jameson, Market st. opposite Treadwell & Co.
Mead & Son, 557 Market, opp. Sansome.
H. Weaver, 671 Market, bet. Second and Third.

INSURANCE.
Firemen's Fund Ins. cor. California and Sansome.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agets, 206 Front, cor. Cal.
North British Mercantile, S. E. cor Sansome & Califor'
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
People's Insurance Co., N. E. cor, Montgomery & Pine.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY, CONTINUED.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, AND FANCY GOODS.
Jackson & Spaulding, 55 Third st. near Mission.

LADIES' FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.
Thomas Collinson, 160 Third, near Howard street.

LIVERY STABLES.
Central Stable, Washburn & Co., 207 and 209 Sutter st.
Gardner & Finch, 211 and 213 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Davis, cor. Mission & Spear sts.

MARBLE WORKERS.
Zeglio & Moore, 783½ Market, bet Third and Fourth.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
B. Currau, 109 Kearny above Post.
R. Phillip, 518 Market, near Metropolitan Market.
John Straub, 351 Third st.

MARKETS.
Bennett & Wallace, 151 Third street.
J. Hertz & Co. 107 Second, near Mission.
F. J. Stelling, San Jose Market, 154 First st.
L. Gaus, "New York Market," Fourth st, near Market.
C. Wagner & Co., (Golden Gate,) 512 Davis street.

MEERSCHAUM PIPE MANUFACTURERS.
Chas. Koldinau, 507 Kearuy, near Sacramento st.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st

MILLINERS.
Mrs. Cowles, 122 Third st.

MUSIC TEACHERS.
Prof. J. R. Boullet, Pianist and Vocalist, 1320 Stockton.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PAINT MANUFACTURERS.
Epes & Ellery, dealers in paints, etc, 226 Jackson st.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.
James R. Kelly, 38 California street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
H. Bush, corner Post, Market and Montgomery streets.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
Kohler, Chase & Co., 421 Montgomery street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st

PLUMBERS AND GAS FITTERS.
Chas. Barman, 121 Fourth street, near Minna.

PRINT SELLER AND PUBLISHER.
Thomas H. Lawlor, Second street, near Howard;

PRODUCE COMMISSION MERCHANTS.
Dorman & Woli, 426 Davis street.
George Hughes, 410 Davis street.
Johnson & Harmon, 412 Davis street near Washington.
J. W. Nye & Co., 219 Washington street, corner Cedar.
Thos. Newell, 62 Clay street between Drumm and East.
S. C. Wilson & Co., S. E. corner Clay and Davis sts.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, W. Wilson, manager, 640 Market st.
Cammet's, 57 and 59 Third, near Mission st.
Clipper Restaurants, J. Stock, 721 Sansome & 414 Market
Delmonico's, Young & Mandell, 45 Second st.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloou, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
J. A. Milcy & Perrin, Ladies' Restaurant, 521 Kearny.
New York Bakery, G. S. Hall & Co. 628 Kearny near Clay
Market, by Hauzo & Besson, 520 Merchant street
Philadelphia, Geo. Meuller & Chas. Bergold, 408 Pine.

SALOONS.
Beck's Saloon, 504 Drumm street, near Pacific.
Blaney & Carroll, "Sample Rooms," 107 Third street.
Brevoort Exchauge, Barrington & Werner, 44 Fourth.
John Burns, Bomboat Exchange, Berry st, near Third.
Carr & McElroy's, opposite San Jose R. R. Depot.
Clement Dixon's Ale Vaults, Nos. 2 & 3, Summer st.
Charley Smith's Saloon, 539 Washington street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.
Cleveland's Sample Rooms, 318 Bush, above Montg'y.
W. B. Dolan's, 145 Third, corner Hunt street.
Donahue & Phelau, 321 Second st.
Evans' Saloon, Long Bridge, corner Berry and Third.
"Excelsior," Haase & Co., cor. Drum and Commercial.
Fitch & Little, fancy liquors, Summer st. near the Markt
Fourth Street Exchange, Chas. F. Sluter, 245 Fourth st.
James Gibb, "Cosmopolitan," 617 Merchant street
German Hall, Ed. Angelis, Propr., 18 Sansomo st.
Headquarters, Decols & McLean, Fourth, cor Townsend.
J. P. Lavins' Saloon, northwest cor. Battery & Br'dwy
J. Dillon, "Fourth St. Exchange," cor. Fifth and Mkt.
John B. Holje & Co., 28 Clay street.
John J. Kahman, N. W. cor. Post and Kearny sts.
King & McCormick, "Rotunda," Market & O'Farrell.
A. Leppert, New Corner, corner Fourth and Berry.
Mechanics' Sample Room, C. Diebrichsen, 1st, cor Mrkt
"Manadnock," A. Horstkemper, Drumm & Oregon sts.
Nolan's Exchange, Ball & Racket Court, 732 Howard st.
Meyer & Quaid s, S. E. corner Market and Fourth sts
A. Phister & Co. (Punches) cor Leidesdorff and Halleck.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Ring's Saloon, Peter Ring, California st., below Drumm.
Squarza's, A. Bona, Prop'r, 120 Leidesdorff st.
Uncle Billy & George, Saloon 707 Davis st.
Union Saloon, C. H. Cordes, Market, below Fremont.
"Young American," Geo. C. W Heuer. Stewart & Howard

SAWING, PLANING AND MOULDING MILLS.
D. A. Macdonald & Co. corner Market and Beale sts.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Henry Lehnhardt, (dealer in all kinds) 3d cor Tehama

SHIPWRIGHTS, CAULKERS AND SPAR-MAKERS.
Coombs & Taylor, 109 Market street.

SODA AND MINERAL WATERS.
Empire Soda Works, corner Third and Harrison.

STATIONERS AND BOOKBINDERS.
Jas. E. Damon & Co., 421 and 423 Sansome street.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
M. J. Blackman, 302 Third street, near Folsom.
Reinzi Hughes, (also Crockery and Glassware) 215 3d.
A. Swigert, corner Filth and Folsom.
Schuster Bros., 102 Kearny, near Post st.
Murphy & Sheldon, (Metal Roofers, etc.) 153 Third st.

UMBRELLA AND PARASOL MANUFACTORIES.
C. King & Co., (repairing and fitting) 255 Third st.
John D. Barr, Manufacturer. 623 Mission near Second.

UNDERTAKERS.
Craig & Yung, 705 Market st., one door west of Third.

VARIETY STORE.
D. Michael & Co., 348 Third street.
Edward Dunn, 502 Third street.

VIOLIN, GUITAR AND BANJO STRINGS.
Libby & Munk, 329 Kearny, st.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

WAX FLORIST.
Mrs. M. E. Gerrish, 11 Post street.

WHOLESALE WINE AND LIQUOR DEALERS.
Campbell & Co., 629 Front st., bet Jackson and Pacific.
Henry M. Cutter, Importer, 520 Front street.

WHOLESALE UPHOLSTERERS.
D. N. & E. Walters, 13 Battery street, corner Bush.

WOOD AND COAL YARDS.
Patrick Byrne, S. W. corner Perry and Fourth sts.
Edward Flanagan, Agt. Coose Bay Coal Co. 606 Battery
Occideutal Fuel Depot, Geo, C. Eldridge, 607 Market st

GARIDALDI.—Our biographical editor has been exercising himself over Garibaldi since he heard of his capture, with the following result Garibaldi, as he is called in Italy, though his real name is Jerry Baldy, was born in Hancock County, and emigrated at an early age to Rome, (Georgia.) He first attracted public attention as a keeeper of a saloon in Rome, in company with his brother Tom. They got to be immensely popular in Rome and in fact, Tom and Jerry, became household words whenever the language of the tap-room was spoken, or folks invited up to drink. The beverage that bears the name has immortalized them.

Jerry Baldi has created a good deal of excitement in Rome of late, through his quarrels with the Pope family. He don't like anybody who bears the name. The latest intelligence is that he attempted to drive General Pope, Military commander of Georgia, out of Rome. He was defeated in a satad-up fight, and attempting to retreat to Buzzard's Roost, was captured by Pope's corps of army correspondents assisted py the Freedmen's Bureau. Tom Baldi still continues the saloon business in Rome, hoping by close attention to business a merit a share of public patronage, and promising to maintain the well-earned repultation of the old firm of Tom and Jerry Baldi, He sells bald eye whisky for the most part.

Jerry Baldi speakes Italian fluently, having acquired it by liberally patronizing Italian fruit stands. He is so much attached to Rome that he had serions thought of taking the city. At least, he made an offer for it, but it seems the offer was'n't large enough. The Pope family seems to be ahead of the present writing, and the red shirted chieftain a prisoner. But those Baldis are of the irrepressible order and he may turn up a tromp again. If not, sic transit Jerry Baldi, "the noblest rum un of them all."—Cincinnati Daily Times.

MISUNDERSTOOD THE TEXT.—A worthy deacon in this State hired a journeyman farmer to assist him through the summer, and induced him—although he was unaccustomed to churchgoing—to accompany the family to church, on the first Sabbath of his stay. Upon their return to the deacon's house he asked his hired man how he liked the preaching. He replied:

"I don't like to hear any minister preach politics."

"I am very sure you never heard no politics to-day," said the deacon.

"I am sure that I did," said the man.

"Mention the passages," said the deacon

"I will. He said, 'If the Democrats scarcely are saved, where will the Republicans appear?'"

"Ah," said the deacon, "you are mistaken. These are the words: 'If the righteous scarcely are saved, how will the ungodly and wicked appear?'"

"Oh, yes, said the man, "he might have used those words, but I knew dnced well what he meant!"

A YOUNG LADY in company with a right reverned prelate, consented, after a long and coy resistance, to be led to the piano. She played and sang so badly, that the auditors hesitated to express their thanks. In this strait his lordship arose, and crossing the room, said, with his sweetest smile, "Thank, you, Miss——, very particularly. Another time, when you say you can't sing, we shall all know how to believe you."

A YOUNG LADY school-teacher was endeavoring to impress upon one of her pupils the terrible effects of the punishment of Nebuchadnezzar. She told him that for seven years he ate grass like a cow. Just then a small boy asked: "Did he give milk?" We are not informed whether the teacher gave any further bovine information to the small boy.

LUCY STONE said: "There is cotton in the ears of a man, and hope in the bosom of woman." Lucy made a mistake, and got the cotton in wrong place.

ADVICE to Unmarried Ladies with Independent Recources—Husband them.

CURIOSITIES OF NATURAL HISTORY.—The rattlesnake finds a superior in the deer and black snake. Whenever a buck discovers a rattlesnake in a situation which invites attack, he loses no time in preparing for battle. He makes up to within ten or twelve feet of the snake, then leaps forward, and aims to sever the back of the snake with his sharp, bifurcated hoofs. The first onset is most commonly successful; but if otherwise, the buck repeats the trial until he cuts the snake in twain. The rapidity and fatality of his skillful maneuvre leave but a slight chance for its victim to escape, or inject his poison into his more alert antaganist. The black snake is also more than an equal competitor against the rattlesnake. Such is its celerity of motion, not only in running, but in entwining itself around the rattlesnake and then escaping from its embrace. When the black and rattlesnake are about to meet for battle, the former darts forward at the hight of his speed, and strikes at the neck of the latter with unerring certainty, leaving a foot or two of the upper part of his own body at liberty. In an instant he incircles him within five or six folds; he then stops and looks the strangled and gasping foe in the face, o ascertain the effect produced upon his corseted body. If he shows signs of life, the coils are multiplied and he screws tightened, the operator all the while narrowly watching the countenance of the helpless victim. Thus the two remain thirty or forty minutes; the executioner then slackens one coil, noticing at the same time whether any signs of life appear. If so, the coil is resumed, and retained until the incarcerated wretch is completely dead. The moccasin snake is distroyed in the same way.

WHEN is a flea like a locomotive? When he goes over the sleepers.

WHEN will the laundresses most likely strike? When the iron's hot.

New Opposition Line via Panama.

The North American Steamship Company will dispatch the splendid new Steamship

NEVADA,

(3000 Tons,)

J. K. KELLY.....Commander,

For PANAMA, from Mission Street Wharf, at 12 o'clock noon, on

SATURDAY, - - - - - JAN. 4th, 1868,

Connecting, via Panama Railroad, at Aspinwall with the Company's new and splendid Steamship NEBRASKA, 3,000 Tons, for NEW YORK.

One hundred pounds Baggage free.
Surgeon on board; medicine and attendance free.
The Nevada has proven herself the fastest steamship afloat, and the Company intend making the trip through TO NEW YORK IN 18 DAYS.
The Moses Taylor will sail January 15th, via Nicaragua.
For further information apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco

SIXTH

INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION,

Under the auspices of the

Mechanics' Institute,

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE UNDERSIGNED, ACTING UNDER authority from the Mechanics' Institute of the city of San Francisco, take great pleasure in announcing to the Public that they have resolved upon holding an Industrial Exhibition in the month of August, 1868, on a much larger scale than was ever before attempted on this coast; and they make this early anuouncement of their intention, that all who may desire to participate shall have ample time for preparation.

A programme, embracing rules and regulations for the government of participants, with a list of Premiums to be awarded, etc., is receiving such earnest and careful attention as the importance of the enterprise demands, and in due season the same will be made public by circular letters widely distributed, and by advertisements in the leading journals of this coast.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:

GEO. K. GLUYAS,	J. P. O'CONNOR,
THOMAS YOUNG,	EDWARD NUNAN,
D. B. HAYES,	GARDNER ELLIOTT,
HORACE D. DUNN,	H. F. WILLIAMS,
GEO. T. BOHEN,	C. M. PLUM,
H. ROSENBANS,	J. A PRITCHARD,
C. H. HARRISON,	WM. J. LEWIS,
D. R. COLEMAN,	W. W. HANSCOM,
W. C. PEASE,	JOS. MOSHEIMER,
JAMES SPIERS,	WILLIAM CONCORAN,
C. L. TILDEN,	D. A. MACDONALD,
IRVING M. SCOTT,	GEO. COFRAN.

REESE W. GLUYAS. S. E. DUTTON.

GLUYAS & DUTTON,

COUNTING HOUSE STATIONERS,

Fireman's Fund Insurance Company's Building,
No. 227 Sansome Street.....San Francisco.

NO HUMBUG! NO HUMBUG!

POSITIVE DISSOLUTION OF COPARTNERSHIP.

The Copartnership of the Proprietors of

QUINCY HALL

CLOTHING

EMPORIUM

Will positively be dissolved on or before the

FIRST OF JANUARY, 1868,

In consequence of which, we offer our Entire Stock until then at

PRICES REGARDLESS OF COST!

Good quality of White Shirts for $1 50
Good Red Flannel Undershirts and Drawers for....$1 50

ALL OTHER GOODS PROPORTIONATELY LOW.

Now is your time to secure BARGAINS

AT

545, 547, & 549 Washington street.

SAN FRANCISCO

FRINGE, CORD, TASSAL,

BUTTON AND TRIMMING

MANUFACTORY,

125 Kearny street, between Post and Sutter.

Every article made in the best style and at the most reasonable rates. LADIES' DRESS TRIMMINGS manufactured to order. Orders filled at the shortest notice. Orders from the interior promptly attended to.
M. ETTINGER,
Foreman for the past eight years at the manufactory of Mrs. D. Norcross.

SOMETHING NEW AND GOOD.

TRY IT!

PRESERVED COFFEE

PREPARED FROM

THE BEST OLD GOVERNMENT JAVA COFFEE,

Condensed in the form of paste, by a process patented September 3d, 1867. One ounce equal to two of the best ground coffee, and suitable for any gentleman's table. Preserves its strength and flavor without deterioration, in any climate and without regard to length of time.
If you want chicory, apply it yourself. Give our Coffee a trial, and if it is not fifty per cent. cheaper and better than any other, we will return your money.
FRANK SILVER & CO.,
No. 10 Stevenson street, near First,
San Francisco.

First Premium

AWARDED BY THE STATE FAIR TO

SILAS SELLECK,

FOR THE BEST PLAIN PHOTOGRAPH.

—ALSO—

SPECIAL PREMIUM

For the Best Cabinet Portraits.

MR. SELLECK is now prepared to execute the very best PHOTOGRAPHS, in all the different styles, at No. 415 Montgomery Street.
N. B.—The best Water Color and India Ink Artist in this city is attached to this Gallery.

NOTICE!

Not Out of Business—Only Removed.

Pioneer Steam Marble Works Com'y

HAVE REMOVED

Their Marble Mantel Warerooms from No. 546 California street to their exteusive Steam Factory,

422 and 424 Jackson Street,

Where they keep constantly on hand the best and most select stock of

MARBLE MANTELS AND GRATES, HEADSTONES AND MONUMENTS.

Our Steam facilities enable us to sell better work at reduced prices than that manufactured by hand.
422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Between Montgomery and Sansome.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

Wholesale & Retail Confectioners,

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

ST. CHARLES RESTAURANT,

At the Hotel of C. Galliand, Nos. 507 and 509 Pine Street, between Kearny and Dupont streets.

BY MME. CAZINTRE.

All who will call at this Restaurant will find an excellent table and prompt attention.

California Coffee and Dining Saloon.

Nos. 612 and 614 MONTGOMERY STREET, Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.
J. R. REAGAN, Proprietor.

A Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot en chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.
French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

CAMMET'S

LADIES' AND GENTLEMEN'S

Coffee and Ice Cream Saloon,

Nos. 57 and 59 Third street, near Mission.

HOUSE OPEN ALL NIGHT.

ITALIAN RESTAURANT,

No. 515 Merchant Street,

Between Montgomery and Sansome, San Francisco.

Taglierini, Maccaroni, Risotto and Ravioli In the Italian Style.

MEALS FIFTY CENTS, OR TO ORDER.

Rooms for private parties up stairs.
MR. GUISEPPE CADENASSO.

LEON DINGEON. F. W. HAUBRICK.

DINGEON & HAUBRICK,

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET.

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up stairs for Dinner and Supper Parties.

NEW RESTAURANT.

MR. SORBIER takes pleasure in informing his friends and customers that he has opened a FIRST-CLASS RESTAURANT under the name of

SORBIER'S RESTAURANT,

at No. 607 SACRAMENTO STREET, above Montgomery, where he will be pleased to see his old friends and the public in general, and where all can be assured that they will be served with the very best the market affords, at most reasonable rates. JOHN E. SORBIER,
Late of the Occidental Restaurant.

OCCIDENTAL RESTAURANT,

536 Washington Street, below Montgomery.

GEORGE WITTMAN would inform the public and the former patrons of this

POPULAR RESTAURANT

That he has assumed full charge, and will continue to keep all the delicacies of the season and one of the best lists of WINES, etc., and solicits the continuance of their patronage.

COCO-MUNGO SALOON.

J. M. WASHBURN, AGENT.

No. 536 Merchant Street, (Montgomery Block.)

THE BEST OF LIQUORS,

SKILLFULLY CONCOCTED MIXED DRINKS,

AND A FIRST-CLASS HOT LUNCH,

Not inferior to any offered in San Francisco, is furnished daily at the COCO-MUNGO—Clam Chowder, Fish Chowder, Gumbo Soup, Pork Tenderloins, Cape Cod Boned Turkey, Venison, Quail, and all the delicacies of the season, as fast as they are to be found in the market, figure upon the lunch table of the COCO-MUNGO.

A Reading Room, abundantly supplied with Domestic and Foreign Papers and Periodicals, is one of the features of the COCO-MUNGO.

C. F. HAYWARD,

—DEALER IN—

Harness, Saddles, etc.,

305 BATTERY STREET,

Near Sacramento,

San Francisco.

Pioneer Iron Works,

CORNER OF MARKET AND FREMONT STREETS,
San Francisco.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT

Manufacturers of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS, SHUTTERS, BANK VAULTS,
PRISON CELLS, BALCONIES, GRATINGS,
IRON FENCE, STAIRS, ETC.

BURGLAR PROOF BANK VAULT LOCKS

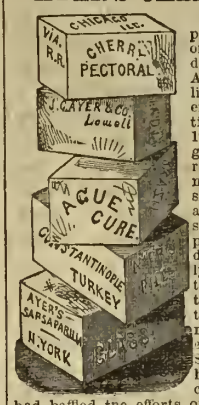
Constantly on had, a large assortment of Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

BUILDER'S INSURANCE CO.

OFFICE IN THE BUILDING OF THE CALIFORNIA SAVINGS BANK, CALIFORNIA ST., one door from Sansome.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL



Is a soothing expectorant, prepared to meet the urgent need of a safe and reliable cure for diseases of the throat and lungs. A trial of many years has established the fact, that it is more efficacious in pulmonary affections, than any other remedy. Its efficacy has now become so generally known, that it is justly regarded in many countries as a medicine of indispensable necessity. In Great Britain, France, and Germany, where medical science has reached its highest perfection, it is prescribed in domestic practice, and constantly used in the armies, in hospitals and other public institutions, where it is regarded by the attending physicians as the most speedy and agreeable remedy that can be employed.—Scarcely any neighborhood can be found where well known cases of diseased lungs, which had baffled the efforts of the most skillful and experienced doctors, have been permanently cured by it. These results are the most convincing proofs of the superior curative properties of this preparation; and to them the authors point with peculiar satisfaction. While it is most powerful against confirmed diseases, it is extremely gentle as a medicine in infancy and youth, being quite harmless to even the youngest, when administered judiciously.

This health-restorer accomplishes even more by prevention than cure. If taken in season, it heals all irritations of the throat and lungs, whether arising from Colds or Coughs, or from other causes, and thus prevent that long train of painful and incurable diseases, which would arise from the neglect of them. Hence no family should be without it. Influenza, Croup, Hoarseness, Whooping Cough, Pleurisy, Incipient Consumption, and other affections of the breathing organs, give way before this preeminent combination of medical virtues.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine everywhere.
CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
Wholesale Agents.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

STEAMSHIPS FOR

NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Brannan-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's spleudid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 18th or 19th is expected to connect with the French Transatlantic Co.'s steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th is expected to connect with English steamer for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America. Through tickets can be obtained.

STEAMERS FOR DECEMBER.

Dec. 10—SACRAMENTO, Capt. W. H. Parker, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY. Capt. Gray.
Dec. 19—CONSTITUTION, Capt. J. M. Caverly, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Connor.
Dec. 30—MONTANA, Capt. E. T. Farnsworth, connecting with ARIZONA. Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.
Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.
These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.
Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained of P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.
For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.
The steamship GREAT REPUBLIC, Capt. S. Doane, will be dispatched on December 4th, from wharf, corner of First and Brannan streets, for YOKOHAMA and HONGKONG; connecting at Yokohama with the steamer COSTA RICA, for SHANGHAI.
For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

Pioneer Iron Shutter Works,

ESTABLISHED 1849.

CALVIN NUTTING,

Manufacturer of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS & SHUTTERS,

STEEL LINED BANK VAULTS,

Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc.

123 Bush street, between Sansome and Battery, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

MORE LIGHT FOR THE MILLION

THE EXCELSIOR

Coal Oil and Lamp Store,

NO. 10 THIRD STREET,

KEEPS CONSTANTLY ON HAND THE BEST brands of Kerosene Oil, Lamps of every description, GLOBES, WICKS, SHADES, CHIMNEYS, LANTERNS, Etc.

The public are cautioned against buying inferior Coal Oil, sold by parties as STANDARD KEROSENE, and which is frequently explosive, being a mixture of Coal Oil and Benzine. The Standard Kerosene sold at No. 10 Third street, is warranted to be free from smell, and burn longer than any other brand of Oil, and is to the consumer cheaper than less priced oils. All goods warranted to be as represented.

Give us a call. JOHN P. OWENS.

Chocolate.—It was among the Mexicans that the Spaniards found the use of coffee established from time immemorial. They introduced it into there native land, whence it soon passed into Italy. But it was not till the seventeenth century that it penetrated into France. According to the tradition, it is to Queen Marie Therese that the French owe the preparation of chocolate. An officer of this princess obtained a monopoly for the sale of chocolate, and established himself in one of the principal thoroughfares at Paris. The use of chocolate spread with toleable rapidity, as a passage shown us in the letter of Madame de Sevigne to her daughter: "Yon are not well; a little chocolate is sure to restore you; bnt you have not, as I have a thousand times, thought of the means of preparing it. How will yon manage?" Medical science in this matter favored fashion, and in 1784 a physician of Paris, called Bachat, propounded at the schools of the faculty during his pesidency a thesis to prove that chocolate well made was an "invention of the gods, rather than Nectar and Ambrosia." This opinion was also that of Linnæus, who gave to cocoa the name of Theobroma, or the food of gods. Nevertheless, chocolate never acquired in France the same popn larity as coffee. The reason of the difference may, perhaps, be sought in the French organism. Suitable for the inhabitans of hot, dry countries, choclate is too heavy for the men of the north. On the other hand, coffee excites him, and stimulates him at the same time that it favors the development of his ideas. Chocolate is still less popular in England than in France, it is, not coffee but tea which is in England the prevailing beverage. Tea in France and coffee in England are almost eqnally undrinkable.

What can be a more desolate spectacle than an old maid sitting on an inverted half bushel, in a cold kitchen, with her feet on the brim of a slop bucket, paring her corns with a case knife, by the light of a tallow candle.

A man who won a fat turkey at a raffle, and whose pious wife was very inqusitive about the method of obtaining the poultry, satisfied her at last by the remark that the "Shakers" gave it to him.

DICKEY'S

CREME DE LIS

DE CALIFORNIE.

THE FASHIONABLE WHITE WASH FOR BEAUTIFYING THE COMPLEXION.

A NEW COMBINATION, equal to the best French preparations, and free from their poisonous ingredients.

GEO. S. DICKEY, Chemist,
Corner of Market, Stockton, Ellis and Fourth streets,
San Francisco.

Notice.

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE,

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, POST STREET.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

THE PROPRIETORS OF THIS POPULAR INSTITUtion bave much pleasure in announcing that in consequence of the growing interest taken by American ladies in mercantile pursuits, they bave nt the solicitation of many heads of families, fitted up class rooms exclusively for young ladies, that they may have all the advantages of a commercial education, and be fitted to act in the capacity of clerks or book-keepers. Experience in this matter in tha Eastern States and on the Continent, shows that with a little careful training, they can ba qualified to fill with efficiency all the lighter departments of trade, where there is a wide range for the exercise of their talents.

A. DE LEO DE LAGUNA, Principal,
JAMES VINSONHALER, President.

Asphaltum for Sale

IN ANY QUANTITY TO SUIT, BY THE
PACIFIC ASPHALTUM COMPANY,
No. 533 Kearny street, corner of Sacramanto,
SAN FRANCISCO.

This Aspbaltum is the purest to be found in the market, baing free from rock and clay, or other impurities.

Sidewalks Laid and Roofing Done at Shortest Notice.

NEUVAL & CO.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company,

OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

—OFFICE—

S. W. cor. California and Sansome streets.

CAPITAL, $500,000, FULLY PAID IN GOLD COIN.

INSURE MARINE RISKS

Under Open Policies, on Cargoes, Treasure, Freights, Profits, and Commissions.

—ALSO—

ISSUE POLICIES ON TIME,
VOYAGE AND HARBOR RISKS ON HULLS.

INSURE AGAINST LOSS BY FIRE

On Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Wares, and other Personal Property.

FIRE, MARINE, HARBOR, AND INLAND TRANSIT RISKS,

On terms as favorable as any other reliable First-Class Company.

Greatest amount taken on any one risk, $50,000. Portions of Risks considered too large, will be re-insured in responsible Companies.

LOSSES PROMPTLY PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!

D. J. STAPLES, President,
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

HAMBURG—BREMEN,

Fire Insurance Company.

CAPITAL, - - - - $1,000,000

MORRIS SPEYER, Agent.

OFFICE—526 Washington Street, a few doors below Montgomery.....San Francisco.

Being no longer governed by the Tariff of the Board of Underwriters, this Company will effect Insurances at as LOW RATES as those of any other responsible Company.

OCCIDENTAL

Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchinnise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. Rothschild, Secretary.

FIRE INSURANCE.

Manhattan Fire & Marine Insurance

OF NEW YORK.

Incorporated.....1821.
Cash capital.....$500,000
Surplus..... 650,000

Total Assets, over.....$1,190,000

The above named responsible and well known Company has complied with the law of the State of California, and has deposited $75,000 as additional security for policy holders,

Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, and other property insured against loss or damage by Fire, on the most favorable terms. Also, insurance on Merchandise, Specie and Freight to or from all parts of the world. Losses promptly adjusted and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., General Agents,
206 Front street, corner of California.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,

DENTIST,

No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.

Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens.

North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.

N. T. WHITCOMB.

Removal.

WILLIAM SHERMAN & CO.

Have this day Removed their Stock of

Clothing & Men's Furnishing Goods,

From Sansome Street to

608 Montgomery street,

(East Side,) North of Clay.

San Francisco, November 22, 1867.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

ADDIE M. VINES, Plaintiff, vs. DANIEL B. VINES, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to DANIEL B. VINES, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaitiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree from this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the custody and care of the child of the parties hereto may be awarded to plaintiff. Also for general relief.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 22d day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

[SEAL.] WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By J. D. Ruggles, Deputy Clerk.
Pixley & Smith, Attorneys for Plaintiffs. d14-13w.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of NATHANIEL MASON, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of SAMUEL BROCKHURST and NOAH CLIFT EFFORD, the Executors of the last will and testament of NATHANIEL MASON, deceased, setting forth that they have filed their final account of their administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the devisees and heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Nathaniel Mason, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on TUESDAY, the fourteenth day of January A. D. 1868, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the devisees and heirs of the said Nathaniel Mason, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said fourteenth day of January, A. D. 1868, in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated December 11th, A. D. 1867.
E. B. Mastick, Esq., Att'y for Executors. d14 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JULIUS STURM, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of Julius Sturm, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate, to pay the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 14th day of January, A. D. 1868, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

Dated December 13th, 1867.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Washington Bartlett, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court, in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 13th day of December, A. D. 1867.

[SEAL AND STAMP] WASHINGTON BARTLETT, Clerk.
By A. J. Jeghers, Deputy Clerk.
J. F. Finn, Esq., Att'y for Administrator. d14 5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOHN HORGAN, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the Estate of John Horgan, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratrix, at the place of her transaction of business, at the office of William A. Quarles, Public Administrator, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated December 13th, 1867.

CATHARINE HORGAN,
Administratrix of the Estate of John Horgan, deceased.
d14 5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF H. C. KORF, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of H. C. Korf, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator, at his office and place of transaction of business, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated San Francisco, November 19th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Administrator of the Estate of H. C. Korf, deceased
nov23-4t

ZEITSKA & SHEPPARD,

Merchant Taylors,

NO. 610 CLAY STREET,

Near Montgomery,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Administrator's Sale of Real Estate.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT, IN PURSUance of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, made on the 26th day of November, A. D. 1867, in the matter of the Estate of JUSTIN VICTOR SUBERVIELLE, deceased, the undersigned, the Administrator of the Estate of said deceased, will sell at private sale, to the highest bidder, for cash, gold coin of the United States, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on

WEDNESDAY, THE 8TH DAY OF JANUARY, A.D. 1868,

at 12 o'clock, M., at the office of W. C. Burnett, Esquire, the attorney of said Administrator, No. 606 Washington street in the said City and County, all the right, title, interest and estate of the said Justin Victor Subervile, at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has by operation of law or otherwise, acquired other than, or in addition to that of the said deceased at the time of his death, in and to all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows, to wit:

I.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of King street, 114 feet 7 inches northeasterly from the northeast corner of Fifth and King streets, thence running northeasterly along said line of King street 91 feet 8 inches; thence northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet; thence southwesterly and parallel with King street 91 feet 8 inches, and thence southeasterly 120 feet, to the point of commencement.

II.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of King street 343 feet 9 inches northeasterly from the northeasterly corner of Fifth and King streets, thence running northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet; thence northeasterly and parallel with King street 22 feet 11 inches; thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet, to King street, and thence southwesterly on the northwesterly line of King street 22 feet 11 inches, to the point of commencement.

III.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of Townsend street 137½ feet northeasterly from the northeasterly corner of Fifth and Townsend streets, thence running northeasterly along said line of Townsend street 45 feet 10 inches; thence northwestorly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet; thence westerly and parallel with Townsend street 45 feet 10 inches, and thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet, to the point of commencement.

IV.—Commencing on the southeasterly line of Berry street, 229 feet 2 inches southwesterly from the southwesterly corner of Fifth and Berry streets, thence running southwesterly along said line of Berry street 45 feet 10 inches; thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet; thence northeasterly and parallel with Berry street 45 feet 10 inches, and thence northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street, 137½ feet, to the point of commencement.

V.—Commencing at the northeasterly corner of California and Mason streets, thence running easterly along the northerly line of California street 34 feet 4½ inches; thence northerly and parallel with Mason street 68 feet 9 inches; thence westerly and parallel with California street 34 feet 4½ inches to Mason street, and thence southerly along the easterly line of Mason street 68 feet 9 inches, to the point of commencement.

That offers and bids will be received, on such sale, on and from MONDAY, the 30th day of December, A. D. 1867, until and at 12 o'clock, M., on the 8th day of January, A. D. 1868, by said Administrator, at the said office of W. C. Burnett, Esquire, in said city and county.

Terms and Conditions of Sale: Cash, gold coin of the United States; ten per cent of the purchase money to be paid to the Administrator, on the day of sale, the balance on confirmation of sale by said Probate Court: deeds and stamps at expense of purchasers.

LUCAS PONTON DE ARCE,
Administrator of the Estate of Justin Victor Subervielle, deceased.
W. C. Burnett, Attorney for Administrator. Office 606 Washington street. d7-4t

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of ANTHONY GIFFORD, deceased.

Order to show cause why Order of Sale of Real Estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by William A. Quarles, the Administrator of the estate of Anthony Gifford, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate, to pay the debts, expenses and charges of the administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 24th day of December, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary;

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in The Californian, a weekly newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 22d, 1867.
T. J. Finn, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
nov23-30 dec7-14-21

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of MINNIE SHERWOOD, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Lilly Sherwood, the Administratrix of the Estate of Minnie Sherwood, deceased, setting forth that she has filed her final account of her administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to her as the only and sole heir of said deceased, praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled.

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Minnie Sherwood, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on MONDAY, the thirteenth day of January, A. D. 1868, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate to the said petitioner, as heir of the said Minnie Sherwood, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 13th day of January, A. D. 1868, in The Californian, a newspapor printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated December 13th, 1867.
Jas. C. Carey, Attorney for Petitioner. d13 5w

Architectural Designs

—FURNISHED BY—

HOAGLAND & NEWSOM,

ARCHITECTS,

Southwest corner of Sacramento and Kearny Streets,
San Francisco.

WHY HE ASKED.

Coupon, the corpulent banker, was standing in Third street one hot day in August, "wipiug the servile drops from his brow," when a ragged but sharp-eyed newsboy accosted him with :

"Please, sir, tell me the time ?"

Coupon lugged out his time-piece, and looking benignantly down upon his interlocutor responded :

"Just two o'clock."

"All right, old bluff," said the urchin, gathering his rags together for a run, "You can sell out for soap grease at three."

The insulted man of money raised his cane, and, making a frantic rush at his tormentor, nearly fell over a friend who was coming up the street.

"Hallo, Coupon, what's the trouble ?" said the other.

"Matter!" said Coupon, puffing with heat and anger, "why, one of those d——d newsboys asked me the time, and when I told him two o'clock, the impudent young scoundrel said I might sell for soap grease at three."

"Don't be in such a hurry, was the malicious response ; "it's only five minutes past two ; you've got fifty five minutes to do it in."

Many years since, in California, old Judge C— kept a little dead fall as they call a rum mill out there, a few miles above Marysville, and made frequent trips to San Francisco, to deposit his "hard earned" savings, and lay in a fresh stock. One night he sat late, imbibed much, and assisted at a little game of "draw." An hour after going to bed he awoke, and, to his horror, saw a robber staring at him through the window near the foot of the bed. Judge dodged ; robber dodged back ; judge peeped ; robber peeped. Judge put hand under pillow, drew out 'Navy,' and fired—through a looking-glass! the trade price of which was an even $25. The robber did not again appear ; the judge did not treat—perhaps.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,

SANSOME STREET, San Francisco.

FIRE PROOF.

Two Hundrod Rooms well Ventilated and Richly Furnished.

Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.

The Exchange Coach, with Red Lights, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel Free of Charge.

The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully utorm the traveling public that the

AMERICAN EXCHANGE

Is now and will continue as it ever has been, the most comfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the State. TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

F. D. RING,

MANUFACTURER OF

JEWELRY AND SILVER WARE,

No. 540 Market Street, adjoining the Hibernia Bank, SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of precious Stones set in the latest style and most approved manner. Watches and Jewelry carefully repaired by experienced workmen.

G. E. T. GLOVE COMPANY,

FACTORY, 526 MERCHANT STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome,

Manufacture all kinds of OIL DRESSED AND INDIAN TANNED GLOVES for Gentlemen, Drivers, Teamsters, Miners and Lumbermen. Also, BUCKSKIN MITTENS, GOLD BAGS, PURSES, etc., in endless variety, and all sewed by hand. All work warranted. The Trade supplied. We warrant one pair of our manufacture to outlast two pairs of Eastern manufacture,

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

JOHN WIELAND,

Proprietor

T. B. RODGERS,

CUTLER,

108 Leidesdorff street.

Corner California, adjoining the Pacific Insurance Office, San Francisco.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street, between California and Pine.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, Petaluma.

EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

$100 00

SAVED in a very Short Time by using

STANDARD SOAP CO.'S

WASHING POWDER.

TRY IT!

Does Not Injure the Clothes. Sold Everywhere.

$1,000,000 IN WATCHES!

FOR SALE ON THE POPULAR

ONE PRICE PLAN.

GIVING EVERY PATRON A

Handsome and Reliable Watch!

For the Low Price of Ten Dollars,

Without Regard to Value!

And not to be paid for unless perfectly satisfactory:

100 Solid Gold Hunting Watches	$250 to $1,000
100 Magic Cased Gold Watches	200 to 500
100 Ladies Watches, enameled	100 to 300
200 Gold Hunting Chronometer Watches	250 to 300
200 Gold Hunting English Levers	200 to 250
300 Gold Hunting Duplex Watches	150 to 200
300 Gold Hunting American Watches	100 to 250
500 Silver Hunting Levers	50 to 150
500 Silver Hunting Duplexes	75 to 250
500 Gold Ladies Watches	50 to 250
1,000 Gold Hunting Lepines	50 to 75
1,000 Miscellaneous Silver Watches	50 to 100
2,500 Hunting Silver Watches	25 to 50
5,000 Assorted Watches, all kinds	10 to 75

☞ Every patron obtains a Watch by this arrangement, costing but $10, while it may be worth $1,000. No partiality shown.

We wish to immediately dispose of the above magnificent Stock. Certificates naming the articles, are placed in sealed envelopes, and well mixed. Holders are entitled to the articles named on their certificates upon payment of Ten Dollars, whether it be a Watch worth $1,000 or one worth less. The return of any of our certificates entitles you to the article named thereon upon paymout, irrespective of its worth, and as no article valued less than $10 is named on any certificate, it will at once be seen that this is

No Lottery, but a straightforward legitimate transaction, which may be participated in by the most fastidious!

A single certificate will be sent by mail, post paid, upon receipt of 25 cents, five for $1, eleven for $2, thirty-three and an elegant premium for $5, sixty six and more valuable premium for $10, one hundred and most superb Watch for $15. To agents, or those wishing employment this is a rare opportunity. It is a legitimately conducted business, duly authorized by the Government, and open to the most careful scrutiny Try us!

WRIGHT, BRO., & Co., Importers,
161 Broadway, New York.

NOTICE!

Not Out of Business—Only Removed.

Pioneer Steam Marble Works Com'y

HAVE REMOVED

Their Marble Mantel Warerooms from No. 546 California street to their extensive Steam Factory,

422 and 424 Jackson Street,

Where they keep constantly on hand the best and most select stock of

MARBLE MANTELS AND GRATES, HEADSTONES AND MONUMENTS.

Our Steam facilities enable us to sell better work at reduced prices than that manufactured by hand.

422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Between Montgomery and Sansome.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

Wholesale & Retail Confectioners,

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prises. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

WILL & FINCK,

EXCELSIOR CUTLERS, LOCK-SMITHS & BELL-HANGERS, Importers and Manufacturers of all kinds of Cutlery. Razors, Shears, and all kinds of Cutlery, ground and repaired — Bell-Hanging and Lock-smithing done in the best manner. 613 Jackson street, fourth door west of Kearny.

Country orders promptly attended to.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

Hay, Grain, and Feed of all kinds.

Hucks & Lambert's Patent AXLE GREASE.

21 Clay street and 28 Commercial street, between Drumm and East, San Francisco.

H. BATTEL'S SAMPLE ROOMS,

411 SANSOME STREET,

Between Commercial and Sacramento streets.

H. BATTEL BEGS TO INFORM HIS FRIENDS AND the public that he has opened the above hall as a first-class Refreshment Saloon, where they can always be sure to find the very best

WINES, LIQUORS, AND HAVANA CIGARS

In the Market.

Hot Lunch served daily from 10 to 2 o'clock.

Pioneer Iron Shutter Works,

ESTABLISHED 1849.

CALVIN NUTTING,

Manufacturer of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS & SHUTTERS,

STEEL LINED BANK VAULTS,

Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc.

123 Bush street, between Sansome and Battery, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

Pioneer Iron Works,

CORNER OF MARKET AND FREMONT STREETS,

San Francisco.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT

Manufacturers of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS, SHUTTERS, BANK VAULTS, PRISON CELLS, BALCONIES, GRATINGS, IRON FENCE, STAIRS, Etc.

BURGLAR PROOF BANK VAULT LOCKS

Constantly on had, a large assortment of Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work o all kinds, Spikes,

Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

GALLAGHER WEED & CO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

AN FRANCISCO

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

—OF—

MACCARONI,
VERMICELLI,
PASTE, and
FARINA

First Premium in 1857—1859—1864—1865.

Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co.,

706 SANSOME STREET,

San Francisco.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT,

Wholesale Candy Manufacturers,

No. 408 CLAY STREET,

Between Sansome and Battery Sts., San Francisco.

FANCY AND COMMON CANDIES

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Sugar Toys, Figures, Animals, Birds, etc.

Are prepared to receive orders to any extent and in any desired style.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT.

Removal.

JOHN G. HODGE & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale Stationers,

Have Removed to

329 and 331 Sansome Street,

Southwest corner of Sacramento.

Dr. John T. Crook,

Late of the Pacific Mail service, has established himself in the practice of his profession in this city.

—OFFICE:—

S. W. corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets.

Office Hours—9 to 10 A. M.; 2 P. M.; 4 to 6 P. M.

REESE W. GLUYAS. S. E. DUTTON.

GLUYAS & DUTTON,

COUNTING HOUSE STATIONERS,

Fireman's Fund Insurance Company's Building,

No. 227 Sansome Street.....San Francisco.

AVERY'S

GREAT

NATIONAL PUMP

AND WELL.

This Pump has proved itself to be the greatest invention of the age. Designed for DEEP WELLS, it will RAISE WATER (500) FIVE HUNDRED FEET; can sink a well 30 to 40 feet in (60) sixty minues.

This Pump is specially adapted to the wants of BREWERS and DISTILLELS, on account of the facility with which, by its use, casks in the upper stories of their warehouses can be filled from the vats below.

STATE, COUNTY, & TOWN RIGHTS FOR SALE.

Pumps Furnished at Moderate Prices, by

S. P. ROBERTS,

Agent for California and Nevada,

Care FARNSWORTH & MILNE, Plumbers,

318 Pine street, San Francisco.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.

The Hat wearing community are invited to examine the Stock at the above store, and in quality, style and price,

THEY DEFY COMPETITION!

Their Stock embraces all of the latest "novelties" and Standard Styles to be found elsewhere.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.

PRIVATE MEDICAL AID.

QUICK CURES AND MODERATE CHARGES.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY,

PRIVATE MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE,

Sacramento Street, below Montgomery, Opposite Pacific Mail Steamship Co's Office, Private Entrance on Leidesdorff Street, San Francisco.

Established expressly to afford the afflicted sound and scientific Medical Aid, in the treatment and cure of all Private and Chronic Diseases, cases of Secrecy, and all Sexual Disorders.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Dr. W. K. Doherty returns his sincere thanks to his numerous patients for their patronage and would take this opportunity to remind them that he continues to consult at his Institute for the cure of chronic diseases of the Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Digestive and Genito-Urinary Organs, and all Private Diseases, viz ; Syphilis in all its forms and stages, Seminal Weakness, and all the horrid consequences of Self-Abuse, Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures. Nocturnal and Diurnal Emissions, Sexual Debility, Diseases of the Back and Loins, Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, etc.; and he hopes that his long experience and successful practice will continue to insure him a share of public patronage. By his practice of many years in Europe and the United States, he is enabled to apply the most efficient and successful remedies against diseases of all kinds. He uses no mercury, charges moderate, treats his patients in a correct and honorable way, and has references of unquestionable veracity from men of known respectability and high standing in society. All parties consulting him, by letter or otherwise, will receive the best and gentlest treatment, and implicit secresy.

TO FEMALES.

When a female is in trouble, or afflicted with disease, as weakness of the back and limbs, pain in the head, dimness of sight, loss of muscular power, palpitation of the heart, irritability, nervousness, extreme urinary difficulties, derangement of digestive function, general debility, vaginitis, all disease of the womb, hysteria, sterility, and all other diseases peculiar to females, she should go or write at once to the celebrated female doctor, W. K. DOHERTY, at his Medical Institute, and consult him about her troubles and disease. Irregularities, suppressions, etc., will receive the Doctor's most particular attention. Let no false delicacy prevent, but apply immediately and save yourself from painful suffering and premature death. Ladies whose delicate health or other circumstances prevent an increase in their families, should write or call at DR. DOHERTY'S MEDICAL INSTITUTE, and they will receive every possible relief and help. The Doctor's offices, consisting of a suite of six rooms, are so arranged that he can be consulted without fear of observation.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Patients (male or female) residing in any part of the State, however distant, who may desire the opinion and advice of DR. W. K. DOHERTY on their respective cases and who think proper to submit a written statement of such, in preference to holding a personal interview, are respectfully assured that their communications will be held most sacred. Dr. Doherty takes this opportunity of observing that all letters are only opened and replied to by himself, and the latter as promptly as possible.

If the case be fully and candidly described, personal communication will be unnecessary, as instructions for diet, regimen, and the general treatment of the case itself, (including the remedies) will be forwarded without delay, and in such a manner as to convey no idea of the purport of the letter or parcel so transmitted.

Consultation, by letter or otherwise, Free. Permanent cure guaranteed, or no pay. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D.
San Francisco, Cal

SPERMATORRHŒA.

DR. DOHERTY has just published an important pamphlet embodying his own views and experiences in relation to Impotence or Virility, being a short treatise on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, Nervous and Physical Debility consequent on this affection, and other diseases of the Sexual Organs

This little work contains information of the utmost value to all whether married or single, and will be sent Free by mail on receipt of Six Cents in Postage stamps for return postage. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D., San Francisco, Cal.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor.
CARL TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
WM. STEVENSON.....Treasurer
HARRY JACKSON.....Stage Manager.

SATURDAY EVENING.....DECEMBER 21
Last night of
MISS FANNY YOUNG,
Who will appear as "Mary Moonlight," in the drama of BEN BOLT.
And in her original speciality of "Lady Nancy Bell," in RUM-TI-FOO-ZLE.

For to-day's Matinee, "Rum-ti-foo-zle."

MODAY.....DECEMBER 23
First appearance of the talented sisters
EMMA AND ADA WEBB.
Box Book now open.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:
Dress Circle.....$1 00 | Orchestra $1 00
Parquette..... 50 | Upper Circle..... 25

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

Lessees and Managers,
MESSRS. EDWARDS, BATES & VINSON.

LAST NIGHT OF "UNDER THE GASLIGHT."

This Afternoon and Evening.....Dec. 21
Last representation of the Thrilling Drama of
UNDER THE GASLIGHT!
With the popular artist,
MR. CHARLES WHEATLEIGH.
In his celebrated impersonation of Snorkey,
Assisted by
MRS. F. M. BATES,
And the Entire Strength of the Company.

MONDAY EVENING.....DECEMBER 23
Boucicalt's latest dramatic triumph,
FLYING SCUD,
—OR A—
FOUR-LEGGED FORTUNE,
In which
MISS ANNIE FIRMAN,
Will make her first appearance.
Box Plan now open.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.
Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats.....One Dollar
Parquet 50 cts | Gallery 25 cts
Doors open at 7 o'clock; to commence at 8.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THE TALENTED SISTERS,

EMMA & ADA WEBB,

After the most successful engagements in all principal cities in the United States, Canada, the West Indies, and London, England, have returned to the home of their first Dramatic Triumphs, and will, during their brief stay

APPEAR NIGHTLY

In Choice Selections from

Dramas,
Comedies,
Burlesques,
Musical Farces,

SHERIDAN CORBYN, Manager.

BIERSTADT'S PAINTING,

'CROSSING THE PLAINS'

NOW ON EXHIBITION AT

209 Montgomery Street.

Admission,.....25 cents.
Season Tickets, $1 00.

ANALYSIS.

MESSRS. WHITING & BERRY,
609 SACRAMENTO STREET.

GENTLEMEN—AFTER A CAREFUL EXAMINATION of the following samples of Wines and Spirits bearing your label, including:

Whiting & Berry's Table Sherry,
Whiting & Berry's Golden Sherry,
Whiting & Berry's Voyage Port,
Whiting & Berry's Century Port,
Whiting & Berry's Cabinet Gin,
Whiting & Berry's Wheat Family Tonic
Whiting & Berry's Ky. Bourbon, O. O. Whisky,
Whiting & Berry's Vine Growers Co. Cognac 1854.

I have failed to discover any deleterious substances finding them ENTIRELY FREE from any of the ingredients generally used in the adulteration of Wines and Liquors.

(Signed) B. B. THAYER,
Chemist and State Assayer.

SPECIAL NOTICE!

GREAT REDUCTION IN
DRY GOODS
FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.
9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
WILL OFFER ON
Monday, - - December 2d,
THE FOLLOWING DESCRIBED GOODS
AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

1000 Foulard de Laine Dresses;
1500 Empress Cloth Dresses;
1200 Poplin Dresses;
3000 Print Dresses;
500 Pieces of French Merinos;
300 Pieces Alpacas;
Empress Plaids,
Real Scotch Plaids,
Ottoman Velours,
Winseys,
Linseys.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
RETAIL STORE,
No. 9 Montgomery street.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,
No. 107 Battery Street, near Pine Street.

BRIDAL SILKS!
RICH LACES!
EVENING SILKS!
CHRISTMAS
and NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.,
9 Montgomery Street,

Have received an unparalleled and choice assortment of the following described Goods suitable for

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS!

Bridal and Evening Silks;
Chantilly and Point Lace Shawls;
Black and Colored Silks;
Chene and Droge Silks;
Velvet and Silk Cloaks;
Indian Shawls;
Irish and French Poplins;
Point and Applique Lace Handkerchiefs;
Embroidered and Plain Handkerchiefs;
Irish and French Poplins;
Point de Venice Lace Collars;
French and English Hosiery;
Barnsley Napkins and Cloths;
Chantilly Flounces and Capes;
Cashmere Shawls;
Lama Lace Shawls;

GLOVES, BEST MAKE.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.'S
RETAL STORE:
No. 9 Montgomery street.

WHOLESALE STORE:
No. 107 Battery street.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

BOYS'

Pioneer Clothing Store,

CLOSING BUSINESS!!

CLOSING BUSINESS!!!

We offer the entire stock at the following reduced prices:

	Regular Prices.	Present Prices.
Boys' French Cass. Basket Pants	$6 00	$4 00
Boys' Velvet Cass. Ext. Sup. Pants	8 00	5 00
Boys' Cadet Union Suits	8 00	5 00
Boys' Union Sack Overcoats	8 00	5 00
Boys' Petersham Overcoats	14 00	10 00
Boys' Bl'k Castor Beaver Overcoats	16 00	12 00
Boys' Bl'k Esquimaux Beaver Overcoats	18 00	13 00
Boys' French Cloth Frock Coats	18 00	12 00
Boys' Esquimaux Bever Suits	15 00	12 00
Boys' Fine Esquimaux Bever Suits	26 00	18 00
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants	2 50	1 50
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants, ex. Fine	3 00	2 25
Youths' CaSsimere Knee Pants, embr'd	4 00	3 00
Youths' Gatibaldi Fancy Suits	7 00	5 00
Youths' Garibaldi Extra Fine Suits	8 00	6 00
Youths' Embroidered Cloth Suits	10 00	5 00
Youths' Black Beaver Suits	10 00	6 00
Youths' Pilot Cloth Overcoats	10 00	7 00
Youths' Chinchilla Overcoats	10 50	8 00
Youths' Union Sack Overcosts	8 00	6 00
Youths' Black Castor Beaver Overcoats	12 00	9 00
Youths' Heavy Black Beaver Garricks	10 00	8 00
Youths' Black Cloth Overcoat (sleeves)	11 00	8 50

500 Men's Esquimaux and Castor Beaver Overcoats,
Forty per cent. less than any other store on this Coast.
100 dozen Men's Star Shirts, $1 50
Astonishing low figures.

Remember, our goods are all Custom-made, from our Broadway store in New York, thirteen years' standing. Everybody must know our goods. Retiring from business, the goods must be sold. Call at LOCKWOOD & CO'S, and examine the great reduction in prices.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
624 Clay Street.

THE OCCIDENT.

A RELIGIOUS AND FAMILY NEWPAPER, WITH the above title will be published by the subscribers, commencing January 31, 1868, at the office, 609 Montgomery street, San Francisco. It will be issued weekly, (on Friday) in quarto form, each number containing twelve pages. Editor, Rev. JAMES FELLS, D. D. Associate Editor, Rev. E. B. WALSWORTH.

Subscription price, $4.00 per annum, in gold coin, or its equivalent, payable in advance, or $2 50 for six months, same terms. BANCROFT & CO,
San Francisco, Cal.

BANCROFT & CO.
San Francisco, Cal.
Are the exclusive publishers for the Pacific Coast of
PUTNAM'S MAGAZINE.
FIRST NUMBER, JANUARY, 1868, NOW READY.

THIS PUBLICATION WILL BE SIMILAR IN CHARACTER and appearance to the former series of PUTNAM'S MONTHLY, and will be supported by the BEST WRITERS, in each department, in every section of the country.

TERMS—$4 00 a year in gold coin, payable in advance. One copy of PUTNAM and one copy of THE OCCIDENT will be sent to one address, one year, for $7.00.
BANCROFT & CO,
San Francisco, Cal.

USEFUL AND ELEGANT
PRESENTS!

WE ARE IN RECEIPT, EX FRENCH SHIPS, "VOLTA" and "MAHELA," of LARGE ADDITIONS
TO OUR Extensive Stock
OF
CHINA, GLASSWARE,
FANCY GOODS, Etc., Etc.
Please call and examine.
HAYNES & LAWTON,
516 Sansome street, corner of Merchant.

BUCKMAN BROS.,
(Successors to John Myers,)
CAPITOL SALOON,
226 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Opposite the Russ House.

Turnbull & Smith,
PRINTERS,
522 CLAY ST.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Good Work!—One Price!—Punctuality!

D. BRUCE,
PRINTER,
COMMERCIAL STREET OPPOSITE MINERS' RESTAURANT.

IN THE PROBATE COURT, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
Estate of FRANK O. ELDREDGE, deceased.
On reading and filing the petition of John S. Bugbee, administrator, with the will annexed, of the estate of Frank O. Eldredge, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration upon said estate, in this Court, and the same has been duly audited, allowed and confirmed; that all debts have been fully paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed among the persons who by law are entitled to the same; that deceased was not a resident of this State, and died testate; that his will was duly proved and allowed in the State of Massachusetts, the place of his resdence, and an authenticated copy thereof admitted to Probate in this State; and that it is necessary, in order that said estate be distributed according to said will, that the estate in this State be delivered to the executor in the State of Massachusetts; and praying, among other things, for an order that said estate may be delivered to said executor

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of Frank O. Eldredge, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on the 27th day of January, A. D. 1868, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, then and there to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be made for the delivery of said estate to such executor, according to law.

It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before said twenty-seventh day of January, 1868, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated December 19th, 1868. de21-28-ja4-11

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the Estate of JOSEFA MUNOZ DE URIBE, deceased.
Order to show cause why Order of Distribution should not be made.

On reading the petion of Francisco E. Lynch, Executor of the last will and testament of Josefa Munoz de Uribe, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the legatees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said Josefa Munoz de Uribe, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 20th day of January, A. D. 1868, at (2) two o'clock P. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the legatees of the said deceased, according to the provisions of decedent's last will and testament, heretofore admitted to Probate by this Court.

It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said twentieth day of January, A. D. 1868, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a weekly newspaperprinted and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated December 16, A. D. 1867.
M. BERGIN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
de21-28 ja4-11-18

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE W COLEMERE, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of George W. Coleman, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at the office of Burnett & Burnett, Esqs. No. 606 Washington street, rooms No. 57, 58 and 59, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, or they will be forever barred.
JAMES B. CHALMERS,
Administrator of the estate of George W. Colemere, deceased.
Dated December 17th, 1867.
W. C. & J. M. Burnett, Attorneys for Administrator.
de21-28 ja4 11-18

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF WILLIAM STANNAH, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the estate of William Stannah, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, at the office of W. C. & J. M. Burnett, Esqs. No. 606 Washington street, San Francisco.
BRIDGET STANNAH, Administratrix.
W. C. & J. M. Burnett, Attorneys for Administratrix.
de21-28-ja4-11-18

BOWEN BROS.

GROCERS,
Tea and Wine Merchants,
S. E. cor. Montgo'ry and California,
San Francisco.
Wholesale Store,
204 Front Street.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VII., No. 32. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT ST REET. | SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 28, 1867. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

The Educational Bear-Garden Again.

In spite of our remonstrances the members of the new Board of Education will not behave themselves. They were at it again last Monday. Mr. Cobb was terribly excited on the subject of Mr. Pelton's resignation having been accepted. He insisted that the Board should provide Mr. Pelton with a position in the public schools, where he could earn his bread. He said:

If you are determined to turn this man, who has served the Department well and faithfully, not two years, but eighteen out to starve, I shake my coat tails clear of it.

The noble spectacle of Mr. Cobb shaking his coat-tails, which he did in an excited and angry manner, led to more quarrelling. Mr. Holt misbehaved himself, he talked of Mr. Pelton's "Punic faith" and called the "discussion" (very correctly) a "quarrel." Then he said:

"In this dispute between Hoitt and Pelton, I can only say, with Tybalt, when stabbed, "A plague, say I, on both your houses."

This is bad for a member of the Board of Education. Tybalt did not say when stabbed, "A plague say I on both your houses," on the contrary he lay down and gave up the ghost without saying a word. Mercutio, when Tybalt stabbed him said:

"A plague o'both the houses!"

Then Mr. Holt did worse; he swore! He said, "Take both of these men out, for so help me God, all I have at heart is the good of this Department and the Lincoln School."

This is very shocking. Then when Mr. Cornwall said "the gentleman from the——" Mr. Cobb called him to order, saying:

"I call the speaker to order. Not the gentleman from the Fifth—the member."

The following then occurred:

"Dr. Ayer—Is any personal reflection intended by that remark, sir?

Mr. Cobb—By no means, as to you. I consider you every inch a gentleman.

Now it is quite evident that Dr. Ayer's efforts to "come his suave over" Mr. Cobb have been successful, as he considers him every inch a gentleman. So the quarrel—"discussion we mean—went on. Mr. Scott never thought the Board would submit to Hoitt's "base appeal to 1000 boys in that school." No suave about that! The meeting wound up with a row—a discussion—about a resolution offered by Mr. Cobb providing for the revision of the Committees on school houses and sites—furniture and supplies and printing, as they were "too much stereotyped." This is the style:

Mr. Holt—I hope this resolution will be acted on at once. The gentlemen stand up here and disclaim any insinuation against the members of these committees, and yet say they have things to say which they do not wish to utter in open Board, I say again, so far as I am concerned, I defy you both.

Mr. Coe—And I.

Mr. Rogers—And I.

Mr. Cobb.—If the cap fits your head, sir, I put it upon it.

We do hope if order cannot be maintained in the Educational Bear Garden that Mr. Cobb will be restrained from personal violence, that nothing more liable to injury, than furniture will be knocked down at any session of the Board. Seriously speaking, is it not time that the chairman had gained sufficient influence over these unruly supervisors of the education and training of the children of this State to prevent such "discussions as have occurred of late?

Literature in California.

Linn C. Doyle in his letter to the Stockton Evening Herald, makes some straightforward and sensible remarks in reply to the Alta's assertion, that writers for the Press in California received adequate remuneration. Linn C. Doyle sticks up manfully for his brethren of the Press, and claims that California possesses "the best literary brains in the Union, and the poorest paid." We like this writer's style: he is so evidently in earnest, and so fully believes in the literary supremacy of California—as far as the supply of talented writers is concerned—over all other States. The editor of the Alta like a comfortable, fat stalled ox cannot imagine what the writers of California have to grumble about. He says:

"In our editorial note we estimated the amount paid to California authors at $10,000, and we have no reason to reduce that estimate now.

Wicked, ungrateful Linn C. Doyle to accuse California of not encouraging home authors! A State that has during the space of seventeen years rewarded her literary men with the munificent sum of $10,000! Shame on such ingratitude. It must be true; the Alta "has no reason to reduce that estimate now." Then "Roman & Co., have paid out about $3,000 dollars to authors during the last six months," and during that time, perhaps, more than $15,000 in California gold has been paid for National Police Gazettes, Ledgers, and other Eastern publications. After enumerating a number of California publications, all of which it pronounces to be excellent, the Alta continues:

"Whether these Californian books have been profitable to their authors appear to us to be a secondary question."

Oh! most decidedly a secondary question. It is not of the slightest consequence that California writers, who produce works of merit, should derive any profit from them. Then in the same style:

"We take more pride in the literary merit of the books of California than in their pecuniary success."

It is much to be regretted that this editorial did not appear in the Alta during the hot weather. It is so refreshingly cool. It is unseasonable at Christmas time, when some of these Californian authors who have not derived any profit from their excellent works, would willingly invest in over-coats had they been fairly remunerated for their labor. Now hear this sleek and well-liking animal once more rebuke the lean kine, whose champion, Linn C. Doyle, has costituted himself:

"The profession of letters on the Pacific appears to us, when we take all the circumstances into consideration, to be in a very satisfactory and promising condition."

This is the conclusion of the article. The editor of the Alta is perfectly satisfied and so we trust will be every member of the profession of letters after he has carefully perused this remarkable editorial. When we reflect that this literary production cost the proprietors of the Alta somewhere about twenty dollars, basing our calculations on the yearly pay of the editor, and the proportionate amount of literary labor which he performs, who dare say that members of the literary profession in California are underpaid!

The Reverend Henry Ward Beecher, Novelist and Playwright.

On dit; that Mr. Beecher is now engaged in writing a drama of a strictly original character—the scenes to be laid in New England—for the Worrell Sisters.

Anything to turn an honest penny says Beecher. Why shouldn't he increase his limited income by writing stories for the Ledger, and plays for the Worrell Sisters? We hope that his congregation will not raise any frivolous objections to his thus filling up his spare time. Perhaps Mr. Beecher will in course of time acquire such a liking for the stage that he will on a future occasion appear in some part not derogatory to his character as a minister of the Gospel. We all know that old-fashioned people consider the theatre the entrance to hell and the pit as a sort of preparatory academy for those destined for the bottomless pit. But why should not Mr. Beecher carry the war right into the devil's domain? Can any improper word, guesture or thought be perpetrated on a stage, devoted to the representation of scenes in New England which is as all know the special abode of the saints on earth. Even if Mr. Beecher does play at a theatre on week days and preach on Sundays, we do not think that he is liable to get his morals hurt.

The Negative of Life.

The Times says:

"George F. parsons has copyrighted a story entitled "Hiram Potter's Vision: The Phantom that visited him, and the scenes that were shown him; the negtive of life in San Francisco."

We don't exactly know what "the negative of life in San Francisco" is useless, it is death. A photographic negative presents lights and shades reversed. Certainly this is not a characteristic of Mr. Parson's story; he presents a faithful picture, and by no means represents the dark shades of juvenile life in San Francisco as light; he paints the horrid boys very black, but not blacker than they really are. The moral throughout is most positively urged, and certainly "the negative of life in San Francisco" appears anything but a fitting sub-title for "Hiram Potter's Vision."

Respect for the Dead.

An exchange says:

China has rich mines, but will not let them be worked for the fear of disturbing the repose of the dead.

Good gracious! Such a reason would not carry much weight here. Let gold be discovered in Lone Mountain Cemetary, and within six hours after the fact was known there would not be a foot of ground which was not staked out for mining purposes. Bah! A man in San Francisco under the influence of a mining excitement would jump his grandmother's grave, and turn his family vault into a whiskey mill for the accomodation of miners. What cursed, sentimental fools those Chinamen must be! It is a comfort to reflect that we sent them another missionary not long ago.

A Beautiful Simile.

The Call speaking of the beef displayed by two rival butches at the California Market on Christmas eve says:

Both of them displayed the carcasses of several large cattle, which were so fat that the grease looked like butter, and the meat as rosy as a maiden's lips.

This is pretty and poetical, but the converse would not be so pretty. It is a happy thought to compare raw beef to a maiden's lips, but it would not be so poetical to say a maiden's lips looked like raw beef. TREM.

DRIVEN OVERBOARD—AN ADVENTURE IN THE CHINESE WATERS.

BY JACOB CARRINGTON.

NATURE having given me a disposition inclined to a roving and adventurous life, and fate having gratified my foolish inclinations by making me a sailor, after leading a checkered existence in various parts of the world, I found myself, toward the close of the year 1861, in that strange, out-of-the-way Chinese port, Ningpo; found myself also captain and sole owner of one of those round bottomed, swift, piratical-looking craft to which the Portuguese have given the name of lorcha.

Fair to the nautical eyes were the proportions of my Queen Mary; low, rakish, and light in hull and spars; snowy white her new American cotton-canvass wings; formidable her two twelve pounder brass guns.

At the period referred to, I had not tested the lorcha by a sea-voyage, and only knew of her sailing qualities by repute. All aboard, however, was ship-shape, and I was eagerly on the look-out for business, when welcome news came among the little fleet of coasting vessels thronging the port, to the effect that the incorrigible Taiping rebels meditated an attack upon the island of Chusan, which lies some score and a half miles to the eastward.

This rumor, to us, meant business indeed; and skippers were soon dodging about from boat to boat, seeking information as to who intended sailing for the island, borrowing or leading munitions of war, and getting everything prepared to bring to a haven of security any luckless Chusanite disposed to flee the avenging Taiping.

A curious and a motley set were those same skippers or boat captains, representing, as they did, nearly every nationality. All assembled on board the largest lorcha (the captain of which, by the tacit consent of the masters of the smaller craft, became a sort of honorary commodore of the fleet and president of the council), to settle finally the order of going, and the ways thereof.

The pirate Ti-mungs, (large sea-going war junks) were cruising, some one said, as thick as monkeys in the Strait of Bafleman, where a ship cannot square her yards for them, and the notorious A-pak (the terror of the north-east coast) was declared to have a large fleet as hard at work as the much abused Davy Jones in a gale of wind.

Talking of pirates, many a legend, many a deadly encounter, and many a wonderful escape came to be narrated. One long Yankee favored us with the exhibition of a dozen jagged slugs, that had been extracted from where they had been carefully deposited in different parts of his body by the bucaneers of the south coast. Another member of the council had lost two fingers and a nose; while some one else deposed to having had his ears cut off, and sent to his friends in an envelope, as a gentle intimation of what was in reserve if the demanded ransom were not forthcoming. Then the murder of poor B——(who had been nailed to the deck of his own boat, and in that position horribly mutilated) was animadverted upon with grim rage. Nearly every one had some desperate affair to relate, sufficiently terrible, even after allowing for the elaboration in which the traveler and adventurer usually delight.

Our beverage, that afternoon, was fiery Holland gin, poured from comfortable-looking, square-faced black bottles, into cracked tumblers, china tea cups, and empty tin percussion cap boxes—our host being weak in the crockery line—indeed, the last comer solaced himself from a large glass ink bottle, but then he was skipper of some very diminutive "hooker."

The following morn came bright and clear; and before the early sun had driven the light hoarfrost from the decks, the Queen Mary was under weigh, bound, with many other vessels, to Chusan. Unfortunately, while dropping down the river, we fouled the ground-tackle of a large ship at anchor, and so, being unable to get clear for some time, I had the melancholy satisfaction to see the rest of the fleet skimming away without me. Away they flew, with fair wind and tide—schooners, lorchas, junks, every imaginable rig and flag, they gradually disappeared, leaving me with my new vessel to make the voyage alone and unsupported.

I had a Chinese crew, the only white man on board beside myself being young Harley, the mate—a cool hand; a strange reckless, likeable American from the old "Palmetto State;" sharp as a needle, and perfectly fearless.

Having lost an anchor before getting clear of the ship, and being unable to replace it until the next day, we were obliged to remain for the night at Ningpo.

We cleared our cables on the following morning, and were once more under weigh.

A friend of mine, a Canton man, who owned a large Timung, was also bound to Chusan, and with him I entered into an alliance offensive and defensive, agreeing to start together and sail in company. This same native skipper was a jolly and sociable fellow, and exceedingly brave withal (while safely in port).

"Look here, Massa Ha-le," he had said in the course of conversation, "mi no fear that—pieeee pilong" [pirates] "one smallo piecee! S'pose be come, mi fightee he; kill aller piecee man chop, chop" [quickly].

We sailed faster than our Canton consort; and when abreast of the town of Chinhae (situated at the mouth of the river, some twelve miles below Ningpo), we were more than half a mile ahead. We held on our course, straight out between the grim rocks guarding the river's bar, and the old Ti-mung followed in our wake. A fair wind whistled loudly in the offing as, with sail set, the Queen Mary's sticks bent bravely to it.

Such coasting vessels as mine always carry a Chinese captain and pilot, or lowder, as he is named, on whom the steering, and generally the working of the ship devolve. In Ningpo I had discharged my old lowder for misconduct, but the rest of the crew, with one exception, had sailed with me before. The stranger was a wolf-limbed, sharp-featured Chinese mariner, who had been picked up in some tea shop, or perhaps an opium den. My boy (aet. fifty), Jim by name, though more frequently called by his other sobriquet, the "Angel"—how he obtained that interesting and euphonious cognomen deponent sayeth not—was himself a Chusanman, and by long experience afloat, knew every turn of the coast, every set of the strong currents, therefore had I installed him as lowder pro tem. Jim had a moon-faced Mrs. Jim, as well as several equally moon-faced, interesting little Jims residing in the island; and although, when I asked whether he liked the prospect of a voyage, to Chusan, he answered with oriental humility: "S'pose master likee, mi likee; s'pose master no likee, mi no likee," I could yet see, by the twinkle of his oblique little black eyes—as he made the men now sway taut the halyards, now drag at the sheet—that a meeting with the Celestial beauty and her scantily clothed progeny would be decidedly to his taste.

I had heard that Jim had been suspected of having done a little pirating in his younger days; but in spite of this, and the fact that he was an inveterate opium-smoker when ashore, he proved a faithful servant to me, and one who watched my interests with the greatest attention. Whatever might be the time I called him, day or night, he would always promptly appear, and there, before me, he would stand, composing his great smooth face into an air of respectful deference, while ready and willing to execute my slightest wish. He would often rise, unbidden, in the middle of the night, and come to my berth, as he said, "to look see how master was." More than once, when I have been lying awake, shivering with cold, has he voluntarily obtained extra blankets wherewith to cover up the chilly "white demon," as his countrymen call us; covering him up too, and tucking him in, with almost feminine tenderness—so these few lines are but a just tribute to his worth.

We were still bowling along before the breeze, which, however, was beginning to lull, when I observed my Canton friend's Ti-mung "hauling her wind," and putting back for Chinhae. Jim explained that the skipper's courage was fleeing with the wind—his braggadocia not sufficing to make him relish the idea of knocking about the pirate-infested bays and creeks during a calm night. It was a serious consideration whether I, too, had not better return; but as both pride and pocket argued the other way, they vanquished prudence, and on we stood.

The Angel's eyes were anxiously watching the sails, and he seemed determined to take advantage of every breath of air, as he devoted himself to his duties at the helm. Ere long, back came the mainsail and foresail with that sudden heavy flap which, to the mariner's ear, speaks so meaningly of approaching calm. We were within a couple of miles of the indented coast, and had made but little further progress, when I noticed that the crew were intently gazing shoreward; upon glancing in the same direction, I saw two black and wicked-looking boats riding at anchor in a sheltered little bay.

A very short scrutiny satisfied the Angel. "Jaundow," cried he emphatically, in the Ningpo dialect. My own experience was sufficient to make me credit his assertion that the strangers were pirates. Then, as in the present day, the whole coast swarmed with them.

All hands were quickly mustered, as we at once proceeded to beat to quarters with a Chinese gong. The new hand shipped at Ningpo made himself particularly active; his face wore an exceedingly fearless expression—an expression of mingled irony and exultation. He flew to the mast-head with the rapidity of a monkey, and prepared for use the *stink pots hanging there.

Jim's attention was again riveted on the sails, and he scarcely gave a second glance at the two boats that were now hoisting their brown mat-sails, and putting out after us. Hardly a zephyr ruffled the surface of the sea; and the pirates, being of lighter build than the Queen Mary, as well as sculling four large oars apiece, were rapidly gaining on us.

At length the foremost boat arrived within two or three hundred yards; and then, taking careful aim with the after-gun, I fired, and had the satisfaction to see the splinters fly as the shot took effect. Still the pirate steadily held her course, and presented so small a mark end on, while her crew were safely concealed behind thick shot-proof bamboo mats in the stern, that our guns were comparatively useless. My own crew, with the exception of Jim and the new hand (whose name was A-sing), began to manifest unequivocal symptoms of fear—their yellow skins turning to a pale, unhealthy blue. Harley was only able to prevent them deserting their stations, and running below, by presenting a loaded revolver and threatening to shoot the first who attempted to do so.

Soon we could hear the whooping of the pirates at their oars, as they rapidly shortened the distance between us. Harley and myself were kneeling, with our rifles rested, only waiting for the appearance of a man on the deck of either boat. We were perfectly well aware that if we once allowed them to get within stink-pot range, it would be all up with us. Our opportunity came at last. One fellow, impatient to board, and not having a proper fear of English powder and rifle-range, forsook the safe cover of the mats, and walked to the forepart of one of the pursuing vessels, where he began preparing various instruments for grappling. Harley's eyes was upon him; we knew full well how much depended on the first shot; nevertheless, confidently came that amiable Celestial. Already, in anticipation, he smells the blood of the "foreign devils," but he cannot divine the imminence of his own fate, or the deadly and almost imperceptible movement whence proceeds the danger. The brown muzzle of Harley's rifle shifts just a little to the left, and a hairbreadth higher. A sharp, ringing crack! And when that little column of white smoke clears away I see upon the mate's face a self-satisfied, determined expression; some hundred yards astern there afloats the dusty carcass of a Chinamen, with a large red patch near the heart—a man and a brother, doubtless, but nearly potted, very!

That rifle-crack seems to have released the wind. The Angel, cool as a cucumber, gathers his men to take a pull at the mainsheet, and the canvas once more fills to a particular welcome breeze. Harry's shot, too, seems to have given our recreant tars fresh courage, and as we begin to leave the pirates far astern, their bravery is quite refreshing; they loudly congratulated each other upon the valor they have displayed, and vow, with terrific Chinese maledictions, to cut out and devour the heart of any Jaun-dow foolish enough to tackle them.

About 5 P. M., the pirates being quite out of sight, Harley and myself went below to dinner in the cabin; after which, we lay down, and had an hour's sleep, knowing that our utmost vigilence would be required during the night, so multitudinous were the pirates in the vicinity of Chusan, and so active their operations during the darkness.

Harley was the first to wake up, and when he aroused me, we went on deck together. The tide was running slack, and the wind had fallen quite light again. The Angel was lying stretched out in a blanket near his assistant at the helm. The moon had not risen, and the night was profoundly dark; this would have been a matter for congratulation, but, to our horror, we had only been enjoying our cheroots a few moments, when we discovered that the mast-head light was hoisted and burning brightly. The Angel was instantly aroused from his slumber, and surprised us by declaring that he had given the crew strict orders not to hoist that lantern, and also be careful that they did not display any other. The lamp was quickly hauled down, and all hands were mustered, but not a man would own to having touched it. Eventually I knew who to blame, but at that time had no suspicion.

Having given the necessary instructions to extinguish every light on board, I remained on deck to see that my orders were obeyed, so that our whereabouts might not be betrayed to lurking disbonesty; if, indeed, such a misfortune had not already taken place, as it was quite possible that our late assailants had followed us, and, by keeping close inshore, passed ahead, so as to have seen our light. As a further precaution, I instructed Harley to employ several men at drawing water, with which to keep the decks thoroughly wet, so as to extinguish any stink-pots that might come. But I knew that, if we were attacked, our chance of escape would be but small indeed; two Europeans would not be able to work the guns without assistance, and our Chinese mariners would be perfectly useless in the dark.

Over our dinner, I had asked Harley whether he could swim, and, in answer to his look of surprise, had stated my fear that such a contingency as taking to the water, for our lives was far from being improbable ere another sun had risen. My companion had replied that he could swim a little, and I had promised to give him all the assistance in my power, should we be fortunate enough to experience so desperate an emergency.

Having buckled on our cutlasses and revolvers, we placed our easy chairs on the weather side of the quarter deck, and sat straining our eyes at the deep darkness, while yarning in a broken manner of friends and home so far away.

I should imagine that nearly half an hour had passed away when Harley and the Angel suddenly gave the alarm together; the latter, from his post at the helm, crying: "Jaun dow li, Juan dow li!" and the former seizing me tightly by the arm, and exclaiming: "Pirates, by the Eternal!"

Even as they spoke, my ear plainly distinguished the distant creaking of the heavy yulos (large oars, generally thrust out astern, and sculled backward and forward on the screw principle). We sprang to our feet, and our half dozen rifles were on deck within a couple of minutes. Then the mate stood by the after-gun, all his temper "riz" at the notion of a free fight. Two or three of the crew—A-sing among them—lent a hand. Then, as a large black hull loomed up on our weather-beam, I asked: "Are you ready with the gun?"

"All ready!" cried the mate.

"Then fire!"

Down went the match—a second's suspense—and the roar of the polished brazen destroyer echoed aloud and ringing through the still night air; but, alas! the gun being double shotted, the recoil was so great as to carry away its trunnion-bands, when it flew up from the carriage and fell on deck.

"Never mind, Harley," said I; "run forward, and let them have the contents of the other gun. Keep her away a couple of points, Jim."

I waited. Down went the match, but the gun hung fire.

"Bear a hand there, Harley—bear a hand!" I shouted impatiently, for the suspicious vessels were getting alarmingly near. "What is the matter? Fire! fire!"

The mate came aft, quietly picking his way, and said: "By the Eternal, capt'n, the foremost gun is spiked! I reckon some of the crew have jist done this."

The pirates were now within pistol range, and through the gloom we saw the long dark shadows of other boats following the nearest. There was nothing left us but to take our rifles and trust to Providence, though we could hardly expect to be able to do more than to sell our lives dearly. Chinese pirates show no mercy.

At this moment, and while the approaching vessels seemed "lying-to"—probably to make final arrangements before closing with us—the man A-sing came aft. We were leaning against the cabin sky-light, waiting for the pirates to show a light (which we knew they would soon require, Chinese fashion, to see us by), when he came up grinning and chuckling as he said: "Mi chinchin you; mi hang lamp; mi putee nail inside gun. Just now mi go friend; by-em-by come back, sar, sar! for you two piecee head."

He sawed the air sideways with his hand, to illustrate the pleasing meaning of sar, sar! and then made two or three active leaps to the gunnel. Another moment and the wretch would have taken to the water, and been safe with his friends the pirates, for I was too much surprised to stop him, but just then a sharp report rang in my ears, one shrill cry was heard, and the traitor fell in-board, shot dead by Harley's "six shooter." My friend then proposed the following problem, with the air of a man propounding a serious metaphysical difficulty: "Can you tell me why a fellow, when he has done a dirty trick, must nearly always brag about it?" He turned the yellow betrayer over with his foot, and continued: "I thought you were a bad lot anyhow, and kept a 'weather eye lifting.' Wall, you sold us twice, but I reckon we're quits now. Darned skunk!"

The discovery of the treachery made us both "kinder riled," as Harley expressed it.

The pirates were now rounding to under our stern, and lighting, as we expected, great torches. We loaded and fired as quickly as possible, now and then getting a good chance to deliver a dead shot. Nor were our assailants backward in replying, for their missiles came rattling heavily about us.

"Shoot straight—shoot straight, darn you!" yelled Harley, excitedly. But then, whiz came stink-pot number one. Being nearly amidships, it did not affect us, though Jim (whom we could discern by the fitful red glare still faithful at his post) must have been sadly burned.

Now, for the first time, a panic seemed to seize poor Harley; he suddenly called to me in a low, hurried voice: "Captain! let us jump—let us swim for it!" He sprang to the side.

"Hold on a bit, Harley," said I. "Let me have another shot—one more yellow devil—and then we'll be off."

I picked up my own particular rifle, not yet used; I had not long to wait. Taking a steady aim at a wretch holding a flaring torch in one hand and swinging a stink-pot in the other, I pulled the trigger, and saw him spring several feet in the air. Then I bawled: "Come on, Harley—come on!" And, in fact, the dread reality of being within a few moments of death by hacking dawned upon me, so infectious is fear. I could not see my friend, though I looked eagerly around. As for the crew, with the exception of the Angel, they had long since stowed themselves away.

The Angel called to me: "Typho (mate) have go down-side water."

"Come along then, Jim; let us follow him; be quick," I shouted.

"Master, mi no can; mi too muchee burn. Chinchin you more better go just now."

Bump came the bow of the foremost pirate against our stern, and her crew began clambering on board. I threw off my monkey-jacket and quietly dropped overboard, heavy sea boots and all, there being no time to undress now. I held on to a rope for a couple of seconds, while shouting for Harley; but meeting with no response, I put my feet to the lorcha's side, audibly muttered "good-bye," and commending myself to God, kicked out well under water.

I knew that the pirates had seen me, by the shower of bullets splashing around when I came to the surface. Fortunately, they failed to strike me, and the night was so dark that in a few moments I was out of sight. I swam the first fifty yards at a rate that would doubtless have insured me the champion's belt, being nerved thereto by the dread that the pirates might send a boat after me; then I remembered that my chance of reaching the land would be very forlorn, unless I moderated the spurt, especially as I was much encumbered with clothing. I knew, by old swimming-match experience, that the winning stroke was long and easy.

Boots, I felt, were unnecessary appendages at such a time; so, quietly seizing the water-logged casing of my left extremity, I sank, and removed it. A moment to blow, and then down for the right foot. Trousers followed in the same way, though the difficulty of removing them was greater; indeed, they clung around my feet in such a tenacious manner that I began to wonder whether I had wronged the tailor, and so, by an act of retributive justice, was to meet my death through the medium of an article of his construction. I next tore off my under-clothing (which, thanks to the Ningpo washermen, was of material tender and flimsy.) Then I bent my head sideways on the water, and struck out in the old racing style

The first quarter of an hour nearly finished me; after that my strength and breathing improved, though the stroke became so monotonous that I almost began to doze. I remember singing in a humming, droning sort of way, feeling also that my face wore a more than usually vacant expression.

After a time the excitement died away, and I realized the fact that the water was very cold. Then came a terrible idea. What is the use of this eternal grind, grind? Better raise up my arms and sink quietly down. I wondered whether it would be suicide if I did so since there seemed not the faintest prospect of ever reaching the land.

Suddenly the full horror of the situation burst upon my disordered mind. Here was I, a poor, helpless mortal, floating, drifting in the deep stillness and darkness of the night—God alone knew whither—perhaps far out at sea. I speculated in the same dreary, helpless sort of way as to how the end would come. Dashed, should I be, against some sharp jagged rock; mangled by the cruel shark (and this thought sent a thrill through my frame, such as can only be imagined by those who have had a swim for life against him); or would some swiftly rushing tide carry me into the "chow-chow" water, there to be whirled round and round for a few brief seconds, and then be sucked down to a large still pool with the loathsome dead bodies of other drowned men?

The apparent hopelessness of the situation seemed to paralyze me. I thought a prayer, rested my arms from their wearisome exertions, and sank down deeper and deeper yet. The first terrible sensation of drowning was upon me; but then, clear through the dense water, tangible, soft, even imploring, came the face of one dearest to me on earth. My energies revived; my body, too, regained the surface, where, during a few moments of confusion, I floundered like an ungainly Newfoundland. Thank heaven, I managed to keep myself afloat, and before striking out again, cleared my eyes of salt water. I had previously been swimming with my head on one side, so I now paused to gaze around for the first time. The moon was just rising over a bank of—cloud? No! There right before me—making my heart throb with joy and courage—land loomed large and clear!

All my strength, all my love of life returned. Inspired with hope, I swam vigorously toward the shore. I could now discern the dim outline of a large boat lying at the mouth of a creek, and my joy was redoubled when I found that a strong tide was sweeping me nearer to the beach. Soon afterward I heard voices, talking, vociferating, as only your true Chinese can; threateningly, I fancied, they sounded; but my great exertions were producing complete exhaustion, so I struggled onward. I could now barely keep my head above water, when suddenly my foot struck something hard. It is mother earth—earth at last! I tried to stand up, but only fell helplessly about. Then, through the shallow water, with a rush and a loud splashing, there comes a Chinaman. "Keep off, wretch, keep off!" I feebly cry. He won't, and is friendly.

In a short time, I recovered my senses, and found myself lying, enveloped in sheep-skins, the center of an admiring group of natives, who, perhaps, rejoiced, but who certainly shouted. It was out of the nature of things for me to resist thanking that Power (not poor dumb "Joss," to whom the surrounding people ascribed my wonderful deliverance) which had saved me; but when I had done so, the carnal man being still unsubdued, I shook my fist in the direction of the pirates at sea. This proceeding elicited a round of applause from the crowd, and produced the sounding title of Tasin, that is, Great-heart, borrowed, I presume, from some Chinese Pilgrim's Progress.

Four stout fellows at once seized and carried me off toward their village in the hills.

Upon reaching the mud and straw built hamlet, I was carried into the largest cottage—the residence of the venerable elder of the place. Ready hands assisted in placing me upon a couple of boards stretched over trestles, which, in this primitive household, constituted a bed. They then covered me with a huge cotten stuffed quilt—dirty and not aromatic, but very welcome. Brass vessels filled with burning chorcoal were placed underneath my couch; hot laou-chou (native wine) was poured down my throat, as well as vast quantities of scalding tea.

More than an hour elapsed before returning circulation warmed me, and rewarded the efforts of my kind attendants.

Very gravely the elders debated what was to be done with me, until I gave them to understand that it was my wish to proceed to Chusan, and that I would reward them for taking me there. I fell asleep muttering in their tongue, as far as I could speak it: "Chusan go, I give dollars."

In the morning, while waiting for the tide to permit my departure in a boat, numerous small natives took me into their possession, and with every symptom of lively satisfaction, trotted me off to the sights of the village, commencing with the Buddhist temple, mud ad infinitum, and ending with the coffin-maker's shop, mud as before. At length, after numerous farewells, and spasmodic attempts on my part to express the gratitude I felt, we cast off, made sail and were away.

At four o'clock in the afternoon I had the satisfaction to reach Chusan, and once more see the Christian ensigns fluttering in the breeze. The captain of the lorcha to which we steered did not at first recognize me in my Chinese rig, but when assured of my identity, nothing could have been kinder than the welcome he gave me. After well paying my Chinese friends for their trouble, and thereby rejoicing their hearts, I bade them adieu.

I have little more to narrate. That night, while sitting over unexceptionable cognac and cheroots in the cabin, a voice called me on deck. Proceeding there, who should I find but the Angel—aghast at what he considered my supernatural escape, and seemingly burned into one huge blister by stink-pots. At length he was able to exclaim: "O master, mi too muchee glad! Hi-ya! you have swim too muchee long way! O master"—now fairly blubbering—"mi before muchee sorry; mi tinkee you have die."

"All right, Jim; thank Heaven, we are both safe," said I. "But where is Harley?"

"Master, Harley have makee die. He no go water long a you; he makee hide. By-em by, Jaundow li [come]; cut, cut, cut; too muchee knife. Harley makee little fightee; no good. He jump now; no good. Too muchee sick; alle cut; no can walkee [swim]. Harley have go downside die."

The pirate had let Jim off to make terms for the ransom of the Queen Mary, he said; but I could not help thinking that he might not have met an old camrade, who had spoken a good word for him.

"Well, Jim, you too muchee burn, eh?"

"Yes, master," replied he, blubbering again, "but mi no care, master no have die. Ma-se-ke [never mind], mi pay Joss one numbah one chin-chin."

And in another moment he would have been kissing my feet. I was "green" then in China, and consequently treated the natives as fellowmen—beings with souls as well as myself—and some of them rather liked it; I think the Angel did.

Three months later, there came, from an old plantation in South Carolina, kind words and forgiveness for him who rested, hacked and quiet, at the bottom of the Chinese seas.

The Way to Health.—The only true way to health is that which common sense dictates to man. Live within the bounds of reason. Eat moderately, drink temperately, sleep regularly, avoid excess in anything, and preserve a conscience "void of offence." Some men eat themselves to death, some drink themselves to death, some wear their lives out in indolence, and some by over-exertion; others are killed by the doctors; while not a few sink into the grave under the effects of vicious and beastly practices. All the medicines in creation are not worth a farthing to a man who is constantly and habitually violating the laws of his own nature. All the medical science in the world cannot save him from a premature grave. With a suicidal course of conduct, he is planting the seeds of decay in his own constitution, and accelerating the destruction of his own life.

Example moves more than homily, though it be less clamorous.

Satire should not be like a saw, but a sword; it should cut, not mangle.

The bee and the butterfly are both busy-bodies, but they are differently employed.

TOILERS WITH THE BRAIN.

THE "Health and Longevity of Brain Workers," by Dr. George M. Beard, an article in Harpers Monthly, presents some curious statements with regard to the physical effects of intellectual labor, showing that constant activity of mind forms the most favorable condition for the attainment of old age. It is true that many whose names shine brightest in the galaxy of the world's thinkers, walked all their lives in sorrow and pain, and sunk into premature graves. But on the other hand it is just as true that the logical cause of the suffering and early decease of these men is to be found, in most instances, not in their intellectual activity as authors so much as in their native feebleness of constitution, in their dissipated habits or in their external circumstances. Many delicate, finely strung natures are irresistibly impelled to authorship by the force of their genius, and, if such are doomed to a life-long battle with disease, surely their calling should not be held responsible for their misfortunes. Some worry themselves to death, others hasten it by over-indulgence of the passions, and others die simply because nature does not allow them sufficient capital to sustain life; but very few die simply from over exertion of the mind.

Contemplate what wonders of toil as well as of suffering have been endured by many authors who have yet attained a good old age. Sir Walter Scott, overwhelmed with debt, lonely through bereavement, persistently writing and planning until he was past sixty; Dante, fighting with poverty and his own weaknesses, plunging into all mysteries and sciences for three-score years and ten; Edwards establishing a reputation as a theologian and philosopher that shall stand forever, while he was obliged to measure out his plain food according to the caprices of his delicate stomach; Irving, working at his desk for ten and even fifteen hours a day, rising often at midnight to resume his task, and yet not compelled to lay aside his pen until he was seventy-six. Besides these, scores of names are at once suggested of men of genius and letters who have struggled with poverty and various forms of ill, and yet have thought on and written until past the allotted term of human life.

College students are referred to as affording examples of vigorous and bounding health, not inferior to that of any other body of young men in the country. Intelligent farmers form an important class of brain-workers, and it is generally known that they reach a high average of longevity. "But this green old age is not due to their muscular exercise alone, for mechanics and laborers, who work even harder than farmers, do not live as long by many years; it is not due to the pure air they breathe, for many out-of-door laborers are much lower in the scale of longevity than they; nor lastly, is it due to the calmness of rural life, for the farmer, if a freeholder is burdened with grave responsibilities and oppressed by weightier cares than the butcher in the market, the teamster on the highway, or the workman he employs by the day, all of whom die much younger than he.

"Farmers are long-lived not only because of pure air, moderate exercise and country quiet, but more especially effects of merely physical labor by varied activity of the mind. Of nearly twenty thousand of this class who died in Massachusetts, the average age was over sixty."

In our large cities also the best physical development is found in the most highly favored classes as regards material prosperity, and whose habitual pursuits demand constant activity of mind. Merchants and manufacturers live longer than artisans and laborers, but not so long as professional men. Reasoning from analogy and from the facts of biography, it would seem that those who are endowed with unusual intellectual powers can work harder and longer, all things being equal, than the rank and file of humanity.

Alfred Tennyson's great poem. "Enoch Arden," has been translated into German, in masterly style, by Edward Duboc (pseudonyme for Robert Waldmueller). The metre is that of the original.

Robert Browning is fifty-six years old, instead of forty-nine, as stated by an exchange. His first poem appeared in his twenty-third.

Mr. Bently is preparing for publication "The Miscellaneous Prose Works of Edward Bulwer, LordL ytton" now first collected.

Mr. W. H. Dixon's new work is to be called "Spiritual Wives."

Victor Hugo is endeavoring to get the material for writing the life of John Brown.

James Greenwood, the well-known author of "A Night in a Casual Ward," has published a novel called "Humphrey Dyot."

A recent writer says, on Dicken's authority, that the novelist's first model of Pickwick was a tall, dignified, benevolent, thin man.

George Ticknor Curtis has written a "Life of Daniel Webster," which the Appletons announce for immediate publication.

LITERARY GLEANINGS.

A "PHENOMENAL" ARTIST.

RUSKIN, who is recognized in many circles as an almost oracular authority on art matters, has no appreciation of Gustave Dore, and in one of his recent lectures, he sneered at the popular French artist, and poured vials of contempt upon the taste of his admirers. With the English critic, the extraordinary popularity of Doré went for no more than the popularity of Mr. Tupper would with a Saturday Review. Yet Doré has no Tupperish element in him, and the kind of popularity he enjoys, if not its extent, is in itself a proof that his works are worthy of attention. We do not know of any other French artist who has ever been employed to illustrate English books, and no artist of any nation who has evinced a genius at once so versatile and fecund. We have before us an edition of Don Quixotte, containing a few illustrations by this artist, which are not favorable specimens of his work, and yet there is much vigor and imagination in them all. One of the most striking things about Doré, is the readiness with which he undertakes to illustrate anything, from a child's story to an epic poem, and from the last sensational novel to a new edition of the Bible. A writer in the North British Review, thus speaks of his amazing versatility :

Here is a young man who has already illustrated the Bible and Dante, Milton and Croquemitaine, the Contes Drolatiques and Tennyson's Poems. If you expect all this to be done with classical purity of outline, like the studies Raphael made for his pictures, or even like those lovely drawings known to only a favored few of the artist world, which the modesty of Edward Calvert, and his high standard of perfection, hid from the public, you expect that which you will not find. Why, the man is (we believe) under forty, and his drawings are numbered by thousands. He must do at least two or three a day.

By the Cenacolo of Raphael, in the old convent of San Onofrio at Florence, hang two sheets of paper covered with original studies for the picture. Two of them are of Saint Peter's Feet, so carefully studied, so delicately and perfectly expressed, that you dwell on them with delight. There is more beauty of outline in any of the thirteen pair of feet in that picture, than in all of Gustave Doré's works put together. Look at the grace and elegance both of shape and of action of each of the hands ; if you have the faculty of perceiving it, you will know henceforward what beauty of form is, and that beauty you will not find in Gustave Doré.

In rapidity and cleverness Doré is quite a typical Frenchman ; he has all the dash, the vivacity, the élan of his race : he has also their hardness of heart, their want of sensibility, of tenderness, their total want of perception of beauty. As a people they do not know the meaning of the word. They understand effect, brilliancy, contrast of color, elegance, prettiness, the attractive grace of Watteau, but pure simple beauty of form is a thing unknown to them. Ask the first sweet young girl you meet what she thinks of Doré, and she will unhesitatingly condemn most of his drawings as "so ugly." Her own glass shows a fairer form every morning than any she will find in his works, and thus unconsciously gives her a higher standard of beauty than he has imagined. The plainness of French women is recognized in their own proverb : "Quand une francaise se mêle d'etre jolie, elle est furiensement jolie," but it is very seldom they do meddle in the matter. The perfection of form among the ancient Greeks is considered the source of the perfection of their statues, and on this ground we might expect to find that British and Italian painters far surpass either the French or Germans in their perception and delineation of beauty. Delaroche, whose Martyre Chretienne is one of the loveliest creations of the French pencil, had a lovely wife, the only and lamented daughter of Horace Vernet. We may lay it down as a canon that none but a beautiful race will have a keen sense of beauty, and, even though it should endanger the entente cordiale, we must maintain that the French are not a beautiful race. Their illustrated books are all ugly,—Doré's perhaps the least so. The Italians are a remarkably handsome race, and this beauty is reproduced in their pictures. Without vanity we may say the same thing of our own nation. Look at the difference between the distractingly lovely young girls, the handsome matrons, and charming children portrayed by Leech, and those in any French illustrated book you can find.

The following comments, though unjust to the French as a people, and indicating that the writer confounds the superficial levity of the French character, with real want of sensibility, are eminently suggestive :

To keep the conscience pure we must refrain from a voluntary contemplation of sin ; and to keep the taste pure we must refrain from dwelling on ugliness, especially before the judgment is formed and the taste fixed.

What can be more hideous than those French bronze figures of preternatural length and emaciation, like spiders on stilts? Yet these are, or were, all the fashion in Paris!

The national hardness of heart and want of sensibility in the French nation comes out strikingly in Doré. Want of imagination often produces apathy. Kind-hearted people sometimes do not feel for suffering, because they cannot imagine it ; but Doré, with a vivid imagination of suffering, has no feeling for it. On the contrary, he revels in depicting it. This is especially the case in his illustrations of Dante. The poet represents schismatics as cut in pieces,—their punishment for dividing the unity of the Church. Doré gives no less than four illustrations of these mangled bodies—some with the face cut off some split in two, others with their mangled stumps turned towards the spectator. It is like a butcher's shop ; all moral meaning is wholly lost sight of, and nothing but disgust excited. Dante's own descriptions are horrible enough, but they are generally brief, and there is a tone of judicial gravity about them which directs the attention rather to the punishment of the sin than to the torment of that punishment. We can read and approve of a hanging, though we could not endure to see either it, or an exact picture of it. Our sense of justice produces a feeling of satisfaction on hearing of the execution of such criminals as Burke and Hare, Rush or Courvoisier, but a picture of a murderer in his dying agony would be scouted as too horrible. The physical details of suffering are no fit subjects for art. Music might as well reproduce shrieks of agony, as painting the severing of limbs, the rending of the muscles, the pouring forth of human gore.

THE CIRCULATION OF NEWSPAPERS.

The New York Round Table makes a charge against the publishers of the Independent, of endeavoring to promote their own business interests by a resort to peculiarly small arts. It says :

The Independent, a generally respectable weekly, has lately been at great pains to impress upon the public mind an appreciative notion of the extent of its circulation. This is fair and reasonable enough, and we have nothing to say against it. The circulation of The Independent is probably large, and we rejoice in its prosperity. But its publishers have just now had the curiously bad taste to lump together some half-dozen of its weekly contemporaries, designating them by name, for the purpose of drawing attention to the alleged numerical inferiority of their aggregate circulations to that of The Independent. Even to this, which is probably a ludicrous misstatement, we should have taken no public exception, had it not been for the circumstance that the publisher of the journal in question had for some time previously been actively engaged in distributing private circulars of a very ungenerous and even more explicit character, with the direct and flagrant intention of injuring the same unoffending contemporaries for the profit and glory of his own publication. This circular contained some statements which we know to be untrue, and inferentially, additional statements which others know to be untrue We have no desire to indulge in invective either towards The Independent or any other journal, and in a case like this, did we refer to it at all, we should especially be disposed to content ourselves with a plain exposition of the facts, leaving the public to draw their own inferences and take their own course. There are, however, a few points of a general character to which we had reference in speaking of popular mistakes in this connection, and which may profitably be discussed. The first point is suggested by the common error that the value of an advertisement is strictly measurable by the numerical circulation of the sheet that contains it. Such an estimate is fallacious for reasons as good, although somewhat different, as would invalidate the supposition that the intrinsic merit of a book could be guaged by the number of copies sold. Mother Goose probably sells better than Bacon, and there may be a wider demand for the dissertations of Peter Parley than for those of John Stuart Mill. There can, however, be no serious question as to the comparative value of these works, or as to their relative influence with society. New editions of Mother Goose and Peter Parley might perhaps be advertised with advantage in the Sunday newspapers, but not so with Bacon and Mill. In like manner, the "personal" intimations, whereby imperfectly educated persons of an immoral turn of mind are in the habit of communicating with congenial souls, no doubt answer their purpose if inserted in similar vehicles ; but a respectable young lady seeking a situation as governess, or a gentleman wishing to buy or sell property, would scarcely select them notwithstanding the acknowledged extent of their circulation. In such cases quality is a far more important consideration than quantity, and the same principle holds good as applied to a great variety of merchandise as well as to personal needs. There are journals to which, if their editions were quadrupled, certain kinds of advertisements would never make their way; there are others to which, were their editions much smaller than in fact they are, certain kinds of advertising would never fail to come. The instinct of dealers teaches them to announce their wares not to the greatest number of possible readers but to the greatest number of probable purchasers.

THE PACIFIC PRESS.

The changes in the journalism of this coast are so rapid, and newspaper births and deaths are so frequent, that the following statement of "the present condition of the Pacific Press" from Trubner's Literary Record, being more than six months old, is of course, very inaccurate. We can count up more than thirty new dailies and weeklies that have been commenced since this statement was compiled, and nearly half that number that have given up the ghost, taking only California and Oregon into our calculation :

"In San Francisco there are twelve dailies, one tri-weekly, and forty-one weeklies. Part of the latter are printed in French, Spanish and Italian.

"In the remainder of that state—twelve dailes, one tri-weekly, and seventy three weeklies.

"In Oregon—three dailes and nineteen weeklies.

"In Nevada—four dailies and six weeklies.

"In Washington Territory—eight weeklies.

"In Idaho—one daily, one tri weekly, and three weeklies.

"In Utah—two dailies. one semi-weekly, and two weeklies.

"In Colorado—one daily and one weekly.

"In Montana—one tri-weekly and one weekly.

"In British Columbia—three dailies and five weeklies.

"In Pacific ports of Mexico—six weeklies.

"In Sandwich Islands—two English and two Hawaiian weeklies, and two monthlies—in all six papers.

"The total comprises 214 papers. The advertisements paid for in San Francisco exceed 400,000 dollars per annum. The weekly circulation of all the city papers exceed 225,000 copies. The circulation of the three English papers printed in Honolulu (Advertiser, Gazette, and Friend) is about 2,200 copies, and that of the three Hawaiian papers (Kuokoa, Au Okoa, and Alaula) 7,800—in all 10,000 copies, among a population of 6,000 foreigners and 60,000 Hawaiians.

CARLYLESE.

The last number of the New York Broadway contains a very clever burlesque on Carlyle's "Shooting Niagara." Several similar imitations that have appeared in English periodicals, are said to have caused the philosopher much annoyance. The present attempts, entitled "In a Whale's Belly," is not inferior to any of the others that we have seen. Here is a specimen of the writer's skill in Carlylese :

The case of our ancient friend Jonah should seem to be more or less in point here. Jonah, prophetic person of the Hebrew species, gone upon bad courses, and "fleeing from the face of the Lord"—it is a phrase, my much illuminated friends, with deep meaning now, as of old—thought it best for him to go by sea. The infatuated mortal so fleeing! It is well known whither he fled—into the devouring belly of a "great fish"—whale, say some; but we will leave the species obscure, not seeking to be wise beyond what is written. Clear finis of Jonah, you would say, and conclusion put upon him and his prophesyings. But it did not turn out so ; it turned out quite other than so, as is vouched to us by the record. Jonah, engulphed in his dark prison, wondering much, as is like, where the dence it was he got to, tumbled about as we may fancy there, seeking his way out—tumbled and rumbled extremely, and "cried" mightily, as we read. The unhappy prophet! one pities him a little in his dark plight ; but also one must confess to a little human feeling for the whale, unused to a diet of live prophets, and puzzled to dispose of this one. A prophet not to be disposed of by the understood methods of digestion. Whale strove hard to digest the prophet, diligently secreting its juices upon him ; the indigestible prophet, secreted upon corrosively, tumbled and rumbled, as was natural, not the less terribly, but the more. Finally, the poor sea monster, very sick with its prophet, and thinking in the dim, fishy mind of it, it must have swallowed the very devil himself, incontinently "vomited" its prophet, glad to be quit of him on any terms ; vomited him "on dry land"—which was considerate on the poor sea monster's part—and wished him God-speed elsewhither.

MISCELLANEA.

As Henry Ward Beecher's "Norwood" was longer than he had intended, Robert Bonner gave him $5,000 additional to the $25,000 previously paid.

SEVERAL distinguished foreign critics have declared Phœbe Cary's "Dead Love" one of the best poems ever published in America.

RICHARD H. DANA, the venerable author—one of the oldest American writers living—attained his 80th birthday on the 15th inst.

CHARLES SUMNER is to write a series of political essays for one of the Boston weeklies.

TUCKER'S.—What admiring crowds gather round the brilliant show windows of Tucker's every pleasant evening to gaze on the magnificent exhibition of jewelry, gold and silver ware, etc., therein displayed. Tucker is really becoming famous for the richness, magnificence and extent of his stock. We imagine a New Year's present would be looked upon with increased value for having come from Tucker's.

GIFT BOOKS.—The most proper time for donating a present of a handsome volume, is on New Year's day—hence the publication of gift books, annuals, etc., in such quantities. Those seeking suitable works of this kind, as well as beautifully illustrated editions of poems and standard works, can procure them at Roman's, whose assortment and stock is almost inexhaustible. There also, can be found a splendid assortment of most beautiful photographic albums, and juvenile books.

THE NEW YEAR is close at hand and Appleton, at 508 Montgomery street has a perfect bazaar of articles suitable for New Year's gifts. He has shell-boxes, photographic albums, Rodger's scissors and fancy cutlery, and every description of fancy articles for presents for ladies. For presents for gentlemen, he has California diaries, filled with local statistical information, gold pens, pocket knives of all kinds, etc., etc.

GIVE those that are near and dear to you a New Year's present. Tyler Brothers, under the Nucleus Hotel, No. 691 Market street, corner of Third, have an extensive stock of photographic albums, portfolios, scrap-books, juvenile books, and many beautiful articles suitable for such gifts. Those living in the southern portion of the city will find Tyler's a most convenient place to purchase such articles.

PURE WINES AND LIQUORS.—Of course every one will be anxious to have pure liquors for their New Year's table, and for this reason we remind our readers that Whiting & Berry, at 609 Sacramento street, holds B. B. Thayer's, State Chemist, certificate that their wines and liquors are "entirely free from any of the ingredients used in the adulterations of wines and liquors."

CARL H. HAIN & CO. desire to call attention to their very select stock of Jewelry and Holiday Presents, particularly their immense assortment of Watches; the public may rely upon purchasing our goods at the usual low rates, and that no fancy holiday prices will be asked. 321 Montgomery st.

HAYNES & LAWTON, Sansome street, corner of Merchant, have the best selected assortment of Bohemian and glassware, vases, statuary, fine crockery and table cutlery, etc., in San Francisco. This firm has a partner residing at the East to purchase their goods and ship them, and has been noted for years for having the newest and latest style of goods in their line.

ALL persons requiring spectacles should go to Muller's, 205 Montgomery street, and inspect his Brazillian crystal spectacles. They are not only as "clear as cyrstal," but they are the real article itself Muller can fit the eyes at sight.

BOY'S CLOTHING—For New Year's presents can be bought at less than cost at H. M. Lockwood & Co's. 624 Clay street. They are closing up business. See list of prices on sixteenth page.

SEA VENTURES.

I stood and watched my ships go out
  Each one by one, unmooring free,
What time the quiet harbor filled
  With flood tide from the sea.

The first that sailed, her name was Joy,
  She spread a smooth, white, ample sail;
And eastward drove with bending spars
  Before the rushing gale.

Another sailed, her name was Hope.
  No cargo in her hold she bore;
Thinking to find in Western lands
  Of merchandise a store.

The next that sailed, her name was love,
  She showed a red flag at the mast—
A flag as red as blood she showed,
  And she sped South right fast.

The last that sailed, her name was Faith,
  Slowly she took her passage forth;
Tacked and lay-to: at last she steered
  A straight course for the North.

My gallant ships they sailed away,
  Over the shimmering summer sea,
I stood at watch for many a day—
  But one came back to me.

For Joy was caught by Pirate Pain—
  Hope ran upon a hidden reef—
And Love took fire and foundered fast
  In whelming seas of Grief.

Faith came at last, storm-beat and torn,
  She recompensed me all my loss;
For as a cargo safe she brought
  A Crown linked to a Cross.

[For the Californian.]

FEMALE SUFFRAGE

No. III.

Since the publication in your paper of my articles on Female Suffrage, there has been placed in my hands a copy of "The Constitution of the Universal Franchise Association." The organization of this Association, of whose existence I was ignorant, dates from July 11th, 1867, and its object, as explained in Articles II of its constitution, is "to secure equal rights to all American citizens, and especially the right of woman to vote." In an address "to the friends of equal rights" the association uses the following language.

"Deeply impressed with the condition of woman, her "duties and responsibilities, and the demands of the hour, "this association, through its Board of Managers, determines "to enter upon vigorous efforts for her enfranchisement, and "to continue that work until throughout this country, she "possesses the legal right to a vote in the government she is "now taxed to support, and to defend, which she is required "to sacrifice life, children, husband, property and home.

"In the District of Columbia, and in most of the Territor-"ties, ex parte laws exist which have elsewhere been changed. "This vast extent, comprising half the area, and one fortieth "of the population of our republic, is under the immediate "control of Congress. It is public domain, in the govern-"ment of which every citizen has a voice. We ask your "influence and aid to sustain and assist us in procuring the "passage by Congress of equal laws, giving to woman the "right to the guardianship of her own children; the right "to her own earnings; to hold property in her own name; "to a voice in the educational and moral interests of the com-"munity; and to the one thing which embraces all these and "more—her right to vote.'

Accompaning this address is a petition in blank, praying Congress "for immediate legislation to secure to woman equal "suffrage with man in the District of Columbia."

As a movement of this kind is apt to be judged, not so much by its own merits or the real principles involved, as by the character of its supporters, I append a list of the names of the Advisory Committee of the association. I think it will readily be conceded that if the association fails of accomplishing its object, it will not be from the want of talent to direct it.

Mrs. D. W. Cheesman, San Francisco, Cal.; Harriet Beecher Stowe, Conn.; Thomas Garret, Wilmington Del.; M. A. Tracy Cutler, Dwight, Ill.; Hon. G. W. Julian, M. C., Centerville, Ind.; Judge S. D. Bailey, Lawrence, Kansas.; Thomas J. Durant, New Orleans. La.; Augustus F. Holt. New Sharon, Me.; Wendell Phillips, Boston, Mass.; Lydia Maria Child, Mass.; E. Lagget, Mich.; B. Gratz Brown, St. Louis, Mo.; Ex-Governor Sanders, Nebraska.; Parker Pillsbury, Concord N. H.; Lucy Stone, N. J.; J. M. Scovill, Camden, N. J. Elizabeth C. Stanton, N. Y.; Charles E. De Long, Virginia, Nev.; Us. Sen. Benj. T. Wade, Jefferson, Ohio; Martha J. Filden, Cleveland, Ohio,; Lucretia Mott, Philadelpeia, Pa.; Col. T. W. Higginson, Newport, R. I.; Us. Sen. Jas. S. Fowler, Nashville, Tenn.; Mrs. M. A. Cutts, Brattleboro, Vt.; Judge J. C. Underwood, Alexandria, Va. C. P. Hotchkiss, Madison, Wis.; Samuel B. Watrous, Ft. Union, N. M.; Geo. Wm. Curtis, N. Y.; Chief Justice, Salmon P. Chase, D. C.; John Stuart Mill, Blackheath Park, Kent County, England.; Rev. W. H. Channing, Liverpool, Eng.; Victor Hugo, Hautéville House, Isle of Guernsey, Great Britain.

Let those whose opposition to Female Suffrage is manifested only by ridicule; whose arguments are drawn from their wit, and pointed with sarcasm only, reflect whether they can longer afford to waste on this question, such vast stores of the contempt which they will some day require for themselves. But lest this numerous and intelligent body of our opponents should be unfamiliar with any of the names mentioned above, and thus this simple argument, like many more elaborate ones, should fail of its effect, because of the peculiar intellectual state of those to whom it is addressed, I will add another, adapted to a less advanced state of general information—in fact suited to the meanest capacity. At the recent election in Kansas, Female Suffrage was a distinct issue in the contest, and the question which ten years ago a man would have been deemed crazy to advocate in a political meeting, received over forty per cent. of the votes cast in forty counties.

I have perhaps occupied too much of your valuable space with these details; but it seemed to me desirable to let the friends of the movement, as well as others, know what is doing in the matter.

Certainly the former have little cause to be discouraged. Although petitions and addresses may not have the desired effect; although the enfranchisement of woman in the District of Columbia be at present neither possible nor desirable; although every specific effort toward the great end may fail of full success; still every honest endeavor will have its equivalent of effect. The result of our efforts may not always be apparent, but be sure that no word spoken, no sentence written, will be in vain. It is little indeed that an individual can hope to effect in the cause of truth. Considered alone he is insignificant, but considered as one atom of the great aggregate, he is important. Perhaps the most we can at present hope to effect is to make the people familiar with the subject. But this is much. Whenever men become so familiar with the sound of new ideas that their advocacy no longer shocks their old feelings and prejudices, they are in a fair way to be reached by argument—to give the subject careful consideration; and when the time arrives that Female Suffrage shall be intelligently considered, the period of its adoption is near at hand. A. G. B.

SUBJUGATING AN ELEPHANT.

ON November 12th, a Cincinnati paper says, a circus elephant, 36 years old, 10,000 pounds weight, and named Tippoo Saib, while in winter quarters at Connorsville, Indiana, became unruly on account of a change of his keeper, and went to war against all mankind. He would allow no one in his quarters, and struck at everybody who approached him with his trunk and tusks most violently. His keeper determined to subdue him, and the process and result are thus described: The new keeper, with nine assistants, had fully equipped himself with chains and cables for tying, and spears and pitchforks for subduing Tippoo. The first thing done was to fasten a brickbat to the end of a rope and throw it over the end of the tusk chain, which latter is fastened to one leg and one tusk. By means of this rope, a twenty ton cable chain, formerly used to subdue the famous Hannibal, was slipnoosed around the tusk. Next an excavation three feet deep was made under the sill of the house, and while the elephant's attention was attracted to the other side of the room by a pail of water poured into his trough, the cable chain was passed through the excavation and fastened to heavy stakes outside. All this time the infuriated monster struck all around him with terrible ferocity, and tugged at his chain with incredible momentum. The next thing accomplished was the snaring of his hind legs. This was consummated by the slinging of fresh ropes around those two stately pillars of elephant flesh, bone and muscle, and finally, by the stealthy strategy of the keeper and another man, these ropes were fastened to stumps outside. The elephant was now sufficiently pinioned to allow the order, "change pitchforks," to be given. Ten men, armed with these ugly implements of offence, plunged them into the rampaging beast, taking care of course, to avoid penetrating his eyes or joints. The tenderest spot in an elephant is just behind the fore legs, and that locality was prodded unmercifully By means of a hooked spear sunk in his back, Tippoo was brought to his knees, but he surged up again with such awful strength that he swept his tormentors off their feet and made his chains whistle like fiddle-strings. After an hour's fighting he was brought down on his side, but for two hours longer he tugged at his chains with frenzied obstinacy. He pulled so hard at times that his hind legs were straight out behind him, and three feet off the ground. At the end of the three hours the giant gave in by trumpeting, which is the elephant's way of crying enough. The moment this peculiar cry was heard the battle ceased. The keeper made Tippoo get up and lie down a number of times, and he was as obedient to the word of command as a gentle pony. The animal was then groomed and rubbed off with whisky. He allowed all manner of liberties without so much as flapping an ear. He was a subjugated elephant.

TOM QUICK ON GAMBLERS AND GAMBLING.

FIFTY-TWO cards, rather longer on the sides than ends, starched backs, beautiful pictures representing kings, queens, jacks-in-waiting—which appear to be favorites with all—holders and beholders. The jacks have a way of turning up, to the gratification of many, and often make game for the players. Honors are often conferred upon those participating in the play. To be "low" is considered quite a favor.

In a religious point of view, or rather as a ready reckoner, as Pelee Dates used to say, "A full pack is a handy thing to have in the house; for," said he, "there's a card for every day in the year. The four seasons are represented by the ace of diamonds for spring, ace of hearts for summer, spades for autumn to bury the dead leaves that fall, while the ace of clubs greet the fallen limbs and bare trunks of winter. The thirteen cards dealt each hand in whist will count the weeks of the four quarters. They are an atlas, for the aces mark Europe, Asia, Africa and America."

Gentle wives, loving sisters, kind mothers and stately grandmas will not for a moment imagine that it is the intention of Tom Quick to glorify gambling or ornament it in any way that will tend to hide the dreadful results that surround it, let it be in parlor or garret. Wine and degradation follow it to the end, and I care not who binds himself to it for trade or excitement, evil results will attend him. Soft natures give way to dogged indifference. To finer feelings he loses himself. The man who adopts gambling as a profession, by degrees falls from the high position every gentleman should work his life out to maintain. Possessing kindness, love and humility, he becomes mistrustful, deceitful, full of knavery and all the other defects of character. Professional gamblers generally are generous, have kind hearts and are full of love for the world's people, yet they do not represent these excellent traits in the true way.

The gamester shows his generosity by throwing away thousands of dollars in extravagance like this. The hawd glorifies him, and calls him "bully boy." Why, he gave her five hundred for wine last nigh. The beggar-woman who holds out her hand to him, as he promenades in his dress of fashion, receives the first coin that his hand reaches—one of value, of course. The next moment he forgets that there was ever a beggar in the world.

Tailors, shoemakers and other tradesmen who have his custom, praise him. Why? Because he looks over no bills and pays the prices asked. His love for all God's creatures is proven by the risks he takes. If the house be on fire and a fellow-being in danger, he will be the first to the rescue. Let the proud or great on earth snub or trample the poor and lonely, I'll warrant you he will cry "shame, shame," to their very teeth. He fears no soiling in lifting, aiding or protecting the unfortunate in his walks. The friend or needy is welcome to his purse. Behold the change that comes over him, when the cards are shuffled and dice at work. Should his own brother contend against him, he will watch with hawk's eye that he gains no advantage. So to friends, so to everybody that is brought in contact with him while in play. There is a mistrust of all men, and certainly a fear that all believe, that when we are gambling opportunity alone is required to make us cheat or robbers. Surely you can call it nothing else but stealing when a man at play knowingly appropriates my counters to himself, let it be a split quarter or a pile of fifties.

This is done daily, nightly. Men loiter around the gaming table for no other purpose than to steal the money of the players, who from excitement or over interest in the game forget or overlook.

I have seen men whom the outside world call honest, with thousands in their pockets, steal a single check, in amount not a dollar, and argue a lie that it was theirs when they well knew it was not. What is he who cheats or takes advantage of any player but a thief? Call one of these men thieves, and high honor fills them up, and you must apologize. They try to soften thieving by calling it "smart."

They are gambling men who would take arsenic for death before they would take a farthing chip, or a penny not theirs, yet they have no compunction to win your last dollar when you risk yours against theirs, even if the pistol shot that sounds so near tells them that with the last dollar just now went a life. The dealer will subscribe a hundred dollars to bury the suicide, or bestow ten times that should the widow in her sorrow ask charity, but not a penny while the game goes on.—New York Citizen.

A Cincinnati gentleman who has been married for the past twenty years, has always desired to be the father of a daughter—his children being all boys. So great, indeed, has been his desire for a daughter, that he has often prayed that Providence might bless him with one. A kind Providence was not deaf to his prayers, for, to his great surprise, he was granted three girls a few days ago, there being about three hours difference in their ages. He don't pray now so much as he did.

MY AUNT'S PEARL RING.

"THAT pearl ring, Mabel,—you prefer that to all others?" I fancied my aunt spoke in a slightly regretful tone, although she had emptied the contents of her little jewel-casket into my lap so carelessly, and bid me select the trinket which should be her gfit to me on my approaching wedding day.

"You know I have a strange fancy for pearls, aunt; but if you have the slightest affection for this ring, I would not take it for the world;—and indeed," I added, setting the delicate little circle aside, and turning again to its more glittering fellows. "I dare say I can find one which pleases me equally admidst such a collection."

But with a little hasty movement my annt threw it back, saying, "No, no, my dear; if you like it, take it. I have no affection for it. Heaven knows I have little cause ever to wish to see it or hear of it again." And then, seeing that I looked up in some amazement at her unusual energy, she added, with almost a scornful smile, "What are jewels to me now?"

We were silent a moment or two, and somehow I felt that, in spite of the quiet manner with which my still beautiful aunt sank back in her chair and resumed her embroidery, I had inadvertently touched on some painful memory, and roused some emotion which it required all her strength of will to repress.

She was no ordinary character, as I well knew. Self-possessed and reserved to a remarkable degree, she had always inspired me with more awe and respect than loving confidence; but as she sat there, with the evening light falling on her delicate face, her lips firmly compressed, her brows slightly frowning, something seemed suddenly to thaw my heart towards her; and in spite of her frigid manner, I drew closer to her, and, laying my head on her knee, said softly, "I fear I have pained you aunt Magdalen."

Her needle went very fast for a few stitches, and then, as if with some resolution which cost her an effort to make, she laid down her work, and fixing her eyes on mine, gazed at me for some moments thoughtfully and intently.

"I am not superstitious, Mabel, as you know," she began slowly, and laying her light cold hand on my head; "but I think before we quite conclude the matter of the pearl ring, I should like to tell you its history. I am not sure that you will think it an auspicious bridal gift when you know all about it, and—and me."

Her voice dropped painfully as she said the last words, and I saw by her face that the memory of some past sorrow was pressing upon her with a force that even her strong will could scarcely meet and master.

"It is not a pleasant story to tell, Mabel, and it is one which, though known to others, my lips have never before told; and——"

"If it is painful to you, dear aunt," I interrupted quickly, "do not make such an effort for me, then. Never mind the ring, aunt Magdalen; give me that little cross you used to wear,—indeed the only ornament I have ever seen upon you: I shall treasurer it even more than the pearl ring."

"Hush, my dear—hush!" she answered, more kindly, however, than was her wont. "I have made up my mind to tell you this story. Do not interrupt me, but listen quietly; and if you can draw any lesson for your own future guidance in life, do; and then, at any rate, some good may result from my pain.

I was very handsome when I was your age, Mabel; I was, moreover, accomplished; and having lived with a fashionable cousin in London, I had acquired all the polish of manner, at least, which the habitual contact of good society gives. So when on one of my rare visits home I met and became engaged to Lord Rutherford, the possessor of Rutherford Park, no one was very much surprised, except perhaps myself.

Your mother was many years my senior, and though an angel in disposition, she had never been remarkable for her beauty; neither was she accomplished: and she therefore regarded me as a marvel, and thought no position too high for me to aspire to. My father shared her enthusiasm, and the consequence was, when I occasionally came to spend a month or two at the quiet country rectory, I was treated as a kind of divinity by my own family, and feted and admired as a superior being by the quiet country neighbors.

In justice to myself, however, I must say that, although naturally enough I was willing and pleased to be flattered, my head was not altogether turned by it; and I had acquired enough worldly knowledge in my London experiences to know that beauty was not the sole charm by which husbands were to be won,—especially noble husbands,—or fate ruled. And when, therefore, Lord Rutherford asked me to be his wife, I was very much delighted and certainly a little surprised.

I accepted him without a moment's hesitation; or rather, I should say, I accepted his coronet and fortune; for of himself, except as a necessary appendage to these desirable blessings, I thought nothing.

He was dark, and stern, and rather cold in manner; and certainly had he been a simple nobody I should never have dreamed of preferring him to a light-hearted captain of dragoons who happened to be staying in the neighborhood, and who for some time had been paying me devoted attention.

Guy Deveril was one of those men to whom the term "fascinating" may be truly applied. He certainly thoroughly understood the art of making himself agreeable; and if he did not win hearts quite so quickly or constantly as he fancied, he won without difficulty those first vivid fancies which a little constancy on his part could soon have made firm, even fierce, love.

I certainly liked Guy better than Lord Rutherford, and it was rather a trial at first to have to give him up as my constant companion in walking and riding, and take dark, stern Eustace instead; but the coronet kept me firm for the first few days, and then gradually my betrothed's truly noble character became more revealed, and if I did not love him enthusiastically, I learned to respect and honor him, as well as to appreciate his refined and intellectual conversation.

The more I was with him, too, the higher grew this esteem; and, in justice to myself, I must say, that though I felt my own nature was scarcely fit to soar with his, I made vigorous efforts to make myself worthy of him.

I was clever after a style of my own, and perhaps really more acute in my appreciation of character than Lord Rutherford, and I clearly saw that he did not comprehend me; I saw that he worshipped rather some ideal standard of female perfection which he imagined developed in me than my real true self.

But this pained me.

In the first place, I was too sincere to wish to deceive him; but at the same time I was afraid of his suddenly becoming aware of my inferiority and ceasing his devoted worship.

In spite of my disquietude, however, the courtship proceeded very quietly for some weeks, and things were advancing satisfactory towards the consummation of all our hopes. The wedding-day was fixed, my trousseau was nearly ready, the sojourn for the honeymoon was decided on, and as far as human ken could reach nothing appeared which could possibly interfere with the event which was to place a coronet on my brow and make me the wife of dark, stern Eustace Rutherford.

[My aunt paused a moment, and looking dreamily out over the distant scene of orchard and garden, dimly glimmering in the last faint rays of the red sunset, sighed sadly.]

I seem to see those scenes of the past still. I could almost fancy that figure pacing there beneath on the lawn, and pausing every now and then to look at this window, was that of Eustace Rutherford. It was just such an evening, I remember, when as I sat there on that seat, Mabel, over which hangs that rich laburnum, I was startled by Eustace's hurrying up in a breathless state, and seizing my hand, exclaiming, "Magdalen, I must leave you; my mother has been taken dangerously ill and I must go to her. I have only an instant to say good by, but I will write"; and then, before I could say a word, he had kissed me hastily and was gone.

I turned pale and cold, though I scarcely knew why, and without further delay I went into the house to tell the news to my sister Alice.

"This is indeed sad. Poor Eustace! He loves his mother so devotedly," she exclaimed simply.

"Yes," I answered; "and it will put off our marriage for—Heaven knows how long."

Ah, in my selfishness I was a true prophetess.

Alice looked up gravely. "That should scarcely be your first thought, Magdalen."

"I know it ought not; but I'm not a good young person like you, Ally, and—and besides I'm in love, you know," I replied lightly, as I was wont to do when I felt I ought to be ashamed of myself; and then I sat down to the piano and began dashing off a brilliant waltz, till my sister's light hand laid upon my shoulder suddenly checked me.

"Don't play that now, Magdalen; come to tea and calm yourself a little," she said. "You are unwise to give way to such excitable moods; Lord Rutherford is not the nature to stand it."

"I know that, and I do not indulge in them before him," I replied.

"But if you allow this habit to grow, when you are married you will not find the restraint easy," she exclaimed.

"I shall not trouble myself then; my husband must take me for what I am," was my reply.

I needed not Alice's firm "You are very wrong, Magdalen," to make me aware of the fact; but somehow that evening I felt as if some great pressure had been taken off me, and my own true nature, evil though it might be, would out.

I went out again into the garden, to avoid continuing the conversation, and to calm myself.

The next day I watched anxiously for a letter,—for truth to tell, I was particularly anxious that my wedding should take place at the time named, and if Lady Rutherford died I knew this could not be. But to my surprise Eustace did not write for a couple of days, and then only a hurried note to say his mother continued ill, but that he thought there were still faint hopes of her ultimate recovery; he did not ever mention his return.

I was disappointed; but at the same time I knew Lord Rutherford's cold nature, and I therefore comforted myself with the thought that he probably had not the gift of warm love-letter writing. I was naturally of a lively disposition, and putting the epistle in my desk, I certainly troubled myself but little about it, turning my attention to such amusement as Eustance's absence now gave me leisure to join in.

Instead of confining myself to the rectory garden, I went visiting among the neighboring families, and,—alas for my weakness and idleness!—again fell into the company of Guy Deveril. Since my engagement to Lord Rutherford I had done my best to avoid Captain Deveril, feeling that it was better for my own happiness and also more pleasant to Eustace, who, though he would not stoop to outward demonstration of jealousy, was one who I knew would brook no rival. Now that I had nothing to do, however, no one to be with me constantly, the temptation was too great for me to resist, and, insensibly, from meeting Guy in company, and talking generally with him, I passed on to strolling with him apart from others, and finally to tete a-tete rambles and moonlight saunterings, much in the same free way which I had been wont to indulge in before my betrothal.

Guy was more on a level with myself than the stern intellectual Lord Rutherford, and the effort I made to comprehend and appreciate Eustace was not necessary when I was with the gay captain.

He loved pleasure, romance, poetry, music,—all that could give sunshine to life, but which gives no help to weather its storms—and I was of the same light nature. His company charmed me, his flattery charmed me, and that gallant attention in little matters, which Lord Rutherford would never have thought of paying, charmed me. But though I indulged my vanity and love of gayety, my conscience was still on the alert, and as yet I was faithful in my thoughts to Eustace, and if he had but returned then, as I hoped and expected, all might yet have been well. Ah, how different indeed might my fate have been!

Days, weeks passed—a couple of months went by, and Lord Rutherford only wrote that from day to day they expected her to breathe her last. Our union he never mentioned: only once or twice did he speak of his return; and though his letters came regularly enough, and always breathed affection, I began to receive them as a matter of course, and to grow less interested in their contents.

I was a little displeased with Eustace at thus deserting me for his dying mother, and the attentions of Guy Deveril were therefore all the more welcome; and I know not whether by design or not, just at that time Guy pressed them more assiduously than ever, and whenever he could be he was always beside me.

Alice shook her head, and my father looked grave; but I used to laugh and say I was dull without Eustace, and should die if I had no one to help me while away the time, or else I put on an offended air, and asked them if they distrusted me. My foolish pride made me obstinate,—I would not be reprimanded and ruled by simple Alice, who spent her life in cutting out clothes for the poor, and visiting the sick,—and in very bravado I increased rather than diminished my intimacy with the gay captain.

Meanwhile my imprudence was attaining its culminating point.

In a neighboring town there was a grand fancy fair about to be held in aid of some charity, and a cousin of Guy Deveril, who was one of the lady patronesses, asked me to join her in keeping a stall. The invitation was sent to me through Guy, and he was very urgent that I should accept it, as the office of driving me to and from Little Denton would fall to him, and indeed we should be able to pass the day together in a scene of excitement and gayety such as we both loved.

My conscience was not quite easy, but I agreed, and set about preparing a dress which should do justice to the occasion and my own beauty; and after not a few hours' hard labor I laid out a costume before Alice's wondering eyes which even she declared would make me the belle of the fete.

You will think me very foolish, Mabel; but do you know I dreamt of that dress? I longed to wear it as eagerly as any village school-girl longs to put on her new bonnet. You may conceive, then, my disappointment when, on the eve of the fair, I received a letter from Eustace, which at first sight seemed to make the pleasure impossible. It was a long letter filled with accounts of his mother's health, and his own intense anxiety to get over the next few days, during which a crisis was expected to take place in the disease; but in a short postscript he said, "I have heard that you have been asked to patronize the charity fair at Little Denton. I will send you £10 as my contribution. Of course under our present circumstances you cannot be expected to appear at such a place."

That was all. He seemed to consider it a matter of course that whilst his mother lay dying I should never dream of appearing in any public place of amusement. To make such a request as a favor granted to himself would have appeared like an insult to my good feeling and good taste.

But instead of arguing in this way, I exclaimed, "How selfish lovers are! Eustace expects me to feel as much for his mother, whom I never saw in my life, just because she is his mother, as he does! Absurd!" And then crumpling up the letter, I dashed down stairs to stop Guy Deveril, who happened at that moment to be passing the garden-gate and casting longing looks up at my window, to tell him that after all I must give up the anticipated pleasure; and also to ask him to make my excuses to his cousin for deserting her party after so short a notice.

"Give up the fair!" exclaimed Captain Deveril. "Why, Magdalen, whatever spirit of change has seized on you?"

"It is a great disappointment," I said; "but Lord Rutherford would be seriously offended, I fear, if I went."

Guy never spoke against Eustace to me; but he was always meaningly silent whenever his name was mentioned.

"And what harm can you do his lordship by going? By George, a man should not leave a girl for ten or twelve weeks in such an inexplicable manner, and then expect her to live like a nun! Rutherford is unreasonable!"

I was silent, for I did not choose to join Guy in abusing my betrothed.

"I suppose he thinks it would look odd," I said after a pause; "and perhaps it would; but I am very sorry. Will you tell Mrs. Deveril, and say also that Lord Rutherford intends contributing £10 to the charity?"

"Let him keep his money!" exclaimed Guy savagely. "£10 won't make up for your absence; and indeed, Magdalen, I must say I think you are a little ridiculous."

"Ridiculous, Captain Deveril! Why, what can I do? I would do anything to go,—at least," I added as Guy turned suddenly and looked at me with a strange expression—an expression which frightened me a little,—"anything that was not absolutely wrong."

"Well, then, burn Lord Rutherford's letter, and go," was his reply in low tones. "Perhaps it would not be quite the correct thing, all things considered, for you to attend the stall and make yourself conspicuous; but there would be no manner of harm in your driving quietly over and walking through the place with the other steady people who come to spend their money. Even Lord Rutherford only meant your joining the stall-keepers. Besides, Magdalen, the Little Deutonians are a distinct set from this neighborhood. Few persons would recognize you."

He was leaning over the gate, and somehow his hand touched mine as he said this; but I did not remove mine.

"It will be horrible dull without you, Magdalen; and go I must, for I have promised Julia," he went on. "Do come. There really won't be any harm."

Still I hesitated. I was sorely tempted. I thought of the elegant dress, the pleasures of a day leaning on Guy's arm in a tolerable crowd of company; and thus I contrasted the dreariness of twelve whole long hours wandering about the dull garden or village, and Guy at Little Denton. Surely Eustace did expect too much; besides, would he ever know?

"Come," Guy exclaimed suddenly. "You relent. You won't begin slavery till you leave the altar, at any rate; and I shall be at the gate to-morrow, punctually at twelve. Good night." Without waiting for me to say yes or no, the captain turned as he spoke, and disappeared behind the rose-hedge.

When I went into the house ten minutes after, I never said a word to Alice about Lord Rutherford's letter; and when she said to me, "I suppose, Maggy, you are quite ready for to-morrow," I answered simply, "Yes; quite."

Well, Mabel, I went to that fête, and I confess I enjoyed it. My disposition was one which thoroughly loved excitement; and whilst flattery and compliments sounded in my ears conscience had no chance of being heard. I was the handsomest girl there; and Guy, proud of being my chosen cavalier, was as devoted as I could possibly desire. Indeed that day he ventured on more downright love-making than he had ever before attempted; and he gave me to understand (at least so I thought) that even then, if I would desert Eustace Rutherford, he would only too readily claim me as a wife. I came home in a whirl of excitement; and it was only when I laid my head on my pillow, weary and exhausted, that my restless thoughts turned to consider what might be the consequences of my conduct.

I grew strangely anxious now that I had dared fate; and I trusted most intensely that Lord Rutherford would remain away from the park long enough for the excitement of the fair to subside entirely. So anxious was I, that I condescended to say to Alice that I thought perhaps I had outstepped the bounds of propriety in going, and that I hoped she would not mention it in Eustace's presence.

It happened that on the previous day I had lost a small locket, of no great value; but being particularly fond of it (and indeed of all jewelry), I had shown some vexation at the loss, and sought anxiously about; and the next day I was not surprised therefore to see Guy appear at a later hour than usual, as he had promised to go to Denton and make inquiries.

I was seated in my accustomed place under the drooping willow, working, when Guy approached, and throwing a small packet into my lap, dropped into the seat beside me. "My locket!" I exclaimed. "A thousand thanks! I scarcely expected you would succeed."

"Nor have I," replied Guy. "I thought that, however, might replace it. I went to Smith's, but they had nothing like the locket; and I knew your fancy for pearls."

Meanwhile, in some surprise, I had unfastened the packet, and discovered a magnificent pearl ring instead of my humble little gold medallion.

"O, but, Guy, I ought not to accept it!" I exclaimed. "You forget I am engaged to Lord Rutherford."

"Stuff! Are you never going to take a friendly gift from any one when you are his wife? I was the means of your losing your pet locket, and I do my best to replace it. Do not be so unkind as to reject my offering."

A little while ago I should have refused it firmly; but the wrong path descends very easily, though swiftly, and I was already some way in my descent "Eustace must never know about it, then," I thought; but I slipped on the beautiful trinket, and laughed as Guy declared I ought only to wear pearls, for they were the only ornament delicate enough for my fragile white fingers. Still I was not quite easy; and when Alice suddenly joined us, I carefully hid the hand newly decorated from her sight.

I do not think Guy was pleased at this interruption; but for once Alice was not to be frightened away by even Guy's displeasure, and producing her work, she sat down and remained with us till the Captain reluctantly said he must prepare for his walk home; and even whilst we sauntered down to the gate, and stood for an instant or two chattering, she remained within view on the lawn, as if resolutely determined to watch him out and me in.

But I was not inclined for a lecture; and so leaning my arms on the gate, I resolved to try Alice's patience a little.

Presently a step coming in the direction Guy had gone made me look up. Of course it must be Captain Deveril returning for something. I saw a man's shadow approaching and then I started back. It was Lord Rutherford who stood before me.

I turned icily cold as he caught me in his arms.

"How you startle me! I did not expect you in the least," I exclaimed; and making an effort to hide my embarrassment under a show, at least, of delight,—"When did you come? How is Lady Rutherford? Why did you not write?"

"Not a dozen questions, please, dearest, in one breath," he answered, with a pleased laugh, however. "Let me look at you, and see that it is truly yourself."

He was in high, even excited spirits for him; and I could not help gazing up at him in astonishment, remembering his late anxious letters.

He rushed into the house to give Alice and my father a hasty greeting, and then rejoined me in the garden, having, he said, something particular to say to me. My guilty conscience would have shrunk had he not uttered the words so joyfully, and seemed so happy; and so I stood there waiting for him, and most earnestly trusting that all would be right.

A favorable turn had taken place in his mother's malady, and now the physicians ordered an immediate removal abroad; and her great desire was that our marriage should take place immediately, and that after a short honeymoon we should join her in Italy. Lord Rutherford urged me most earnestly to accede to her wish and his, and of course I was willing enough.

Eustace talked unusually fast; there was much to arrange and little time to do it in, as the wedding would have to take place early in the ensuing week. His own business at the park, too, required his presence; and so after an hour's earnest conversation he prepared to leave me. I could scarcely believe, as I walked down to the gate the second time that evening, that such a short space so much had happened. Guy was almost forgotten,—the fair quite. All I remembered was that next Tuesday the ambition of my life would be gratified, and I should belong to the British peerage.

We stood at the gate, and for once Eustace lingered and we talked. I had a nervous habit of twisting my fingers when excited; and was it my evil fortune or an avenging Nemesis made me fidget with them then? My thoughts were so entirely engrossed, that I quite started when Lord Rutherford suddenly exclaimed, "Mind, Magdalen, you have dropped a ring." He stooped, and, to my horror, took up the pearl circlet. "Ah, that reminds me I have forgotten the case of pearls my mother sent you. What a delicate little affair! I didn't give you this, did I?"

"No," I replied faintly; and then as he still held it admiringly, I added daringly, "Papa gave it to me years ago."

Perfectly satisfied, he slipped it on my finger, saying, "I wish I had remembered my mother's gift. Well, never mind; all will soon be yours. Good night dearest."

I had never told Eustace a flat untruth before, though I had not hesitated to deceive him; and I felt anything but comfortable as I retired to bed that night. I was very much excited; nevertheless I could not help being haunted by an uncomfortable dread of to-morrow, and directly I got to my room, I carefully locked up that fatal ring.

. . . . . .

I was not surprised that the whole of the next day passed without Eustace making his appearance, for I knew he was very busy with servants and tenants; but as the evening drew on I grew a little uneasy.

This uneasiness increased when, just as we were going to sit down to tea, my father suddenly summoned Alice out of the room

Had anything occurred? My heart beat so that I could hear it above the ticking of the clock.

A quarter of an hour passed, and then to my intense relief the door opened, and Alice returned. She was deadly pale, and coming up to me, she seized my hands, and almost dropped down on the stool before me.

"Something has happened?" I exclaimed calmly, for I felt desperate,—"something has happened, Alice? do not keep me in suspense. It is about Eustace?

"It is," she answered, faintly. "Oh Magdalen, what have you done?"

"I have been foolish, I know; but,—"

"Worse, worse!" she exclaimed. "You have been mad. You have given room for Guy Deveril's boasting."

I turned pale.

"What do you mean, Alice? tell me out plainly what has occurred."

"I scarcely know the whole of the story myself; but it appears that some chance brought Lord Rutherford and Captain Deveril together late last night in company, where it angered Eustace to hear Guy speak of you with the freedom he did He boasted, Magdalen, that he had more influence over you than your betrothed, and that it was the coronet alone which made you accept Rutherford. Finally, as words got higher, he declared that you wore his gage d'amour on the same finger with that of your engaged ring. Lord Rutherford gave him a flat contradiction, declaring it was false; and you may guess the rest"

"A challenge!" I whisped faintly. And Alice burst into tears.

I cannot distinctly remember all that passed that miserable evening. I was like one in some terrible dream. Somehow I found myself out in the night air, running between the rose-hedges; and I distinctly see the scene, even now, of summer stars gleaming here and there through the foliage of the trees. And then I stood in the great library of Rutherford House.

Lord Rutherford was sitting by the table, with the light falling on his face, writing; but as I entered he looked up. What I said I know not—whether I made a full confession and besought pardon, or whether I gasped out a few accusing sentences, and left Eustace to guess the truth,—I never distinctly knew. Some words of his, though stamped themselves on my heart, and haunted me for years,—

"Tell me one thing, Magdalen," he said sternly,—"that ring, was it Captain Deveril's gift?"

"Yes," I answered faintly.

"Then you told me a falsehood; you, Magdalen, stooped to the degredation of untruth. I have indeed been deceived."

There was a silence—a dead silence—during which Eustace Rutherford stood looking down on me from his tall height with an expression of stern resolution. I knew I was condemned; my judge was just but merciless.

"I will grant your request," at length he said in clear, low tones; "I will apologize to Captain Deveril: he spoke truth;" and then he turned and walked out of the room, and left me.

I never saw him again—indeed never. I was very ill after that, and it was weeks before I recoveaed complete consciousness, or could comprehend the few lines of farewell he had left for me before starting for the Continent. He did not reproach me for the past, but he only said that we ought both to feel thankful that before, rather than after, marriage we had discovered how totally unsuited we were to each other's happiness.

Guy Deveril left the neighborhood during my illness. You see, my punishment was not undeserved; but it was heavy. And now what say you to the pearl ring? Think you that it is an auspicious bridal gift"—Ada Buisson, in Belgravia, for November.

Permit me to add my testimony to the invaluable qualities of the "Grover & Baker Sewing Machine." I have had one in constant use for six years: it is just as good to-day as it was the day I purchased it, which I consider quite an item in its favor. I have used it for all kinds of sewing and embroidery; I prefer it to any other Sewing Machine that I have tried, for several reasons: First, It is not so apt to get out of order as a more complicated machine. Second, The stitch is more elastic, consequently more durable. Third, It will do a greater variety of work; yet it is so simple a child can learn to operate upon it. Mrs. E. E. Turner,

San Francisco, May 8th, 1867. 608 Pine street.

NOTICE.

he publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

ll kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO,.....SATURDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1867.

LITERARY CONTESTS.

IT is very amusing, unless indeed an irascible temperament renders it exasperating, to listen to the ordinary drawing room criticisms of a new poem or novel. The charming unreserve and frank decision with which these critical verdicts are rendered, the curt process by which they are arrived at, tho complacency of the judges, and their apparent freedom from suspicion of the existence of any higher tribunal to which an appeal may be made, are calculated to prove both edifying and entertaining to persons of a meditative turn, who have an eye for the curiosities of human nature. We are not sure that it is not to be ranked among the misfortunes of authors that they are denied the privilege of listening to the ordinary drawing-room criticism of their works. We do not speak of writers who have become famous or popular, and whom it is therefore, the mode to praise, but of the younger class, who have not yet won recognition beyond a small circle, and who may therefore be disparaged or flouted without thereby making proclamation of the critic's folly. We think it was Doctor Johnson who observed that by a wise provision of nature confidence ordinarily keeps pace with ability, a saying in illustration of which he cites the fact that fledgling birds never show a desire to leave the nest until they are in a condition to fly. The maxim may hold good so far as physical prowess is concerned, but in the field of intellectual effort, the general rule seems to be directly the reverse, so that we more often find confidence outstripping ability than lagging modesty behind it, or keeping dutifully at its side. It is not often that a man who cannot swim, takes a voluntary plunge into water that is beyond his depth, or that an individual uninstructed in the manly art, however liberally endowed with self-esteem and approbativeness, can be induced to put on the gloves with an expert. In trials of this sort the tests of success are apparent and infallible, and the consequences of overweening conceit are immediate, and often disagreeable. If a man professes to be able to lift a thousand pounds, his pretensions can be tested in such a way as to put the matter beyond dispute. If Jones boasts that he can "whip" Tompkins, or outrun him, the question can be summarily and decisively adjudicated in a twenty-four foot ring, or on a one-mile race track. But if Mr. Gusher claims to be a poet, or Mr. Snarlsnap a critic, or Mr Glimmer a philosopher or a scholar—if the conflicting pretensions of two rival critics, or poets are in question, the matter is not by any means so easily decided—not at any rate in such a manner as to compel the acquiescence of the worsted party. A fencer who is run through the body by his antagonist, or a pugilist who fails to come to "the scratch" when "time" is called, can scarcely be conceived as claiming that he has achieved a victory; but when has it ever happened in the history of intellectual contests that the vanquished party and his adherents have confessed to a defeat?

There are many persons of both sexes, we are credibly informed, and some who have attained to years of discretion, who hold Mr. Tupper to be a greater poet than Mr. Tennyson; and there are others, as we know of our own knowledge who find more pleasure in reading the novels of T. S. Arthur and Albert S. Roe, than in those of Dickens or "George Eliot." We have no manner of doubt, that if two articles on the "political situation" the one written with the calm incisiveness, and in the polished but vigorous style of the Saturday Review, and the other on the model of the "Triple Thunder" leaders that were wont to adorn the editorial columns of a late San Francisco daily, were submitted to the judgment of our entire reading population, and a vote taken upon their respective merits, the admirers of the latter would be found in a large majority. And unquestionably the majority, who admire Mr. Tupper and Mr. T. S. Arthur, and who like to have their politics seasoned with sulphur and administered red hot, have a perfect right to consult their own tastes in the matter. Indeed, it is probably better that they should do so, than that they should allow themselves to be bullied by a supercilious minority into pretending that they admire what they do not appreciate, and into wasting their time in reading that which neither interests nor edifies them. Probably the "Proverbial Philosophy" is calculated to be far more improving than Coleridge's "Biographia Literaria" to those who can glow with enthusiasm over the former, and who would not understand the latter, just as sermons of the flimsiest texture, full of sounding platitudes and furbished common-places, may, when delivered with unction, kindle a devotional glow in hearts that could not be touched by discourses of a loftier and more intellectual strain.

[For the Californian.]

CONCERNING TICKETS.

SOME astute philosopher with a penchant for definition describes man as "an animal which uses fire to prepare its food." Of cooking in itself he has not left a record of his valuable opinion; but of cooking as a distinguishing trait of the genus Homo—the one thing which elevates the race above the brute creation—he has expressed a decided appreciation. We may remark en passant, that if this profound interpretation of the culinary mission of mankind is correct, a good cook is the most nearly perfect type of humanity. Imbued with the same spirit which prompted this comprehensive description of man, if we were asked to define the term "San Francisco lady," we should unhesitatingly reply, "an animal which sells tickets." Other cities may boast of the beauty and intellect of their women—of their taste, their elegance, their wit—they may place to the credit of their ladies a thousand and one moral, social and intellectual sundries; we scorn to call in question their claims by the faintest protest. But with conscious pride, we boldly assert that an average specimen of the San Franciscaness can dispose of more tickets in a given time than any similar establishment in nature.

And in this fact we see a wise adaptation of means to an end. In a city so painfully appreciative of modest merit; so generously intent on rendering unto Cæsar the things that are Antony's; and withal gifted with such frank openness in its manner of doing good by stealth, how could the endless list of "benefits," "testimonials," "grand complimentaries," etc., which have their origin in these peculiarities of character, be sustained, unless the ladies were gifted with extraordinary abilities in the disposal of tickets. How else, indeed, could Bob Ridley—who carried a sack of onions on his back from Dan to Beersheba for the benefit of the suffering sailor boarding-house keepers, and afterwards lost in stocks all he had made in onions—how, I say, could he be suitably rewarded unless the ladies all sold tickets for his "benefit"—and their own.

Suppose that Spriggins should lose money at bluff, and the orphans should ungratefully refuse to grind an organ through Montgomery street to reimburse him. Suppose, also, that no one could be a second time induced to become a monkey for the occasion. What then is to be done? Why, clearly, a "benefit" at Platt's Hall is the only thing under heaven whereby Spriggins may be saved. But who will fardels bear, to groan and sweat under bad acting and worse music, unless the ladies will put their delicate shoulders to the wheel, and induce us to part with our very hard cash for the very doubtful satisfaction of extracting a smile from them and a chuckle from Spriggins.

Again: amateur dramatic societies are a necessary evil, Whatever is necessary should be sustained; and the proper way to sustain this, is to help them to turn an honest penny. This can best be done by a "testimonial" to some deserving individual who will generously donate the proceeds to the performers. (N. B.—It is always best to select a name for the beneficiary the very sound of which shall suggest poverty and excite sympathy in the hearts of a charitable people. Such names as Parrott, Brannan, Hayward and Reese, are good of their kind.) Then let the ladies proceed to sell their tickets—and their friends.

Such is the general plan of proceeding, but is susceptible of slight modifications in detail. For instance, instead of asking the gentleman to buy, it may frequently be better to request him to sell; at the same time handing him not more than half a dozen tickets. Of course he cannot decline; and —equally of course—he will pay for them himself rather than return them, or bore anyone else with them.

And so it goes. If you stop to speak with a lady on the street, it is well to have a few dollars loose in your pocket. If you call at her residence, you are expected to "pay at the door."

But aside from the great utility of the custom, it has also its æsthetic side. What can be more delightful than the delicate contrast between the fair vender's indifference of manner, and the half-disguised persistence with which she urges the claims of the beneficiary—whose name, five minutes before, she had probably never heard in her life? And how apologetically she assures you that she never attempted to sell a ticket before—and does not believe in it—and will never try again—and is ashamed, really—and—and won't you just take two, only a dollar each? And then it is such capital fun to sit by (you are supposed to have paid dearly for the privilege) and watch the contortions of the next victim. How nervously he twirls his glove, and how hideously he smiles. Poor fellow! At last he dives into his pocket for the two half dollars, remaining after a similar purchase from Miss Smith next door. He pulls them out with a long breath of relief, and imagines it's all over. But horror of horrors! one proves to be a five dollar piece, and he is too proud to take it back, having no other money, and cannot ask change from a lady, (in fact she has none, which is strange when you remember what you have just given her,) and so he takes five. A brilliant smile from her—an abortive ditto from him, and it passes into history that Francis Augustus Fitzriggle has been swindled. You both take your hats and you leave, with many promises to call again. Sly dogs! you know you will do nothing of the kind. Nor would I.

A. GWINNETT.

THE FLOOD IN SACRAMENTO VALLEY.

YESTERDAY'S Sacarmento Union contains sad intelligence of the devastating effects of the late ten-days' storm, and the flood raging in the inland vallies. All communication with the towns above Sacramento, by railroad or telegraph, had been cut off, and the Sacramento valley was one sea of swiftly flowing water. On Thursday morning the Sacramento river was twenty-four feet one inch above low water mark, the American, which reached its highest point about the same time, was one inch and a half higher than the water mark of the memorable flood of January 10, 1862. The levee, having been strengthened since the commencement of the rains in portions where the currents threatened to wear it away by many car loads of boulders and granite, stood the test without a breach. The Union congratulates the citizens of Sacramento upon this fact, and asserts that the levee would stand a still further rise of eighteen inches or two feet before it would be overflowed at its lowest part. Though Sacramento has escaped so fortunately, the surrounding valley must have suffered most severely. We gather the subjoined record of the flood from the columns of the Sacramento Union and Bee:

From the roofs of high buildings in the city, the whole country around Sacramento appears to be covered with one vast body of water. From the city to the tannery the embankment was lined with men, women and children, all come "to see for themselves." Looking to the north, the country was covered completely with water, which rushed along with great velocity. A great many houses and barns, belonging to ranchmen, had been carried away, while others were standing in a doubtful position.

A portion of the Pacific Railroad Company's track across the slough north of the city was rendered impassable yesterday morning by the washing away of the embankment on which it was laid. The rails and ties were saved.

Many houses in Washington were last evening more or less filled with water, which enters through the break in the levee at Hoagland's.

The levee on the Yolo side is all washed away for a considerable distance above the old mouth of the American, so that the waters of the Feather and Upper Sacramento have spread for miles over the Yolo plains. A Mr. Hoagland, whose house was on the Yolo side of the Sacramento, a half mile above the bridge, was placed in great peril by the breakage of the levee on Tuesday morning, and the subsequent washing away of his house; but was finally rescued from an apple tree on Tursday morning by a volunteer crew in a Whitehall boat, at the peril of their lives. Hoagland had been two days and nights without food. Several ineffectual attempts were made by his nephew and others to rescue him on the day preceding. John Fales and another man were rescued in the same manner from a tree on the north side of the American river; their house having been swept away. Fales was nearly exhausted.

From every quarter that news has reached us since the 24th, we have accounts of destruction by flood. At two o'clock on the morning of the 26th, the suspension bridge at Mormon Island was carried away. At Folsom a quarter of a mile of railway leading to the Natoma Company's stone quarry was swept away; also, a part of the same company's new canal. The railroad bridge at Alder creek was greatly damaged, the rise in that stream having been unprecedented. The American at Folsom, on the morning of the 26th, was thought to be higher than at any time in 1862.

By the clerk of a Marysville steamer, it is reported that the streets of that place were overflowed, and the water a foot and a half higher than in January, 1862. The street in front of the Western Hotel was nearly two feet under water.

The Marysville Appeal states that the embankments of the California Northern Railroad at the Simmerly and F street sloughs, have been more or less damaged by high water, and railroad travel suspended for a few days. The lands in the vicinity of Yuba City are generally submerged. The levee recently built, stands firm, but we learn that the waters of the slough have spread out to the west and passing around the levee, virtually rendering the levee useless at the present high stage of water. The new levee built this season to protect the lands in the vicinity of Nicolaus from the waters of Bear river, was broken by the present floods, and the country is again inundated. The same levee was carried away last winter, and now as then the whole country is one vast inland sea. The damage will be severe, as full reliance was placed upon the permanency of the new and enlarged levee.

THE New York Home Journal says: "The Independent has been enlarged by the addition of a column to each of its pages, giving it sixty-four columns in all. It says it is now 'probably the largest newspaper in the United States.'" THE CALIFORNIAN contains fifty-four columns. So our religious contempoary heads us by only ten columns—a little difference that we will make up when we "enlarge."

THE title of the new Christmas story written by Charles Dickens and Wilkie Collins is "No Thoroughfare."

[For the Californian.]

A LITTLE LONGER.

[The unexpected recovery from a serious illness of an elderly lady far past three score and ten, suggested the following lines. The writer of them, although in the prime of life, was herself called by the "ferryman," and was carried over the "dark river of death" only a few days after the lines were written].

Thou did'st wander, ancient mother,
Down close to that dark, dim shore,
While our spirits watching by thee
Caught the sound of the dashing oar,
As the ferryman crossed the river
And gave forth a call for thee;
As if the great feast was ready,
And thou of the guests must be.

We thought of the splendid city,
Just over the hazy gloom;
Of its precious walks of jasper,
And its fresh, unchanging bloom.
And we seemed to list while waiting,
To chimes from the golden bells;
And watch for glorious sparklings
From the gush of living wells.

We thought of many a promise,
And assurance of a rest,
In the precious words of Jesus,
For His chosen and His blest.
We thought of that City's mansions,
Prepared by that loving One,
And kept for His ransomed people
By our God's beloved Son.
But the boatman on the river,
In our vision passed away,
Leaving thee a little longer,
On this life's still changing way.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

ON Monday night, the Webb sisters made their first appearance at Maguire's Opera House; they received a hearty welcome back to California, at the hands of old friends who remembered them when they were here before and the California public in general, who are always ready to give a cordial greeting to every new comer. These young actresses were not long in establishing themselves in the favor of the audience. Miss Ada Webb bewitched everyone in the house by a look and a smile, and the spell is still on them. In the play of The Foster Sisters, with which the performance commenced, Miss Emma Webb played the part of "Neomie" with much feeling, and was particularly good in the scene where "Count d' Auvigny" acknowledges her as his child. Miss Ada Webb in the soubrette part of "Annette," acted with great spirit and showed artistic ability of a high order. There is nothing meretricious about her style of acting; she does not make big eyes at the audience, and then simper as if saying, "come now, applaud me." The audience are forced to applaud her, because her acting is really meritorious, nature is aided by art and the effect is most happy. John McCullough, who made his re-appearance on the Opera House boards on this occasion, played the part of "Elenore d' Auvigny" very quietly and well and L. F. Beatty acted the part of "Count d' Auvigny" very effectively. The performance concluded with the protean vaudeville entitled A Day Too Late, in which Miss Emma Webb and Miss Ada Webb each appeared in three distinct characters. Miss Emma Webb's impersonation of Angeline Sophia Soprino, a New York actress, was spirited and clever, Miss Ada Webb made a very natty Jack Tar, sang a song capitally, and danced a hornpipe in a style which perfectly electrified the audience. Her Dutch girl. "Pauline Catherinevondernopecanhearterpicklespeal," was a very good piece of comic acting, and the song caused immense fun. The medley duet by the sisters was very well sung. Both have sweet voices and use them well.

On Wednesday evening the bill was changed. An overflowing house witnessed the production of Edmund Falconer's fine comedy of The Nobleman's Daughter. In this play Miss Emma Webb appeared to good advantage, as "Julia Countess de Clairville," the faithful wife who is under all temptations, true to her boorish husband "Robert," (John McCullough). Miss Ada Webb was everything that could be desired as "Fanchette," causing the audience to applaud until they had to cease from sheer fatigue. John McCullough gave an artistic representation of "Robert," and Harry Jackson was very good as "Pierre Rouge." The performance concluded with the protean extravaganza entitled The Young Actress, in which Miss Ada Webb undertook four parts and filled each one of them excellently well, displaying wonderful versatility. Harry Jackson won great applause for his capital make up for and imitation of the style of acting of Edwin Forrest; it was one of the best imitations of this actor ever given on the San Francisco boards. This attractive bill will be played again this evening. The matinee performance will consist of The Foster Sisters and A Day Too Late.

The success of the Webb Sisters is assured, and nothing can shake the firm hold which their talent has given them on the good opinion of the public. Their repertoire is extensive, and novelties will be produced in rapid succession.

On Monday evening Boucicault's drama entitled Flying Scud, was produced at the Metropolitan Theatre, with new scenery, costumes and mechanical effects. The house was densely crowded. The Press have pretty unanimously decided that this play, both in action and dialogue, falls short of the merit which usually characterizes Boucicault's plays. It possesses however, many attractive features. Charles Wheatleigh played the character of old "Nat Goslihg," the jockey, in his usual neat and artistic style, never straining the text to make points, but conscientiously carrying out the ideas of the author. H. Edwards has not had grateful parts to perform since he became a manager. There is not much in "Tom Meredith"; he of course played it for all it was worth. The two best parts in the play are undoubtedly "Lord Woodbie" and "Mo. Davis," which fell to Miss Clelia Howson and J. H. Vinson respectively. Miss Clelia Howson's impersonation of the young lord, about sixteen years of age, who has just left school and taken his first plunge into the follies and dissipation of London life is a remarkably clever piece of acting. It is not too much to say that no actor or actress at present on the California stage, could have given so truthful a representation of the youthful swell. J. H. Vinson's make up for and acting in the character of "Mo. Vinson" the London Jew, were both capital. The characteristic shrug of the cockney jew was admirably imitated, and every point in the character brought out in bold relief. Miss A. Firman, who made her first appearance on the California stage, on this occasion played the short part of "Katy Rideout" with considerable animation and sang very pleasingly. This lady has a fine stage presence, is young, pretty and graceful, and rejoices in a profusion of bright and flowing hair which has gained for her the sobriquet of "The Fair One with the Golden Locks." Miss Emmeline Voeller, who played "Miss Latimer," has had considerable experience on the German stage, but is not well suited for this part. A. Fitzgerald's "Captain Mulligan" was a very good piece of acting, and John Howson proved that he had made a careful study of the part of Bob Buckskin. The most effective scenes in the play are the Fattenham Club, where Lord Woodbie challenges "Captain Goodge," played pretty well for a beginner, by E. Buckley, and the grand finale representing Epsom Downs and the Derby race. This last is the great feature of the play. The stage is crowded with negro minstrels, showmen, race-card sellers, pickpockets, policemen, gipsies, acrobats, thimble-riggers and jockeys, as well as members of the upper crust. The enthusiasm caused when old "Nat" expresses his determination—the jockey having been drugged—to ride Flying Scud himself, is immense, and the audience is kept in a delightful glow of excitement during the progress of the race. By a clever scenic and mechanical arrangement the race is seen—the horses flying round the course; just as the leading horse is nearing the winning post, Flying Scud passes him and comes in winner of the Derby. Old Nat sits in the saddle exhausted by his effort, while the crowd press round the now famous horse and congratulate the owner and the rider. The fortunes of both Tom Meredith and Lord Woodbie have been staked on Flying Scud, and the curtain falls on a happy denouement; the blacklegs are foiled and Tom Meredith and Lord Woodbie have gained back their fortunes and their lady loves, of both of which the trio, "Davis," "Goodge" and "Mulligan," have during the progress of the play plotted to deprive them. The house has been crowded ever since the production of this play. It will be performed at the matinee to-day, and every evening until further notice.

TOUCHSTONE.

CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL OF THE CHURCH OF THE ADVENT.—The tenth Christmas festival of the Sunday school of the Church of the Advent, will be held at Dashaway Hall, on Saturday evening, Dec. 28th. A capital programme has been prepared and will be sung by the children. A new Carol entitled "Christmas Bells," with an accompaniement of chimes, will be a pleasing feature. The rector, Rev. H. D. Lathrop, will deliver an address to the scholars. All who are present may expect to enjoy a very pleasant evening.

The organ of Trinity Church, New York, has been taken down for repairs, and for inspection, as crowds are going to see it. It was built by Erben, in 1846, at a cost of $20,000. Such an organ would now cost $35,000. The largest metal pipe is 32 feet long and 17 inches diameter. The largest wooden pipe is of the same length, and weighs 1,700 pounds. These pipes had quite a little congregation stowed away in them on the day they were taken down.

ANATOMICAL MUSEUM.—The wonders exhibited at this institution should be seen by all who visit this city. Here may be found the Cyclops child, a natural anatomical preparation of a child born, with one eye in the center of its forehead; three real Egyptian mummies thousands of years old, and hundreds of other surprising things.

"MONTEREY DEMOCRAT."—This is the title of a new paper published at Monterey under the editorial charge of Rasey Biven Esq. Monterey may be rather a slow old-fashioned town, but it possesses an able and spirited paper.

CHARLES DICKENS AS A READER.—When Mr. Dickens reads he seems wholly forgetful of his audience. No applause moves him to leave an abstracted mood. He is the interpreter of a drama, and the room full of ladies and gentlemen has no existence to him. A book lies before him, and he turns over the leaves, but he rarely looks at the pages. He knows them by heart. At first it strikes you his voice is artificial. There is a theatrical tone in it which prepares you for a disappointment; but in the case of nine lectures out of ten, this impression goes off, and the laugh or the tear defy the strongest will. Mr. Dickens extremely dislikes, while reading, the noise of people entering or leaving, and printed slips are usually placed at the doors begging that silence may be maintained. He does not address a syllable to the audience. On entering he goes straight to his desk, and commences forthwith.

NEW WEDDING WRINKLES.—The fashion now is, at church weddings, to stretch a broad, white ribbon across the aisle up which the bridal party pass, above which none but invited guests are allowed to sit. Another new idea with regard to weddings has been invented in Connecticut. A citizen of that State announces that his golden wedding will come off just thirty years from now, and offers a liberal discount on any presents his friends then design to make him.

ARTISTS' SECOND ANNUAL SALE.—A fine collection of paintings by our local artists—Marple, Denny, Bush, Brooks, Holdridge, Young, and others—The result of sketches made during the summer tour, will be sold at the saleroom of Duncan & Co., 406 Montgomery street, on Monday evening. The paintings are now on exhibition, and this sale will present an excellent opportunity to purchase original paintings of merit.

DAN RICE, the showman, has retired permanently from the business. At his farewell performance in Pittsburg, he made a speech, in which he boasted of having made more money than any six circus managers in the country, and said that he had given away during twenty-six years more than a million and a half dollars to various charitable enterprises.

BIERSTADT'S PAINTING, of "Crossing the Plains," on exhibition at 209 Montgomery street, still continues to attract large numbers of visitors, notwithstanding the bad weather. Strangers visiting the city should not lose this opportunity of seeing one of Bierstadt's famous works.

AN indication of shrewd sense in the publishers of Holmes' "Guardian Angel," is that they print the severe condemnation of the ultra orthodox papers as well as the praises of the more liberal secular journals. The public feel more interest in a book that is soundly abused than in one that is supremely lauded.

A REAL live manatee, or sea cow, has been captured in the St Louis River, Florida, and brought to Savannah by the steamer Dictator. So few in number have been the captures of this wonderful creature, that the fact of its existence in Florida has been doubted.

ANNA E. DICKINSON having been applied to by a committee from the West for a political lecture, offered "Breakers Ahead." She received answer by telegraph: "All right; give us Break his Head."

DU CHAILLU is shortly to revisit the United States, when he will deliver lectures on his African Life, illustrating them by a series of pictures which have been painted expressly for this purpose.

MR. FITZHUGH LUDLOW, who visited California in company with Bierstadt, the artist, is at work upon a novel. We wonder if it is to be a California one?

CHARLES DICKENS will write a novel for the Atlantic Monthly, next year, entitled "George Silverman's Explanation.', It will run through three or four numbers of the magazine.

EDWIN P. WHIPPLE is to write the life of Governor Andrew, and will begin the task at once.

JOHN NEAL, the veteran litterateur had an article in the December Atlantic.

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS' "Causes of the War" will soon be ready for publication.

NAPOLEON'S "Life of Julius Cæsar," hardly paid for printing and stereotyping.

CHICAGO has thirty-eight daily and weekly papers, and eight monthly magazines.

WALT WHITMAN'S "Leaves of Grass" has been translated and published in Germany.

MARK LEMON has a novel in press, entitled "Golden Fetters."

IT is asserted that the Czar Alexander is writing a book.

MISS THACKERAY has engaged to write for the Home Journal.

ANOTHER successor to Vanity Fair and Mrs. Grundy is talked of.

HOW THE AVALANCHE COMES DOWN AT BAREGES.

IN a long, narrow, bleak, Pyrenean valley, and at a height of four thousand feet above the level of the sea, there springs from the rock, hot, sulphurous water, reputed to be the most efficacious of the many mineral springs of the Pyrenees. There is, naturally, a bathing establishment; and, in spite of the cold, inhospitable site, a long irregular street, which is called Bareges.

The avalanche does not fall from the mountains which tower above the village, but down an ominous cleft in the rocks on its right bank, and on the opposite side of the valley. And the inconvenience is, that not content with rushing from the snowy summits and sweeping bare the face of the rocks, and marking its desolate track with the scattered pines which it has uprooted, and choking the noisy river, it rushes up the opposite bank, and so through the very center of Bareges. Of course the inhabitants of Bareges know this, expect it and are prepared for it. In winter there is a great gap in the one long street—no house, nor shed, nor tree, nor bush being visible. This is the road left clear for the avalanche, which sometimes travels that way five or six times in the course of the winter. In the spring, when his visits are supposed to be at an end, the disjointed street is united by wooden houses, or baraques, in which the various merchants from neighboring towns display their wares. There is something to a traveler almost incredible, and quite incomprehensible, in erecting a village in the very teeth of an avalanche. Why not put the houses lower down in the valley in safety? the walk or ride, in summer, to the establissement being so easy. Why not convey the water in pipes? Why not—in fact—fifty other things? But no—the Bernais of the mountain is familiar with the danger, he does not despise it, but he considers the being buried under an avalanche as one of the necessary conditions of life, and all times the possible termination of it. Even in Bareges, where, as Pierre Palasson, the guide, will tell you, they take such good precaution, it is not always found a sufficient one; and the avalanche will swerve to the right or left, and cover part of the village; or it will exceed the dimensions deemed desirable, and overwhelm the houses on both sides of it.

In May of last year the winter, which had been an unusually fine one, was supposed to be at an end, and many of the marchands began to erect their baraques. Thirteen were completed, and others begun, when the weather changed, and a snow-storm came on. All that day it snowed, and in the evening the long sweep of the wind was heard at intervals through the valley.

"There is snow enough up there to burry the whole village!" said the old men who were standing in groups, consulting as to what was to be done.

"Well, well, the baraques must be left—for who will help to pull them down with this danger threatening us?"

"Depend on it this will be no light affair," said another, "and the neighbors in the end houses had better come to us for to-night."

And they separated; each, who considered himself safe from possible danger, offering shelter to others who might be overtaken by it. Thus it happened that, besides the thirteen baraques, many houses on either side of the high road for the avalanche, were left empty. But there were two households regardless of the danger—one consisted of father and mother and three children; the other was an auberge, a little inn frequented by Spaniards and mountaineers in their contraband excursions; and, on the night in question, there were thirteen under this roof. In both cases they relied for safety on the fact of the house being built against a projecting rock, which would afford shelter from the wind that precedes the avalanche. The show is a minor inconvenience that no one troubles himself much about.

The evening wore into night and nothing came of anyone's expectatations, so everybody went to bed and to sleep. Not everybody—for one man sat intently listening for sounds in the upper regions which might indicate the approach of danger. At length he rose, and went into the little room, where his only child, a youth of seventeen, was sleeping.

"Jules, mon ami, get up!"

Jules slept soundly, and only pulled the bed-clothes over his head at this appeal.

"Jules!" said his father more loudly, "make haste—get up and run to neighbor Henri; tell him I am sure the avalanche is on the point of falling, and he must catch up the three children and come with his wife at once—I fell quite certain that they are not safe. Make haste! It is midnight, and very dark." Jules had hastily thrown on his clothes; and as his father was speaking the last words, he left the house.

A few minutes only elapsed when there was that terrific sweep of the wind, and crash of obstacles opposing it, which tells of the avalanche. The father who stood straining his eyes through the darkness, thought he could see the pale spirit that followed silently and swiftly, and drew its white mantle over the desolation left by the storm.

As soon as it was daylight, all Bareges was out; for Jules had not been heard of, and many houses were under the snow; among them the two which were inhabited. The father of Jules stood by, and watched the work in silence. Few words were uttered by anybody, for who could tell what the result of the search might be?

They had begun to work, as near as they could possibly judge, just over Henri's house. At midday they had reached the roof; and hastily breaking through, entered. All was safe. Henri and his wife and children waiting patiently for their deliverers.

"Jules is not here, then! I sent him to warn you."

"Ah, mon Dieu," said Henri, "we heard a cry—just one—it sounded close to the house—I thought it was some poor beast swept away by the wind."

The neighbors broke open the house door and groped about in the snow. There, laying across the threshold, and crushed by an adjoining wall which had fallen on him, lay poor Jules, dead.

The workers left the father to his grief and to the care of the women, and hurried to the auberger, at which some few had already been occupied since day-break. The snow beneath which it was buried, lay so thickly over it, that it was after dusk before an entry was effected—of course through the roof. Jean Cahasse, the aubergiste, told the neighbors that neither he nor any of the others had heard any unusual noise in the night, though he fancied he remembered something like a clap of thunder. But, in the morning he awoke and said, "Wife, it is very dark, and yet I seem to have had a long sleep. It must surely be time to get up." So, he carried his watch to the window, intending to open the outer shutters. But he could not move them. He went to the house-door; fast again in spite of all his pushing. Then up to the trap-door in the roof; and, finding that he could not lift it, he returned to his wife and said, "Wife, the avalanche has fallen; so you had better get up and make the breakfast."

After breakfast all the men took out their knitting, hanging the skein of wool round their necks; the women and children were busy spinning flax, and thus they sat around the fire telling of past dangers till the evening. Then Jean Cahasse said:

"I am sure the neighbors would begin to dig as soon as it was light—but, doubtless, the snow lies deep. Wife, if the onion-soup is ready, we will have supper."

It was whilst they were at supper that the neighbors entered, and were greeted, of course with much effusion; tears, and kisses, and loud cries, and altogether in the manner of men who suddenly found that they had escaped a great danger, and did not think it worth while to exercise any self-control in the matter. Except the life of poor Jules, no lives were lost, and no damage was done than some four or, five stone houses leveled, and all the wooden baraques swept away.

"C'est un rien," said Pierre Palasson, the guide, with a shrug of the shoulders. "It is the flood avalanche that we are afraid of. Ah! To hear it come roaring down in summer when the snows have melted on the mountains—rocks and stones, and trees, and rivers of mud, one trembles to think of it."

Fortunately the flood avalanche descends by another ravine, which you pass just before you reach Bareges, and the flood has never yet done more than threaten the village, and make the approach to it a most unpromising one. On the whole, therefore, we fairly say that the avalanche, or rather the avalanches, do come come down at Bareges in an almost inconceivably uncomfortable manner, ane with a rapidity of recurrence which it takes one's breath away to think of. But those who are the most affected by the inconvenience, the inhabitants, think nothing of it.

"The neighbors are so near," they say, "and we all help one another! What would you have more?"

What indeed! Rightly understood, there is, under these circumstances, very little more to be desired.

ARTICLES DE PARIS.

ONE of the chief characteristics of the article de Paris is that, whether it be necessary or unnecessary, it plays upon the fancy and comes to us in disguise. It is not enough that you should have an ink-bottle on your table; it is above all things that this ink-bottle should appear to be something else. It is a cannon ball—it is a pound weight—it is a negro's head—it is a railway engine. You take the negro by his black, woolly hair; you find that his skull opens on a hinge, and there is a pot of ink where his brains should be! So there is a store of ink in the heart of the cannon ball, in the pound weight, and in the boiler of the engine! The play of fancy which is allowed in this way is boundless. You see a silver railway locomotive, with tender attached. The locomotive contains whiskey, the tender hot water; sugar takes the place of coals upon the tender, and the stoker is converted into a silver sugar-tongs! If you see a silver drum upon a friend's table, its a riddle; and you must guess what it is. It may be anything from a match-box to a mustard-pot.

Here is a little model of an umbrella-stand, with an umbrella, a walking-stick, and a whip in it. The umbrella is a pen wiper, the walking-stick is a pencil, the riding-whip is a pen-holder. Here is a silver-gilt coal-scuttle with a coal-scoop in it; you are expected to use it for a salt-cellar. Here is a little hat-box; it is intended for matches, Here is a silver cow with a large fly on her back; you seize the fly and find that it is the handle of a small lid upon the back of the cow. The animal is hollow; she is intended for a cream jug, and the cream pours out of her mouth. Here is a large acorn; it is a nutmeg grater. Here is a small ivory coffee mill; it is a yard measure. Here is a fiddle; it a tooth-pick. Here is a bee-hive; it is a box of bon-bons. Here is a jolly farmer, whose paunch contains a clock. Here is an umbrella handle which appears a loose chain of rhinoceros horn; you grasp it and find it as firm as a rod of iron.

The chief centres for the manufacture of articles de Paris are Paris, Vienna, and London. What they make best in Paris are small bronzes, and little boxes of enamel, of earth, enware, and of inlaid woods. In the making of boxes the French are unequaled. They have a wonderful sympathy with that extravagant passion of the human soul for small boxes and receptacles. They have boxes for everything—for gloves, for jewels, for handkerchiefs, for stamps, for bon-bons, for pens, for wafers. As misers seem to love money for its own sake, and apart from the use to which it can be turned, there are crowds of people in the world who like little boxes for their own sakes, especially if they have curious compartments, and sub-divisions, and secret drawers. A little nest of drawers is their delight; a pretty set of pigeon-holes sends them into exstacies; a box is a box whether it contains anything or not, and they will put it on their tables to look at and imagine it utilized. The French cunningly play upon this weakness of the human heart.

THE HARBOR.

A roaring wind blew out of the South
That dashed the foam against the rocks;
The white-caps danced at the harbor's mouth,
The gulls flew by in screaming flocks
But never a storm-cloud darkened the sky,
The waves flashed bright in the sinking sun;
And the wind that roared to the sea-birds' cry
Was as gay as youth with its race to run.

White sails were glancing near and far,
And some their journey had just begun;
And some came home to the harbor-bar
From the coral island of the sun;
Some from the spicy Indian gales—
Some from the icy Arctic breeze;
These tell of battles with mighty whales
In the desolate waste of Polar seas.

What strange, rare things bring you home to show,
Oh sailor lad! from the palm-crowned heights?
What from the swart little Esquimaux
Under the arch of the Northern Lights?
What gems do you bring, my sailor man!
From the elephant-trodden Indian shore?
What quaint devices from far Japan?
What radiant shells from Singapore?

In hammock, swung from the bread-fruit tree,
The dusky island-maiden swings;
Forever over that charmed sea
The gales that blow are always Spring's!
All through the radiant afternoon,
The palm-trees drowse and the wind breathes low,
And up to the rising of the moon
The rollers boom on the shore below.

Up to the moonrise; regular, deep,
They boom on the rocks in spray and showers,
The long, slow clocks of that land of sleep,
They sound the flight of Time and his hours;
But after the rising of the moon,
When cooler airs blow over the sea,
The breakers sink to a lullaby tune
Like the night-birds in the tamarind-tree.

And you have been to those shining shores
Of endless Spring, oh gallant bark!
And you, where the Arctic tempest roars
From out the dread half-year of Dark!
And to one who sailed from this harbor-bar
'Twas given to reach that mythic goal,
The sea that is under the Northern Star
And rolls in mistery round the Pole.

Many and strange are the thoughts you bring,
Oh, beautiful, mysterious ships!
My heart goes out on the sea-bird's wing,
But even its utterance dies on the lips.
The sea of thought is a boundless sea—
Its brightest gems are not thrown on the beach;
The waves that would tell of the mystery
Die and fall on the shore of speech.

WALT WHITMAN designs to publish an article called "Democracy," in reply to Carlyle's "Shooting Niagara"—which is bad for Carlyle.

CONTENTMENT swells a mite into a talent, makes even the poor richer than the Indies.

The magazine publishers of London, with the exception of Messrs. Tinsley & Co., have entered into a arrangement by which all the London magzines will hereafter be simultaneously published on the first of every month. This excellent arrangement might be imitated here. As it is, there is a constant strife on the part of the publishers to be each month the first in the field, for although the date of publication is a matter of little or no consequnce to the regular subscribers to a magazine. yet the magazine which is the first to apppear at the newspaper stands and book stalls, has a decided advantage over its latter contemporaries, so far as casual sales are concerned From this fact it has come to pass that magazines are usually issued ten or fifteen days before the professed time of publication, a mode of proceeding preposterous in itself, and besides directly injurious to the completeness of those magazines which profess to contain a summary of politic or literary events of the preceding month. We have hardly a sufficient number of magaeines to make their time of publication a matter of consequence, but a reform in this particular would be much easier now than it will be when they shall become as numerous as they are in England.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market.

MEDICAL.—"YOUNG MAN'S FRIEND ANN PROTECTOR," an Association for beneficent objects, Young men should inform themselves in relation to it, and by applying to, the ACTUARY, Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, they will be furnished with Prospectus.

☞ Use Ellery's Patent India Rubber Cement and Paint.—It is for all outside surfaces, TIN, IRON, OR METAL ROOFS; Iron however manufactured, Brick and Wooden Buildings, Ship and steamboat Painting; will not rot, peel, blister, or crack. Water-proof coating for cloth roofing on tops of houses, decks of steamboats, tops of stages and cars. Cloth roofs cemented and painted for $9 per 100 square feet. New or old Tin Roofs, in good or bad condition, cemented and painted, guaranted, at $1 to $2 50 per 100 square feet.
EPES & E. H. R. ELLERY,
No. 226 Jackson street.

E OCCIDENT.

A RELIGIOUS AND FAMILY NEWPAPER, WITH the above title will be published by the subscribers, commencing January 31, 1868, at the office, 609 Montgomery street, San Francisco. It will be issued weekly, (on Friday) in quarto form. each number containing twelve pages. Editor, Rev. JAMES EELLS, D. D. Associate Editor, Rev. E. B. WALSWORTH.
Subscription price, $4.00 per annum, in gold coin, or its equivalent, payable in advance, or $2 50 for six months, same terms. BANCROFT & CO,
San Francisco, Cal.

BANCROFT & CO.
San Francisco, Cal.
Are the exclusive publishers for the Pacific Coast of
PUTNAM'S MAGAZINE.
FIRST NUMBER, JANUARY, 1868, NOW READY.

THIS PUBLICATION WILL BE SIMILAR IN CHARACTER and appearance to the former series of PUTNAM'S MONTHLY, and will be supported by the BEST WRITERS, in each department, in every section of the country.
TERMS—$4 00 a year in gold coin, payable in advance. One copy of PUTNAM and one copy of THE OCCIDENT will be sent to one address, one year, for $7.00.
BANCROFT & CO,
San Francisco, Cal.

NOTICE!
Not Out of Business—Only Removed.
Pioneer Steam Marble Works Com'y
HAVE REMOVED
Their Marble Mantel Warerooms from No. 546 California street to their extensive Steam Factory,
422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Where they keep constantly on hand the best and most select stock of
MARBLE MANTELS AND GRATES, HEADSTONES AND MONUMENTS.
Our Steam facilities enable us to sell better work at reduced prices than that manufactured by hand.
422 and 424 Jackson Street,
Between Montgomery and Sansome.

STERETT'S PRINTING OFFICE,
No. 533 Clay Street.

Cards, Billheads, Circulars, Books, Briefs, Transcripts, Posters, Bills of Fare Envelopes, Letter and Note Headings, Tickets, Pamphlets, and all Legal Papers printed at short notice, and upon reasonable terms.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Removal.
DR. HEALD,
DENTIST,
Has removed from Kearny street to the southwest corner of MONTGOMERY AND BUSH STREETS.
☞ Entrance on both streets. ☜

NOTICE.
WE TAKE OCCASION TO INFORM OUR FRIENDS and customers that we have sold our entire stock in warehouse also invoices to arrive to Messrs. N. COLE & CO., 312 and 314 Pine steeet. The whole forms a most complete and desirable assortmeut of FURNITURE, and well merits attentiou before purchasing elsewhere.
J. PIERCE & CO.

FURNITURE.
WE beg leave to call the attention of the public to our warerooms,
Nos. 312 and 314 Pine Street.
Having purchased the entire stock of Messrs. J. Pierce & Co., and in addition to our large invoice from our factory at the East, we are prepared to fill all orders promptly, both wholesale and retail, and call the attention of the public to our salesroom, as containing the most complete assortment of desirable goods on this coast. N. P. COLE & CO.

WM WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &C., &C.,
735 Market Street.
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco

Carrington's Yeast Powders
ARE THE BEST IN THE MARKET.
Try them if you do not believe it.
I. LANDSBERGER, Sole Agent,
429 Jackson Street.

THE "GROTTO,"
JOHN DUNCAN, Proprietor.
530 Sacramento street, opposite What Cheer House,
FINE WINES, LIQUORS, ALES AND PORTER,
Wholesale and Retail.
Importor of Wise's Celebrated Irish Whisky.

"OUR OPERA."
CAPT. JOHN H. MAY,
621 WASHINGTON STREET, 621,
SAN FRANCISCO,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House.

PARIS EXPOSITION,
1867.
GLORIOUS NEWS
FOR
THE FLORENCE!
OFFICIAL CATALOGUE JUST RECEIVED, (September 8th) the only copy on this coast—29 days from London. FREE FOR INSPECTION.
THE FLORENCE
RECEIVED THE ONLY PREMIUM awarded to any Sewing Machine (except Button Hole Machine) for sale on the Pacific Coast.
SAMUEL HILL, Agent,
No. 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

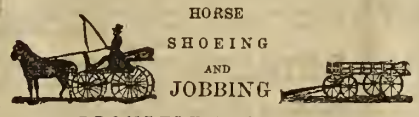
D. GHIRARDELLI & CO.'S
Italian Manufactury,
415 and 417 JACKSON ST., SAN FRANCISCO,
Manufacturers and Dealers In
PLAIN, SWEET, CINNAMON AND VANILLA CHOCOLATES;
PREPARED COCOA, COCOA PASTE, CRACKED COCOA, COCOA SHELLS, etc., etc.
PURE GROUND OLD JAVA COFFEE AND COSTA RICA COFFEE;
CHARTRES AND RIO COFFEE;
GREEN COFFEE OF EVERY QUALITY.
CHOICE WINES AND LIQUORS.
N. B.—Ghirardelli's Chocolate is manufactured by steam from Cocoa of the finest quality, imported direct, in excellence and delicacy of flavor, it is superior to any Imported Chocolate.

J. CUTBERLET,
CUSTOM
BOOT AND SHOE STORE.
—ALSO—
FRENCH SCREWED BOOTS AND SHOES,
No. 546 Washington Street, near Montgomery Street.
The finest quality of CUSTOM WORK neatly executed. Always on hand other fine work ready made.

Chickering & Sons' Pianos
RECEIVED THE
FIRST PREMIUM,
(Gold Medal,)
At the Paris Exposition.

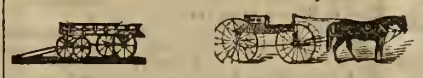
FURTHERMORE, THE Improvements, Workmanship, and General Superiority of those instruments over all others on exhibition, was so marked an important, the Emperor created Mr. T. E. CHICKERING
KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOR.
KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street.

C. ROBERTS,
CARRIAGE AND WAGON MAKER,
HORSE SHOEING AND JOBBING



PROMPTLY EXECUTED.
Fourth Street, between Howard and Folsom, San Francisco.
All styles of Carriages, Wagons and Carts made to order and Repaired.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.
Larkins & Co.,

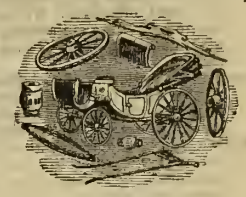


Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.
CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

JOSEPH FREDERICKS
CARPET AND UPHOLSTERY STORE,
PAPER HANGINGS, ETC.,
123 Kearny St., between Sutter and Post, San Francisco
FAMILIES ARE INVITED TO EXAMINE
OUR VARIED ASSORTMENT
Of the Finest Carpeting in the State. The best of taste displayed in Decoration and the unique Upholstering of Rooms, Halls and Public Buildings, and at prices conforming to the times. Call and examine goods.

AT THE REGULAR
RETAILING AMERICAN WATCHES
C. E. COLLINS & CO.,
603 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Nos. 42 and 44 Nassau Street,
NEW YORK.
Dealers in American, Swiss and English WATCHES,
JEWELRY AND ATERIALS.
☞ We have made arraugements to buy AMERICAN WATCHES in large quantities from the Factory, and will receive a discount on the regular Wholesale Prices. We will hereafter
Retail the American Watches
AT
The Regular Wholesale Prices.
Our only profit being the small per cent. allowed by buying in large quantities.
NEW WHOLESALE PRICES.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.
Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

Joseph Catania & Co.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
FRESH AND SALT
STALL NO. 48 FISH MARKET, Clay Commercial and Leidesdorff Streets.
A large supply of fresh fish always on hand. Shipping, Restaurants, Hotels and Families supplied at short notice, and on the most reasonable terms.
N. B.—Fish sent to any part of the city free.

SAVE YOUR TEETH.—Do not have them extracted without first consulting a good Dentist. The loss is irreparable, and, in many instances, unnecessary. DR. BEERS, corner of Montgomery and Sutter Sts., makes a specialty of filling the laugs of dead Teeth, and buildiug up broken crowns with Pure Gold—thus restoring them to their original usefulness and beauty.
☞ Call and examine the work. Finest quality of artificial work also manufactured.

Removal! Removal!
A. J. PLATE,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Guns, Rifles and Pistols.
—ALSO—
COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS,

Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, etc., etc.
—HAS REMOVED TO—
NO. 510 SACRAMENTO STREET,
Between Sansome and Leidesdorff Streets, San Francisco
☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.
STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN
One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.
Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.
B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

F. DIXEY,
Merchant Tailor,
625 WASHINGTON STREET,
Cloths, Cassimeres for Vestings, always on hand and made to order in the most Fashionable Styles.
Satisfaction Guaranteed.

O. MAIN. E. H. WINCHESTER. T. B. HAYES.
Main & Winchester,
Manufacturers and Importers of Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Collars, Saddlery Ware, etc,
Nos. 214 and 216 Battery Street,
San Francisco.

N.B.—Good assortment Concord Stage Harness constantly on hand.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

LIST OF PUBLICATIONS, 1867.

Poems. By Charles Warren Stoddard. "They evince the possession of a fresh and delicate fancy, a nice ear for meolody, unaffected love for nature, and a pure purpose."—Bulletin. An elegant 8vo. Illustrated. $3 00.

Outcroppings; Gems from California Poets. A beautiful small quarto; gilt, $1 00.

Confucius and the Chinese Classics; or, Readings in Chinese Literature. Edited and compiled by Rev. A. W. Loomis. The first book priuted from stereotype plates in California. "One of the most entertaining volumes issued from the American press for many a day."—Territorial Enterprise. A handsome 12mo. 2 00

Chinese and English Pbrase Book; With the Chinese pronunciation indicated in English, Specially adapted for the use of merchants and families. By Benot Lancot. Second edition revised and enlarged. "A Roman & Co. have hit tbe nail on the head in tbe publication of this book."—Christian Advocate. 1 00.

In Bonds: A Novel. By Laura Preston. "A novel of more than ordinary elevation of purpose, carefully and effectively wrought out."—Pacific. A triumph in the authorship, and in tbe printing and publishing line." Times Paper, 1 25 Clotb, 1 75.

Leah's Confessions. An Autobiography. "The Author's pen is fine and powerful. The moral of the novel is, on the whole, good and wholesome." Pacific. A handsome 8vo in paper, 75.

Carrie Carlton's Popular Letter-Writer. "The author bas laid the public under a real obligation in this happily concieved and cleaverly-executed mannal.—Bulletin. "'The Chronicles of Belleair' make a good story, and the love letters and other correspondence tberein given are quite natural and appropriate."—Sacramento Union. 16mo. 75.

The Resonrces of California. By John S. Hittell. A California Prize Book, exclusively Californian in composition and manufacture. A large 12mo. 2 25.

A Youth's History of California, By Lucia Norman. A popular History for all classes of readers, young and old. "The book is a highly meritorious and interesting one."—Round Table. A pretty 12mo. 1 00.

Route to California by tbe Isthmus of Panama. A useful and interesting book to every traveler. 50.

Nevada and California Processes of Silver and Gold Extraction. By Guido Knstell. Tbe best practical work on the subject. 8vo., cloth, 5 00.

The Elements of Composition. By Prof. Aug. Layres. 12mo. cloth, 1 00.

Belles Lettres. By Prof. Layres. Second book of the series. "The writer, the lawyer, the minister or the statesman may study these rules and regulations with profit."—Bulletin. 12mo, cloth, 1 00.

The Greek Slave. A story by Ianthe. "A touching tale of Greek suffering under Moslem rule." —Alta. In paper, 75 ceute; clotb, 1 00.

Instructions in Gymnastics. By Arthur and Charles Nahl With numerous plates. Quarto, 2 50.

May Wentworth's Fairy Tales from Gold Lands. The scenes of most of tbese Tales are laid in California, introducing Emperor Norton and other local characters. A handsome 16mo. Illustrated, 1 00.

Legal Titles to Mining Claims and Water Rights in California. By Gregory Yale, (counselor at Law. "The first through discussion of the subject of mining property in the United States, and one much needed"—Sacramento Union. 8vo, sheep, 7 50.

Our publications are for sale by book sellers generally, and sent, post paid, on receipt of price by the publishers. Address, A. ROMAN & CO., San Francisco.

JOHN DANIEL,

Marble Works,

421 PINE STREET,

(Between Kearny and Montgomery.)

MANTELS, MONUMENTS, TOMBS, PLUMBERS' SLABS, ETC.,

On hand and manufactured to order.

Orders respectfully solicited.

H. T. GRAVES,

Manfacturer of

WIRE CLOTH, COAL SCREENS, FLOUR SEIVES, QUARTZ SCREENS, for Batteries, Door and Window Screens, for excluding Flies and Mosquitos.

CLOAK, SHAWL, CLOTHING AND BONNET STANDS

Fancy Work for Gardens, and a great variety of

WIRE WORK OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS.

Sole Agent for the sale and application of

BROWN'S PATENT AND METALIC WEATHER STRIPS,

For the perfect exclusion of wind, dust, and rain; ☞ And for CRAMER'S PATENT WINDOW LIFTING PLATES AND RODS.

Call and examine them at the

CALIFORNIA WIRE WORKS,

412 Clay street, San Francisco.

R. T. HOUSTON,

Merchant Tailor,

No. 414 BUSH STREET,

Between Kearny and Dupont, San Francisco.

Steam Scouring, Cleansing and Repairing neatly executed.

Also—Ladies' Cloth Dresses and Cloaks neatly Cleaned and Pressed, or Mis-Fits altered.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S

SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

APOTHECARIES AND CHEMISTS.
J H. Cogesbal, N. W. cor Third and Folsom.
Geo S Dickey, Pioneer Apothecary, cor Ellis & Stockton
Dr. T. B. Kelly, 503 Davis, corner of Jackson street.
Wm. Simpson, 609 Davis st., opposite Oakland Ferry.

ARCHITECTS.
Hoagland & Newsom, a.w. cor Kearny and Sacramento.
McDougall & Marquis, 328 Montgomery street.

ALE, PORTER, AND CIDER.
J. H. Todman & Co., (Jobbers,) 511 Front street.
Maguire & Co. Hibernia Botting Establishm't 40 First.

BAKERIES.
Dampsey's Bakery, 127 Fourth street,
Rohl. Zandel, Fancy Cake and Confectionery, 16 4th st

BOARDING HOUSES.
Mechanics' Exchange, Slaven & Delhanty, 111 First st.
New England House, J. Schleicher, 205 Sansome st.

BOOKSELLER
H. C. Bateman, 227 Kearny, bet. Sutter and Bush sts.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
S. Ambroise, sign of the red shoe, 29 Fourth st.
John Mason, 5 Second st. near Market.
Lake & Co. (m'f'trs Japan Paste Blacking) 504 Market.
Justin Macarthy, (Boot maker,) 427 Fourth st ur Silver.
Joseph Rosenblum, 29 Third st.
Jacob Wattell, 559 Market st.
W. H. Hanna, (children's work,) 335 Sutter street.
Wantworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

BOWLING SALOONS.
Occidental, Cameron & Goodwin, Market opp. Second.

BRUSH AND BROOM MANUFACTURERS.
California Brush Factory, 1009 Stockton, near Jackson.
San Francisco Brush Factory, 211 to 217 California st.

CIGARS AND TOBACCO.
J. R. Ojeitz, 312 Third st, near Folsom.
W. Priebatch, 144 Third st.
J. R. Rines, 154 Second st near Howard.
Kohn & Lopez, 401 Kearny, southwest corner Pine.
Lindsey & Clune, Excelaior Store, 156 Stewart street.
M. Rosenshine, (Wholesale nud Retail,) 214 Pacific st.

CLOTHING.
Mrs. C. Cryer, (Children's Clothing,) 26 Fourth st.
H Levy, 54 Fourth street, near Missiou.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Maud & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
Mrs. Ezekiel, (Ladies' Clothing,) 403 Kearny st.
Meyerstein & Lowenberg, N. W. cor Bush and Kearny.
William Shermau, 608 Montgomery street.

COAL DEALERS.
H. W. Newhauer, all kinds of coal, 121 Sansome street.
S. Klein, formerly Grothool & Co, 209 Sausome street.

COACH AND CARRIAGE MATERIALS.
Waterhouse & Leater, (Dealers,) 29 and 31 Battery st.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesala,) 521 Front street.
Doll, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Frout street.

CONFECTIONERS.
Baldwin & Lawlers, South Park Store 418 Third st.
J. F. Dounelly, 112 Kearny st. near Sutter.
Ellwood & Ryan, (Fruits, etc..) 258 Third st.
Mrs. Kain, 617 Mission, near Secoud.
J. Vogeley & Bro. 46 Second st.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to 645 Clay street;
Dr. A. B. Campbell, 17 Third st.
Dr. Heald, S. W. cor. Montgomery and Bush sts.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DRESS AND CLOAK MAKERS.
Mrs. Taylor & Mrs. Jones 258 Firat, near Folsom.
Mme. Weller, 129 Secoud st.

DRY GOODS.
Irving, Landers & Co., No. 4 Third street.
Keane Brothers. 218 Third, bet Howard and Tehama.
M. Waterman, 22 Second street, corner of Stevenson.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
S. Mosgrove, 222 Third, bet Howard aud Tehama sts.

FAIRBANKS' SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot 120 California street.

DRIED FISH.
Torello Kiczole, corner Fourth and Brannao sts.

EMPLOYMENT AND BUSINESS AGENCIES.
S. P. Whitman's Pacific Coast Agency, 313 Montgomery

FRINGE, CORD, AND TRIMMING FACTORY.
M. Ettinger, 125 Kearny st., bet Post and Sutter.

FURNITURE AND BEDDING.
N. P. Cole & Co, 21 Sulter and 524 Market streets,
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washingtonstreets.
J. Regan, 29 Second st.
Jacob Schreiber, 121 and 123 Sansome, bet. Pine & Bush
G. Scheier, (Crockery and Glassware,) 29 Fourth st.

GROCERS.
N. Bruns, northwest corner Third and Berry sts.
M. Farron. 523 Fourth st, corner Welsh.
Derby & Johnson, northeast cor. Bush and Powell sts.
Flinn & Neale, cor. Third and Tehama.
Fred. Lange, Family Grocer, cor. Powell and Lombard.
Jos. Van Doren, northeast cor. Bush and Mason sts.
Bernard Railly, 219 Second cor Tehama.
Hermon Scnuldt, corner Third and Harrison.
Saneca Jones, Family Grocer, 105 Third street.
Weilman, Peck & Co., wholesale grocers, 404 Front st.

GUN-SMITHS.
W. Rudolph, Union Gun Store, 216 Pacific street.
Wilsou & Evans, 513 Clay street.

H. & L. AXLE-GREASE.
Manufactory 146 Tehama st, and at North Beach.

HAIR DRESSING SALOONS.
Anthes & Fleischman, 329 Kearny, near Bush st.

HARDWARE AND CUTLERY.
L. B. Benchley & Co., (American and Foreign,) 3 and 5 Front street.
J. S. Sesaer, 138 Fourth st, bet. Mission and Howard.

HATTERS.
Lamott (wholasale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.
Nickerson & Co., 35 Kearny, below Post.

HAY AND GRAIN.
Grant & Smith, 26 Market and 19 Sacramento sts.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.
George Morrow & Co., 21 Clay and 28 Commercial sts
Wm. H. Nichols, 18 Sacramento, and 17 Commercial.

HOTELS.
Atlantic House, John McManus, 210 and 212 Pacific st.
"Branch," M. O'Neil, 12 Sutter street.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, Droste & Pfeffer'e, 220 Pacific street.
Empire House, Peter Thompson, 106 Jackson street.
Franklin Hotel, Hugh Curran, cor Sansome & Pacific.
Franklin House, C. Maloney, cor. Br'dway & Sansome.
Golden Gate Hotel, J. Blackmen, 728 Market street.
Mariner's Home, Brown & Chandler, 504 and 506 Davis.
"Oriental," H. Saxtorph & Co., Washington & Drumm.
Sanders' Hotel, J P; Sanders, 24 Sacramento st.

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER.
Michael English, 414 Pine street.

HARNESS AND SADDLE MANUFACTURERS.
A. B. Bois, 510 Davis street.
M G Conway, 721 Market bet. Third & Fourth sts.
D Fennel, 522 Battery street, opposite the Post Office.
H. D. Jameson, Market st opposite Treadwell & Co.
Maad & Son. 557 Market, opp. Sansome.
H. Weaver, 671 Market, bet. Second and Third.

INSURANCE.
Firemen's Fund Ins. cor. California and Sansome.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agets, 206 Front, cor. Cal.
North British Mercantile, S. E. cor Sansome & Califor'

BUSINESS DIRECTORY, CONTINUED.
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
People's Insurance Co., N E. cor. Montgomery & Pine.

LADIES BIJOUTERIE, AND FANCY GOODS.
Jackson & Spaulding, 55 Third st. near Missiou.

LADIES' FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.
Thomas Collinson, 160 Third, near Howard street.

LIVERY STABLES.
Central Stable, Washburn & Co., 207 and 209 Sutter st.
Gardner & Finch, 211 and 213 Fine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Davis, cor. Mission & Spear sts.

MARBLE WORKERS.
Zeglio & Moore 783½ Market, bet Third and Fourth.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
B Curran, 109 Kearny above Post.
R. Philip, 518 Market, near Metropolitan Market.
John Straub, 351 Third st.

MARKETS.
Bennett & Wallace, 151 Third street.
J. Hertz & Co 107 Second, near Mission.
F. J. Stelling, San Jose Market, 154 First st.
I. Gans, "New York Market," Fourth st, near Market.
C. Wagner & Co., (Golden Gate,) 512 Davis street.

MEERSCHAUM PIPE MANUFACTURERS.
Chas. Kohlman, 507 Kearny, near Sacramento st.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st

MILLINERS.
Mrs. Cowles, 122 Third st.

MUSIC TEACHERS.
Prof. J. R. Bonllet, Pianist aud Vocalist, 1320 Stockton.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PAINT MANUFACTURERS.
Epes & Ellery, dealers in paints, etc, 226 Jackson st.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.
James R. Kelly, 38 California street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
H. Bush, corner Post, Market and Montgomery streets.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
Kohler, Chase & Co., 421 Montgomery street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st

PLUMBERS AND GAS FITTERS.
Chas. Barmin, 121 Fourth street, near Minna.

PRINT SELLER AND PUBLISHER.
Thomas H Lawlor, Second street, near Howard.

PRODUCE COMMISSION MERCHANTS.
Dorman & Woll, 426 Davis street.
George Hughes, 410 Davis street.
Johnson & Harmon, 412 Davis street near Washington.
J. W. Nye & Co., 219 Washington street, corner Cedar.
Thos. N well, 62 Clay street between Drumm and East.
s. C. Wilson & Co., S E. corner Clay and Davis sts.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, W. Wilson, manager, 640 Market st.
Cammet's, 57 and 59 Third, near Mission st.
Clipper Restaurants, J. Stock, 721 Sausome & 414 Market
Delmonico's, Young & Mandl, 45 Second st.
Enterprise, Brannan & McCabe, 205 Third near Howard.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
J. A. Miley & Perrin, Ladies' Restaurant, 521 Kearny.
New York Bakery, G S. Hall & Co, 628 Kearny near Clay
Market, by Hanzo & Besson, 520 Merchant street
Philadelphia, Geo. Meuller & Chas. Bergold, 408 Pine.

SALOONS.
Beck's Saloon, 504 Drumm street, near Pacific.
Blaucy & Carroll, "Sample Rooms," 107 Third street.
Brevoort Exchange, Barrington & Werner, 44 Fourth.
John Burns, Bonthoat Exchange, Berry st, near Third.
Carr & McElroy's, opposite San Jose R. R. Depot.
Clement Dixon's A e Vaulis. Nos. 2 & 3, Summer st.
Charley Smith's Saloon, 539 Washington street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.
Cleveland's Sample Rooms, 318 Bush, above Montg'y.
W. B. Dolan's, 145 Third, corner Hunt street.
Donahue & Phelan, 321 Second st.
Evans' Saloon, Long Bridge, corner Barry and Third.
"Excelsior," Haase & Co., cor. Drum and Commercial.
Fitch & Little, fancy liquors, Sommer st near the Markt
Fourth Street Exchange, Chas. Fuller, 245 Fourth st.
James Gibb, "Cosmopolitan," 617 Merchant street
German Hall, Ed. Angelis, Propr., 18 Sansome st.
Headquarters, Decol & McLean, Fourth, cor Townsend.
J P Lavina' Saloon, northwest cor Battery & Br'dway
J. Dillon, "Fourth st Exchange," cor. Frtb and Mkt.
John B. Holje & Co. 28 Clay street.
John J. Kahman, N. W. cor. Post and Kearny sts.
King & McCormick, "Rotunda," Market & O'Farrell.
A. Leppert, New Corner, corner Fourth and Berry.
Mechanics' Sample Room, C. Deitrichsen, 1st, cor Mrkt
"Monadnock," A. Hertkemper, Drumm & Oregon sts.
Nolan's Exchange, Ball & Racket Court, 732 Howard st.
Meyer & Quaid s, S. E. cor. or Market and Fourth sts
A Phistar & Co. (Punches) cor Leidesdorff and Halleck.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Ring's Saloon, Peter Ring, California st., below Drumm.
Squarza's, A. Bona, Prop'r, 120 Leidesdorff st.
Uncle Billy & George, Saloon 707 Davis st.
Union Saloon, C. H. Cordes, Market, below Fremont.
"Young American," Geo. C. W Heuer Stewart & Howard

SAWING, PLANING AND MOULDING MILLS.
D. A. Macdonald & Co. corner Market and Beale sts.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R G. Browu, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street,
Henry Lehnhardt, (dealer in all kinds) 31 cor Tehama

SHIPWRIGHTS, CAULKERS AND SPAR-MAKERS.
Coombs & Taylor, 109 Market street.

SODA AND MIXERAL WATERS.
Empire Soda Works, corner Third and Harrison.

STATIONERS AND BOOKBINDERS.
Jas. E. Damon & Co., 421 and 423 Sansome street.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
M. J. Blackman, 302 Third street, near Folsom.
Reizzi Hughes, (also Crockery and Glassware) 215 3d.
A. Swiget, corner Fifth and Folsom.
Schuster Bros, 102 Kearny, near Post st.
Murphy & Sheldon, (Meta. Roofers, etc.) 153 Third st.

UMBRELLA AND PARASOL MANUFACTORIES.
C. King & Co's, (repairing and fitting) 255 Third st.
John D. Barr, Manufacturer 623 Mission near Second.

UNDERTAKERS.
Craig & Yung, 705 Market st., one door west of Third.

VARIETY STORE.
D. Michael & Co., 348 Third street.
Edward Dunn, 502 Third st eet.

VIOLIN, GUITAR AND BANJO STRINGS.
Libby & Munk, 329 Kearny, st.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

WAX FLORIST.
Mrs. M. E. Gerrish, 11 Post street.

WHOLESALE WINE AND LIQUOR DEALERS.
Campbell & Co., 629 Front st., bet Jackson and Pacific
Henry M. Cutter, Importer, 520 Front street.

WHOLESALE UPHOLSTERERS.
D. N. & E. Walters, 13 Battery street, corner Bush.

WOOD AND COAL YARDS.
Patrick Byrne, S. W. corner Perry and Fourth sts.
Edward Flanagan, Agt. Coose Bay Coal Co. 606 Battery
Occidental Fuel Depot, Geo. C. Eldridge, 607 Market st

THE PIRATE.

Don Estiphan Raffelino de Rustibloati was a Corsair, with a high, pale brow, curly hair, and a compact, well-knit form; and he paced his vessel, the Lord High Chief of Barnegat. He was the scourge of the seas, and so was his noble craft.

A storm arose. The ocean, from her deep caverns, threw to the sky her rolling waves; the dreadful thunder flashed, the terrific lightning roared, and the howling wiud whistled through the vessel's cordage.

Yet Don Raffelino was not afraid, if his brandy-bottle was full. With a loud voice he roared out:

"Man at the top of the big mast, ahoy!"

The man at the the top of mast, a huge, burly seaman, answered:

"Hullo! what's up?"

"Anything in sight?" asked Dod Raffelino.

"Yes, sir," yelled the burly salior.

"What is it—Spanish or English?"

"Neither; it's a spermacity whale, hard on our lee bow."

A feeling of compression thrilled through the terrible bosom of the hardened Barnegat pirate; and with with a subdued and feeling voice, he said to the pilot:

"Ship, ahoy!"

"'Ahoy, yourself,', cried the bluff old son of Neptune.

"Which way are you steering?"

"Nor' by nor' sou' west, a little easterly by west."

"Good. Keep her close to that track, bnt don't ran over that spermacity whale."

The command came to late. A tremendous shock threw the ill fated pirate off his feet, and shattered the vessel into seventeen hundred and ninety-seven thousand eight hundred and sixty two pieces, besides injuring the bowsprit and demolishing the neck of a cologne bottle.

The Barnegat pirate was no more; but his boots were afterwards found upon a flight of stone steps which were floating in the Polar Sea.

RIP.—When I used to keep store in Syracuse, said Toby, the old gentleman came rounnd one day and said:

"Boys, the one who sells the most 'twixt now and Christmas,, gets a vest pattern for a present.'

Maybe we didn't work for that vest! I tell you there was some tall stories told in praise of goods about the time. Bnt the tallest talker and the one that had more cheek than any of us, was a certain Jonah Squries, who roomed with me. He could talk a dollar out a man's pocket when the man intended only to spend a sixpence. And the women—bless you!—they just handed over their pocket books an let him take out as much as he wanted.

One night Jonah woke me up with—"I tell you, old fellow, if you think that has got any cotton in it, I'll bring down the sheep it was cut from, and make him swear to his own wool!

Twon't wear out either; I wore a pair of pants of that stuff for five years, and, they're as good now as when I first put 'em on. Take it at thirty cents, and I'll say you owe me cth ing. Eh? too dear! Well, call it twenty-eight What d'ye say? Shall I tear it? All right it's a bargain."

Jonah was talking in his sleep. I could hear his hand playing about the bed clothes for an instant and then—rip!—went something, and I had my head under the blankets, perfectly convulsed with laughter, and sure that Jonah had torn the sheet from top to bottom.

FOR SALE—Business Interests, Real Estate Property, Improved business Property, Homesteads, Manufactories, Stores, Mills, Mines, and all description of business intereste of whotever nature, both in the city and at any part of the Pacific Coast. Improved real estate, homesteads and business property, for small and large amounts. We make some of the largest as well as small sales of real estate, as the records will show. No expense to the buyer; and no expense to the seller, unless a positive sale is made. Commissions, when sales are made, will be most moderate. Seventeen years established in active business in this city enables me to transact business between the seller and buyer in a quiet way, to their satisfaction. S. P. WHITMAN, 313 Montgomery street, between California and Pine.

A Great Tunnel.—The silver mines in the Hartz Mountains in Germany, were commenced to be worked in the year 926, nine hundred and forty-one years ago, and have been worked steadily ever since. These mines have reached the depth of 3,200 feet, a point, which threatened a total suspension of the work, a tunnel was commenced in 1859, as a last effort for draining the mines still deeper, and has been recently completed, and satisfied all expectations, as the mines can be continued in working for the next twenty years. The tunnel is twenty-two English miles long, ten feet high and eight wide, with a rubble arch overhead. So exact were the surveys, that in the eighteen ends, one mile from each other, the bearings were out of reckoning but five inches for the whole length, and that was occasioned by a strong load of iron ore disturbing the surveyor's instrument. Great rejoicing took place after its completion. A solemn thanksgiving in the Lutheran churches; a torchlight procession of over 30,000 miners in full uniform, and headed by sixteen bands of music.

Marking his Back.—A small boy was assisting his father to mark sheep with paint and brush. The father would catch a sheep, and say to the boy, "Mark that." After the job was done, the boy started for his home, which was at some distant, and was overtaken by a minister on horseback, who, seeing the boy barefooted, invited him to ride behind him. After the boy was seated, he began to catechise him, thus; My lad do you attend the Sunday school?"—"No," was the reply. "You should attend the Sunday school, mark that! All good children attend both church and Sunday school, mark that!" After many more remarks of this kind, the boy replied:—"I have marked your back all over now, and it looks like thunder!" The reverend gentleman was somewhat astonished when he examined his coat.

His Native Air.—An Irishman speaking of his children said, "They are all well but the one born in this country. I must take him to the Green Isle, for I believe he is languishing for his native air, that he never smelt at all."

Saur Kraut has become an article of export in Doylestown, Penn. The stampers and cutters, we are told, resound at all hours in that locality now, and the demand for this delicacy is so great that fears are entertained of the Doylestowners to supply it.

Pictures.—Christmas is coming, and your friends will expect presents. Go to Morse's Gallery, No. 315 Montgomery street, and let him take you in the highest style of the art. He is an accomplished photographer, and very reasonable in his charges. If desired, pictures can be colored by Miss Romanes the most artistic and natural manner.—Sunday ercury.

The Snug.—"The Snug" has been located one door below Maguire's Opera House, for ten years past. It was established for the convenience of the habitnates of the Opera House, and has the reputation of dispensing the best wines and liquors in the city, under the charge of its present proprietor, Mr. Timothy McCarty. Entrances from various parts of the Opera House to the bar have been cut, for the convenience of the public. Mr. McCarty ives his entire attention to his guests, and renders his establishment a "Snug" place by day or night.

Our Kitchen Batteries do more for the comfort and welfare of our people than those furnished with ten-inch guns. A good supply of stoves, ranges, and tinware, particularly Stewart's famous stoves with ten-inch griddle plates if properly used will render a city comfortable and contented and prolong the lives of the inhabitants, while a ten-inch Paixhan gun battery directed against it would fill it with widows and orphans. The man who supplies nations with destructive weapons by many is regarded as an enemy to the human race while a gentleman like Caleb M. Sickler, at four hundred and twenty-two Kearny street, who supplies a city with articles that make the operations in its kitchens effective and pleasant, can only be regarded as a public benefactor.—Golden Era.

Wanted.—At the Pacific Coast employment and business Exchange, all the best help are engaged and supplied with first class and permanent positions. Male and female help for every kind of employment; clerks, book-keepers; mechanics for every trade; men and wives, housekeepers teachers—all in want of good help and all in want of positions—will be faithfully supplied. No charge or expense to the employer, and no commission charged to the employe unless a positive situation is furnished. Apply to S. P. WHITMAN, 313 Montgomery st.

Now is the Time—The season of cold weather and storms—when you feel bad—to go to Dr. Bonrne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, and take one of his Baths, to make you feel good; to cure colds, (the only scientific mode,) coughs, aches, paine, etc.

NO HUMBUG! NO HUMBUG!

POSITIVE DISSOLUTION OF COPARTNERSHIP.

The Copartnership of the Proprietors of

QUINCY HALL

CLOTHING

EMPORIUM

Will positively be dissolved on or before the

FIRST OF JANUARY, 1868,

In consequence of which, we offer our Entire Stock until then at

PRICES REGARDLESS OF COST!

Good quality of White Shirts for $1 50
Good Red Flannel Undershirts and Drawers for....$1 50

ALL OTHER GOODS PROPORTIONATELY LOW.

Now is your time to secure BARGAINS

AT

545, 547, & 549 Washington street.

SAN FRANCISCO

FRINGE, CORD, TASSAL,

BUTTON AND TRIMMING

MANUFACTORY,

125 Kearny street, between Post and Sutter.

Every article made in the best style and at the most reasonable rates. LADIES' DRESS TRIMMINGS manufactured to order. Orders filled at the shortest notice. Orders from the interior promptly attended to.

M. ETTINGER.

Foreman for the past eight years at the manufactory of Mrs. D. Noreross.

SOMETHING NEW AND GOOD.

TRY IT!

PRESERVED COFFEE

PREPARED FROM

THE BEST OLD GOVERNMENT

JAVA COFFEE,

Condensed in the form of paste, by a process patented September 31, 1867. One ounce equal to two of the best ground coffee, and suitable for any gentleman's table. Preserves its strength and flavor without deterioration, in any climate and without regard to length of time.

If you want chicory, apply it yourself. Give our Coffee a trial, and if it is not fifty per cent. cheaper and better than any other, we will return your money.

FRANK SILVER & CO.,
No. 10 Stevenson street, near First,
San Francisco.

SIXTH

INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION,

Under the auspices of the

Mechanics' Institute,

San Francisco.

THE UNDERSIGNED, ACTING UNDER authority from the Mechanics' Institute of the city of San Francisco, take great pleasure in announcing to the Public that they have resolved upon holding an Industrial Exhibition in the month of August, 1868, on a much larger scale than was ever before attempted on this coast; and they make this early announcement of their intention, that all who may desire to participate shall have ample time for preparation.

A programme, embracing rules and regulations for the government of participants, with a list of Premiums to be awarded, etc., is receiving such earnest and careful attention as the importance of the enterprise demands, and in due season the same will be made public by circular letters widely distributed and by advertisements in the leading journals of this coast.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:

Geo. K. Gluyas,	J. P. O'Connor,
Thomas Young,	Edward Nunan,
D. E. Hayes,	Gardner Elliott,
Horace D Dunn,	H. F. Williams,
Geo. T. Bohen,	C. M Plum,
H. Rosekrans,	J. A Pritchard,
C. H. Harrison,	Wm. J. Lewis,
D. R Coleman,	W. W. Hanscom,
W. C. Prase,	Jos. Mosheimer,
James Spiers,	William Corcoran,
C. L. Tilden,	D. A Macdonald,
Irving M. Scott,	Geo. Coran.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre Montgomery street,

Between California and Pine

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma

ST. CHARLES RESTAURANT,

At the Hotel of C. Galliand, Nos. 507 and 509 Pine Street, between Kearny and Dupont streets.

BY MME. CAZINTRE.

All who will call at this Restaurant will find an excellent table and prompt attention.

California Coffee and Dining Saloon.

Nos. 612 and 614 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Between Clay and Merchant, San Francisco.
J. R. REAGAN, Proprietor.

A Ladies' Saloon has been fitted up, where private parties can receive every attention in the most comfortable quarters. We also keep lunch hot on chafing dishes at the counter, including the finest of Pastry, where customers can be served quickly and satisfactorily.

French Breakfasts and Dinners, with Wine, continued.

CAMMET'S

LADIES' AND GENTLEMEN'S

Coffee and Ice Cream Saloon,

Nos. 57 and 59 Third street, near Mission.

HOUSE OPEN ALL NIGHT.

ITALIAN RESTAURANT,

No. 515 Merchant Street,

Between Montgomery and Sansome, San Francisco.

Taglierini, Maccaroni, Risotto and Ravioli In the Italian Style.

MEALS FIFTY CENTS, OR TO ORDER.

Rooms for private parties up stairs.
MR. GUISEPPE CADENASSO.

LEON DINGEON. F. W. HAUBRICK.

DINGEON & HAUBRICK,

MARTIN'S RESTAURANT,

623 COMMERCIAL STREET.

Above Montgomery. Meals at all hours. The best of Wines, Oysters, Game, and all the delicacies of the season always on hand. Private Saloons up staire for Dinner and Supper Parties.

NEW RESTAURANT.

MR. SORBIER takes pleasure in informing his friends and customers that he has opened a FIRST-CLASS RESTAURANT under the name of

SORBIER'S RESTAURANT,

at No. 607 SACRAMENTO STREET, above Montgomery, where he will be pleased to see his old friends and the public in general, and where all can be assured that they will be served with the very best the market affords, at most reasonable rates. JOHN E. SORBIER,
Late of the Occidental Restaurant.

OCCIDENTAL RESTAURANT,

536 Washington Street, below Montgomery.

GEORGE WITTMAN would inform the public and the former patrons of this

POPULAR RESTAURANT

That he has assumed full charge, and will continue to keep all the delicacies of the season and one of the best lists of WINES, etc., and solicits the continuance of their patronage.

COCO-MUNGO SALOON.

J. M. WASHBURN, Agent.

No. 536 Merchant Street, (Montgomery Block.)

THE BEST OF LIQUORS,

SKILLFULLY CONCOCTED MIXED DRINKS,

AND A FIRST-CLASS HOT LUNCH,

Not inferior to any offered in San Francisco, is furnished daily at the COCO-MUNGO—Clam Chowder, Fish Chowder, Gumbo Soup, Pork Tenderloins, Cape Cod Boned Turkey, Venison, Quail, and all the delicacies of the season, as fast as they are to be found in the market, figure upon the lunch table of the COCO-MUNGO.

A Reading Room, abundantly supplied with Domestic and Foreign Papers and Periodicals, is one of the features of the COCO-MUNGO.

C. F. HAYWARD,

—DEALER IN—

Harness, Saddles, etc.,

305 BATTERY STREET,

Near Sacramento,

San Francisco.

Pioneer Iron Works,

CORNER OF MARKET AND FREMONT STREETS,

San Francisco.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT

Manufacturers of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS, SHUTTERS, BANK VAULTS,
PRISON CELLS, BALCONIES, GRATINGS,
IRON FENCE, STAIRS, Etc.
BURGLAR PROOF BANK VAULT LOCKS

Constantly on hand, a large assortment of Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

BUILDER'S INSURANCE CO.

OFFICE IN THE BUILDING OF THE CALIFORNIA SAVINGS BANK, CALIFORNIA ST., one door from Sansome.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

Is a soothing expectorant, prepared to meet the urgent need of a safe and reliable cure for diseases of the throat and lungs. A trial of many years has established the fact, that it is more efficacious in pulmonary affections, than any other remedy. Its efficacy has now become so generally known, that it is justly regarded in many countries as a medicine of indispensable necessity. In Great Britain, France, and Germany, where medical science has reached its highest perfection, it is prescribed in domestic practice, and constantly used in the armies, in hospitals and other public institutions, where it is regarded by the attending physicians as the most speedy and agreeable remedy that can be employed.—Scarcely any neighborhood can be found where well known cases of diseased lungs, which had baffled the efforts of the most skillful and experienced doctors, have been permanently cured by it. These results are the most convincing proofs of the superior curative properties of this preparation; and to them the authors point with peculiar satisfaction. While it is most powerful against confirmed diseases, it is extremely gentle as a medicine in infancy and youth, being quite harmless to even the youngest, when administered judiciously.

This health-restorer accomplishes even more by prevention than cure. If taken in season, it heals all irritations of the throat and lungs, whether arising from Colds or Coughs, or from other causes, and thus prevent that long train of painful and incurable diseases, which would arise from the neglect of them. Hence no family should be without it. Influenza, Croup, Hoarseness, Whooping Cough, Pleurisy, Incipient Consumption, and other affections of the breathing organs, give way before this preeminent combination of medical virtues.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine everywhere.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
Wholesale Agents.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

STEAMSHIPS FOR

NEW YORK, JAPAN AND CHINA,

WILL BE DISPATCHED AS FOLLOWS:

Leave Brannan-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 18th or 19th is expected to connect with the French Transatlantic Co.'s steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th is expected to connect with English steamer for Southampton and South America, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America. Through tickets can be obtained.

STEAMERS FOR DECEMBER.

Dec. 10—SACRAMENTO, Capt W. H. Parker, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.
Dec. 19—CONSTITUTION. Capt. J. M. Caverly, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Connor.
Dec. 30—MONTANA, Capt. E T. Farnsworth, connecting with ARIZONA. Capt. Maury.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained of P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamship GREAT REPUBLIC, Capt. S. Doane, will be dispatched on December 4th, from wharf, corner of First and Brannan streets, for YOKOHAMA and HONGKONG; connecting at Yokohama with the steamer COSTA RICA, for SHANGHAI.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

Pioneer Iron Shutter Works,

ESTABLISHED 1849.

CALVIN NUTTING,

Manufacturer of

FIRE-PROOF DOORS & SHUTTERS,

STEEL LINED BANK VAULTS,

Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gr[illwork] Iron Fence, Stairs, etc.

123 Bush street, between Sansome and Battery, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of second hand Fire-Proof Doors and Shutters.

MORE LIGHT FOR THE MILLION

THE EXCELSIOR

Coal Oil and Lamp Store,

NO. 10 THIRD STREET,

KEEPS CONSTANTLY ON HAND THE BEST brands of Kerosene Oil, Lamps of every description, GLOBES, WICKS, SHADES, CHIMNEYS, LANTERNS, Etc.

The public are cautioned against buying inferior Coal Oil, sold by parties as STANDARD KEROSENE, and which is frequently explosive, being a mixture of Coal Oil and Benzine. The Standard Kerosene sold at No. 10 Third street, is warranted to be free from smell, and burn longer than any other brand of Oil, and is to the consumer cheaper than less priced oils. All goods warranted to be as represented.

Give us a call. JOHN B. OWENS.

AVERY'S

GREAT

NATIONAL PUMP

AND WELL.

This Pump has proved itself to be the greatest invention of the age. Designed for DEEP WELLS, it will RAISE WATER (500) FIVE HUNDRED FEET; can sink a well 30 to 40 feet in (50) sixty minues.

This Pump is specially adapted to the wants of BREWERS and DISTILLELS, on account of the facility with which, by its use, casks in the upper stories of their warehouses can he filled from the vats below.

STATE, COUNTY, & TOWN RIGHTS FOR SALE.

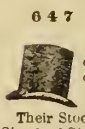
Pumps Furnished at Moderate Prices, by

S. P. ROBERTS,

Agent for California and Nevada,
Care FARNSWORTH & MILNE, Plumbers,
318 Pine street, San Francisco.

"THE" HAT STORE,

647 Washington Street.



The Hat wearing community are invited to examine the Stock at the above store, and in quality, style and price,

THEY DEFY COMPETITION!

Their Stock embraces all of the latest "novelties" and Standard Styles to he found elsewhere.

"THE" HAT STORE,
647 Washington Street.

PRIVATE MEDICAL AID.

QUICK CURES AND MODERATE CHARGES.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY,

PRIVATE MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE,
Sacramento Street, below Montgomery, Opposite Pacific Mail Steamship Co's Office, Private Entrance on Leidesdorff Street, San Francisco.

Established expressly to afford the afflicted sound and scientific Medical Aid, in the treatment and cure of all Private and Chronic Diseases, cases of Secrecy, and all Sexual Disorders.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY returns his sincere thanks to his numerous patients for their patronage and would take this opportunity to remind them that he continues to consult at his Institute for the cure of chronic diseases of the Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Digestive and Genito-Urinary Organs, and all Private Diseases, viz: Syphilis in all its forms and stages, Seminal Weakness, and all the horrid consequences of Self-Abuse, Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures. Nocturnal and Diurnal Emissions, Sexual Debility, Diseases of the Back and Loins, Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, etc.; and he hopes that his long experience and successful practice will continue to insure him a share of public patronage. By his practice of many years in Europe and the United States, he is enabled to apply the most efficient and successful remedies against diseases of all kinds. He uses no mercury, charges moderate, treats his patients in a correct and honorable way, and has references of unquestionable veracity from men of known respectability and high standing in society. All parties consulting him, by letter or otherwise, will receive the best and gentlest treatment, and implicit secresy.

TO FEMALES.

When a female is in trouble, or afflicted with disease, as weakness of the back and limbs, pain in the head, dimness of sight, loss of muscular power, palpitation of the heart, irritability, nervousness, extreme urinary difficulties, derangement of digestive function, general debility, vaginitis, all disease of the womb, hysteria, sterility, and all other diseases peculiar to females, she should go or write at once to the celebrated female doctor, W. K. DOHERTY, at his Medical Institute, and consult him about her troubles and disease. Irregularities, suppressions, etc., will receive the Doctor's most particular attention. Let no false delicacy prevent, but apply immediately and save yourself from painful sufferiug and premature death. Ladies whose delicate health or other circumstances prevent an increase in their families, should write or call at DR. DOHERTY'S MEDICAL INSTITUTE, and they will receive every possible relief and help. The Doctor's offices, consistiug of a suite of six rooms, are so arranged that he can be consulted without fear of observation.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Patients (male or female) residing in any part of the State, however distant, who may desire the opiuion and advice of DR. W. K. DOHERTY on their respective cases and who think proper to submit a written statement of such, in preference to holding a personal interview, are respectfully assured that their communications will be held most sacred. Dr. Doherty takes this opportunity of observing that all letters are only opened and replied to by himself, and the latter as promptly as possible.

If the case he fully and candidly described, personal communication will be unnecessary, as instructions for diet, regimen, and the general treatment of the case itself, (including the remedies) will he forwarded without delay, and in such a manner as to convey no idea of the purport of the letter or parcel so transmitted.

Consultation, by letter or otherwise, FREE. Permanent cure guaranteed, or no pay. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D.
San Francisco, Cal

SPERMATORRHŒA.

DR. DOHERTY has just published an important pamphlet embodying his own views and experiences in relation to Impotence or Virility, being a short treatise on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, Nervous and Physical Debility consequent on this affection, and other diseases of the Sexual Organs

This little work contains information of the utmost value to all whether married or single, and will be sent FREE by mail on receipt of Six Cents in Postage stamps for return postage. Address,

W. K. DOHERTY, M. D., San Francisco, Cal.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship Work o all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

GALLAGHER WEED & CO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

AN FRANCISCO

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

—OF—

MACCARONI,
VERMICELLI,
PASTE, and
FARINA.

First Premium in 1857—1859—1864—1865.

Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co.,

708 SANSOME STREET,
San Francisco.

F. D. RING,

MANUFACTURER OF

JEWELRY AND SILVER WARE,

No 540 Market Street, adjoining the Hibernia Bank,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of precious Stones set in the latest style and most approved manner. Watches and Jewelry carefully repaired by experienced workmen.

H. BATTEL'S
SAMPLE ROOMS,

411 SANSOME STREET,

Between Commercial and Sacramento streets.

H. BATTEL BEGS TO INFORM HIS FRIENDS AND the public that he has opened the above hall as a first class Refreshment Saloon, where they can always be sure to find the very best

WINES, LIQUORS, AND HAVANA CIGARS

In the Market.

Hot Lunch served daily from 10 to 2 o'clock.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY,

Corner Second and Folsom streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

JOHN WIELAND,
Proprietor

AMERICAN EXCHANGE HOTEL,

SANSOME STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE PROOF.

Two Hundred Rooms well Ventilated and Richly Furnished.

Prices from $1 50 to $2 a Day.

The Exchange Coach, with RED LIGHTS, will always be in readiness to convey Passengers to the Hotel FREE OF CHARGE.

The proprietor of this favorite Hotel would respectfully inform the traveling public that the

AMERICAN EXCHANGE

Is now and will continue as it ever has been, the most comfortable, homelike, quiet and economical Hotel in the State. TIMOTHY SARGENT, Proprietor.

BUCKMAN BROS.,

(Successors to John Myers,)

CAPITOL SALOON,

226 MONTGOMERY STREET,

[Opposite the Russ House

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. . . Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

$100 00

SAVED in a very Short Time by using
STANDARD SOAP CO.'S
WASHING POWDER.

TRY IT!

Does Not Injure the Clothes.
Sold Everywhere.

$1,000,000 IN WATCHES!

FOR SALE ON THE POPULAR

ONE PRICE PLAN.

GIVING EVERY PATRON A

Handsome and Reliable Watch!

For the Low Price of Ten Dollars,

Without Regard to Value!

And not to be paid for unless perfectly satisfactory:

100 Solid Gold Hunting Watches	$250 to	$1,000
100 Magic Cased Gold Watches	200 to	500
100 Ladies Watches, enameled	100 to	300
200 Gold Hunting Chronometer Watches	250 to	300
200 Gold Hunting English Levers	200 to	250
300 Gold Hunting Duplex Watches	150 to	200
300 Gold Hunting American Watches	100 to	250
500 Silver Hunting Levers	50 to	150
500 Silver Hunting Duplexes	75 to	250
500 Gold Ladies Watches	50 to	250
1,000 Gold Hunting Leoines	50 to	75
1,000 Miscellaneous Silver Watches	50 to	100
2,500 Hunting Silver Watches	25 to	50
5,000 Assorted Watches, all kinds	10 to	75

☞ Every patron obtains a Watch by this arrangement, costing but $10, while it may be worth $1,000. No partiality shown.

We wish to immediately dispose of the above magnificent Stock. Certificates naming the articles, are placed in sealed envelopes, and well mixed. Holders are entitled to the articles named on their certificates upon payment of Ten Dollars, whether it be a Watch worth $1,000 or one worth less. The return of any of our certificates entitles you to the article named thereon upon payment, irrespective of its worth, and as no article valued less than $10 is named on any certificate, it will at once be seen that this is

No Lottery, but a straightforward legitimate transaction, which may be participated in by the most fastidious!

A single certificate will be sent by mail, post paid, upon receipt of 25 cents, five for $1, eleven for $2, thirty-three and an elegant premium for $5, sixty six and more valuable premium for $10, one hundred and most superb Watch for $15. To agents, or those wishing employment this is a rare opportunity. It is a legitimately conducted business, duly authorized by the Government, and open to the most careful scrutiny. TRY US!

WRIGHT, BRO., & Co., Importers,
161 Broadway, New York.

N. GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

ANALYSIS.

MESSRS. WHITING & BERRY,

609 SACRAMENTO STREET.

GENTLEMEN—AFTER A CAREFUL EXAMINATION of the following samples of Wines and Spirits bearing your label, including:

Whiting & Berry's Table Sherry,
Whiting & Berry's Golden Sherry,
Whiting & Berry's Voyage Port,
Whiting & Berry's Century Port,
Whiting & Berry's Cabinet Gin,
Whiting & Berry's Wheat Family Tonic
Whiting & Berry's Ky. Bourbon, O. O Whisky,
Whiting & Berry's Vine Growers Co. Cognac 1854.

I have failed to discover any deleterious substances finding them ENTIRELY FREE from any of the ingredients generally used in the adulteration of Wines and Liquors.

(Signed) B. B. THAYER,
Chemist and State Assayer.

First Premium

AWARDED BY THE STATE FAIR TO

SILAS SELLECK,

FOR THE BEST PLAIN PHOTOGRAPH.

—ALSO—

SPECIAL PREMIUM

For the Best Cabinet Portraits.

MR. SELLECK is now prepared to execute the very best PHOTOGRAPHS, in all the different styles, at No. 415 Montgomery Street.

N. B.—The best Water Color and India Ink Artist in this city is attached to this Gallery.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

Wholesale & Retail Confectioners,

113 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the state. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

SOTOYOME HOTEL,
B. C. WRIGHT, Proprietor, Healdshur, Cal.

CHARIOTEER, PAUSE!"—A good story is told of a certain colonel who was riding in a stage coach, with several other passengers, when he accidently dropped his hat out of the coach. Putting his head out of the coach window he exclaimed, in a stentorian voice, "Charioteer, pause! I have lost my chapeau." The driver paid no heed to the demand. Again the bombastic fellow authoritatively spake—"Charioteer, Pause! I have lost my chapeau." No attention being paid by the driver to this last command, a plain blunt man, who had become disgusted with his fellow-traveller's silliness and pomposity, put his head out of the window, and said, "Driver, hold on! this d——d fool has lost his hat." This was perfectly intelligible to the driver, expletive and all, and the hat was secured.

"WELL, my child," said a stern father to his little girl after church, "what do you know of all the clergyman said?" "Nothing," was the timid reply. "Nothing," said he, severely; "now, remembered, next time you must tell me something he says, or stay way from church. The next Sunday she came home, her eyes all excitement. "I remembered," something she said. "Ah! very glad to hear it," replied the father; "what did he say?" "He said," she cried, delightedly, "a collection will now be made."

CURE FOR EARACHE—Take a small piece of cotton wool, make a depression in the centre with the end of your finger, fill it with as much ground pepper as will rest upon a five cent piece, gather it into a ball and tie it up, and dip the ball into sweet oil and insert it into the ear, covering the latter with cotton wool, and use a bandage or cap, to retain it in its place. Almost instant relief will be experienced, and the application is so gentle that an infant would not be injured by it, but experience relief as well as adults.

New Opposition Line via Panama.

The North American Steamship Company will dispatch the splendid new Steamship

NEVADA,

(3000 Tons,)

J. K. KELLY.....Commander,

For PANAMA, from Mission Street Wharf, at 12 o'clock noon, on

SATURDAY, - - - - - JAN. 4th, 1868,

Connecting, via Panama Railroad, at Aspinwall with the Company's new and splendid Steamship NEBRASKA, 3,000 Tons, for NEW YORK.

One hundred pounds Baggage free.
Surgeon on board: medicine and attendance free.
The Nevada has proven herself the fastest steamship afloat, and the Company intend making the trip through TO NEW YORK IN 18 DAYS.
The Moses Taylor will sail January 15th, via Nicaragua.
For further information apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco

SIXTH

INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION,

Under the auspices of the

Mechanics' Institute,

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE UNDERSIGNED, ACTING UNDER authority from the Mechanics' Institute of the city of San Francisco, take great pleasure in announcing to the Public that they have resolved upon holding an Industrial Exhibition in the month of August, 1868, on a much larger scale than was ever before attempted on this coast; and they make this early announcement of their intention, that all who may desire to participate shall have ample time for preparation.

A programme, embracing rules and regulations for the government of participants, with a list of Premiums to be awarded, etc., is receiving such earnest and careful attention as the importance of the enterprise demands, and in due season the same will be made public by circular letters widely distributed and by advertisements in the leading journals of this coast.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:

GEO. K. GLUYAS,	J. P. O'CONNOR,
THOMAS YOUNG,	EDWARD NUNAN,
D. E. HAYES,	GARDNER ELLIOTT,
HORACE D. DUNN,	H. F. WILLIAMS,
GEO. T. BONEN,	C. M. PLUM,
H. ROSEKRANS,	J. A PRITCHARD,
C. H. HARRISON,	WM. J. LEWIS,
D. R COLEMAN,	W. W. HANSCOM,
W. C. PEASE,	JOS. MOSHEIMER,
JAMES SPIERS,	WILLIAM CORCORAN,
C. L. TILDEN,	D. A MACDONALD,
IRVING M. SCOTT,	GEO. COFRAN.

REESE W. GLUYAS. S. E. DUTTON.

GLUYAS & DUTTON,

COUNTING HOUSE STATIONERS,

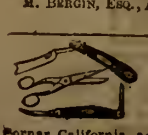
Fireman's Fund Insurance Company's Building,
No. 237 Sansome Street.....San Francisco

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.
ADDIE M. VINES, Plaintiff, vs. DANIEL B. VINES, Defendant.
Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send Greeting to DANIEL B. VINES, Defendant.
You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaitiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.
The said action is brought to obtain a decree from this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the custody and care of the child of the parties hereto may be awarded to plaintiff. Also for general relief.
And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.
Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 22d day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.
[SEAL.] WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By J. D. RUGGLES, Deputy Clerk.
Pixley & Smith, Attorneys for Plaintiffs. d14-13w.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the Estate of NATHANIEL MASON, deceased.
Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.
On reading and filing the petition of SAMUEL BROCKHURST and NOAH CLIFT EFFORD, the Executors of the last will and testament of NATHANIEL MASON, deceased, setting forth that they have filed their final account of their administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the devisees and heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:
It is ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Nathaniel Mason, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on TUESDAY, the fourteenth day of January A. D. 1868, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the devisees and heirs of the said Nathaniel Mason, deceased, according to law.
It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said fourteenth day of January, A. D. 1868, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated December 11th, A. D. 1867.
E. B. MASTICK, Esq., Att'y for Executors. d14 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
Estate of FRANK O. ELDREDGE, deceased.
On reading and filing the petition of John S. Bugbee, administrator, with the will annexed, of the estate of Frank O. Eldredge, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration upon said estae, in this Court, and the same has been duly audited, allowed and confirmed; that all debts have been fully paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed among the persons who by law are entitled to the same; that deceased was not a resident of this State, and died teatato; that his will was duly proved and allowed in the State of Massachusetts, the place of his resdonce, and an authenticated copy thereof admitted to Probate in this State; and that it is necessary, in order that said estate be distributed according to said will, that the estate in this State be delivered to the executor in the State of Massachusetts; and praying, among other things, for an order that said estate may be delivered to said executor
It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of FRANK O. Eldredge, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on the 27th day of January, A. D. 1868, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, then and there to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be made for the delivery of said estate to such executor, according to law.
It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before said twenty-seventh day of January, 1868, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated December 19th, 1868. dc21-28-ja4-11

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the Estate of JOSEFA MUNOZ DE URIBE, deceased.
Order to show cause why Order of Distribution should not be made.
On reading the petion of Francisco E. Lynch, Executor of the last will and testament of Josefa Munoz de Uribe, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the legatees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:
It is thorefore ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said Josefa Munoz de Uribe, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 20th day of January, A. D 1868, at (2) two o'clock P. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the legatees of the said deceased, according to the provisions of decedent's last will and testament, heretofore admitted to Probato by this Court.
It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said twentieth day of January, A D. 1868, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a weekly newspaperprinted and published in said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated December 16, A. D. 1867.
M. BERGIN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
dc21-28 js4-11-18



T. B. RODGERS,
CUTLER,
108 Leidesdorff street.
Corner California, adjoining the Pacific Insurance Office, San Francisco.

Administrator's Sale of Real Estate.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT, IN PURSUance of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, made on the 26th day of November, A. D. 1867, in the matter of the Estate of JUSTIN VICTOR SUBERVIELLE, deceased, the undersigned, the Administrator of the Estate of said deceased, will sell at private sale, to the highest bidder, for cash, gold coin of the United States, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on WEDNESDAY, THE 8TH DAY OF JANUARY, A.D. 1868, at 12 o'clock, M., at the office of W. C. Burnett, Esquire, the attorney of said Administrator, No. 606 Washington street in the said City and County, all the right, title, interest and estate of the said Justin Victor Suberville, at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has by operation of law or otherwise, acquired other than, or in addition to that of the said deceased at the time of his death, in and to all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows, to wit:
I.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of King street, 114 feet 7 inches northeasterly from the northeast corner of Fifth and King streets, thence running northeasterly along said line of King street 91 feet 8 inches; thence northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet; thence southwesterly and parallel with King street 91 feet 8 inches, and thence southeasterly 120 feet, to the point of commencement.
II.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of King street 343 feet 9 inches northeasterly from the northeasterly corner of Fifth and King streets, thence running northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet; thence northeasterly and parallel with King street 22 feet 11 inches; thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 120 feet, to King street, and thence southwesterly on the northwesterly line of King street 22 feet 11 inches, to the point of commencement.
III.—Commencing on the northwesterly line of Townsend street 137½ feet northeasterly from the northeasterly corner of Fifth and Townsend streets, thence running northeasterly along said line of Townsend street 45 feet 10 inches; thence northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet; thence westerly and parallel with Townsend street 45 feet 10 inches, and thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet, to the point of commencement.
IV.—Commencing on the southeasterly line of Berry street, 229 feet 2 inches southwesterly from the southwesterly corner of Fifth and Berry streets, thence running southwesterly along said line of Berry street 45 feet 10 inches; thence southeasterly and parallel with Fifth street 137½ feet; thence northeasterly and parallel with Berry street 45 feet 10 inches, and thence northwesterly and parallel with Fifth street, 137½ feet, to the point of commencement.
V.—Commencing at the northeasterly corner of California and Mason streets, thence running easterly along the northerly line of California street 34 feet 4½ inches; theece northerly and parallel with Mason street 68 feet 9 inches; thence westerly and parallel with California street 34 feet 4½ inches to Mason street, and thence southerly along the easterly line of Mason street 68 feet 9 inches, to the point of commencement.
That offers and bids will be received, on such sale, on and from MONDAY, the 30th day of December, A. D. 1867, until and at 12 o'clock, M., on the 8th day of January, A. D. 1868, by said Administrator, at the said office of W. C. Burnett, Esquire, in said city and county.
Terms and Conditions of Sale: Cash, gold coin of the United States; ten per cent of the purchase money to be paid to the Administrator, on the day of sale, the balance on confirmation of sale by said Probate Court: deeds and stamps at expense of purchasers.
LUCAS PONTON DE ARCE,
Administrator of the Estate of Justin Victor Subervielle, deceased.
W. C. BURNETT, Attorney for Administrator. Office 606 Washington street. d7-4t

---

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the estate of MINNIE SHERWOOD, deceased.
Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.
On reading and filing the petition of Lilly Sherwood, the Administratrix of the Estate of Minnie Sherwood, deceased, setting forth that she has filed her final account of her administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to her as the only and sole heir of said deceased, praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled.
It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Minnie Sherwood, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on MONDAY, the thirteenth day of January, A. D. 1868, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate to the said petitioner, as heir of the said Minnie Sherwood, deceased, according to law.
It is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 13th day of January, A. D 1868, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated December 13th, 1867.
JAS. C. CARY, Attorney for Petitioner. d13 5w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE W COLEMERE, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of George W. Coleman, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at the office of Burnett & Burnett, Esqs. No. 606 Washington street, rooms No. 57, 58 and 59, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, or they will be forever barred. JAMES B. CHALMERS, Administrator of the estate of George W. Colomero, deceased.
Dated December 17th, 1867.
W. C. & J. M. Burnett, Attorneys for Administrator.
dc21-28-j4 11 18

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOHN HORGAN, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the Estate of John Horgan, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratrix, at the place of her transaction of business, at the office of William A. Quarles, Public Administrator, room 5, No. 520 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.
Dated December 13th, 1867.
CATHARINE HORGAN,
Administratrix of the Estate of John Horgan, deceased.
d14 5w

ZEITSKA & SHEPPARD,
Merchant Taylors,
NO. 610 CLAY STREET,
Near Montgomery,
SAN FRANCISCO.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF WILLIAM STANNAH, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the estate of William Stannah, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, at the office of W. C. & J. M. Burnett, Esqs. No. 606 Washington street, San Francisco.
BRIDGET STANNAH, Administratrix.
W. C. & J. M. Burnett, Attorneys for Administratrix.
dc21-28-ja4-11-81

HAMBURG—BREMEN,
Fire Insurance Company.
CAPITAL, - - - - - $1,000,000
MORRIS SPEYER, Agent.
OFFICE—526 Washington Street, a few doors below Montgomery.....San Francisco.
Being no longer governed by the Tariff of the Board of Underwriters, this Company will effect Insurances at as LOW RATES as those of any other responsible Company.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.
INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.
Capital Stock, - - - $300,000
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.
C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

FIRE INSURANCE.
Manhattan Fire & Marine Insurance
OF NEW YORK.
Incorporated.....1821.
Cash capital.....$500,000
Surplus.....650,000
Total Assets, over.....$1,190,000
The above named reaponsible and well known Company has complied with the law of the State of California, and has deposited $75,000 as additional security for policy holders,
Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, and other property insured against loss or damage by Fire, on the most favorable terms. Also, Insurance on Merchandise, Specie and Freight to or from all parts of the world. Losses promptly adjusted and paid in United States Gold Coin.
R. B. SWAIN & CO., General Agents,
206 Front street, corner of California.

DR. N. T. WHITCOMB,
DENTIST,
No. 205 Third Street, San Francisco.
Teeth filled with fine gold, artificial bone and platina. All plate work made and repaired, of the best material, at the shortest notice and warranted. None cheaper or better on the coast. Call and examine specimens.
North Beach and South Park Cars pass the door.
N. T. WHITCOMB.

Removal.
WILLIAM SHERMAN & CO.
Have this day Removed their Stock of
Clothing & Men's Furnishing Goods,
From Sansome Street to
608 Montgomery street,
(East Side,) North of Clay.
San Francisco, November 22, 1867.

BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT,
Wholesale Candy Manufacturers,
No. 408 CLAY STREET,
Between Sansome and Battery Sts., San Francisco.
FANCY AND COMMON CANDIES
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
Sugar Toys, Figures, Animals, Birds, etc.
Are prepared to receive orders to any extent and in any desired style,
BERNHEIM & EHRENPFORT.

Removal.
JOHN G. HODGE & CO.,
Importers and Wholesale Stationers,
Have Removed to
329 and 331 Sansome Street,
Southwest corner of Sacramento.

Dr. John T. Crook,
Late of the Pacific Mail service, has established himself in the practice of his profession in this city.
—OFFICE:—
S. W. corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets
OFFICE HOURS—9 to 10 A. M.; 2 P. M.; 4 to 6 P. M.

G. F. T. GLOVE COMPANY,
FACTORY, 526 MERCHANT STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome,
Manufacture all kinds of OIL DRESSED AND INDIAN TANNED GLOVES for Gentlemen, Drivers, Teamsters, Miners and Lumbermen. Also, BUCKSKIN MITTENS, GOLD BAGS, PURSES, etc., in endless variety, and all sewed by hand. All work warranted. The Trade supplied. We warrant one pair of our manufacture to outlast two pairs of Eastern manufacture,

---

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma

DICKEY'S
CREME DE LIS
DE CALIFORNIE.
THE FASHIONABLE WHITE WASH FOR BEAUTIFYING THE COMPLEXION.
A NEW COMBINATION, equal to the best French preparations, and free from their poisonous ingredients.
GEO. S. DICKEY, Chemist,
Corner of Market, Stockton, Ellis and Fourth streets,
San Francisco.

Notice.
PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE,
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, POST STREET.
LADIES' DEPARTMENT.
THE PROPRIETORS OF THIS POPULAR INSTITUtion have much pleasure in announcing that in consequence of the growing interest taken by American ladies in mercantile pursuits, they have at the solicitation of many heads of families, fitted up class rooms exclusively for young ladies, that they may have all the advantages of a commercial education, and be fitted to act in the capacity of clerks or book-keepers. Experience in this matter in the Eastern States and on the Continent, shows that with a little careful training, they can be qualified to fill with efficiency all the lighter departments of trade, where there is a wide range for the exercise of their talents.
A. DE LEO DE LAGUNA, Principal,
JAMES VINSONHALER, President.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.
FIREMAN'S FUND
Insurance Company,
OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.
—OFFICE—
S. W. cor. California and Sansome streets.
CAPITAL, $500,000, FULLY PAID IN GOLD COIN.
INSURE MARINE RISKS
Under Open Policies, on Cargoes, Treasure, Freights, Profits, and Commissions.
—ALSO—
ISSUE POLICIES ON TIME,
VOYAGE AND HARBOR RISKS ON HULLS.
INSURE AGAINST LOSS BY FIRE
On Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Wares, and other Personal Property.
FIRE, MARINE, HARBOR, AND INLAND TRANSIT RISKS,
On terms as favorable as any other reliable First-Class Company.
Greatest amount taken on any one risk, $50,000. Portions of Risks considered too large, will be re-insured in responsible Companies.
LOSSES PROMPTLY PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN!
D. J. STAPLES, President,
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

Asphaltum for Sale
IN ANY QUANTITY TO SUIT, BY THE
PACIFIC ASPHALTUM COMPANY,
No. 533 Kearny street, corner of Sacramento,
SAN FRANCISCO.
This Asphaltum is the purest to be found in the market, being free from rock and clay, or other Impurities.
Sidewalks Laid and Roofing Done at Shortest Notice.
NEUVAL & CO.

Architectural Designs
—FURNISHED BY—
HOAGLAND & NEWSOM
ARCHITECTS,
Southwest corner of Sacramento and Kearny Streets,
San Francisco.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN
Hay, Grain, and Feed of all kinds.
Hucks & Lambert's Patent AXLE GREASE.
21 Clay street and 28 Commercial street, between Drumm and East, San Francisco.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor.
CARR. TIBBETTS,.....Business Manager
WM STEVENSON,.....Treasurer
HARRY JACKSON,.....Stage Manager.

GREAT SUCCESS OF THE TALENTED SISTERS,

EMMA AND ADA WEBB.

SATURDAY EVENING..... DECEMBER 28

Edmund Falconer's Comedy entitled the NOBLEMAN'S DAUGHTER!

Robert, a Gardener.....John McCulloch
Pierre Rogue.....Harry Jackson
Marquis de Provocœur.....L F B atty
Julie, Countess de Clairville.....Emma Webb
Fanchette.....Ada Webb
Dowager, Countess de Clairville.....Mrs Judah
Honore, Countess D'Aubigny.....Miss Helen Tracy

To conclude with the Proteau Extravaganza,

THE YOUNG ACTRESS.

Marie, the Young Actress; Jean, a French Boy;
Effie Heatherbloom, a Scotch Lassie; and Fergus O'Botherum, an Irish Boy.....Ada Webb
With Songs and Dances.

WEBB MATINEE TO-DAY.

THE FOSTER SISTERS,

—AND—

A DAY TOO LATE.

In Preparation—MOTHER'S DYING CHILD.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle.....	$1 00	Orchestra	$1 00
Parquette.....	50	Upper Circle.....	25

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

Lessees and Managers,
MESSRS. EDWARDS, BATES & VINSON.

BRILLIANT AND SPARKLING SUCCESS!

—OF—

Boucicalt's Latest Dramatic Sensation,

FLYING SCUD,

—OR A—

FOUR-LEGGED FORTUNE,

CHARLES WHEATLEIGH,
CHARLES WHEATLEIGH,
CHARLES WHEATLEIGH,
NAT GOSLING THE JOCKEY
NAT GOSLING THE JOCKEY
NAT GOSLING THE JOCKEY
MISS ANNIE FIRMAN,
MISS CLELIA HOWSON,
THE STAR COMPANY.
BEAUTIFUL SCENERY BY ROGERS,
BEAUTIFUL SCENERY BY ROGERS,
BEAUTIFUL SCENERY BY ROGERS,
THE DERBY DAY!
THE DERBY DAY!
THE DERBY DAY!

For to-day's Matinee, and
☞ EVERY EVENING TILL FURTHER NOTICE. ☜
Box Plan now open.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.
Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats.....One Dollar
Parquet 50 cts | Gallery 25 cts
Doors open at 7 o'clock; to commence at 8.

BIERSTADT'S PAINTING,

'CROSSING THE PLAINS'

NOW ON EXHIBITION AT

209 Montgomery Street.

Admission,.....25 cents.
Season Tickets, $1 00.

Artists' Second Annual Sale!

—AT—

DUNCAN & CO.'S SALESROOM,

406 MOOTGOMERY ST.

MONDAY EVENING..... ....DECEMBER 30,

WE SHALL OFFER, TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER, by direction of the Artists of this city,

THEIR FINE COLLECTION

—OF—

OIL PAINTINGS,

From skeches made during the last summer tour through the State. This is the Second Annual Sale, and will include the works of

MARPLE,
DENNY,
BUSH,
BROOKS,
HOLDRIDGE,
YOUNG,
AND OTHERS.

SPECIAL NOTICE!

GREAT REDUCTION

IN

DRY GOODS

FOR THE

HOLIDAYS!

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.

9 MONTGOMERY STREET.

WILL OFFER ON

Monday, - - December 2d,

THE FOLLOWING DESCRIBED GOODS

AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

1000 Foulard de Laine Dresses;
1500 Empress Cloth Dresses;
1200 Poplin Dresses;
3000 Print Dresses;
500 Pieces of French Merinos;
300 Pieces Alpacas;
Empress Plaids,
Real Scotch Plaids,
Ottoman Velours,
Winseys,
Linseys.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,

RETAIL STORE,

No. 9 Montgomery street.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,

No. 107 Battery Street, near Pine Street.

BRIDAL SILKS!
RICH LACES!
EVENING SILKS!
CHRISTMAS
and NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.,

9 Montgomery Street,

Have received an unparalleled and choice assortment of the following described Goods suitable for

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S

PRESENTS!

Bridal and Evening Silks;
Chantilly and Point Lace Shawls;
Black and Colored Silks;
Chene and Droge Silks;
Velvet and Silk Cloaks;
Indian Shawls;
Irish and French Poplins;
Point and Applique Lace Handkerchiefs;
Embroidered and Plain Handkerchiefs;
Irish and French Poplins;
Point de Venice Lace Collars;
French and English Hosiery;
Barnsley Napkins and Cloths;
Chantilly Flounces and Capes;
Cashmere Shawls;
Lama Lace Shawls;

GLOVES, BEST MAKE.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.'S

RETAL STORE:

No. 9 Montgomery street.

WHOLESALE STORE:

No. 107 Battery street.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

AMERICAN HOTEL, Main street, Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON Proprietors.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

BOYS'

Pioneer Clothing Store,

CLOSING BUSINESS!!

CLOSING BUSINESS!!!

We offer the entire stock at the following reduced prices:

	Regular Prices.	Present Prices.
Boys' French Cass. Basket Pants.....	$6 00	$4 00
Boys' Velvet Cass. Ext. Sup. Pants.....	8 00	5 00
Boys' Cadet Union Suits.....	8 00	5 00
Boys' Union Sack Overcoats.....	8 00	5 00
Boys' Petersham Overcoats.....	14 00	10 00
Boys' Blk Castor Beaver Overcoats.....	16 00	12 00
Boys' Blk Esquimaux Beaver Overcoats...	18 00	13 00
Boys' French Cloth Frock Coats.....	18 00	12 00
Boys' Esquimaux Beaver Suits.....	15 00	12 00
Boys' Fine Esquimaux Bever Suits.....	26 00	18 00
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants.....	2 50	1 50
Youths' Cassimere Knee Pants, ex. Fine...	3 00	2 25
Youths' CaSsimere Knee Pants, embr'd....	4 00	3 00
Youths' Gatibaldi Fancy Suits.....	7 00	5 00
Youths' Garibaldi Extra Fine Suits.....	8 00	6 00
Youths' Embroidered Cloth Suits.....	10 00	5 00
Youths' Black Beaver Suits.....	10 00	6 00
Youths' Print Cloth Overcoats.....	10 00	7 00
Youths' Chinchilla Overcoats.....	10 50	8 00
Youths' Union Sack Overcosts.....	8 00	6 00
Youths' Black Castor Beaver Overcoats....	12 00	9 00
Youths' Heavy Black Beaver Garricks.....	10 00	8 00
Youths' Black Cloth Overcoat (sleeves)....	11 00	8 50

500 Men's Esquimaux and Castor Beaver Overcoats,

Forty per cent. less than any other store on this Coast.

100 dozen Men's Star Shirts, $1 50

Astonishing low figures.

Remember, our goods are all Custom-made, from our Broadway store in New York, thirteen years' standing. Everybody must know our goods. Retiring from business, the goods must be sold. Call at LOCKWOOD & CO'S, and examine the great reduction in prices.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
624 Clay Street.

REMOVAL

—OF THE—

BROOKLYN HOTEL

TO BUSH STREET,

Opposite the Cosmopolitan, adjoining the new Mercantile Library, between MONTGOMERY AND SANSOME STS.

SAN FRANCISCO.

J. KELLY, Jr.....Proprietor.

THANKFUL FOR THE PATRONAGE WHICH HAS been bestowed upon him during the last seventeen years, respectfully informs his friends and the public at his new house will open TUESDAY, Dec. 31st. The new establishment will be far superior to the old one in every respect.

The Brooklyn Hotel Coach

Will always be in readiness to convey

PASSENGERS AND THEIR BAGGAGE

To the Hotel free of charge, and to any part of the city for fifty cents.

New Opposition Line via Panama.

The North American Steamship Company will dispatch the splendid new Steamship

NEVADA,

(3000 Tons,)

J. K. KELLY.....Commander,

For PANAMA, from Mission Street Wharf, at 12 o'clock noon, on

SATURDAY, - - - - - JAN. 4th, 1868,

Connecting, via Panama Railroad, at Aspinwall with the Company's new and splendid Steamship NEBRASKA, 3,000 Tons, for NEW YORK.

One hundred pounds Baggage free.
Surgeon on board medicine and attendance free.
The Nevada has proven herself the fastest steamship afloat, and the Company intend making the trip through TO NEW YORK IN 18 DAYS.
The Moses Taylor will sail January 15th, via Nicaragua.
The Steamers of this Line, via Panama, will hereafter touch at Manzanillo, each way. Freight and passage at reduced rates.
Passage tickets to and from Liverpool and Queenstown, by the "Liverpool and Great Western S. S. Company's" staunch and elegant Iron Steamships, at unusually low rates.
For further information apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs. San Francisco

BOWEN BROS.

GROCERS,

Tea and Wine Merchants,

S. E. cor. Montg'ry and California,

San Francisco.

Wholesale Store,
204 Front Street.

USEFUL AND ELEGANT
PRESENTS!

WE ARE IN RECEIPT, EX FRENCH SHIPS, "VOLTA" and "MAHELA," of

LARGE ADDITIONS

TO OUR

Extensive Stock

OF

CHINA, GLASSWARE,

FANCY GOODS, Etc., Etc.

Please call and examine.

HAYNES & LAWTON,

516 Sansome street, corner of Merchant.

Turnbull & Smith,

PRINTERS,

522 CLAY ST.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Good Work!—One Price!—Punctuality!

D. BRUCE,

PRINTER,

COMMERCIAL STREET OPPOSITE MINERS' RESTAURANT.

IN THE PROBATE COURT, of the City and County of San Francisco.
In re Estate of FRANK O. ELDREDGE, deceased.
On reading and filing the petition of John S. Bugbee, administrator, with the will annexed, of the estate of Frank O. Eldredge, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration upon said estate, in this Court, and that the same has been duly audited, allowed and confirmed; that all debts have been fully paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed among the persons who by law are entitled to the same; that deceased was not a resident of this State, and died testate; that his will was duly proved and allowed in the State of Massachusetts, the place of his residence, and an authenticated copy thereof admitted to Probate in this State; and that it is necessary, in order that said estate be distributed according to said will, that the estate in this State be delivered to the executor in the State of Massachusetts; and praying, among other things, for an order that said estate may be delivered to said executor

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of Frank O. Eldredge, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said City and County, on the 27th day of January, A. D. 1868, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, then and there to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be made for the delivery of said estate to such executor, according to law.

It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before said twenty-seventh day of January, 1868, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated December 19th, 1867. de28-ja4-11-18

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the Estate of JOSEPH L. FOLSOM, deceased.

It appearing to the Court by the petition presented and filed by Henry W. Halleck and Archibald C. Peachy, two of the Executors of the last will and testament of Joseph L. Folsom, deceased, praying for an order to sell real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate to pay the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of the administration.

It is therefore ordered by the Court, that all persons interested in said estate appear before said Probate Court on MONDAY, the 27th day of January, A. D. 1868, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court, in the City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Executors to sell all the real estate of said deceased.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

Dated December 25th, A. D. 1867.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
D. P. Barstow, Esq, Attorney for Executor.
de28-ja4-11-18-25

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE W COLEMERE, deceased.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of George W. Colemere, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at the office of Burnett & Burnett, Esqs. No. 606 Washington street, rooms No. 57, 58 and 59, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, or they will be forever barred.
JAMES B. CHALMERS,
Administrator of the estate of George W. Colemere, deceased.
Dated December 17th, 1867.
W. C. & J. M. Burnett, Attorneys for Administrator.
de21-28-ja4-11-18

The Ladies are of one mind in pronouncing BOWMAN'S AMERICAN WASHING COMPOUND the best preparation for washing and cleaning in use. It is acknowledged to be a saving both in money and labor. The Compound softens the dirt, consequently the clothes require not more than one-half the rubbing necessary in washing by the old method; besides all who give it a trial acknowledge that their clothes are made whiter in washing with this Compound, than they were ever known to be by using any other preparation. For washing Woolen Goods and Flannels it cannot be equaled. Calicoes that can be washed with soap, without fading, are washed in the water used for boiling the white clothes. This Compound has been used in the eastern States for the past three years with perfect success. Warranted not to injure the clothes. FOR SALE BY ALL GROCERS.
LYNCH & PARSONS, Agents,
Depot at Peck & Turner's, corner California and Battery streets.